V. 69. Now Peter] Mark 14. 66. Luke 22. 55. John 18. 25. After that the Evangelist had shewed what hitherto became of Christ; he interfereth the relation of that which befell Peter, and was done by him, of whose enterance into the High Priests houfe, he spake before. verse 58. in all which we have an eminent example of the best mens infirmity (a grave document of humility, vigilancy and cautiousnes to all, that they beware they fall not) as also of Gods infinite mercy to the penitent, to the comfort of wounded Consciences, in that he gives repentance, and forgiveth the penitent.

Jare without in the Palace] Remote from the Consistory of the High Priest; but some think in the same room, because he went out after. verse 71. but so might he doe from the common Hall. where the servants and multitude were. This word ἔξω, without, must not here be understood of some place out of the House, but to import that he was not in the upper or inward part thereof, where Caiaphas and his assistants were examining Jesus, but in an inferiour part of the Houfe, he was, ἐν τῇ ἐυλῇ τῆς αὐλῆς. Mark 14. 66. beneath in the Palace, Luke 22 55. we give the same word in the Hall; in the middeft whereof, they had kindled a fire, at which Peter sate and warmed himfelf among the company.

Jesus of Galilee] Either for distinction sake, because there were many of that name, Acts 13. 6. Col. 4. 10. or in way of contempt. See Iohn 7. 50.

V. 70. I know not what thou sayest] I neither know him, nor well understand what you mean hereby. He answereth not directly to the Damosels objection, I was not with him; unwilling to deny Christ, and not willing to come into danger, he dissembled: seldome is the Truth of most high concernment confessed before the wicked, without great danger, but never is Christ denied without the greateft.

V. 71. This fellow] οὗτος, this Man. See on Chapter, 12. 14.

V. 72 I dse not know the Man] Now he more plainly denied Christ, than Verse 69. sins have speedy growths.

V. 73. Thy speech bewrayeth thee] Comming nearer to the Syriac and Samaritan Dialect, than that of Ierusalem. See Iudges 12. 6.

V. 74. then began he to curse] Mark by what Degrees sinne springeth up, if once admitted to Roote: First, he denieth his Master, then forsweareth him: Thirdly, curseth himselfe, if he knew him; or imprecateth some fearfull mischief to come upon himselfe, if he knew him: See here the wretched Fruit of confidence in our selves: it is a sad Document hence to be learned; let him that thinketh he stands, take heed lest he fall.

V. 75. And Peter remembred] Put in mind of Christs words, by the crowing of the Cock; and Christs looking back upon him, Luke 22. 61.

he went out] Either left he should be endangered by discovery, or tempted again, or that he might weep privately. See Genesis 43. 30. passionate grief loves solitude, and wept bitterly] The falls of Gods servants humble them, and cause in them a godly sorrow to repentance, never to be repented of, and fell loathing for their doing that which displeaseth God. See Ezekiel 6. 9. See on Luke 22. 62. So the sinnes of the regenerate, as those Canaanites, which should have been uterly destroyed by Israel; which not being done, they prove, as Joshua said, snares and traps unto us, scourges in our sides, and thorns in our eyes, Joshua 23. 13. but though we cannot so overcome them in this fraile state of mortality, yet by Gods mercy, humbling us by them, and giving us repentance for them, they are as those Gibeonites, Josh. 9 23. put under tribute, and made hewers of wood, and drawers of water for the House of God; that is, full of zeale and matter of repentance to salvation, 2 Cor. 7. 11. So Peter wept bitterly, and was after more zealous, even to death.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verse 1. When the morning was come] As soon as it was day, Luke 22. 66. they so much desired Christs death, that they could not sleep that night. Chapter 26. 47 See Prov. 4. 16. malice is vigilant as the Devil, and industrious to doe mischief.

all the chief Priests] Mark 15. 1. Luke 22. 66. John 18. 28. By all the chief Priests, understand the High Priest, his surrogate, and those of the Sanhedrim: where the High Priest and his Sagan, or second High Priest fare chief, see 2 King. 23 4. for though the High Priest did not alwayes sit in that Court in person, yet in matters relating to the Civil and Ecclesiasticall interest (as they would have this cause of Christ to do) wherein both orjustocies assembled, (as here, all the chief Priests and Elders of the people took counsell against Iesus) there it is most likely that the High Priest and his Counsell, would meet with the civill Consistory of seventy Judges: it is Satans mischievous policy to unite conspirators against Christ, so, as that none of them will be missing to an impious convention and enterpize, whereas the fame findeth his chief advantage against Truth by dividing the Professours thereof, or by making them cold, and fecure on the goodnesse of their cause.

to put him to death] They blasphemously accused him of blasphemy: (it is usuall for the wicked to cast their own faults upon the guiltlesse) but fearing that Pilate would not put him to death for that, and themselves had no power (John 18. 31.) they now resolve to endite him of treason and sedition, as appears in the charge John 19. 12.

V. 2. When they had bound him] They put on him all appearances of a malefactour: so they lead the Holy Iesus bound to Pilate, the Lord of Life, to be tryed as a Delinquent, for his life.

delivered him to Pilate] That they might destroy him by the abused hand of justice: for to have slain him privily, would have been infamous and dangerous to the actours as murther vsed to be; and in a tumultuous way, would have been apparently dangerous to the liberties of the City, and priviledges of State. See Luke 24. 20. But God in his incomprehensible wisedome, and love to mankind, had appointed, that for the work of our redemption, he should die that death, which was then most infamous; that thereby he might descend as low by humility, and dishonour, shame and infamy for mans repair, as mans ambition had aymed high to his own ruine, and destruction: there man affected to be as God: here Christ God and Man, suffereth as the worst of men.

V. 3. When he saw that he was condemned] By the Consistory of the Priests, whose Sentence he now thought would take effect; which it may be, fell out besides his expectation, who possibly might dream that his Master would now have escaped their hands by Miracle, as at other times he had done, Luke 4. 29, 30. John 10. 39. and 8. 59.

repented himself[e] Was sorry that he had done it; this was not any effect of Faith, or love to God, such as is a condition of pardon, Acts 2. 38, Math. 9. 12. Mark 1. 4. Luke 24. 47. Acts 11. 18. 2 Corrinth. 7. 9. 2 Pet. 3. 9. but of desparate and impatient sorrow, proceeding of self-love, and fear of that which his conscience told him, he must suffer; not that he had offended God, or could hope and truely believe in his mercy: I believe (saith Ambrof. l. 2. de pan. c. 6. if that Book be his) that even Iudas might not have been excluded from pardon, by so great mercy of God, si panitentiam non apud Iudam, sed apud Christum egisset: true repentance is in hope of pardon by Christ, to turn unto God, in newnesse of life.

and brought again the thirty pieces] To restore that which is unjustly taken away, is such a necessary practise, as that there can be no true repentance without it: but this restitution to the Priests, nothing advantaged Judas, who neither believed, nor turned unto the Lord: the thirtie pieces, were thirtie Shekels, of which, See on Nehemiah, 5. 15.

V. 4. I have sinned] Here was contrition, confession to the Priest, and as much satisfaction as Iudas could make them; yet no remission: he had sinned against Christ, and the Priests could not forgive him.

innocent blood] Thus he that betrayed him, acknowledged his innocency: which serveth to acquit Iesus, and to condemn Iudas: he confessed, quasi evitasse sit panam, prævenisse sententiam. Cypr. lib 2. Ep. 8. as if to prevent the sentence, were to avoid the punishment; he saith innocent blood, that is an innocent man; thus God would wound the consciences, both of Iudas and the impious high Priests.

what is that to us?] Such is their hardnesse of heart; they could not say he was guilty of any thing, wherewith they could charge him, (though they who gave money to betray him, would have the world believe, that they were guiltlesse) they lay all on Iudas; yet they still proceed to kill the Lord of Life.

see thou to that] Thus audaciously doe they transmit their sinne to others, and in their hardnesse of Heart and impenitencie desist not from acting what they knew they had wickedly designed; but against their owne Consciences, precipitately goe on.

V. 5. He cast down the pieces] To shew his utter dislike of his own fact; perhaps to perswade them to desist, and not to present him to Pilate to be condemned.

in the Temple] In the place where the Elders used to sit.

and departed] Acts 1. 18. Finding no comfort among these betrayers of souls.

and hanged himself] The word here used, is ἀπήγξατο, from whence, a learned Author flatteth this useless Paradox, that Iudas died of melancholy, or suffocation by some such humour, for which many things are alledged to very little purpose; and were it not to as little, to be expensive of time and paper in refutation, the invalidity of the Arguments, on which it seemeth grounded, might easily be shewed. Suidas rendereth the word, ἀπήγξατο by βρόχῳ ἦλε; his Interpreter Aemilius Portus; thus, laqueum nexuit quo se strangulavit, strangulatus est, laqueo vitam finivit; the value of ἄγχω, ἄγχομαι, ἀπάγχω, ἀπαγχόμαι, in the proper and common uses easily appeareth in every Lexicon; and sufficiently may in the ordinary acception of these words by severall Authours: So that where Physitians use them to expresse suffocation by Melancholly, &c. they translate them from their proper sense, to a figurative: concerning the Syriac word חנק by him cited: the learned in that tongue give it, suffocavit strangulavit suspendit, in its proper sense, metaphorically it also signifieth molestia affecit, v. Shind. Pentegl. citing this very place in the Syriac וחנק בנפשה translateth it strangulavit seipsum. So also that 2 Sam. 17. 23. & præcipit sepatrem suum Iuam יוחנק Targ. ואחרחנק & strangulavit se. So translateth the Arab. here, & abiit & suspendit se, and he went and hanged himself. So Beza on Act. 1. faith, it properly signifieth to strangle, which he interpreteth constrictâ gula necare: that Iudas and Ahithophel hanged themselves the ancient Fathers generally affirm from this Scripture, &c. He that betrayed our Saviour, now condemns himself to Hell, Acts 1. 24. not enduring to see his Master suffer, in whom he could not believe unto salvation: it is a miserable sanctuary against sorrow, which the desperate self-murderers find in death.

V. 6. It is not lawfull, &c.] To put them into the Treasury of the Temple: the blue of a whore might not be brought into it. Whence some observe, that no proceed of sinne against the Morall Law, or the Ceremoniall; was to be brought into their Treasury, but rather to be held execrable, and an abomination to the Lord, who required his Sanctuary to be reverenced, Levit. 19 30. See Deut. 23. 18.

the price of blood] They were not afraid to give money to shed blood, but to put it into the treasury afterward: they feared to defile their treasury, but not their souls, Hypocrites strain at gnats, and swallow camels, chap. 23. 24.

V. 7. the Potters field] The best whereof was taken off for the Potters use: thus even the wicked, unwittingly, and oftentimes unwillingly fulfill that Truth of God, which the Prophets have foretold.

to bury strangers in] Men of another Religion, with whom the the Iewes would not be joyned, no not in the grave; or possibly to bury those of their own Religion and Tribes, who coming out of other Nations to Jerusalem, died there, the price of Christs blood purchased a place of rest for us Gentiles, who were strangers and aliants to the Common wealth of Israel, Ephesians 2. 12. See Augustine To. 4. de consenf. evang l. 3. cap. 7. fine. where he excellently openeth the mystery concerning those that sleepe in Christ.

unto this day] It had a name from this occasion, so it kept it, till this Gospell was written: Hereby God would have the death of his Sonne, and their ingratefull wickedenelle remembred.

V. 9. Then was fulfilled] When the Priest bought the Potters field, field, with the thirty pieces of silver, which Iudas had received for betraying Christ, and restored unto them again.

by Jeremiah the Prophet] Seeing this prophesie is read in Zachariah, it may be it was delivered at first by Jeremiah, and after written by Zachariah, who in many things imitates him, hence the Hebrews say, the spirit of Jeremiah was in Zachariah: or it might be partly out of Jeremiah; and partly out of Zachariah; for Jeremiah also bought a field, Chap. 32. or Zachariah might (as many other) have two names.

whom they of the children of Israel did value] Or whom they bought of the children of Israel.

V. 10. As the Lord appointed me] These words run, as if they were spoken by the Prophet, to shew that in Zachariah, was a type of that in Matthew.

V. 11. Art thou the King of the Jewes?] Because the Jewish Rulers had, with that accusation, given him up to Pilate, as one that affected, or challenged, the Crowne of Israel.

thou sayest it] As the thing is, though not in thy sense, chap. 26. 64. or, dost thou say it, John 18. 34.

V. 12. He answered nothing] To this their second accusation: he answered to the former, verse 11. now he did not answer, either out of a deliberate purpose that he might die, or because he knew their resolution, and what should be. See Chapter 26. 63. Isaiah 53. 7.

V. 13. How many things?] Many things indeed were objected, but either of no probability (as that of his affecting the Kingdome) or no proof for them, as forbidding payment of Tribute to Cæsar; or far from the matter of their present charge; as his filling Iewry with his teaching: all which calumnies needed no refutation.

V. 14. to never a word] Or, not so much as to one thing: As Chapter, 18. 16. Or, not so much as one word, Isaiah, 53. 7.

V. 15. Now at the feast] Luke 23. 17. The feast of Passover, John 18. 39. which by way of eminency, is stiled, the feast, chap. 26. 23. John 4. 45.

to release a prisoner] One prisoner: it may be they, at the beginning of that custome, desired it, as a memorial of their deliverance out of Egypt.

V. 16. A notable prisoner] A robber: John 18. 40. a raiser of sedition, and a murderer, Mark 15. 7. Acts 3. 14.

V. 17. When they were gathered together] To wit, when before the multitude these was mention made of this custome, Mark 15. 8.

Barabbas or Jesus] It appeareth that Pilate was very willing to save Iesus, in that he see so vile a man against him: very likely it is, that he could have named some other prisoner, who had been committed for some lighter offence; but he names Barrabas, in hope the people would not have chosen him, but Christ.

called Christ] By many so accounted.

V. 18. He knew that of envy] As well as by what he had heard of him, so by their frivolous charges: and it is most likely that Pilate, who had been the Roman Deputy all the time of Iesus's publick Ministry, and doing Miracles, (the report whereof filled every mouth of that people) had some about him, who informed concerning Iesus, as well as all other eminent and considerable things acted in that imperial City and Province, whereof he had the charge; therefore no doubt but that he had likewise heard how the High Priests flood affected toward Iesus; how they envied the Honour which the people gave him; and that many disciples followed him.

they had delivered] That is, Iesus into the civill Magistrates hand: so true is that of Synesius, y de providenti; Envie is not so much suppressed by Vertue, as inflamed; or not so much appeased, as enraged.

V. 19. with that just man] Guiltless, good and innocent. See v. 4. 14. Luke 23. 47. Acts 3. 14. and 23. 14. & 7. 52. Beware thou condemn him not, though the Iewes importune thee so to do. She thus admonisheth not without just ground and reason: first from the innocency of Christ, in that he was a just and holy man, for favour of men, and an impious vulgar; to destroy one good man, were an horrid impiety.

I have suffered many things, &c.] I have been much troubled about him in my sleep this night: which might come to passe by special providence, the more to attest Christs innocency, and to render Pilate more unexcufable. Here is her second reason; why she would by no means have her Husband interpose, or meddle with that business, for the High Priests against Christ.

V. 20. But the chief Priests] John 18. 40. Acts 3. 14. Here appeareth the devillish malice of the Priests, perswading the people (whom they ought to have led to Christ and salvation) to destroy Iesus with their out-cries: Duces esse principes erroris maxime prophanum; Theodoret, in Jerem. it is most prophane for Princes to be leaders into errour: or, for the chief among the people to be ringleaders of errour.

and destroy Jesus] By not asking his life: or that they should not onely ask pardon for Barabbas but also clamour to have Iesus put to death: as they did, verf. 22.

V. 21. Said unto them] To the multitude of the Iews.

whether of the twain will ye that I release] He had once before asked this question, verse 18. but it seemeth, the answer was retarded, by his wives fodain meflage to him; therefore (as Euthymius thinks) now he repeateth the question.

they said Barabbas] Being before instructed by their Priests and Elders, as Salome was by Herodias, to ask John Baptists head. See on John 18. 40.

V. 22. let him be crucified] Too much pitty in sparing Barabbas, and as much impious ingratitude toward Iesus. Here is an example of an inconstant and precipitate vulgar; commonly ruled by passion and faction, seldome by right reason: multitudes are as fickle as the great waters, whose billows run furiously, one forcing on and moving another according to the severall winds which blow upon them. So here, but now they cried Hosanna, and prefently, Crucifie, Crucifie him (such mischievous influence had the Priests on the peoples levity:) First, save I pray, (see Chapter 21. 9.) then Crucifie him; so their High Priest blindly roved, John 11. 50. you doe not consider that it is expedient for us, that one man die for the people, and that the whole Nation perish not, &c. So here the people cry Hosonna sonne of David; and Crucifie him, yet not understanding that by being crucified, he should save them.

V. 23. What evil hath he done?] The Iudge did reasonably enquire of a crime to be alledged, and proved by them, who were so audaciously forward to anticipate his sentence, and to prescribe so severe a punishment; and this very question summoned the people, to be witnesses of Christs innocency, and their own injury.

they cried out the more] When they could doe nothing legally, or justly against him; they fall to begging his Blood; that the evill which they could not atchieve by Law, or Reason, Vociferando perficiant, Beda, they might doe by outcries.

V. 24. A tumult was made] He doubted, lest they would take him by force, and raise some fedition.

of this just man] Christ being pronounced innocent now thrice; v. 4. 19. and here it appeareth, that he died onely for our sinnes 1 Pet. 3. 18.

see ye to it] Take heed, lest ye be plagued for importuning me to condemn him.

V. 25. His blood be on us, and on our children] That is, the guilt and punishment thereof, See Iohn 2. 19. if there be any offence committed in slaying him, let us and our posterity smart for it, and bear the burden thereof, which they doe to this day; and how heavily it fell on them, and their children, in the destruction of Jerusalem; the Ecclesiastical Histories abundantly shew; the fruit of this rash and wicked imprecation, came speedily and heavily upon them then, See on Chapter, 24. 22. See 2 Samuel 3. 28, 29.

V. 26. When he had scourged Iesus] He satisfied their desire, in releasing Barabbas; and herein endeavoured to pacific them, by scourging Christ: Luke, 23. 16. John, 19. 1. 4.

delivered him to be crucified] When he saw nothing but Christs death would pacifie them, he condemned him, to please the Jewes.

him they compelled] Christ had carried his Crosse so far, all along the City, John 19. 17. as the custom was for condemned men to do, (Matthew 16. 24. John 19. 17.) but because Christ had been so rudely handled by them, that he could carry it no longer, therefore they compelled Simon to carry it out of the City: some conceive that he onely helped Christ to bear it, carrying up the hinder part thereof, and cite to that end; Luke 23. 26. John 19. 17. others think, that onely the transom or upper end thereof was born from the ground, the nether part might easily be drawn along the same.

V. 35. They crucified him] Nailed him to the Crosse. See Psal. 22. 16. John 19. 18.

parted his garments] They divided the rest, but cast lots for the upper coat. John 19 23. 24. See more thereon.

V. 36. They watched him there] The Souldiers appointed for the guard attended, by the Crosse, lest any should take him down before he was dead: herein, by Gods providence, his enemies also became witnesses of his death, lest unbelievers should have objected against his resurrection, that he was not dead. See John 19. 34. 35. &c.

V. 37. The King of the Iewes] So was he indeed, though this were done in mockery. See John 1. 49. and on Luke 23. 38 John 19. 19. 12.

V. 38. Two thieves crucified with him] This was to dishonor him, and to make the world believe that he also was a malefactor; therefore they plac't him in the midst, as a principal ringleader of such men: See Isai. 53. 12. he was crucified with thieves, sed quos passio jungebat, causa separabat. Augustin. Bonifac. ep. 50. But whole whom the like passion united, the cause separated. See Luke 23. 41. This preceded in the head, Christ, which followed in many Martyrs.

V. 39. They that passed by] Who use to pity such as suffer (though justly) See Lamentations 1. 12. Yet now they deride Christ, who was innocent; we read not that they were so inhumane and pittiless to the thieves who were truely guilty, Luke 23. 41. See on Luke 23. 35.

wagging their heads] A sign of derision and insultation, Psal. 22. 7. 2 King. 19. 21. Isai 37. 22. Lam. 2. 15.

V. 40 Thou that destroyest the Temple] See on Chapter 26. 61. This they insultingly say, blasphemously intimating that he had deceived the people, boasting before them that he could destroy and reedifie the Temple of Jerusalem in three dayes, who, as they supposed, could not so much as save himself, from the torment and death of the Crosse: this they added to render him pittifelle, and odious to the people of the Jews, who heard nothing so unwillingly as concerning the destruction of the Temple, of which they chiefly gloried.

if thou be the Son of God] See on Chapter 4. 3. See on Luke 23. 35.

come down from the Crosse] But therefore he would not come down, until he had perfected the work of our Redemption, there to be performed; because he was the Son of God, and the Messias; who therefore came into the world, that he might fulfill this his Fathers Will, by becoming obedient to the death of the Crosse; Phil. 2 8.

V. 41. The chief Priests] Their malice to Christ was shewed in life and in death: it might seem much below their dignity, to be present at an execution, and it was unworthy of their high calling to insult over a dying man.

V. 42. He saved others, himself he cannot save] He would not save himself, that he might save others: this is a Crosse like that (Luke 4. 23.) which the Proverb expresseth, by Physitian cure thy selfe.

let him now come downe from the crosse] Foolish persecuters, he will rise from the dead, who will not yield to your insulting opprobries, by descending from the Crosse; plus fuit mortem, resurgendo, destruere, quam vitam, descendendo, servare. Gregor. hom. 21. It was more, to destroy death, by rising again from the deed, than to preserve life by coming down from the Crosse: could Plato say, what I have written, I have written; and shall not Christ perfect our salvation which he hath begun: but they say, let him come down and we will believe him: vain tempters, he will not so purchase credence with you, for, si descenderit neminem salvum faciet. Bernard. de 7. sig. if he should come down, he should save none.

we will beleive him] This they said in scorn, and confidence that he could not have come downe, if he would: for when he did more than this, by raising himself from the dead, (for it is more to restore, than to preserve life) yet they believed not.

V. 43. He trusted in God.] Psalm 22. 8.

if he will have him] or, if he delight in him, as Psalm 22. 8. whence this seems to be taken.

V. 44. The theives also] or, even the thieves; that is, one of the thieves. See Luke 23. 39. 40. and the like manner of speaking, chap. 26. 8.

V. 45. From the sixth houre] About noon; for they began their day at Sun-rising, thence began their first houre of the day. See on Luke 23. 44. So was that literally performed which was spoken of Amo. 8. 9. 10.

there was darkenesse] To shew Gods dislike of their cruelty, he would not have the Sunne give light to so horrid an act, and as it were to fee the Sunne of Righteousnesse so unworthily handled; a natural Eclipse, it could not be: some thinke, it being so totall, so generall, and the Moon being now in the full (being the middest of the lunar moneth, when the passeover was killed) and so of necessity, the body of the Moone (which useth to eclipse the Sunne, by its interposition, and being between us and the Sunne) must be opposite to, and distant from the Sunne, the diametrical breadth of the Hemisphere; the full Moon ever rising at the Suns setting. Apollophanes, who is reported to have been at this time in Heliopolis a City of Egypt with Dionysius Areopagita; when he saw this admirable Eclipse, said, Θεον ἀναγκαῖα πεφυκότων, changes of the Divine works or administrations: but Dionysius said, ἢ τὸ θεῖον πάσχειν συμπάσχει, either the Diety suffereth, or hath sympathy with that which suffereth.

over all the land] Of Judæa, and the Countreyes and Regions near; or over all the earth as some suppose.

V. 46. My God] Psal. 22. 1. This sheweth that although in this bitter Agony, he had an heavy and intense sorrow, a deep apprehension and sense of the wrath of his Father against sinner; yet he despaired not, for he called upon God, and called him his God, which termes and notions are not compatible with despair, apprehending no interest in God, or hope of audience in distress, Psalm. 22. 1.

why hast thou forsaken me] In my present apprehension: suffering my humane nature to feel so much misery in sense of thy absence, and thine anger against sinners, for whom I stand a surety: this is not the voyce of despair, but of so fad a conflict with an heavy passion: why hast thou left me in the hands of mine enemies, and comforterst me not in these bitter sorrows?

V. 47. Calleth for Elias] He called God his God, and they mock him, as if he called for Elias, because the words are something alike in the Hebrew, but more in the Chalde. Psalm 22. 1. Whence it seemeth he spoke these words, accommodate to his present condition. אלי אלי eli eli my God, my God, See Mark 15. 34. שבקתני למה אלהי elohi, elohi lamah shebaqtani. Targ. These last words which the Greek retaineth, being Chalde or Syriac, the Hebrew being עזבתני למה, lama hazabtani, the Syriac שבקתני shebaqthani; that which the Hebrew hath עזב deseruit reliquit, the Syriac giveth by שבק shebae, reliquit, &c.

V. 48. Straitway] After he had said I thirst, John 19. 28. and they, or some of them had said, This man calleth for Elias; presently after that, one of them ran, &c.

a sponge] To furnish, for he could not otherwise drink of it, his hands being nailed to the Crosse.

filled it] See Psalm 69 21. that he might suck some drink out of a full spunge, which out of an humble mind he could not have, Moses having thereto no assistance of his hands, being fastned with nailes to the Crosse.

with Vinegar] Or broken Wine, such as the Romane Souldiers, had their allowance of; and did usually drinke, mixed with water; to which perhaps they might have a Vessell then at hand by them; See John 19. 29. It may seem they mixed it with some other ingredients, Verse 34. See Marke 15. 23.

put it on a Reede] Or Cane. See on John 19. 29.

V. 49. The rest said] Others besides them that mocked him; as before.

V. 50. When he had cried] And uttered those fore-mentioned words, John 19. 30. Luke 23 46.

again] For he had cried aloud once before.

yielded up] ἀφῆκε, Let goe. He willingly commended his Spirrit, into his Fathers hands, Luke 23. 46. that is, He willingly died.

V. 51. The

V. 51. The vail of the temple was rent] Some think, that which divided the holiest of all, from the holy place, as Exod. 26. 31. 2 Chron. 3. 14. whereby was figured that the ceremonial law was abolished, and the way to heaven more plainly laid open. Heb. 9. 8. & 10. 19. 20. 22. and the wal of seperation broken down. Ephes. 2. 14. Others say that there were two veils, and which of the two was now rent, the inward or the outward, it is very uncertain; Jerom and some other of the ancients understand it of the outward, Cyril and others of the inward. See Iosephus. exercit. 16. M. 127. See on Luke 23. 45.

the earth did quake] These were signes of Gods anger against the Jews, and of Christs Divine Majesty, See Psal. 114. 7

V. 52. The graves were opened] The grave-stones it seemeth were moved, though the dead bodies there interred came not out till after Christs resurrection, as appears in the next verse; hereby was shewed then, that our Saviour had overcome death: as in his own person, so for others.

many bodies of the Saints] Probably they were such as were lately dead, who appearing, verse 53. were known to many in the City (see on chap. 27. 3.) who well remembred them, and if others, then were they known, as Moses and Elias on the mount, were known of the three Apostles there present with Christ: this is to give us assurance of our resurrection from the dead.

which slept] This word is often used in Scripture to expresse the state of the dead: and to intimate that as we have often awaked from sleep, so shall we once from death, sleep is but deaths elder brother. See John 11. 11.

arose] Either to appear as witnesses of Christs resurrection, or to attend Christ into heaven (who was the first fruits of them that slept, 1 Cor. 15. 20.) or both these.

V. 53. into the holy City] Into Jerusalem, See on Chap. 4. 5. for the places of burial were in the suburbs, out of the City.

appeared unto many] Of the faithful, not unto all the people: for also Christ appeared but not to all, Acts 10. 41. For they who would not believe Moses and the Prophets, neither would they, if one should come to them from the dead. Luke 16.

V. 54. watching Jesus] See on verse 36. A guard of Souldiers used to watch those who were crucified, Jo. Drus. praetorior. l. 1. commanded by the Roman Deputy to fee execution done, so that no private person could, or might presume to take down a crucified body from the crosse, without his leave and warrant; or, possibly though they were their kindred or friends, to bury them, how and where they would; therefore Joseph of Arimathea begged the body of Jesus, of Pilate, that he might decently interre it.

they feared greatly] They were much afraid of Gods wrath, having been instruments of cruelty exercised on Christ in his suffering; and having seen such dreadful signes of Gods anger, as the extraordinary eclipse, the earthquake renting of the rocks, and possibly the graves opening.

this was the Son of God] A man beloved of God; or not guiltlesse onely, but more than a man; for they being heathen men esteemed their great and excellent men, Sons of their Gods: See Luke 23. 47. It is not certain that they acknowledged the deity of Christ; see Dan. 3. 25.

V. 55. Afar off] Either in modesty they would not be among the throng of Souldiers: or, it may be, they permitted none to come near the crosse; or they were afraid to be questioned as his followers, as Peter was, chap. 26. 58.

which followed Jesus] They had followed him out of Galilee, and would not leave him; so great was their zeal to the gospel, and love to him: yet were they not all Galileans. Luke 8. 3. & 23. 27, 28.

V. 56. Mary Magdalen] So called of the place of her abode. See chap. 15. 39.

the mother of Iames and Joses] See Mark 6. 3.

the mother of Zebedees children] See chap. 20. 20. Whose name may seem to have been Salome, Mark 15 40.

V. 57. When the even was come] Mark 15. 42. Luke 23. 50. John 19. 38. After the ninth hour, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

a rich man] The more likely to obtain the body of Pilate, and the more in danger of the malice of the Priests for his care of Christ.

of Arimathea] Or Rama, or Remathaim, See on Luke 23. 50. Ierom de loc. Hebraic. calleth it Armatha Sophim, the city of Elkana and Samuel, near Diospolis.

named Joseph] Christ was not buried obscurely, but by the Governours consent, by an honourable man, in a place not far distant, in a new sepulchre; so that these cannot reasonably be any doubt of his death, See Isaiah 53. 9.

V. 58. Begged the body of Jesus] For the bodies of condemned persons were in the power of the Magistrates.

Pilate commanded the body to be delivered] See on verse 54.

V. 59. In a clean linnen cloath] To bury it decently.

V. 60. In his own new tomb] which Joseph of Arimathea had prepared for himself; but none yet had laid in it; that none might suspect the rising of some other body: See on Luke 23. 53.

rolled a great stone] As the Jews used to do on the sepulchres of their friends, See John 11. 38. 39. which he did to secure the body from abuse by his implacable enemies; Gods providence disposing all that was done about this, to remove suspicion of his disciples taking it away, as is objected, chapter 28. 13. also to set off the power and glory of Christs resurrection, whom neither that weight nor the bands of death could hold from rising again: this was laid by man, but removed by an Angel.

V. 61. The other Mary] Mentioned verse 56. See Mark 15 47.

sitting over against the sepulchre] To see where Christ was layd, that they might enbalm his body, Luke 23. 55. 56.

V. 62. The day of preparation] So was any day called, that was next before any solemn feast. See Mark 15. 47. Luke 23. 54. John 19. 14. 31, 42.

V. 63 That deceiver] See John 7. 12. Thus would their restlesse malice anul the power of his doctrine and miracles: thus they hoped to wash from themselves blood-guiltinesse, by altering the equity of his condemnation.

said] Chap. 12. 40. Mark 8. 31. John 2. 19. which, by some of the Jews, came to their eares: for (generally all) the Jews jealous of the honour and safety of their temple, might in some debate with the disciples occasioned by Christ's words. John 2. 19. understand that he there spake of his resurrection from the dead on the third day: for so Christ had taught them who were his disciples, Matth. 16. 21. & 17. 23. Mark 9. 31. & 10. 34. or possibly the traitour Judas, then one of the twelve, had let fall something before Christs enemies, concerning his rising again the third day.

after three dayes] Mark 8. 31. for he was layd in the grave on friday, lay there all Saturday, which was their Sabbath, and rose on the Lords day morning, which is ours, chap 28. 1.

V. 64. Untill the third day] According to the time set by Christ, for his resurrection; for so they might keep his body safe till that time were past, and then probably they meant to have shewed it to the people, hoping thereby to convince him of untruth in this particular, which would weaken the credit of all the rest of his doctrine.

the last errour shall be worse than the first] A proverbiall form of speech; the people will believe in him more than before, John 11. 12. 32. which they counted errour.

V. 65. Te have a watch] He means the garrison Souldiers, appointed for the guard of the temple, Acts 4. 1. & 5. 56. especially at the Passeover, for fear of tumults, in that confluence of people; it may be they were the same who went with Judas to take Christ, John 18. 3.

as ye can] de tuis potes. As ye know, as ye can devise, or ye know ye have enough how to do it.

V. 66. They went] The custody of the sepulchre was committed to them that murdered Christ, that there might be no doubt of the truth of his resurrection.

sealing the stone] With some publique seal of office, which might prohibit any to remove, or meddle with it, See Daniel 6. 17.

and setting a watch] Wickednesse can never be secure: all this but confirmed the truth of his resurrection, See on verse 60. all that the adversaries of the truth of Christ shall at last effect, is to render it more certain and undoubted: had not all this been done by the malitious Jews, the ground of our faith concerning the resurrection of Christ, had not been so evident: the enemies of Christ, against their wills, and intentions, are made competent witnelles of his power and truth.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Verse 1. IN the end of the Sabbath] Mark 16. 1. After it was ended.

as it began to dawn] See on Luke 24. 1 John 20. 1.

the first day of the week] On the Lords day morning Revel. 1. 10.

the other Mary] See on chap. 27. 61.

to see the sepulchre] To see whether it were safe, and shut up as they saw it, chap. 27. 61. out of their love and fear: so solicitous were they for the body of Jesus, that they might enbalm him, Mark 16. 1. Luke 24. 1. Nor knowing that he was risen from the dead.

V. 2. There was] Or there had been.

a great earth-quake] Which seems to have been when the women were in their way, there was one at his passion chap. 27. 51. and another at his resurrection, By many signs did the Lord manifest this glorious work of Christs rising again a triumphant conquerer over death and hell; as to confirm our faith concerning the resurrection of the dead: so also to form the hearts of these witnesses thereof, to a reverend elevation of minde to the truth of Christs deity; by the power whereof, he not onely raised up his own humane body: but also manifested himself to be the Lord

for the angel of the Lord] Or an angel, two are mentioned. Luke 24. 4. John 20. 12. Either one was neer it at hand to speak for both, or one appeared at first, and two when they came back: this for importeth not a cause, but a consequence of the earthquake: Christ rising from the dead, gave this triumphant signal of his victory over death, hell, and the devil, as to the watch at Jerusalem, so to the inhabitants of the earth, whose foundations he thus shook at his pleasure; for it is most likely that he rose in this earthquake.

rolled back the stone from the door] Performing the office of a door-keeper; not but that Christ could have done it without his ministery, but out of duty to Christ: also he removed it that the women might go into the sepulchre, and see that Christ was gone thence, and that the souldiers might, to their astonishment, see what he came for; not to raise up Christ, who could command the creatures to give way to him; but for their sakes who were to beshold the same, and testifie it to others. See Justin. Martyr. quæst. 117.

and sate upon it] Expecting the coming of those women, to whom he was to declare and testifie the resurrection of Christ; for they were but in the way when the earth shook as Christ rose from the dead: they were solicitous by the way as they came, whom they should get to roll away the stone, that they might go into the sepulcre to enbalm Christ. Mark 16. 3. Here God (whose aid is never wanting in due time and manner, to holy desires) provideth so, as that they found it readily opened by the Angel.

V. 3. His countenance was like lightning] As Dan. 10. 6. See here, chap. 17. 2. Mark 16. 5. faith, they saw a young man; that is, the Angel who had assumed that shape, which intimated him, of enti & strength and agility: this Majesty in his countenance, shewed that he was no man of the vulgar, but an heavenly messenger.

white as snow] Acts 1. 10. See this phrase, Psal. 51. 7. Lam. 4. 7. Dan. 7. 9. Rev. 3. 4. 5. 18. & 4. 4. & 6. 11. & 7. 9. 13.

V. 4. The keepers did shake] At the sight of his glory, and in conscience of their own guilt: seeing the earth tremble, the grave open, the heavy stone rolling away from the sepulchre, the dead body which they had in charge to watch, gone; a person of such a dreadful presence, and heavenly glory, as spake him more than man; they could not but know, that they had not now to deal with infirm man, but God: therefore, all astonished, they tremble, and become like dead men: here were two main causes of fear. 1. Their own horrour of conscience, who were actors in the death of Jesus. 2. Fear of their Governour, whose anger they might well expect, if he should not credit their reports, but construe all, as incredible excuses of their own default, and negligence in watching. Thus God shewed them how vain it was to take up arms against him; and also made them witnesses against themselves and the malicious priests.

V. 5. The angel answered] To the womens fear, verse 8. or he spake, as chap. 22. 1. it is possible that the watch coming to themselves again, fled into the city, as verse 11. as the women come some other way, so that they missed them; for the women, without any let by the watch, entred into the monument (which probably they would not have suffered, had they been present) they saw the angel, and were afraid, but not as these armed keepers: a good conscience is the best armour, and surest fortification.

feare not ye] Though the souldiers be fled for fear of me, yet be ye not dismaied: they watched Christ for evill, ye seek him for good: the keepers had cause to fear Gods revenging hand, who helped to murder his beloved, only Son; but you have cause of hope and joy, not fear and sorrow: the resurrection of Christ is a due cause of terrour to the enemy, and of joy to us who believe.

I know ye seek Jesus] This is one cause, why he would not have them fear; for he is on their side, who came not with the impious them fear; for he is on their side, who came not with the impious watch, as enemies; but as faithful servants of their Lord, to do him honour; for he saw the provision which they brought to enbalm Christ.

was crucified] He nameth that which is a scandal to the world, as the Christians ground of rejoycing, Gal. 6. 14.

V. 6 he is not here, he is risen] This is another argument of consolation; he is not now in the sepulchre: that was not enough; for Magdalen thought they had conveyed him thence, John 20. 13. therefore he addeth, he is risen, to life again; the conquerer of death, and Lord of life.

where the Lord lay] Believe your own eyes (See Mark 16. 14.) let them help to enforme you: see the place where the sacred body of Christ was layed in the sepulchre, he is not now there, but risen from the dead.

V. 7. Go quickly and tell his disciples] To put them out of their heavinesse: the Lord will quickly comfort the afflicted, except the cause of his delay be in our selves.

he goeth before you into Galilee] So had Christ foretold them, Mark 16. 7. chap. 26. 32. (See Micah 2. 13.) therefore he said, Luke 24. 6. remember how he spake unto you. See note thereon.

lo, I have told you] Assure your selves of it: fail not to deliver your message I have delivered mine.

V. 8. with feare and great joy] Being affrighted at the sight and presence of the Angel, but comforted at the joyful tidings of Christs resurrection.

to bring his disciples word] They are the first witnesses of his resurrection, quæ ardentius diligenter, Cyprian de resur. who more fervently loved, and more devourly fought Christ. Death began from that fex, and of the same, God appointed the first witnesse of life restored, in the resurrection of Christ.

V. 9. Jesus met them] Christ not onely sent an angel to publish his resurrection, but appeared in his own person to the women, and sends them to tell his disciples: heres both a remedie against fear, and reward of obedience.

all hail] See chap. 26. 49. χαίρετε, rejoyce ye; it is a form of salutation which the Syriack expresseth by שָׁלוֹם לָכֶם shalom lechem, peace be unto you: as the Hebrews said, שָׁלוֹם לָכֶם shalom lachem, peace be unto you, fear not, Gen. 43. 23. the 70. ἴλεως ὑμῖν, Chald. שְׁלָם לְכוֹן shelam lechon. So Moses is disinabled by Jetero, Exod. 4. 18. שָׁלוֹם לֵךְ: lech leshalom. 70. ἵλεως ὑπάγων πορεύου, go in, or to peace, or health: Christ here not only said this, but wrought the effect in their hearts, in a spiritual illumination and joy.

held him by the feet] Worshipping him: Either they endeavoured so to do, and were prohibited by Christ, as John 20. 17. or Christ first appearing to Magdalen, forbade her onely to touch him then; but permitteth these now: (See John 20. 17.) for now they were comforted, and their wavering minds better assured than at first: most likely Christ hastened Magdalen to contribute her information to the rest; intimating that her holding him by the feet now, though holy, was unseasonable, he having assigned her a greater work, which ought first to be dispatched; that his disciples faith might run no longer an hazard, by her delay. See on John 20. 17.

and worshipped him] Though the humanity of Christ be a creature, and so, not of, and by it self to be adored with divine adoration, but the Deity, to whom, alone all divine worship is due (Matthew 4. 10.) yet because, from his conception, the Deity is personally and indivisibly united to his humanity, and so Christ is truely God, as truly man, from whom the Deity cannot be divided, neither in true faith, nor faithful invocation; therefore whole Christ is to be adored; that is, God the eternall word become flesh, in, and with the humanity of Christ.

V. 10. Tel my brethren] His disciples: this high title Christ gave them before, chap. 12. 50. so now also after his resurrection, to shew the continuance of his affection to them. See Psalm. 22. 22. John 20. 17. Heb. 2. 11. Rom. 8. 29.

V. 11. some of the watch came into the city] Now appear another sort of witnesses, above all exception, because of the adversaries partie; which this Evangelist exactly relateth, shewing particularly when, who, to whom, and with what successe these testified concerning those things they had seen. 1. the time was, before the women could come to the sepulchre, the watch themselves ran into the city, to enform. 2. the parties were some of the watch: the more understanding part thereof, the rest for fear scattering and dispersing themselves in the city. 3. The high Priests, who set them on work, are enformed, not without a singular hand of divine providence, to convince and shame the malitious enemies of Christ, and authors of that counsel to guard the sepulchre. 4. The successe was not, as in reason might have been expected, the high Priests repentance, and happy acknowledgment of their errour to undeceive the people whom they had misled: but a Pharaoh-like hardnesse of heart: for they further endeavour to suppresse the truth, by bribing the souldiers to lie, and the president to connive at their wickednesse.

V. 12. large money] ἀργύρια ἱκανὰ, sufficient money: money not a little, Syr.

V. 13. his disciples stole him away] Pilate might the rather believe this, because the Priests had given him an hint hereof before hand, chap. 26. 64. more easily do wicked men believe improbable lies, than probable truth.

while we slept] Very credible witnesses, that could certainly tell what was done, while they were asleep: if you were then asleep, how knew you that his disciples stole him away? Lactantius's rule is how knew you that his disciples stole him away? Lactantius's rule is commonly true, hoc enim est mendacium naturæ ut obtegere non possint, l. 5. c. 3 this is the nature of lies, they can seldom hold together. This lye wanted all colour of truth: they would have made Christs vertue his disciples crime, who recove ed their Master (not as was pretended, by theft, but) by faith, alive, not dead.

V. 14. come to the governours eares] Be heard by the Governour, as they might well fear it would, though they would do what they could to keep it from him: and might well fear the issue: they could to keep it from him: and might well fear the issue: for if they appeared to be the authors of a lie, they might expect his displeasure: if they said true, they might expect secure secure you] We will make you ἀμερίμνους, without care: we will provide for your indempnity, by preventing the danger, that might come to you thereby, we will stand between harme and you, take you no care for that; for it was punishable to fail in the due performance of such like trusts. See Acts 12. 19.

V. 15 thus saying is commonly reported] Though the president could not but know it was false, as contradicting it self: so probably he could not but question then, why they came off their watch, before the end of the third day: yet for fear of tumult (as it is too common nowadays) he had rather bear with the dishonour of God, than his own personal danger or detrimeut.

unto this day] So easily do untruths find entertainment among the vulgar, too incredulous of truth? this was the just judgement of God, to lend them strong delusions, that they should believe lies, who would not receive the love of the truth, that they might be saved, 2. Thes. 2. 10 yet for all this, the elect every where believed, See 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4. and so shall do still, notwithstanding all these pernicious mists of untruth, which ascending from the bottomlesse pit of hell, da ken the truth of Christ so that the men of this world cannot discern the light thereof, 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4.

V. 16. the eleven disciples] This Evangelist is brief in repeating Christs apparations to his disciples after his resurrection, which the other supply. These eleven are mentioned, chap. 10. 1. 2. 6. 44. Judas the twelfth was gone, ch. 27. 5. the chief are mentioned; but it is likely that more, or all the rest went into Galilee to meet him; for they also were brethren. See ver. 10. the Apostle saith he was seen of more than 500. brethren at once, 1 Cor. 15. 6. Some make this ἅπαξ, to relate to the place; not to the number: as if the sense were, he was seen above, when he ascended: so this 500. seeing him at once, may be understood of their coming together to the mount of Olivet, Acts 1. 12. ἵνα αὐτὸς ὁ ἢ ἀναλήψεως αὐτοῦ ἀπόδειξις, Oecumenius; that he might shew them also his ascension.

into a mountain] What mountain of Galilee this was, is not mentioned; probably he went thence to mount Olivet neer Jerusalem; for thence he ascended, Acts 1. 12. and this was neer Jerusalem.

V. 17. when they saw him] When the multitude of disciples saw him alive from the dead, in his own former figure, lineaments and appearances, not yet in the Majesty of his glorified body, lest they should have conceived that it had been some other body risen, not that Jesus which was crucified dead and buried: this glory after his resurrection was veiled; rather for their sakes, than milling on his: in that they could not have known him, and it was necessary for his disciples to attend him, ut possit cognosci, Augustin. de C. D. lib. 22. cap. 19. that he might be known of them.

they worshipped him] Acknowledging his resurrection and divine power, by adoring him. See on verse 9. being now more confident than ever that he was indeed their Messias, the Son of the living God: for so he was declared by his resurrection from the dead, Rom. 1. 4.

but some doubted] Till he came neer to them, shewed them the prints of the nails (John 20. 25.) and spake to them: so the Syriack interpreter giveth it, dubitaverant, had doubted: one tence for another. See Mark 16. 11. 13. Luke 24. 11. 28. their unbelief makes for the confirmation of our faith: for their doubts being cleared, and the truth manifested, they left posterity nothing rationally to doubt of.

V. 18. All power] Absolute power without restraint and limitation, all dominion and authority to rule and govern.

is given unto me] God the Father hath given it to me; and I have now received it as man, who as God had the same power with the Father from eternity, (Philip. 2. 7.) and now unto me did he give the same in the fulneile of time: now I have put off the forme of a servant, wherein I was to suffer death for mans redemption; therein I was obedient, but now God hath highly exalted me, and given me a name above every name, &c. Phil. 2. 8, &c.

in heaven] Which comprehendeth power of sending the holy Ghost, Acts 2. 33. power over Angels, Phil. 2. 10. Heb. 1. 4. Colos. 1. 16. power to give heaven to all his, chapeer 25. 3. 4.

in earth] Power to gather a Church out of all nations. Psalm 2. 8. Mark. 16. 15, 16. and to rule over all. See Acts 10 36. 42. Ephes. 1. 20, 21, 22. Rev. 17. 14. Dan 7. 14.

V. 19 go ye therefore] Be not therefore afraid to execute your charge, which by a supream authority I commit to you; fear not the face of man, doubt not the successe: be ye my embassadours to this purpose, administring this power among them. See 2 Corinth. 5. 20.

teach all nations] The word μαθητεύσατε, here used,, signifieth most properly, make disciples, discipulos reddite, aut facite; as John 4. 1. Ἰησοῦς πλείονας μαθητὰς ποιεῖ καὶ βαπτίζει. Jesus made more disciples and baptized; that is, made them disciples by baptizing them: and to this rather than teaching, the words immediatly following relate, where it is said, verse 2. though Jesus himself baptized none, but his disciples; which provision against the misunderstanding of the means of making disciples needed not, except baptisme had been the consummating act and seal thereof, whereby one became a disciple, though for present want of capacity (as it is in infants) he were not yet taught; for, as for that, it is undenyably and expressely manifest, that though our Saviour did not himself baptize, yet he preached constantly and usually, and the word μαθητεύειν here used, is distinct in signification from διδάσκειν (which word is used in the next verse) for μαθητεύειν signifieth to make them disciples, who were aliants from our magistery, as Paul did at Iconium, Acts 14. 21. where we read, καὶ μαθητεύσαντες ἱκανοὺς ὄχλον, cum discipulos multos adjunxissent, that is, had admitted, or gained many disciples, by teaching them the gospel, and baptizing them; as expressly that text sheweth, where it is said, εὐαγγελισάμενοί τε τὴν πόλιν ἐκείνην, preaching (or teaching) the gospel to that city, καὶ μαθητεύσαντες, &c & making many disciples —where teaching, and preaching were improperly rendred, specially where two actions as distinct as preaching and baptizing, are signified; as here, the meaning is, by preaching the Gospel (for they had there to deal with men of years and capacity to learn in a Church to be constituted) they perswaded many to give their names to, or to become disciples of Christ by baptisme; as that feeret disciple, Joseph of Arimathea, of whom we read, Matth. 27. 57. ὃς καὶ αὐτὸς ἐμαθητεύθη τῷ Ἰησοῦ, who also himself was a disciple of Jesus, in the former place, the Syriak differently readeth תַּלְמִידוֹי talmidoi (the very word here used) discipulos fecerunt multos. Lastly, as Hebrew infants became disciples of Moses (John 9. 28. 1 Corinth. 10. 2.) by circumcision; so do infants of believing Christians, by baptisme become disciples of Christ; whereof we have elsewhere more largely discourse'd. Finally by all nations, he meaneth, not only Jews, but Gentiles also, See Acts 10 34, 35. 47.

baptizing them] Administring to them the Sacrament of baptisme; to all nations, wherein were ever many children, not here excepted in the Apostles charge to baptize.

in the name] εἰς τὸ ὄνομα, into the name. by that right innitiating them, and receiving them into the profession of the service of one God in three persons, and of depending on Christ alone for salvation. See 1 Corinth. 1. 13. 15. and 10. 2. with Exod. 14. 31. Rom. 6. 3.

V. 20. teaching them] Note here that teaching, in order, followeth disciplining, or making disciples (which all teaching in the world, can never do, except they be also sealed by baptisme) so that here is no advantage to the adversaries of infant-baptisme; for suppose that the former word μαθητεύσατε, were to be translated teaching (which we grant not) if their argument from the order of the words were concluding——(therefore they must be first taught, and afterward baptized——) why may not we as well conclude from the second order of the words of Christ——baptizing them, &c. teaching them to observe all, &c. therefore children (of believing parents) are first to be baptized, and after, as soone as they shall be capable thereof, taught?

to observe] Obedience is required of believers See Rom. 2. 13. faith without works is dead; it faith, as once barren Rachel, Gen. 30. 1. give me children, or else I die.

all things] Not some only, See Psalm 119. he that maketh choice of Gods commandments, which he will obey, and which not, is his own servant, not Gods: almost to be perfwaded to be a Christian, is but as good as nothing: it is not enough to be baptized, but we must adorn the profession there made, by doing that which God commandeth: Christs speech comprehendeth (as Theophylact well noteth) ὅπερ ἐστὶ καὶ πρακτικὸν ἀρετῆς, that is, contemplative and practicall vertue; knowledge and obedience.

I have commanded] Not what mans traditions command: will worship is a straug er to his Sanctuary; none such may come neer, Num. 16. 40. it is as strange as fire which came not from Heaven, God will not be served therewith.

I am with you always] Though your work be hard, I will assist you, and your successours in the ministery at all times, to the worlds end: I am Christi, evangelium est, in cælo sedet, fed in terra loqui non cessat, non linguæ surdis, nam ille clamat, Aug. de temp. ferm. 205. the gospel is Christs mouth; he sitteth in Heaven, but ceaseth not to speak on earth; let us not be deafe for he eryeth out. Lastly, here is comfort to all believers; for this sheweth, as Jerom saith, se nunquam à credentibus recessurum: that he will never depart from believers: as more particularly for all the successours of the Apostles, the faithfull Ministers: Christ thus speaks, left our Ministery should seem to be executed, humanâ tantum operâ, onely by the work of man, Prosper de vocat. Gent. lib. 2. cap. 2. To the Ministers may be applyed that which Jehoshaphat said to his judges, 2 Chron. 19. 6, 7. when he had told them the Lord would be with them: wherefore now, let the fear of the Lord be upon you, take heed and do it; for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor respect of persons: it was Gods promise to him, who bare the figure and name of Jesus, Joshua 1. 5. I will be with thee, I will not fail thee nor forsake thee: it is the promise of our Jesus, who leadeth us into our promised rest: Behold I am with you always unto the end of the world; be strong therefore, and of good courage, fear not the malice of persecutors; ipse certamine agonis nostri, & coronat pariter & coronatur, Cyprian lib 2. ep. 6 Christ in our conflict both crowneth, and is crowned. Fear not the succesle; it is Christ who giveth the increase, 1 Cor. 3 7. God could have done this work without our Ministery, or by his Angels; but he will give man the honour of this Ministration, where his own holy Spiritt will work to make it effectuall to the edification, and salvation of his elect: so fitted and prepared here, as were the materials of Solomons temple, that no noise of the builder shall be heard in rearing up the same there, where prophecies shall cease, love be perfected, and faith end in enjoying the promises of God in Christ.

Amen] This word is current in all languages, and is originally Hebrew: so Jeremiah the Prophet said, אמן יהוה amen Jehovah, Jerem. 11.5. The Hebrews used it after their prayers or blessings, therein wishing the succesle, truth, confirmation and consummation of those things they prayed for: it is as much as faxit Deus, certe fiat. See Deut. 27. 15. which the 70. give γενοιτο, so be it. It is sometimes doubled for the greater confirmation. See Numb 5. 22. So afterwards in the primitive Church the people used to answer, when their prayers ended Amen. Pitty that too many now are silent, and not so much as say Amen, to signify their consent, and vigilancy of spirit in prayer: it is much to be feared that they neither regard, nor think of that which is said in publique prayer; who in their own and others so great interest, not so much as say, Amen. See 1 Cor. 14 16. 2 Cor. 1. 20. Rev. 1. 7. Jer. 2. 8. 6. It is put here for confirmation of a certain and infallible truth. (See on John 3. 11.) Faithful is he that hath promised to be with us unto the end. Lord Jesu so be it. Amen.

READER,

The haste of the Presse hath occasioned the omission of these Notes following; the supply whereof be pleased in the severall chapters and verses to insert, according to the ensuing directions.

MATTH. CHAP. I.

VErse 1. between the word, Enumeration, and Jer. 3. 8. Adde [though therein they used the word גליון volvulus, complicavit, where is גליון, volumen membrana, charta; a book, a rowle of parchment, for so were they wont to make their books, which they rowled up like a cylinder. So have the Jews the law now in their Synagogues, therefore it is said of Christ in the Synagogue at Nazareth, Luke 4. 20. ἐξ πτύξας τὸ βιβλίον, and shutting, or folding up the book, he gave it to the minister. See Jerem. 36. 2. Ezra. 6. 2. which the 70. expresse sometimes by τόμος, a tome vel scrip, capitulum, Ezek. 2. 9. &c. sometimes by πτύον, a tome (which Suidas and Hesych. expresse by κόφινος, quod excutitur & pellibus animalium, a rowle or volume of parchment or volume, written: or a Section or part of a divided volume.]

And in the same verse after Gen. 5. 1. Adde, For begin or end other their tractates: so the Psalms are called ספר תהלים a book of praises.]

V. 2. between the word, covenant, and, Luke, Adde [and did expect Christ their promised Messias, to come of the seed of Abraham, according to the promise of God made unto him on that behalf, that all the nations of the earth should be blessed in him. See Gen. 12. 3. Gen. 18. 3. Acts 3. 25. Gal. 3. 8. that is, in Christ to come of his posterity; as was also promised unto David, and therefore they that believed and petitioned Christ, used this stile— Son of David, Matth. 9. 27. Matth. 15. 22. &c. and it was therefore most necessary in the beginning of this sacred history of our Saviour Jesus Christ (the eternal Son of God, John 1. 1. &c. and in the fulnesse of time, becoming truely man of a woman, under the law, Gal. 4. 4.) that the writer should first make it appear, by a clear and certain declaration of his pedegree derived from Abraham and David, that this Jesus borne of the Virgin Marie, a daughter of David, of his posterity, was indeed the Lords Christ, and the very promised Messias, in whom all must believe that will be saved.]

And after the word, Abraham in the same verse, Adde [yet were they by Gods covenant of the Gospel, accompted for sons of Abraham by faith in Christ, in whom Abraham believed, and through whom he was justified, Gal. 3. 7. they which be of faith, the same are the children of Abraham, and verse 29. If ye be Christs, then are ye Abrahams seed, and heirs according to promise. See Rom. 2. 29.]

V. 5. after Luke 4. 22. Adde, [but his supposed Son, see Luke 3. 23.]

V. 20. after the word, man, Adde [only; for the deity and humanity of Christ united without confusion of natures (neither the deity becoming an humanity, nor the humanity a deity) became one person, Christ Jesus, God and man, our Saviour; whereas the reasonable soul, and humane body united, make the person of mere man, here to the constitution of the person of Christ our redeemer, concurred the deity and humanity of Christ Jesus, the son of the Virgin Mary: therefore the Angel said, not ὁ γεννώς but τὸ γεν ὲν αὐτῇ γεννηθὲν, &c. that which is conceived in her.]

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. between. Hebr. 11. 23. and the word, before, Adde [Μωσῆς γεννηθεὶς ἐκρύβη: Moses when he was born was hid— that is, not long after he was born; for he was hid but three moneths, before he was carryed out, according to the tyrannicall Pharoahs command, to the river, Exod. 1. 2. Exod. 2. 1. So here when Christ was born, that is, shortly after his birth.]

And after the word, Star, in the same verse, Adde [in Greek τὸ μαγοι, quod genus sapientum & doctorum habebatur in Persis, &c. divinat. l 1. which were esteemed a sort of wise and learned men among the Persians. So also the Greeks understood hereby wise men of the Chaldees and Persians: so the Indians accompted their Gymnosophists; the Galles their (see Alexand. ab Alexand. Genial. dier. l. 4. c. 13. Strabo l. 6.) Dryades; the Grecians and Latines their Phylosophers: such as possibly Zamolxis, Pythagorat, Plato, &c. were at first esteemed very prudent and knowing men, insomuch as that the Athenians in all their publique counsels would ever have some of them to advise with, whom they called Mantes (and their art μαντικὴν. Cic. q. f.) diviners, or conjecturers of things to come. Such as the Hebrew called קסם, Greek μάντις, so are the Philistines Southsayers called. 1 Sam. 6. 2. So Balaam. Joshua 13. 22. Ezek. 13. 7. μαντείαι μαντάλας — divinationem mendacii, so said Saul to the witch at Endor, 1 Sam. 28. 8. μάντευσαι, &c. divine unto me by the familiar spirit, the study of such, at first, seemeth to have been a curious search into the secrets of nature and conjectural knowledge of things future, by the courses and aspects of starres; whence they obtained the opinion of interpreters of things divine: but over-curious in the study of judicial Astrology, they thence slid into vanities, superstitions; and oft-foone deveiish arts, inchantments, sorceries, malifices, &c. See 2 Kings 17. 17. So that the name of Magus, as also Mantis, though at first honourable, became an odious note of infamie, and men impious, Jerem. 27. 7. & 29. 8. Ezek. 12. 24. &c. and 22. 28. Mich. 3. 7. Zech. 10. 2. but these here mentioned Magi, or wise men, seem not to have been such, but only certain Phylosophers, and possibly astronomers, which might be the cause why God taught them (as hath been said) by a star; which very probably men nothing versed in that study, would have taken little or no notice of.]

V. 2 after the words, King, &c. Adde [ὁ τῆς φύσεως, recens natus, the new born king, See verse 1.]

And in the same verse after the word, Revelation, Adde [therefore was it called his star, because it declared him and his birth to them, as God had appointed it, and because it was a new and extraordinary star made for his sake, to bring those first-fruits of the Gentiles to him.]

V. 3. After the word, others, Adde [who are impious and tyrannicall Princes;] he must needs fear many, whom manyfear,]

In the same verse after the word, Jerusalem, Adde [that is, all the inhabitants, citizens, or others then being in Jerusalem.]

Again in the same verse after the word, government: Adde [which concussion of state never was, nor ever can be without much trouble and affliction of the people: which the more knowing sort foreseeing, or probably suspecting, could not but be troubled, considering dering that their principle was that the kingdom of their Messias, was to be a temporal Monarchy.]

Verse 4. After, Luke 20. 12. Adde [Matth 8. 19.]

Verse 7. After the words, First of all, Adde [he thus diligently enquired of the wise men concerning the rising of this new Star (whereby they understood the birth of Christ, the King of Israel) under a fair pretence, as if he meant no other thing than that which the wise men came from the East to Jerusalem to do, verse 2. to worship him; supposing, as it is most probable, that the Star appeard first in the day of Christ's Nativity, or about that very time; they meaning nothing herein but good, concealed nothing thereof from the King: charity and holinesse thinke no evil (1 Cor. 13. 5.) they nothing suspected the immane cruelty which Herod had then in his heart to murder harmelesse Jesus, and for his sake, so many tender Infants.]

Verse 9. After, verse 2. Adde [it was by Gods divine providence, then hidden, and difappearing, lest it should have begotten danger to the sacred person of Christ, if it had been without this intermission visible, until it had stood over the house at Bethleem where Christ was then newly born.]

Verse 11. After the words, it self; Adde [more accommodate and safe for the Infant and woman in child-bed.]

In the same verse after, Exod. 34. 4. Adde [which besides that It was the manner of the people of those Eastern parts, so to prostrate themselves before their Kings) they were doubtlesse moved to it, by a divine instinct, there being no semblance of Majesty or Royal prefence, then visible, to man: a more excellent Star, the light of Gods Spirit guiding them to their duty, shined in their hearts.]

Verse 22. After the word, themselves, Adde [as when God preserved us in our infancy, and when we sleep and cannot guard our selves, the keeper of Israel, who sleepeth not, protecteth, defendeth, and provideth for us and our safety.]

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. After, Luke 1. 80. Adde [Gr. παραγένεται. Some think it noteth a sudden appearance of some unexpected thing or person: See John 1. 6. in the Heb. he was called יוחנן Jochanan. Syr. Jochanan, signifying, the Lord hath shewed or performed grace or mercy: thus was Christs forerunner named of the argument of his preaching the grace and mercy of God in Christ, now (after the long expectation of the promised Messias and Saviour) exhibited. Concerning Johns parents, conception, imposition of name, and admirable things concerning the same, vt. Luke writeth expreflely and fully, which our Evangelist omitteth. It was Gods holy providence so to direct them, that all exactly agreeing in the same truth for the main; that which one of them omitteth, the other recordeth. Why the Anabaptists, as weary of, and declining the proper name of their Sect, would be called Baptists it may seem strange; seeing, in that name, and office they would seem to agree with us who indeed are Baptists (as John was appointed of God to baptize) because we baptize, but do not as they, re-baptize: and therefore they are Anabaptists; and in spight of their railing, the Ministers of Christ who administer and professe onely one God, one Saviour, one Baptism, are Baptists: their frivolous objections against paedobaptism, as if the baptism of Infants were no baptism, that thereby they might avoid the name of Anabaptists or re-baptizers, have been sufficiently refuted. John is here stiled baptist, to distinguish between him the son of Zechary, Luke 1. and John the Apostle, son of Zebedee, Matth. 20. 2. as also because he first, by the appointment of God (Luke 3. 3. Mark 1. 2, 3, 4. Mal. 3. 1. Joh. 1. 33.) did administer the seal of the new Covenant. the Sacrament of Baptism, to repentance and remission of sinnes in Christ.]

Verse 3. After, Dan. 2. 24. Adde [of which the Prophets foretold, to which the living way, Christ onely, giveth entrance, by baptism, Joh. 3. 3, 5. prefigured by that one door of the Ark, Gen. 6. 16. 1 Pet. 3. 21. and the promised rest, the land of Canaan, into which Gods Israel, delivered from the bondage of sin (Rom. 6. 3, 17, 18.) passed through the Red-Sea, prefiguring Christ's blood. See 1 Cor. 10 2. &c. and so understand these words; as if he had said, hitherto you have been held in the bondage of sin, and under the severe curse of the law, Gal. 3. 10, 13, 23, 25, &c. but now Christ your Redeemer is come, and his Kingdom is at hand; not an earthly, secular, transitory kingdom, such as many impious, and so unhappy Kings and subjects enjoy; but a heavenly, spiritual, and eternal kingdom, here to be begun in the state of grace, but to be perfected in the eternal glory and happinesse to come. Now John Baptist, being the messenger appointed to prepare the way before Christ, Mal. 3. 1. had this honour, openly and clearly to proclaim that which the Jews hitherto did never generally, by the Prophets understand, concerning the Kingdom of Christ, which they expected in external, secular glory, prosperity, deliverance, victory, &c. Thus therefore this silver Trumpet began to proclaim the solemn Jubile, calling to repentance, faith, and newnesse of life; sounding a note much dissonant from that on Sinai, Exod. 19. 16 which was with threatning and terrour to all Israel: but this was the gladsome tidings of grace, mercy, and salvation, by Christ: and this is called the Kingdom of God and Christ, because therein God through Christ reigneth in us. Sometimes it is called absolutely the Kingdom, Matth. 4. 23. Matth. 5. 14. and 8. 12. and 9. 35. and 13. 19. because this is indeed, a true and absolute Kingdom, in which onely, is perfect freedom: other Kingdoms are but vain shewes and semblances of that which is not; wherein the greatest Rulers and Commanders of others, are most enslaved to sin and satan, and so can govern others, but not themselves. But why saith he, the Kingdom of heaven is at hand, or draweth near? was it not with them long before, in Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and all the elect of every age, who looked for redemption in Israel, Luke 2. 38? Yes; but first, in respect of the paucity of believers, compared with them under the Gospel. Secondly, in respect of the clearer revelation and better understanding of this Kingdom now then before, when all was under darke shadows of legal ceremonies. Lastly, though many believed and expected Christ the King of Israel then to come, yet not being then, but shortly to be exhibited unto Israel, and to the ends of the world; his Kingdom was properly said to draw near, wherein he was actually and eternally to reign: and in whose spiritual kingdom free remission of sins by his merits, was to be preached to all that truly repent and believe in him who freely justifieth sinners.]

Verse 5. after the word, Jerusalem, Adde [having had no Prophet among them from the repair of the second Temple unto this present, and now being perswaded by the extraordinary things, immediately foregoing or accompanying Johns nativity; as also the admirable and unusual austerity of his life, they expecting (from the report of his preaching concerning the Kingdom of Christ at hand) some change of state, or some great and remarkable accident, they not onely begin to listen, but to run in multitudes, out to see and hear him: hence was that confluence of people from Jerusalem, and the region adjacent.]

And in the same verse, next after the word; river, Adde [Jordan which is the bound of Judea from the East: so called from the fountain, and steep descent of the waters thereof, as it were ירד מן דן iored min Dan, that is, descending or running down from Dan, as some say. It seems that Josephus de bel. Jud. l. 1. c. 16. to whom Adricomius Theatr. S. Manas. N. 76. joyneth Egesippus, will have it to be higher, at Panium an high mountain. Plin. l. 5. c. 15. saith, Jordanis amnis oritur è fonte Paneade qui cognomen dedit Cesareæ— which nothing hindereth the truth of the forementioned etymologie: for it runneth from Dan, afterward named Cæsarea Philippi, as they say, though the first rising of the springs and heads thereof, (long time unknown) are at Panem: the Saracens (saith Adricomius) call that spring, Medan, that is, the waters of Dan: for מ in their tongue, which is near the Hebrew מים signifieth waters: now the people from those regions near Jordan flocking to Johns baptisme must be from Judea, Galilee, Peraa, Batanæa, and the country of the Trachonites.]

Verse 6. Between the word Jordan, and the word, as, Adde [or sprinkling with the water of Jordan,]

In the same verse, after, John 1. 33. Adde [and differing very much, and in many things, as to the institution, end, effects, and forme,) from those dippings, washings, or aspersions in the Jewes manner of purifications, used.]

Verse 12. After, Mark, 9 45. Adde [unquenchable fire, that is, eternal; such as can never be put out, never make an end of the damned, that they might no more be sensible of the torment they are condemned to: it cannot be put out, it not being like this fire which we here use, that must be fed with some combustible matter, or it will go out, of its own accord; but the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone doth kindle it, Isai 30. 33. that is, the justice and omnipotent power of God so perpetuates their torment by hell fire, as if indeficient streams and rivers of brimstone ran in upon it, so that it can never go out for want of supply; neither can it ever end the life and sense of the damned, who shall call to the mountains to fall upon them, and death to end them and their torments, but not obtain their desire: the eternal justice of God which in their life time they securely contemned, as it were so tempering the most active quality of the fire, that it shall ever torment, but never consume them whom it once seizeth on: Nor need this seem strange to any: do we not (saith Chrysostom) see the sun begetting, by it, light, and an admirable heat by beames perpendicular, yet in so many generations, that heat is not at all consumed? Do we not read of the bush on fire, not consumed? Exod. 3. By another expression he affirmeth the same thing, Isai. 66. 24. their worme shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched --- See chap. 25. 41, 46.]

CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. After the word, parents, Adde [But why would Gods Spirit carry him to be tempted, who tempteth no man? Jam. 1. 13. and teacheth us to pray, Matth. 6 13. lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil? We must for answer know, that.

1. There is considerable the difference between Christ invincibly holy, and sinful man, prone to all evil, and therefore easily overcome by temptations.

2. Christ

2. Chriſt came into the world to deſtroy death, and him that had the power thereof, the devil, Heb. 2. 14. and to annul and deſtroy his works, 1 John 3. 8. therefore preſently after his inauguration by baptiſm, he,as it were,entreth into the liſts with the prince of darkneſſe to a fierce monomachie and ſingle combat, in his own ſacred Perſon, to begin our victory over him and ſin, which by and through Chriſt we ſhall obtain: as alſo to teach us not to be ſecure, but when we give our names to God, and reſolve to leave our ſins, then to look for the moſt furious charges of Satan; who then will purſue us, like a ſpiritual Pharaoh, with all his power, until the rod of God open us a paſſage to our promiſed reſt, through the red ſea of Chriſts blood.

3. He was led into the wilderneſſe near Judea; not that Satan could not as eaſily and dangerouſly tempt in the populous City as in the elinge wilderneſſe. See verſe 5. but becauſe ſolitude was moſt accommodate to this conflict, as moſt free from diſturbance (of Satans machinations and tryal of his uttermoſt power) by any intervenient occaſion or party of Chriſt againſt him, by counſel or conſolation obſtructing, or any wayes hindring the worſt that Satan could do againſt him.

4. Seeing we are ſubject to various temptations, all our life long, it behoves us to pray that we may not enter into temptation, that we may be preſerved from it, or in it: we are hereto permitted, that we may be humbled in the knowledge of our own corruptions ever ready on all occaſions to betray us to the enemy: that we may be ſtirred up to a faithful vigilancy, having ſuch reſtleſſe adverſaries to deal withal, 1 Pet. 5. 8. to kindle in us an hearty thankfulneſſe to God, and confidence in his mercy, of whoſe providence in ſuch conflicts preſerving us, we have perpetual experience. See Rom. 7. 24,25. 2 Cor. 12. 9. To awaken us to frequent prayer, leſt we enter into temptation: laſtly, that through many combats exerciſed, we may grow more ſtrong and confident, grounded in Chriſt: as trees in tender valleys,often ſhaken with windes, take firmer root:ſo grow the regenerate more ſtrong,by temptations overcome. (See 2 Cor. 7. 11.) Therefore Chriſt (being like us in all things, ſin onely excepted, to ſhew us, that by him ſin and temptations thereto, hath in his own perſon, and in his body the Church, ſhall be overcome) would be ſubject to temptations.

5. That he might teach us not onely by his precept, but alſo by his own example how to overcome temptations, by faſting,vigilancy, prayer, and meditation, on the holy Scriptures.

6. That he might in his own ſacred perſon have experience of our miſery --- in that he himſelf hath ſuffered,being tempted, he is able to ſuccour them that are tempted --- Heb. 2. 17, 18.

7. That he might ſtill and put the enemy and careleſſe ſinner to ſuch ſilence, as can have no apology. Had not the regenerate been permitted to temptations, Satan would have ſaid, as once of Job; haſt thou not made an hedge about him, Job 1. 10? had not Chriſt been tempted, the ſinner would ſay, I cannot do that which thou commandeſt me, becauſe it is impoſſible: thou bidſt me not be overcome of anger, luſt, fear, ſorrow, death, &c. but this is ſo contrary to nature (whoſe lawes thy ſelf haſt ſet) that all living creatures are ſubject to ſuch affections; or if you think nature can be ſo eaſily refined, tu ipſe qui præcipis, fac, ut ſciam fieri poſſe --- do you that which you command me, that I may know 'tis fecile; but if you do it not why impoſe you lawes on free-men, which your ſelf will not obey? prius diſce qui doces --- loqui facile eſt,præſtare difficile. Lactant. l. 4. c. 23. therefore Chriſt our perfect Teacher, ought both to teach by precept, and confirm the ſame by his practice. Now, how ſhould he have done that which he commanded man to do, if he had not become man like unto him he taught? Had he been ſubject to no paſſion on which temptation could have taken hold, man might ſo have anſwered: truly, I would not ſin, but am over-powered; I am clothed with fraile fleſh and blood --- I am carried againſt my will, and ſin, not becauſe I would do ſo, but becauſe I am compelled. I am ſenſible of my ſinning, but the neceſſity of humane frailty which I cannot reſiſt, enforceth me. How ſhould he who ſhall judge the living and the dead, confute and reprove the ſinner thus excuſing his ſins by the infirmity of fleſh and nature, except himſelf had aſſumed the very ſame fleſh and nature of man,without ſin, that he might demonſtrate, that even fleſh and blood may be without ſin? Men prone to ſin, would faine ſeem,not onely to be worthy of pardon, but to ſin with good reaſon; and ſo would plead: Lord thou ſinneſt not becauſe thou art free from this body: thou coveteſt not, for the immortal hath no need or uſe of any thing; but I have need of many things to preſerve my life: thou feareſt not death becauſe thou art immortal: thou contemneſt ſorrow, becauſe thou canſt ſuffer no violence: but alas, I am mortal, and therefore feare thoſe ſorrows which fleſh and blood cannot bear. Leſt therefore the ſinner might object, thou commandeſt impoſſibilities, Chriſt ſubjected himſelf, to all humane infirmities, neceſſities, yea and temptations, that to the pretence of impoſſibility, he might have to anſwer: Lo, I am humane, clothed with fraile fleſh, yet perform I that which I command thee: behold, I go before thee, ſi præcipientem ſequi non potes, ſequere antecedentem. Lactant. q. ſ. c. 24.]

Verſe 2. After the word, Goſpel, Adde [Chriſt was pleaſed ſo to do, as to confirm the truth of the Goſpel which he would henceforth preach; ſo to afford Satan place to tempt him with bodily neceſſities (See verſe 3.) wherein he could not be overcome: and to teach us how to reſiſt theſe temptations which are to be overcome,onely with faſting and prayer. The firſt Adam was overcome in Paradiſe by taſting the forbidden fruit; the ſecond Adam Chriſt overcame Satan in the fearful wilderneſſe, by faſting.]

Verſe 4. After, Deut. 8. 3. Adde [or ſhall not have his life ſuſtained and prolonged by the creature, but the power of the Almighty Creatour whoſe will is his word, and his word his work: who in the creation ſet the lawes of nature whereby this or that creature is nutritive, and not another: he yet worketh (Joh. 5 17.) with or without (ſometimes againſt) the ordinary meanes, as he pleaſeth.]

Verſe 6. After, as chap. 3. 17. Adde [was affirmed.]

In the ſame verſe, after the word, armes, Adde [or ſave them from falling dangerouſly, by ſudden catching hold on them.]

Verſe 7. After the word, doe, Adde [ſo Scripture muſt be interpreted, that one place may ſtand true with another: ſo here we muſt know that God hath promiſed ſo to bear up his, that they ſhall not periſh, but yet we muſt not neglect the ordinary meanes of our preſervation which God hath appointed; as here, by deſcending by ſteps, and ſafe degrees: for in neglect or contempt of Gods ordinance, we tempt God; which another Scripture, by Chriſt alleaged, forbiddeth.]

Verſe 10. After the word, world, Adde [if thou couldſt give it; which I know is none of thine to diſpoſe of, but Gods.]

Verſe 11. After the word, able, Adde [1 Cor. 10. 13.]

Verſe 16 After, Pſal. 97. 11. Adde [And the knowledge of Gods will concerning the ſame, which Chriſt taught and teacheth in the Goſpel preached.]

Verſe 17. After, Mark 1. 14. Adde [That John being caſt into priſon by Herod, Jeſus came into Galilee,and dwelt at Capernaum: when John Baptiſt his fore-runner had finiſhed his courſe, witneſſing concerning the true light Chriſt, Joh. 1. 7, 9 and preparing the way for him, then it was neceſſary that he ſhould appear, and manifeſt himſelf unto Iſrael.]

Verſe 25. After the word, therein, Adde [concerning which, ſee on Mark, 7. 3.]

CHAP. V.

Verſe 6. After the word, ſatisfieth, Adde [comforteth and ſtrengtheneth the body, making it able and active to its ſeveral offices. Hence is the metaphor accommodated to the ſpirit, and duties ſpiritual: as if he had ſaid, be not dejected you that are ſenſible of your ſpiritual wants; for if you do but deſire grace, God will not be wanting to you: which our Saviour teacheth us by an argument from the leſſe to the greater, Luke 11. 13. if men in whom is but very little goodneſſe, will yet give their children that which is good how much more will God infinitely good, wiſe powerful --- give the holy Spirit to them that ask him? that is, a comfortable and ſufficient meaſure of grace, as he ſaid to Paul hungring and thirſting in his hot conflict with the meſſengers of Satan --- my grace is ſufficient for thee, 2 Cor. 12. 9.]

Verſe 10. Between the words, are, and, two, Adde [of things ſecular and belonging to this life]

In the ſame verſe, after the words, adverſity here, Adde [This is the moſt ample reward, of which St. James ſaith, chap. 1. 12. Bleſſed is the man that endureth temptations: for when he is tryed, he ſhall receive the Crown of life. See alſo, Rev. 2. 10. Seeing therefore the condition of the Saints as to this preſent life, is commonly afflicted and calamitous; Chriſt is pleaſed to comfort them with aſſured hope of bleſſedneſſe in the life to come: and hence it may appear how happy a thing it is,to caſt our cares and ſelves on Gods mercy and providence, who is a bountiful Rewarder of all them that truſt in him. If thou truſt in riches, they cannot deliver thee in the day of wrath: if in power of men &c. they will deceive thy truſt; in the end thou ſhalt find, that all confidence in creatures, will, like Pharaohs chariot-wheeles, there fall off, when thou art in greateſt danger, and leave thee to be overwhelmed with deſperate miſeries: but God is a moſt ſure and bountiful Rewarder of his, giving them for the loſſe of an earthly poſſeſſion, for ſome poor and tranſitory eſtate, glory, riches, honour, here loſt for his ſake, the kingdom of heaven, eternal, unmeaſurable, unſpeakable, true bleſſedneſſe.]

Verſe 11. Between the words: Gr. and lying, Adde [ψευδόμενοι]

In the ſame verſe, after the word, Martyr, Adde [now whereas truth, vertue, excellency; cannot, without apparent influence of Satan, be perſecuted; therefore the father of lyes furniſheth thoſe whom he inſtigateth to injure the holy, with miſcheivous pretences againſt them, ſuggeſting that they are innovatours, diſturbers of the publick peace, enemies to the ſtate, ſeducers of the people, impious, &c. See Jer. 18. 18, 23. Act. 6. 11. Act. 24. 5. Luke 23. 2.]

Verſe 12. After the words,with them, Adde [and alſo the perſecuted Prophets reward in heaven: becauſe God is yeſterday,to day, and the ſame for ever, inviolably juſt and good. Now 'tis the end which crownes all actions, and ſhewes them good or bad, happy or unhappy: the falſe Prophet who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſſe, knew this; therefore, without exception to the croſſe deſired to die the death of the righteous, and that his laſt end might be like his, Numb. 23. 10. therefore fear no perſecutors, their rage cannot be long,but the happineſſe of the perſecuted ſhall be eternal.]

Verſe 17. Between the word, Gr. and the words, to diſſolve, Adde [καταλῦσαι, which word among other things, ſignifieth to overthrow; as here, by abrogating, repealing, or rendring it no longer binding: in which ſenſe, Demoſth. Olynth. 3. uſeth --- λῦσαι νόμον to diſſolve, or deſtroy the law: to bring to nothing, as Act. 5. 38. καταλυθήσεται --- it will come to nought]

Verſe 23. After the word, ſeaſoned, Adde [without which all is but the ſacrifice of fooles, and cannot be accepted.]

In the ſame verſe, after the word man, Adde [See 1 Cor. 11. 28.

Verſe 42. After, Deut. 15. 8. Adde [δανείσασθαι here uſed, commonly ſignifieth, to take up on uſury: and ſo the word δανειστὴς a Uſurer, coming of δανείζω, to put out to intereſt: yet here we muſt underſtand Chriſt ſpeaking of a free lending. See Luke 6. 35.]

Verſe 44. After the word, Saints, Adde [which they can have over their enemies in this world.]

Verſe 45. After, John 3. 10. Adde [John 13. 35.]

In the ſame verſe, after, Eph. 5. 1. Adde [the moſt religious worſhip of God, is imitation of his holineſſe.]

CHAP. VI.

Before the beginning, of the Chapter Adde this.

Verſe 1. TAke heed] This caution ſhews how prone we are to fail in our beſt duties: and the word προσέχετε,here uſed, importeth a very ſolicitous care to be had, as Luke 12. 1. as it were προσέχειν τὸν νοῦν, adhibere animum: attend and be cautious, leſt the malitious enemy pervert your almes-deeds and make a ſin of your,otherwiſe,good workes, depriving you of the fruits thereof.]

Verſe 7. After 1 Kings 18. 27. Adde [Gr. μὴ βαττολογήσητε do not like that prating Battus, who was notorious for his abſurd talkativeneſſe and vain repetitions of that he had ſaid, or might in few words have ſaid. See Suid. βαττολογία. Eraſm. Adag. chil. 2. Cent. 1. Ad. 92.]

Verſe 13. After the words, ſeeſt beſt, Adde [the power] This is for divers good reaſons added; as firſt to confirm our faith of obtaining, ſeeing that God who thus commandeth us to pray, hath abſolute power to do for us that which we want and pray for: nothing is impoſſible to him. Secondly,that we may not ſeem to attribute to him a powerleſſe kingdom, or any leſſe than an infinite and unlimited government over all creatures in heaven and earth. Again, that we may reſt aſſured, that it is not of infirmity or want of ability, that he doth not preſently revenge their rebellion who acknowledge not,or obey not the lawes of his kingdom; or that he doth not inſtantly grant the requeſts of his ſervants, to deliver or ſupplly them: however in his wiſdom he delayeth it, he ever hath that power which none can reſiſt.

and the glory] Either thine is, or to thee of right belongeth all honour and glory; as Rom. 4 11. Rev. 5. 12. 1 Chron. 16 28, 29. Rom. 11. 36. Gal. 1. 5. Iſai. 6. 3. Pſal. 8. 1. Pſal. 24. 7, 8. Pſal. 29. 3. and 113. 4. and 148. 13. &c. The ſumme is: We beg all theſe things of thee; confident that we ſhall obtain, relying on thy promiſe, holy will and power; for we know thou haſt begun in us the kingdom of grace, to prepare us for the kingdom of glory, to the manifeſtation of this glory; and in this confidence with ardent votes we cry, Amen.]

In the ſame verſe, after, John 3. 11. Adde [having acknowledged his kingdom, power and glory, to be eternal, as Pſal. 145. 10. in this one word, Amen, we expreſſe the fervency of our deſire to obtain that which we prayed for, and our aſſurance of obtaining becauſe he is faithful and true, and cannot deceive: for this is an Hebrew word, importing certainty and truth.]

V. 26. After the words, faſhion thereof, Adde [Gr. ἀφανίζουσι, they deform: ἀφανίζω, is, to obſcure, deform, disfigure, &c. So that the natural colour or complexion and favour may not appear: the word properly ſignifieth, è conſpectu afferre, to cauſe a thing not to appear, or be ſeen: So here, they did away the nitour and comlineſſe of their viſage, that onely ſqualor appearing, they may ſeem in the neglect of their bodies, to faſt.]

Verſe 24. After, Luke 16. 13. Adde [he will not ſhare with the World, Sin, Satan; he will be ſerved with our body and ſoul: he made and redeemed them, and they are his, 1 Cor. 6 20.]

Verſe 34. After the words, but faith, Adde [every day of mans life hath care and evil enough; ſo that we need not anticipate our ſorrowes, and as it were, pull them upon us before the time: that evil comes too ſoon, that comes at laſt. Load not your mindes with thoughts of tomorrows, wants, or afflictions. The gatherers of Manna in the wilderneſſe were fooliſhly and unprofitably ſolicitous for the morrows ſtore, except onely for the Sabbath Exod, 16. 19. take all poſſible care for the reſt which remaineth for the people of God, Heb 4. 9. for the things of this life, do a prudent and holy endeavour, and commit the reſt to God; afflict not thy ſoul; every day of tranſitory life will bring its ſorrow with it]

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 7. After, James 1. 6. Adde [God often encourageth us to earneſt prayer, by promiſing us audience. See Pſal. 50. 15. Jer. 29. 12, 13, 14. and alſo by the admirable effects of the ſame. See Pſal. 81. 7. Exod. 17. 11. &c. Pſal. 3. 4. and 6. 9. and 10. 17 &c. Act. 12. 5. &c. Jam. 5. 15, 17, 18. Now the three words here uſed, are to teach us ſo many neceſſary rules concerning prayer. 1. That we be ſenſible of our wants; for we ask not that which we have, or think we want not; but that which we know we want, and would have. 2. That we ſeek, as uſing the means to attain: this intimateth, care, and diſcretion in ſeeking, where, and when, we are likely to find. 3. That we conſtantly perſevere; (though we find not the way to our deſires preſently open) and as it were knock at the door until it be opened to us.]

Verſe 10 After the words, hurt us, Adde [or deny us any thing to do us good. See Pſal. 84. 11. Rom. 8. 32.]

Verſe 13. After the words, born ſuch, Adde [and cuſtom of ſinning makes it more eaſie; men fear their firſt offences but uſe emboldneth them to ſhameleſſe impudency: and therefore 'tis here compared to a ſpatious and eaſie way: ſo the word, εὐρύχωρος here uſed, ſignifieth, ſpatious, broad: here's nothing to hinder or trouble the ſinner, but that he may go ſmoothly on for a time.]

In the ſame verſe, after, Salvian. de gub. dei l. 3 Adde [The greater the multitude of ſinners, the greater is the mercy of the Deity.]

Verſe 21. After, James 1. 22. Adde [though doubling of the word ſometimes importeth vehemency of the ſpeaker; yet here it ſeemeth to import a frequency and often having God in their mouthes. This is not all: to ſeem religious or to talke much of Religion, like the bees humming at young Plato's lips, may poſſibly be a preſage of future eloquence: but if thou wilt be ſaved, thy Religion muſt be like that ſwarm which Sampſon found by the vineyards of Timnah, within thy heart: he is an Iſraelite, who is one within, Rom. 2. 29. God regards the heart.]

Verſe 22. After the words, damnation be, Adde [δυνάμεις here, as alſo elſewhere, ſignifieth miracles. See Mark 9. 39. Luke 10. 13. and 19. 37.]

Verſe 23. After Pſal 6. 8. Adde [See on chap. 25. 41. ἀποχωρεῖτε, get ye far from me, and the joyes of heaven,out of which can be nothing but intenſeſt ſorrow and miſery of body and ſoul to eternity; and that which he commandeth is and ſhall ever be inevitable]

Verſe 24 After, Luke 6. 47. Adde [This Whoſoever declareth, that God is no accepter of perſons: all muſt hear him that will be ſaved. His word is written in the holy Scripture, and ſpoken by all faithful Miniſters, concerning whom he ſaith, he that heareth you, heareth me --- Luke 10. 16. Matth. 10. 14 which all muſt hear; King, Prieſt, Prophet, People: if the Prophet, (ſpeak he never ſo well to others) hear not himſelf, he muſt be caſt away; becauſe he that will not hear this word, deſpiſeth not man, but God, whoſe truth, word and ordinance it is.]

Verſe 26. After the word, men Adde [Yet all ſuperſtructions muſt fall, if the foundation fail: ſo is it here.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 2. After Luke 5. 12 Adde [it is here a note of a memorable and unexpected accident, or thing which men preſent, could neither foreknow, nor in their natural abilities reaſonably look for.]

In the ſame verſe, after the word, humility, Adde [and geſture, or poſture of diſtreſſed ſuppliants, accedere ad genua: to fall upon their knees, or to the feet and knees, of thoſe,of whom they begged mercy, favour, or relief.]

In the ſame verſe again, after the words, can heal it. Adde [and that he would ſhew his povver and mercy on him therein: had he knovvn the povver and mercy of Chriſt to others, never ſo much or confidently, except he had hoped, that it ſhould be extended to, and ſhevved on him alſo, he vvould not have come to entreat it: for vvho can pray for that, vvhereof he hath no hope of attaining?]

ANNOTATIONS
On the Gospel according to
S. MARK.

The Argument.

MARK is observable for his brevity, and in many things doth, as it were, abbreviate Matthew: Yet not without some useful differences, which may serve for explanations of the former Gospel written by S. Matthew the Apostle. This Evangelist is thought to have been a follower of Peter, and called his Sonne, 1 Pet. 5. 13, yet whether it was John Mark or no, who is mentioned, as Barnabas his Kinsman, Colos. 4. 10. is uncertain; for he was a Follower of Paul and Barnabas, and not of Peter. Whose Follower soever he was, out of doubt the credit of the History dependeth not upon any mans Approbation, but upon Divine Inspiration; else could it not be Canonicall Scripture, 2 Pet. 1. 21. In Ecclesiastical Histories, he is said to be the Founder of the Church of Alexandria in Egypt, and there to die, and be buried: Yet his Book remaineth for the good of Gods Church: To whom the Lord give grace to make good use of it. Amen.

CHAP. I.

He beginning of the Gospel] That is, the beginning of the Evangelical story, of the first propagation of the Gospel, which was by the Ministery of John; at whose preaching Mark begins his relations. See the Argument on Matthew, and on chap. 1.1. there. Epiphanius ho. 1. lib. 2. haeref. 51. n. 6. noteth well, that God gave every one his part: so that every one of the Evangelists had his peculiar taste allotted him, and that somethings they recorded with one consent, so that they may all appear to have drawn, ἐξ ἑνὸς τῆς πηγῆς, from one and the same fountain, and other things omitted of the rest, some one of them mentioneth, as the Spirit of God gave him.

the Son of God] Matthew calleth him the son of David, to shew the truth of his humanity, and of Gods promises. Mark stiles him the Son of God, to set out his Divine power and ability to save us. See on Luke 3 38.

V. 2. as it is written] John went before Christ, as it was foretold by the Prophets. Isai. 40. 3. &c. Mal. 4. 5. &c. See Matth. 11. 13, 14. Luke 1. 76.

in the pophets] In the Books of the Prophets Isaiah and Malachie. Matth 3. 3. and Luke 3. 4. as also in the Syriack here, Isaiah is cited; the meaning is, in their prophesies. See Isai. 40. 3. Mal. 3. 1.

I send my messenger] The Prophet useth the present tense, though he spake of a thing to come, being as sure of it, as if it were present. So Hosea 10. 7.

before my face] A metaphor taken from the Princes Harbingers sent before them, to prepare for them.

prepare thy way, &c.] By setting the way and removing the lets to a fairer passage; so did John, by preaching repentance, prepare the way for the Gospel of Christ.

V. 3. the voice] See on Matth. 3. 3. John Baptist is called the voice of one crying, &c. to shew: that in that his Ministery, he reached nothing but that onely which the Spirit of God dictated to him: it was not his own word, but Gods; he was, to it, in some proportion, as the vocal instruments to the soul and mind, to expresse and bring the notions thereof unto the eares of men, which by the voice they do. When God would have Aaron joyne in commission with Moses for that great work of bringing Israel out of the house of bondage, he said to Moses, thou shalt speak unto him. and put words in his mouth, and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do: and he shall be thy spokesman unto the people --- he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God, Exod. 4. 15, 16. such was John Baptist; such is every faithful Minister, as the voice and mouth of God, to speak, what he putteth into their mouth; not their own word, or fense, Luke 10. 16. Christ saith to his Disciples, --- he that heareth you, heareth me --- and Matth. 10. 20. for it is not you that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.

in the wildernesse] See on Matth 3.1. Either this may be joyned with the precedent words; and the fense will be, that John began in, or near the Deserts of Judaea to cry, prepare the way of the Lord, &c. or if with the following, the meaning is, prepare the way of the Lord, and in Judea (which now lieth as a rough Desert, untilled, without the fear and due worship of the Lord, and wherein few find or walk in the strait paths of righteousnesse and, life) now make strait paths.

prepare ye] See on Matth. 3.3.

the baptism of repentance] John did teach those whom he baptized, that this baptism did wash away their sins, who truly believed and repented. See chap. 16. 16. janua regni penitentia est cum fide, Jerom; faith and repentance are the gate of the kingdom: repentance was a part of Johns doctrine, and by baptism they professed and testified their repentance.

for remission of sins] εἰς ἄφεσιν, &c. unto, or that they might obtain remission of their sins: not by the external washing with water onely, which is the Ministers part, but by the inward Baptism of Christ, by the Spirit of regeneration: nor is repentance the cause, but the inseparable condition of sins remission; which God alsoe giveth (2 Tim. 2. 25.) who freely forgiveth the penitent. See verse 8. onely the blood of Jesus cleanseth us from all our sins, 1 John 1. 7. John 1. 29 See on Matth. 3. 11.

V. 5. and there went out] Matth. 3. 5.

all the land] χώρα, the region is here put for the people thereof: and all, for many, or the greater part; or of all, and towns, some. See Luke 3. 10. &c. Jer. 9. 26.

confessing their sins] See on Matth. 3 6.

V. 6. clothed with camels hair] Matth. 3. 4.

V. 7. one mightier than I] John doth, as a faithful Minister should do, lessen himself, to advance Gods honour, referring the whole power of his ministration unto him, who alone can make it effectual. See 1 Cor. 3 7.

I am not worthy to. &c.] His meaning was to expresse the condition of the meaneſt servant, who stoops to pull off his masters shoes; as if he said, I am unworthy of the meaneſt servants office in his family.

V. 8. but he shall baptize you] He sheweth that the whole efficacy of baptism proceedeth from Christ, inwardly baptizing. See Matth. 3. 11.

V. 9. and it came to passe] Matth. 3. 13.

V. 10. coming up out of the water] John, coming up saw it, Joh. 1. 33 34. it is likely that he went into the water with Christ, as Philip did with the Eunuch. Act. 8. 38.

the heavens open] Or, cloven, or rent. See on John 1. 32.

the spirit like a dove] See Matth. 3. 16. See on John 1. 32.

descending upon him] On Christ. See on Matth. 3. 16.

V. 11. a voice from heaven] See Matth. 3. 17.

V. 12. Immediately] Or shortly after.

the spirit driveth] Or lends away, as verse 43. or putteth forth, as John 10. 4. or leadeth him thither, Matth. 4. 1.

V. 13. with the wild beasts] In the place where no man dwelt, Luke 1. 80 Act. 8. 26. alluding to Job 5. 22. in this triple neighbourhood of Christ, with Satan, wild beasts, and Angels, it appeareth which God testified from heaven, that he is indeed the holy Son of God: that Satan tempted him it was more than for us to be taken. Greg. Nazianzen orat. 36. he tempted him, but could not prevail; this shewed him more than man: the wild beasts were about him, and hurt him not, but acknowledged their subjection to him the second Adam, as unto the first in his state of innocency: and the Angels in their Ministery acknowledge him their Lord and God, who made them ministring spirits, Heb. 1.

Angels ministred unto him] After the fourty dayes fast expired, and the temptations ended, Matt. 4. 11.

V. 14. After that John was cast into prison] After Johns imprisonment, Christ shewed himself more evidently in the Office of the Messias.

Jesus came into Galilee] Matt. 4. 12.

V. 15. the time is fulfilled] The time foretold by the Prophet: for the manifestation of Christ is fully come, Gal. 4. 4.

the Kingdom of Gods at hand] Christ did now by the preaching of the Gospel, take possession of his kingdome, and declared the mysteries and power thereof, and Doctrine of Gods grace, and free mercy, for the gathering together, governing, and salvation of his Elect.

repent ye] Faith and repentance are the sum of the Gospel. See on verse 4.

V. 16. now as he walked] Matt. 4. 18. concerning the calling of these Apostles S. Matthew there speaketh at large from the 18. to the 23. verse, see also John 1. 43, &c.

he saw Simon] He saw him before, John 1. 42. but now he called him to his Apostleship.

V. 17. I will make you fishers] See Matth. 4. 19. Luke 5. 10. he saith not, ye shall make your selves, as they do, who intrude themselves into the Ministery (as Gregor. Nazianzen saith, ἀθύροις χερσὶ) with unwashed hands; or as the same speaks, orat. 20. at once sowed and grown up (as the Poets feigned those Giants) in one day, we make them saints, and commend them to be wise and learned, who have learned nothing, neither have brought any thing towards the ministery, before their will to be Ministers, see Heb. 5. 4. 5. Greg. Nazianzen orat. 1.

V. 18. straitway they forsook] See Matt. 4. 20, Luke 5. 11.

V. 19. he saw James] See Matt. 4. 21.

with his hired servants] That by them he might mannage his affairs, and they attend him, who had now called them from that course of life to learn of him, and to preach to others the Gospel.

V. 21. went to Capernaum] Matt. 4. 13. See on Matt. 11. 23. Luke 4. 31. see on John 2. 12. Saint Matthew saith, chapter 4 13. leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum —— and verse 23. that he went about all Galilee, teaching in their Synagogues, &c. and so he came to Capernaum, where he now dwelt, which was the cause why he often went and came to the same: this was a Town near the Lake of Genesareth, in Galilee of the Gentiles in the borders of Zabulon and Nephtalim, as Jerom gathereth out of the Gospels. This flourishing, but impious place Christ pleased to dwell in, and there to preach the Gospel, that they might have means of conversion and salvation, and that his Ministers might learne that for the impiety and wickednesse of a people (though much discouraged therewith; as Jer. 9. 13, &c. Ier. 20. 9.) they may not without Divine Warrant desert and leave them; but be —— apt to teach, patient in meeknesse instructing those that oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the Truth, 2 Tim. 2. 24, 25, &c.

V. 22. astonished] See on Luke 4. 32. and Matthew, 7. 28.

V. 23. there was in the Synagogue] Luke 4. 33.

of an unclean spirit] See on Luke 4 33. Matth. 10. 1. unclean, saith Bythymius, quasi immundus ac sordidus, &c. as rejoycing in uncleanneſſe and sin. See on chap. 5. 2.

V. 24. let us alone] ἔα it is a particle ἐπιπλήξεως, of exclamation, proceeding from grief or astonishment, at some new, or unexpected thing, which troubleth and perplexeth as much as ah. Euthymius interpreter giveth it, sine, that is, dimitte nos; suffer, or let us alone: and Suidas giveth it by συγχώρει, sine, concede, permitte, it is taken for an imperative of ἐάω, sino, permitto, thence ἄφες for ἔασε.

Jesus of Nazareth] Because he was bred there, though he were born at Bethlehem. See Matt 2. 23. this was the subtilty of Satan, who well knowing, that Christ was, according to the Prophesies born at Bethlehem; yet to persuade the people, that Christ was not the Messias expected and promised, he calleth him Jesus of Nazareth. See John 7. 42.

art thou come to destroy us] Did God therefore send thee into the World, to restrain us from doing mischief, which is a torment to us? See Luke 8. 31. the devils knowv that they are already damned, but yet they shall not be fully tormented before the end of the World. See 2 Pet. 2. 4 Jude v. 6.

the Holy one of God] So is he indeed the Holy Saviour of the World, figured by the High Priests Title, Exod. 28. 3. 6. and foretold, Dan. 9. 24. but mark how unconfident falshood is, the devils plots entangle himself: if the Holy one, then certainly come to cast thee out: and here he confesseth Christ, in hope that none will believe that which the Devill saith, but all in vaine: they all believe Christ to be the Holy Saviour, who are regenerate by his Spirit.

V. 25. Jesus rebuked him ἐπετίμησεν, rebuked him with threatning.

hold thy peace] Jesus refuseth testimony of the evil one: Satan is a lyar, John 8 44. and the father thereof: needs must his Testimony render Truth it self suspected vvith men: it is an usual punishment of lyars, not to be believed, when they speak Truth. The devil never speaks truth, but to deceive. See Acts 16. 18. and Psalm 50. 16.

come out of him] Thus Christ would rather shew himself to be that Holy one of God, by casting out the unclean spirits, than by their Testimony; and appeare such in the effects of Divine Power, than the words of deluding spirits: Gods cause hath no need of sinne or sinners to support it. See on Luke 8. 41.

V. 26. had torn him] Or pulled him with grievous pains, as by casting him into a convulsion fit, which may be without renting) Luke 4. 35. so σπαράξαν importeth: thence is σπαραγμός, convulsion, σπαράσσω seemeth compounded of σπάω traho, to draw, (whence is σπασμὸς, convulsion or cramp) and ἀράσσω, pulso, &c. so that it properly ingnieth to tear or break, by drawing up together: this Christ present now permitted, that Satans malice might appear; but would not suffer him further to hurt, that the power of him that cast out Satan might be known.

V. 27. among themselves] Or within themselves, as Matthew, 16. 7.

what new doctrine is this] Not blaming it, as Acts 17. 19. but acknowledging it to be strange and extraordinary; in the matter of his teaching, and the manner of the confirmation thereof by miracles, which none of their late teachers could do.

with authority] Not by prayer to God as a servant, but suo jure, by his own jurisdiction, command and power over them.

V. 28. the region round about] Not onely into Galilee but also into all the countreys thereon bordering.

V. 29. forthwith] Matth. 8. 14.

James and John] It may be these dwelt together in one house, for they came with him.

V. 30. Simons wives mother] See Matt. 8. 14.

V. 31. lift her up] Matt. 8. 15.

V. 32. when Even was come] Matt. 8. 16. the Sabbath then ending, the people were of opinion, that it was then lawfull to carry their sick to be healed, which they conceived to be unlawful on the Sabbath day.

V. 33 All the city] That is, all those at least whom it concerned to bring their sick; and probably a very great part of the Citizens of Capernaum besides, seeing the sick born along, and hearing what was done for them by Jesus, would goe along to see the miracles.

V. 34. Of divers diseases] This shewed his omnipotent power to repair man.

suffered not the devils] For it belonged not to them to preach the Gospel. See Acts 16. 18. nor would Christ receive a Testimony from them. See on verse 25. The Syriack gives it, he would not suffer them to speake, because they knew him: and therefore (as he well knew) would out of malice reveal him: as some of his Ministers, wicked men, preached Christ of ill will. See Philippians, 1. 15.

V. 35. And there prayed] He used to take the nights and mornings for prayer, not onely because these are freeſt from distractions, and so most accommodate to prayer, but because he might have the day free to preach, and heal the sick.

V. 36. they that were with him] Probably, Andrew, James and John, mentioned verse 29.

V. 37 all men seeke for thee] That is, many men enquire for thee, which it seemeth came to Simon Peters door, by reason of the wonderous workes, which he had there done in the evening past.

V. 38. let us go into the next Towns] That he might heal their sick, and instruct them also as well as the Capernaites.

came I forth] From God, John 16. 28. See Luke 4. 43.

that I may preach] Though prayer be a part of Gods worship, and an holy exercise, yet being advertised by the Apostles, that opportunity was offered to preach the Gospel, he arose from that for this.

V. 39. he preached ἦν κηρύσσων, he was preaching: that is, by degrees, and in time, he preached through all. See Matthew, 4. 23.

cast out devils] As verse 25. Matt. 4. 24. and 8. 16.

V. 40. a Leper] See on Luke 5. 12.

V. 41. I will, be thou clean] See on Matt. 8. 3. and on Luke 5. 13. he will also heal and cleanse us, if we call upon him in faith.

V. 42. immediately the Leprosie] See on Matthew 8. 3. and on Luke 5. 13.

V. 43. Sent him away] So Luke 8. 38.

V. 44. say nothing] Till thou have first been with the Priest to offer according to the Law, for thy cleansing: this might be to prevent the inconvenience which followed, verse 45. See on Matthew 8. 4.

shew thy selfe to the Priest] Any of Aarons posterity might judge of a Leper, whether he were cured or not. Leviticus 13. 2. Not without an excellent misticry, shewing that Christ (of whom Aaron, and the Leviticall High Priest for the time being, were Types) should cleanse and judge of the Leprosie of sinne, Acts 17. 31.

V: 45. but he went out] From the presence of Jesus, Luke 5.15. That is, the humane and bodily presence of Jesus, and the company then with him.

to publish it much] He could not conceal what he had received: Christ did justly decline popularity, because it something hindred the course of the Gospel, by creating him untimely dangers: and the cured man did justly glorifie God, who had done so great a work upon him.

the matter] τὸν λόγον, the speech: an Hebraïsm, the word is put for the thing done.

could no more openly] As he was wont, and as he would, without too much confluence of people, and hazard to himself, from the malicious Scribes and Pharisees which sheweth the cause why Christ charged the cured Leper, not to tell any man how he was cleansed which Christ knew just cause for, though man could not understand it. to be either just or reasonable to conceal the goodnesse, mercy and power of Christ, shewed in curing him by his Word, in an instant.

V 2 not so much as about the door] Neither the house, nor entrance thereto was able to receive such a multitude as came unto him.

preached the word] Of the kingdom, the Gospel which declareth the Will of God for our salvation by Christ: thus Jesus took the advantage of such conventions, to publish the Gospel, which was his charge and office.

which was born] Like a living corps, no wayes able to come his self, that wretched disease having left no strength in his sinews.

V. 4 they let down] They brake through the flat roof of the house, and so let down the man that was sick of the palsie, into the lower room where Christ preached: because they could not for the presse of the people, by any other way bring him into Christs presence. See on Matt. 10.27 Luke 5, 19.

V. 5. saw their faith] See on Matt. 9.2. Luke 5. 20.

V. 6. reasoning in their hearts] Reasoning within themselves, or thinking with themselves: for he that thinks of a matter of doubt, wherein he ponders the difficulties of advantages, on the one part and the other, hath in himself, as it were, two parties opponent, and respondent: see on Matt. 9. 3.

V. 10. the Son of man hath power on earth] See on Matt. 9. 6. and on Luke 5. 24. that you may know by the miraculous effect which you shall forthwith see; that even he who now in the form of a servant and man of sorrows appeareth to you, only a Son of man, (being yet truly God also) hath power to remit sins.

V. 11. Arise, take up thy bed and go, &c.] See on Matt. 9.6.

V. 12. all amazed] ἐξίστασθαι πάντας, a word for word, past themselves; or out of their wits: the Syriack interpreter expresseth it, they all wondered, Matt. 9.8.

we never saw it on this fashion] That is, never since God chose us to be his peculiar people, and shewed his power and mighty hand among us: or since we were born, in all our life time, we never saw such admirable cures done, onely by a word spoken; the sick man was but commanded to be well, and (that which no treasure on earth can purchase, no humane power command, no Art perform) he was presently well, absolutely cured of his desperate disease.

V. 13. He went forth] From the Scribes convicted by this miracle, because he saw, that all the mercy which he shewed on that people, was but as water to unslacke lime, in that it did not extinguish, but incense the Scribes and Pharisees anger the more: by the Sea side] or Lake of Genesareth for it was a Lake of fresh waters, but called a sea for its greatness which was near Capernaum.

all the multitude, &c.] The Gospel offends the proud, while the mean sort of people profit by it, 1 Cor. 1.26. who as they are more free from vain opinion of knowledge and excellency in themselves, so are they more apt and ready to receive instruction from others.

and he taught them] This was the cause of his going out to the multitude: and he never omitted any opportunity of teaching them: This he calleth his meate and drinke, John 4. 34.

V. 14. as he passed by] By the Lake, or by the Sea side, where Custome-Houses commonly flood for the convenience of Merchants to enter their goods, and the Officers to receive Customes, Matth. 9.9. See on v. 13.

V. 21. of new cloth] See on Matt. 9.16. or raw, or unwrought cloth. So Budæus interprets pannicio imposito.

V. 22. new wine in old] Another speech to the same purpose: the sum is, that all men may not be rigidly compelled to one and the same form of living: because there are different conditions, and all things agree not to all men; specially that we ought to spare the infirm, lest we ruine where we intended to repair, and oppresse with too much weight, where we should build up: it is no small skill, to know the state, condition, and quality of our flocks, that we may attemperate our Doctrine to their capacity. See 1 Cor. 3.1, &c.

V. 23. through the Corn fields on the Sabbath] See on Matthew, 12. 1

V. 24. why do they on the Sabbath] See on Matt. 12.2. they erred, because they distinguished not between things absolutely forbidden, and indifferent things; here was a matter of necessity, to wit, to eat when they were hungry, for the preservation of life and health: now works of sanctity, mercy, charity and necessity, must and may be done respectively on the Sabbath day, as our Saviour, the author and interpreter of the Law teacheth here, and Matthew 12.3.4. 5, &c.

V. 25. them that were with him] See on Matthew, 12. 3. and on Luke 6.3.

and gave also to them which were with him] To prevent an objection which might be brought in respect of the dignity of Davids person: for perhaps, these cavillers might say, though it was lawfull for David the Kingly Prophet, and possibly by some Divine warrant to him given by God, & revealed by his spirit to him what maketh this to justifie thee and thy Disciples, who are poor obscure men? what priviledge have they to do a thing unlawfull? it was ready to say, this is not unlawfull, in case of necessity, for preservation of man, or beast subordinate to man, the Law not only Ceremonial (as in Davids eating the shew-bread appeareth) but also in some morall precepts (as here Christ teacheth concerning the Sabbath) giveth way to mans necessity, for whom the Sabbath was made; and as for Christs followers, they had as much priviledge to relieve their necessities, as they that were with David had.

V. 27. the Sabbath was made for man] For mans sake; that it might be set apart for the publick worship of God, mans edification in the use of Gods ordinances, and his rest, as also for the rest of that which God had made subordinate to him

V. 28. Son of man, is Lord also of the Sabbath] He means that Christ, as God, sanctified the Sabbath, and had power thereof, for the altering it to another day (as he did from the seventh day from the creation to the seventh, beginning at his resurrection which was before the first day of the week) or that any man may in case of necessity get food on the Sabbath-day.

V. 2. And they watched him] The Pharisees who were present, watched to entrap him, verse 6. such auditors Gods Ministers often meet withall; insomnis malitia, malice is restlesse. See on Luke 6.7.

V. 3. Stand forth] He bids him stand forth, that the miracle might be the more manifest: for as much as all that were then present should see, both the disaffected patient, and his present and miraculous cure, that they might for the confirmation of the Gospel, as occasion should present it selfe, testifie the Truth of the same to others.

V. 4. or to do evil] It is good for me to shew mercy in healing this man, or it is evil to neglect him, when I can heal him, (for he that saveth not, when he may and can, killeth) the question is, which thinke you may I doe on the Sabbath day? Matthew, 9. 12. He saith positively, it is lawfull to doe well on the Sabbath-dayes. Probably, he first asked the question, and then resolved it his self.

V. 5. with anger] Men when they have wrong done unto them, are angry; but with sinnefull affection: but Christ is angry without sinne (as we should be) because he is angry onely at sinne. See Ephes. 4. 26. Gregory expresseth it well, sic culpam tuam insequor, ut te diligam, I so pursue (or punish) thy fault, that I love thee.

Tyre and Sidon] These were Cities on the Mediterrane sea, bordering on Galilee, to the West of Canaan. See on Matthew, 11. 21.

a great multitude] See on Matt. 12. 15.

V. 9. should wait on him] Should always be ready to receive him; in Greek. προσκαρτερῇ, the Syriac giveth it, ut admoveret sed navigium, that they might cause a ship to lie at anchor near the shore, to the end, that he might go aboard as occasion served, either to avoid the preſs of people, or crosse the water: the word προσκαρτερεῖν signifieth to continue with or by a person, or in some act, that one is always at hand, or ready thereto, Acts 1. 14. ——προσκαρτεροῦντες——τῇ προσευχῇ——continued in prayer: So Acts 2. 46. προσκαρτεροῦντες——ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ——they continued daily ——in the Temple. as had plagues] Diseases, whereby God afflicteth men, as it were correcting them with whips. The word in the Originall is μάστιγας——had scourges, for μάστιξ is flagrum, flagellum a whip or scourge, which word is here used not without singular Emphasis to teach us how to esteem and endure sicknesses, as the rods of our Heavenly Father, whereby he chasteneth us, and humbleth us to amendment of our lives, that we may not be condemned with the world. See 1 Corinthians 11, 30, 32. Hebrewes, 12. 5, 6, &c.

V. 11. and unclean spirits] In them, into whom they had entred; they who were vexed with unclean spirits.

V. 12. that they should not make him known] Jesus came into the world, that he might be known to the salvation of the Elect; and it is life everlasting to know him (See John 17. 3.) but he would not admit the testimony of unclean spirits: his Doctrine and Miracles sufficiently manifested him to the world; the truth needeth neither lies, nor liars to support it. See on chap. 1. 25. neither would he yet be manifested to those Gentiles, now about him; before he had made himself more known to the Jewes, to whom he was sent.

V. 13. goeth up into a mountain] Matt. 10. 1. which mountain, it seemeth, was something near to the lake of Genezareth, see Mat. 5. 1.

to preach] To Judea first, and afterward to the world, chap. 16. 15. as his calling them hereto sheweth their dignitie, so also their duty; which was, first, to be with Christ, to learn and observe his Holy Will, and then to preach the same to others.

V. 15. power to heal sicknesses, &c.] To the end, that such admirable power might be as a seal to their Apostleship, for the confirmation of their Doctrine.

V. 16. Simon he named Peter] See on Matth. 10. 2. Luke 6. 14. and on John 1. 41.

V. 17. Boanerges] Βοανηργές. Syr. בנו-רגשי benai-regeshi, filii fragoris, which being their mother tongue, in which Christ spake, some think the name here used by the Evangelist, to be corrupted Syriack; as but few words which are strangers to the Greeks, are uncorruptly written in their Letters The name is compounded (saith Drusius, ad voc. N. T. com. 1.) of בנו filii, sons, which they anciently pronounced bane, and רעם raham, (of רעם ronsit) as Psalm 77. 18. קול רעמך kolrahamcha, the voyce of thy thunder; which the 70 give, as the Evangelist here, βροντῆς. The Greeks wrote בנו-רגשי, turning the last letter (ם) m, into (ר) r, as was usual with them: so Lane, and reger (whose first vowel point, omitted) make banerges, whereof the Greek (near the sound of their βοάω or βοάνη) make βοανεργες, and this בנו-רגשי benai regeshi, is according to the Hebrew manner of speaking, put, thunderers; as they said also, בן-מות ben meveth, filius mortis, 1 Sam. 20. 31. בן בריות ben berith, a son of the Covenant, also a son of peace, that is, peaceable. Some think this name compounded of בנו and רגש, commotus fuit, or רגש, ragash, strepuit. Christ thus named them, either because their voice should be heard in the world about, or because they should preach more powerfully or vehemently than others.

V. 18. Thaddeus] He had three names, Lebbeus, Thaddeus, and Judas, see Matth. 10. 3. Luke 6.16. by the two former he is distinguished from Judas the traitor.

V. 19. Judas Iscariot] See on Matth. 10. 4. and John 6. 71. this distinguisheth him from Judas the brother of James, mentioned Luke 16. 16. Jud 1.

into an house] Or home, into his house at Capernaum, Matth. 4. 13. hither he came with his Disciples, wearied with labour and travel, that they might breath a while and receive some food, and refreshment to repair and fit them to a future travell and ministration.

V. 20. the multitude someth together again] After he returned from the mount to the valley, they presently flocked unto him.

not so much as to eat bread] For the importunity of the multitude, desiring to hear, see him, and to have their sick healed.

V. 21. his friends] ἐξῆλθον κρατῆσαι αὐτόν, they went forth, Syr. אחוהי achiv mahi, his cousens or kindred: it is of אח, ach, a brother, they so used to call kinsmen: now they that were distracted, or thought to be so, were to be provided for by their kinsfolk: we may not conceive, that all his brethren or kinsmen thus mistook him: for some of them, as James and John were his Disciples, and better instructed.

he is beside himself] Gods Ministers are often censured thus, 2 Kings 9. 11. Acts 26. 24. 2 Cor. 5. 13. therefore went they out from Nazareth, where his kindred dwelt, unto Capernaum, where Jesus now was, to lay hold on him, and carry him away from the multitude, that they might take care of him, as of a distracted man, for they did not yet all believe in him, John 7. 5.

V. 22. he hath Beelzebub] Syr. Beelzebub is in him: they could not for shame say he was made, whose Divine Wisdome had so often convicted them, and put them to silence before the multitude; therefore they blasphemously impute that to the spirit of Sathan; which was the worke of God. See Matth. 9. 34.

V. 23. called them unto him] From them who thus murmured among the people, shewing them, that he knew all that they had said, though they were bodily absent, which was an argument of his Deity.

in Parables,] In similitudes taken from things more known and, familiar to them.

Satan cast out Satan] How can one devil have power to dispossesse another? See Matt. 12. 25, 26.

V. 24. if a Kingdome] If the people of an earthly Kingdome be divided into factions, and intestine contentions, see on Matthew, 12. 25.

V. 25. if an house be divided] See on Matthew, 12. 25. for as Gr. Nazianzen saith, orat. 34. strife is ἀρχὴ διάστασεως, the beginning of Disolution, the nerves and sinews of society, is happy concord.

V. 26. if Satan rise up against himself] Unity is such a bond of society, that not so much as Sathans kingdom can subsist without it. See on Luke 11. 17.

V. 27. into a strong mans house] See on Matthew, 12. 29. and Luke 11. 21, 22.

all sins shall be forgiven] They onely are without hope of pardon, who doe maliciously and constantly oppose Christ whom they know. See Hebr. 6. 6. and 10. 26. the sin against the Holy Ghost is duritia cordis, ad finem huius vitæ &c. Augustine ep. 50. hardness of heart, and impenitency unto the end of this life: understand it with resisting a known truth, out of destinate malice.

V. 29. he that shall blaspheme against the holy Ghost] He that contrary to the inward motion of his conscience enlightened by the Holy Ghost, and convinced of the truth of the Gospel, shall out of meer malice and contempt oppose it.

is in danger] ἔνοχος ἐστὶν, that is, as the Syriack gives it, is guilty of, or liable to eternall damnation; τῇ αἰωνίᾳ κρίσει, that is, execrable, devotus manibus, as Budæus interpreteth it.

V. 30. because they said, he hath an uncleane spirit] The Evangelist sheweth the cause, of our Saviours speaking here concerning the sin against the Holy Ghost, which the Scribes and Pharisees here committed, by their wilfull and malicious attributing that to Satan, which they could not but know was the finger of God, and work of his Holy Spirit.

V. 31. there came then] Matth. 12. 46. then or therefore, because he spake this, they thought him mad, as verse 21. and would pull him out of danger: the Evangelist returneth to the History begun, verse 21. they came to him as he was in this serious contest with the Scribes and Pharisees.

and his mother] Probably his unbelieving kindred, giving information of his danger, might perswade his mother to come with them, that they might thereby the more easily perswade Jesus to withdraw himselfe from the multitude. See on Matthew, 12. 46.

his brethren] By brethren the Hebrews understood all that were of the same stock and kindred, Gen. 13. 8.

V. 32. behold thy mother] See Matth. 12. 48.

V. 33. who is my mother? &c.] See on Matth. 12. 48.

V. 34. behold my mother] See on Matth. 12. 49 the spiritual kindred ought principally to be accounted of. See Galat. 6. 10. Psalm 16. 3.

V. 35. Whosoever shall doe the will, &c.] See on Matthew, 12. 50.

CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. HE began again to teach] Matth. 13. 1.

by the sea side] The sea of Tiberias: See on Matthew 13. 1.

Sate in the Sea] In a ship which was put off a little from the shore.

the whole multitude] See on Matth. 13. 2.

V. 2. many things in parables] See on Matt. 13. 3.

V. 3. a sower to sowe] The same Doctrine of the Gospel which is every where sowed by faithfull Ministers, hath not the same successe every where; God mercifully opening the hearts of some hearers, and justly hardening the hearts of others, to that the same word proveth a favour of life to some, and a favour of death to others. This is the scope of this Parable. See on Matthew, 13. 3.

V. 4. Some fell by the way side] See on Matth. 13. 4.

V. 5. on stony ground] See on Matth. 13. 5.

V. 6. Sun was up] See Matth. 13. 6.

V. 7. among thorns] Matth. 13. 7.

V. 8. on good ground, Matth. 13. 8.

V. 9. He that hath an ear, &c.] Matth. 13. 9.

V. 10. with the twelve] Matth. 13. 10. These with others that followed him. The Greek words οἱ περὶ αὐτὸν often signifie those that are addicted to a man as his followers or disciples. So it seemeth some other of his Disciples, who were with the twelve Apostles asked him the meaning of the Parable, whether these were of the seventy Disciples, as Euthemius, thinketh, or others, it is not manifest.

V. 11. Unto you it is given] Mat. 13. 11. To you that fear God, I will interpret the Parables: See Psalm 25. 14. which not being unfolded are hidden mysteries.

unto them that are without] To strangers, and such as are none of ours, 1 Cor. 5. 12.

V. 12. That seeing they may see] Matt. 13. 14.

V. 13. Know you not this Parable] This so much expressed in particulars, to make it more easie? how then will ye understand the hardest?

V. 14. He that soweth] For the meaning hereof; See on Matt. 13. from verse 18. unto the 24 verse.

V. 19. the cares of this world] The unnecessary and distracting cares about secular affairs.

and the deceitfulnesse of riches] 1 Tim. 6. 17. In the Greek ἡ ἀπάτη τοῦ πλούτου so Hebr. 3. 13. ἀπάτη τῆς ἁμαρτίας deceitfulnesse of sinne; and so 2 Thes. 2. 10. he speaketh concerning the secret and undiscerned working of Antichrist ἐν πάσῃ ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἀδικίας with all deceivablenesse of unrighteousnesse: whence we may conceive the sense of this place to be, that riches are to men of this world, a snare, 1 Timothy 6. 9. stealing on, and beguiling their souls, who love and trust in them so, as to carry them away from God, and true care of salvation.

of other things] About other things.

V. 21. to be put under, &c.] Matt. 5. 15. The light of Knowledge is given to edification of our selves and others, See 1 Cor. 12. 7.

a bushell] The word in the Originall, may signifie a lesse measure.

V. 22. for there is nothing] Matthew, 10. 26. See on Luke 8. 17.

V. 23. He that hath an ear] So verse 9. Here repeated to intimate our extreme dulnesse, and negligence in hearing the Word of Christ.

V. 24. Take heed therefore what ye hear] βλέπετε, properly see; but here, take heed, or be very careful: three cautions are very necessary in hearing; take heed; first, whom ye hear; hear not Satans seducing Ministers. See Deuteronomy 13. 3. 8. Jer. 23. 16. Matt. 24. 23. 26. It is very dangerous to listen to the tempter, Matt. 24. 24. Secondly, Take heed what you hear: sinne first entred by 24. 24. Secondly, Take heed what you hear: sinne first entred by the ear, when the woman would hear the tempters delusions; and yet evil words corrupt good manners, 1 Cor. 15. 33. Thirdly, take heed how ye hear: See Luke 8. 18. For the Word of God is powerfull, Hebr. 4. 12. it cannot be inactive, (See Isai. 55. 10, 11. Deuteronomy 32. 1, &c.) but will be either a savour of life unto life, or a savour of death unto death, 2 Cor. 2. 15, 16. every Sermon thou heareſt, carrieth thee some steps on thy way, to Heaven, or Hell; it highly concerneth thee to take heed how thou heareſt.

With what measure you mete] Matt. 7. 2. The more use we make of Gods Ordinances, the more grace God will give us; or as you deal with others, so shall it be deale with you.

V. 25. For he that hath] Matt. 13. 12.

V. 26. So is the Kingdome of God] God doth as it were, sow and reap in the Church, though men observe it not: but look on the work of the Ministery as on some effect of second causes; not considering the Ordinance and Power of God therein, which is the reason why so few profit thereby.

V. 27. and should sleep] Though he seemeth not to regard or looke after the seed sowed; or though the seeds-mans the Ministers work cease, when he hath done his part.

he knoweth not how] It is the Ministers part to sowe with all diligence, and leave the successe to God: for that secret power and providence whereby the seed cometh insensibly to blade and ear, cannot be discerned by man, onely it is knowne by the fruite and effect, as they say, non in fieri, sed in facto esse, grown, not growing.

V. 28. of her self] By a certain power implanted in the creature (by that omnipotent Word of God, who said at first, fiat, let it be so) whereby it moveth or altereth it self, by a natural course without mans help, See Gen. 1. 11.

V. 29. fruit brought forth] παραδῷ ὁ καρπὸς, this substantive being of the nominative case, it appeareth that here is an Hebraisme, as if it were said, according to the signification of verbs in Hithpael (in which they signifie, actionem ejusdem in se ipsum) when the fruit hath given, or produced it's self. Euthymius well interpreth it, cum maturuerit, when it is grown ripe.

V. 30. whereunto shall we liken] Matt. 13. 31.

V. 31. is lesse than all the seed] Christ would hereby shew, that of small beginnings God effecteth admirable things in his Church, which sheweth the greatnesse of his power above mans.

V. 32. it groweth up] Matt. 13. 32.

V. 33. many such Parables] Matt. 13. 34.

as they were able to heare it] According to the capacity of the hearers: for hearing is here put for understanding; as, 1 Corinthians, 3. 1. So Christ accommodated his discourse to the present hearers apprehensions: as, John 3. 12. which he well knew.

V. 34. he expounded all things] ἐπέλυε, he dissolved, or opened by Explication. See the like phrase, 2 Peter, 1. 20.

V. 35. and the same day] Matt. 8. 23.

V. 36. they took him] They carried him away, setting sail, rowing, and putting off from the shore: for he had preached, being aboard the ship all this while, V. 1.

as he was in the ship, &c.] He had no rest, nor refection all the Day, and departed at Even, vvithout going ashore again at that time.

V. 37. there arose a great storme] See on Matthevv 8. 24. Luke 8. 23.

V. 38. asleep on a pillow] He thus seemed to leave them to hazzard, that they might learn πεισμονὴν ἔχειν, to bear tentation; saith Theophylact, had he vvaked, either they vvould not tentations, saith Theophylact, had he vvaked, either they vvould not have feared, or prayed: he permitted them to this fear, to avvaken their Devotion by his sleeping: that they might in the issue, be more sensible of his povver, commanding Sea and Windes.

careest thou not that wee perish? This speake they out of their feare and infirmitie: it is true, the Humanity sleepeth; but the Deity, (vvhich keepeth Israel) neither slumbers nor sleeps.

V. 39. rebuked

V. 39. rebuked the winde] See on Mat. 8. 26. ἐπετίμησε, it is an Hebrew manner of speaking, as Psal. 106. 9. גער יגער ים yigher bar bejam, he rebuked the sea: the 70. give it in the word here used ἐπετίμησε, &c. (See also Nahum 1. 4. Zech. 3. 2.) The Syriack interpreter giveth repressit ventum, he repressed the winde. The word signifieth a vehement rebuking, (such as is oft times joyned with interminations and threatnings, in case the rebuked obey not) or charging, with threatnings, as Mat. 12. 16.

and said unto the sea, peace, and be still] σιώπα, peace; this is his word of rebuke: Syr. זגר zegir, their זר zegher import eth, increpavit, or silentium imposuit; as it were with threatning words: in which sense they seem to use their גער gehar 1 Tim. 5. 1. he stilleth the raging of Sea and windes, See Psal. 107. 29. this sheweth the deity of Christ: he but speaketh to the deaf sea and stormy windes, and they obey him: he speaketh to the dead, and they hear him: more deaf than sea or dead men, are obstinate sinners who cannot hear and obey Christ, so long crying to the turbulent raiters, and seditious quarrellers, peace, and be still.

there was a great calm] This present calme sheweth the presence of the Lord of the creatures; naturally the sea rageth long after the winde flats; but here it was presently smooth and calm.

V. 40. that have no faith] That is, firm confidence in my power and providence, which sheweth not. Psal. 121. 4.

V. 41. feared exceedingly] Because he did not appease and rule the waters, as Moses with a rod; or as Elias Jordan by prayer: 2 Kings 2. nor with the Ark, as Joshuah; Iosh ua 3. he seemed to them ὑπὲρ ἄνθρωπον, above, or more than man; therefore they feared his presence, whom they had not as yet duely understood, or observed with due reverence of such a Majesty present, See Math 8. 27.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. They came over] Mat. 8. 28.

of the Gaderens] Gergasa and Gadara were near, and the coast named from either: this was a city of Arabia, over against Tiberias and Galilee, (Luke 8. 26.) beyond Jordan, joyned to mount Gilead, or Galaad (Ier. de loc. Hebr.) in the lot of the tribe of Manasses: Iosephe de bel. Iud. l. 3. c. 2. calleth it Gadarida. Suidas saith it is the same which was called Antioch, and Selecia. See on Luke 8. 27.

V. 2. with an unclean spirit] ἐν πνεύματι ἀκαθάρτῳ in an uncleane spirit: it is an Hebraisme signifying, with, or by. See Exod. 6. 6. I will redeem you בזרוע bizroah &c. in a stretched-out arm: that is, with or by, &c. Here it may import that the spirit held him fast, as it were lockt up, and bound. Mat. 8. 28. Two are mentioned: but it seems this here, was the most notorious; and so he only named.

V. 3. among the tombes] See on Matthevv 8. 28. and on Luke 8. 27.

no man could binde him] No man could keep him bound, with whatsoever they bound him: as verse 4.

V. 4. plucky asunder by him] See on Mat. 8. 28.

V. 5. night and day] So importunate a tyrant is Satan where he getteth dominion: so tormenteth he the damned soules. Rev. 14. 11.

in the mountains and in the tombes] They had their tombes generally in mountaines, or desart places. Gen. 23. 9, 10. 2 Kings 23. 16. not in the cities; perhaps lest they should be defiled by touching them: See Numb. 19. 16. Great families had the more large and stately tombes, hewed out of rocks, or built up and arched with stone or brick, so that they might receive many bodies.

crying and cutting himselfe] Crying, he was terrible to others passing by him; cutting or beating himselfe with stones, he was cruel to himselfe: so wretched a slavery it is, to serve Satan, whose onely delight is to make us hurt our selves and others: consider this, you that take pleasure in sin. See Rom. 6. 12. 16.

V. 6. and worshipped him] A great token of Christs divine power, that the very devils are in subjection to him, or that he should suffer any man in his power, to worship him.

V. 7. What have I to do with thee] See on Mat. 8. 29. Because the disciples in the ship doubted saying, what manner of man is this? here is a more evident testimony of his deity, from the very enemies, the devils: Theophylact, mark how the insistent Satans words and actions are, he worshippeth him, and yet asketh what he hath to do with him?

I adjure thee by God] So said the high priest, Mat. 26. 63. the meaning of this place is: I desire thee to sweare to me by God, that thou vvilt not torment me. So Luke 8. 28 I beseech thee torment me not. See 8. 29. in vvhich sense it vvas common in fear or danger, to desire to be secured by the oath of him that had power over them: so said Rahab to the spies; Iosh ua 2. 12. svvear unto me by the Lord, I pray you, because I have shevved you mercy. See Genesis, 21. 23. & 25. 33. Iud. 15. 2. 1 Sam. 30. 15. Satan here knowing that his petition was neither of merit nor povver, he interposeth the name of God, hoping thereby to prevaile.

V. 8. For he said] Or, for he had said: Christs bidding him go out, was the cause of the adjuration: verse 7. It is the devils torment to be cast out of possession, where he thought all his own: the kingdom of Christ is his torment, vvhose only pleasure is to destroy bodies and soules.

V. 9. What is thy name? Christ asketh his name, to shevv the greatnesse of the possessed's misery, and vvonderful delivery; not that Christ might inform himself, but that the standers by might know their multitude. Theophylact, Euthymius, &c.

my name is legion] A great multitude, like a Roman legion of souldiers. See on Luke 8. 30.

V. 10. He besought him] Either the chief devil there present, or else the man over-mastered by the spirits, and causing this petition to be uttered by his voyce.

out of the countrey] Not that Satan loved one countrey better than another, who hateth all mankinde; but that he desireth to be there where corruption of manners, ignorance of God, and contempt of his word and ordinance, giveth him greatest hope of destroying soules.

V. 11. nigh unto the mountain] This countrey is for the most part hilly; for the mountains of Galaad run through it. See on verse 1.

V. 12. All the devils besought him] Which vvere in the possessed.

send us into the swine] This sheweth, as Satans malice, who will be hurting beasts, rather than not hurt at all; so under what restraint his fiercest malice is, who cannot meddle with the meaneſt beast, without leave of God first obtained. See Iob 1 10.

V. 13. Forthwith Jesus gave him leave] Among many other reasons, this was one, to shew the power of Christ in saving this man from the possession and tyranny of so many devils as appeared, so quickly precipitating a numerous herd of swine into the sea: that the devils are presently heard, and Gods servants sometimes long delayed, and sometimes obtain not what they ask at all; sheweth that God sometimes granteth in judgement, and denieth in mercy, or delayeth that vvhich he vvill give, to our greater advantage.

down a steep place into the sea] Strabo saith, l. 16. that in Gadara there is a lake of water so bad and unvvholesome, that if the beasts drink thereof, they loose their haire, hoofs, or horns: the herd running here violently down, shew that Satan would have so driven this man, had not God restrained Satan, and preserved the man, to become such an admirable instance of his mercy: mark how Gods gracious providence watcheth over men, whom he might seem to have given over to vtter destruction: who could seem more desperate than this vvretched soul, with a legion of devils in him? vvhat could Satan seem to himself more secure of, out of hell? yet God even then had such a merciful care of him, as to limit Satans power, that he might reserve him then to be pulled as a brand out of the fire when his conversion might best serve to advance Gods glory; trust in God, and despair not, you afflicted souls, whatever you suffer for the present: God hath an eye toward you, and even then preserveth his Elect, when Satan thinketh he is most secure of their destruction.

V. 14. They went out to see] Possibly the thing seemed incredible to them; or they desired to see him who had done so admirable a vvork; or that they might entreat him to leave them: as, verse 17. See on Mat. 8. 33. and Luke 8. 34.

V. 15. they come to Jesus] Mat. 8. 34. They come to Jesus, that he might go from them: how much better affection did the Samaritans shew toward him? John 4. 40.

clothed and &c.] See on Luke 8. 35. The devils made him tear his clothes, and go naked, to adde his misery, by depriving him of the comforts which God had given men therein. See Luke 8. 27.

V. 16. told them how &c.] They told those who came out of the city to see what was done, how Iesus by his word and command only, drave out a legion of devils, out of the man who had so long infested that way; and also, what became of the herd of swine.

V. 17. to pray him] That they intreated, sheweth that they were afraid of his power, and their own further losse of secular things: they feared (saith Theophylact) μήποτε πλείονα πάθωσιν, lest they should suffer something greater; too many love their swine better then Christ, and more fear temporal losses than eternal losse of body and soul: hence it is that too many fear men, more than God. See on Mat. 10. 28.

V. 18. that he might be with him] Fearing lest the devil in Christs absence should repossesse him: he is of a contrary affection to the Gaderens: so the same fun-beams soften wax, and harden clay.

V. 19. go home and] See on Luke 8. 39. Hee would faine have attended Iesus still; partly in thankfulnesse, as Euthymius notes; partly for fear of repossession; as, verse 18. but Christ sendeth him home, who often directeth us to something better, than that we vvell desired. See Acts 16. 6, 7.

and tell how great things] Though Christ repulsed of the unworthy Gad rens, did according to their merit, desert them; yet in his invincible mercy, he left them not without one messenger who could, out of sufficient experience, preach unto them the omnipotency and mercy of Christ: neither can we reasonably conceive, that Jesus sent him away before he had also instructed him in the Gospel, for his own conversion and others: therefore he sete as Jesus sent, Luke 8. 35. and this was the greatest mercy which God had shewed him.

V. 20. and began to publish] Here appeareth the admirable power and mercy of Christ, who made a preacher of so wretched a vassall of Satan: he that thus changed him, gave him this ready obedience: so following his own works to their consummation.

all men did marvell] All that heard what Christ had done for this man: this admiration, possibly, was a previous disposition to their faith in Christ; for, very probably, they so admired, as to praise and applaud the goodnesse of God by Christ shewed unto infirm and wretched men; as afterwards when he came through Decapolis, c. 7. 31, 32. &c. in which region vvas the countrey of the Gadarens. Plin. l. 5. c. 18.

V. 21. passed over again] Into Galilee, where many had seen his former miracles.

V. 22. One of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus &c.] The congregations vvere not vvithout some government: for in every synagogue, it appeareth there vvere some rules: anarchicall parity is, a late sprung up mushroom. See on Mat. 9. 18. and on Luke 13, 14.

fell at his feet] Mat. 9 18. This vvas an effect and sign of his faith in Christ, and tender affection to his child, vvhose life; he so submissively begged on his bended knees; this posture charalleteth this man, humble, and modest, and much unlike the insolent Pharisees: Christ bestovveth his favours on the humble.

V. 23. lyeth at the point of death] Or in extremity; or is at the last gasp. Mat. 9. 18. he faith, she is even now dead: but, it seems it was after his servants had told him so, verse 35.

come and lay thy hand] See on Mat. 9. 19. here was faith, in that he believed that only by laying on his hand, Christ could heal, or recover his child, in a condition so extream, and as to man, hopelesse; but not without much infirmity in which he desired a bodily presence, not knowing or acknowledging his divine power every where present, and able to relieve the distressed; as it seemeth the Centurion did, Mat. 8. 8. yet he who breaketh not the bruised reed, neither quencheth the smoking flax, Mat. 12. 20. would go along with him and raise his dead child.

V. 24. and thronged him] Many following with eager desire to see the miracles, pressed upon him.

V. 25. which had a bloody issue] Or being in an issue. See on Mat. 9. 20.

V. 26. had spent all] Coming into a double misery, of being sick and poor, the came by this means to a double happinesse, health of body and soul, verse 34.

grew worse] Going to the worse; more weak by sundry medicines; Physick, like good counsel, leaves them more incurable, whom it recovereth not; this shewes, as her desperate condition; so the abfolute power of Christ in this miracle: there is no malady so deplored, and desperate that Christ cannot cure it.

V. 27. when she heard of Jesus] That is, the miracles which he did, beyond all power of man.

she came] After she began to despair of help by Physicians, then she cometh to Christ; then nearer health, when (in respect of man) she seemed furthest from it: God doth most readily help the most helplesse; so when men under faile lose sight of the land, they are fain to look up to heaven for stars to saile by; which may probably be the reason why God in his divine wisdom, taketh away from the distressed, the ordinary means of help, or maketh them effectlesse, that he may force them to look up to, and to seek to him for help and comfort, which they cannot have from second causes. See Hos. 5. 15.

V. 28. if I may but touch his clothes] See on Mat. 9. 21.

V. 29. she felt in her] Knew, verse 33. she felt in her selfe a sodain and manifest change, in her present recovery of health and strength restored, which her long and grievous infirmity had before taken away.

that she was healed] See on Mat. 9. 22.

V. 30. knowing in himselfe] That is, he knovving what miracle he had wrought: the thought he had obtained this favour which Christ knew not of; it was not meet the should go away with that errour, neither that Gods glory in this miracle should be obscured: therefore he asketh who touched him; as the knevv the vvas healed: so Christ knew that his povver had healed her.

vertue had gone out of him] As light or heat, goeth out of the sun, not by diminution of the cause, but by production of the effect: so power vvent out of Christ; yet οὐσιωδῶς & φυσικῶς, the same remaining in Christ undiminished: as Theophylact expresseth it.

V. 31. his disciples said] Not knovving the present miracle, nor vvhat Jesus meant hereby. For it vvas an expresion as unusual, as vvas the cure, vvhich the disciples yet knew not of, sayest thou who touched me?] Among this multitude thronging him, he distinguished this one, whose faith touched him: nothing is hid from him.

V. 32. He looked round about to see] This he did, that she might voluntarily confesse the benefit she had received, to Gods glory, and the confirmation of Jairus and others faith; not that he vvas ignorant vvho, or vvhere she vvas.

V. 33. fearing and trembling] τὸ γεγονὸς ἐπ' αὐτῇ, saith Theophylact, as, having stolne a cure. See Luke 8. 47.

V. 34. thy faith hath made thee whole] To the commendation of the effects of faith, he saith, thy faith hath healed thee, when it was his power which healed her: so saith Saveth not by any merit of faith, but by his merit whom faith apprehendeth.

go in peace] This is a form of blessing; mark here, unto what true happinesse, bitter, desperate, and long afflictions bring Gods children, to whom such bitter means are sanctified.

be whole of thy plague] Or continue whole: as, Dan. 1. 21. let it not return on thee: for she was healed before Christ spake: of thy plague, that is, thy infirmity, as Euthymius well interpreteth. See on chap. 3 10.

35. from the ruler] From his house; properly, not from him, but to him; for he was now with Christ. So the Syriack expresseth it, from the rulers house, which manner of speaking the Latines also used, ——à fratre quæ egressa est meo. Ter. Phorm. that is, ——out of my brothers house.

why troubleſt thou the Master] To go to thy house, for she is dead. They thought of Jesus as of some excellent physician, who could cure the diſaffected living, but they thought her past cure who was dead; they knew not that the Lord of life was present.

V. 36. be not afraid] As if I could not raise thy dead to life again; which thou shalt see done.

onely believe] Have confidence that I both can and will relieve thee: thus he comforteth him, and cherisheth his weak faith.

V. 37. save Peter, and James, and John] Luke 8. 51. These onely he admitteth. Mat. 17. 1. they were unworthy to see his power, who disbelieved and derided truth, as the wicked Jewes did.

V. 38. them that wept and wailed greatly] This also setteth off the excellency of the miracle, in that there was no hope of life left in her to mans judgment: onely the Lord of life could help here.

V. 39. The damsel is not dead] See on Luke 8. 52. mortua est vobis, mihi dormit, Ierom. she is dead to you, but only sleepeth in respect of my power: for the Lord of life could as easily awake her from death, as sleep.

V. 40. they laughed him to scorn] Being assured that she was dead. Luke 8. 53.

But when he had put them all out] Such as mock and scorn Christs, are unworthy to be witnesses of his mercy.

and them that were with him] The three disciples mentioned, verse 37. who vvere enough to vvitnesse the truth: the rest of the Jewes he left without: as, for their unworthiness, so for his avoyding ostentation.

V. 41. Talitha cumi] These are Syriack words, which the Evangelist retaineth and interpreteth; טלויתא קומי To shew that Christ spake in their then vulgar tongue: not as Exorcists whispering or muttering strange and unknovvn words, but speaking plainly to expreſs his divine power, able to raise the dead to life.

V. 42. Straightway the damsel arose] That quickning voyce, (John 5. 28, 29.) recalled her soul. See Mat. 9. 29. See on Luke 8. 55.

V. 43. something should be given her to eat] To shevv that she vvas not only revived, but also fully recovered. So Luke 8. 55.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1, HE went out from thence] Mat. 13. 54.

into his own countrey] Nazareth, vvhere he was bred: as, verse 3. not Bethlehem vvhere he vvas born.

V. 2. From whence hath this man] See on Mat. 13. 54.

What wisdome is this?] That is, vvhence is this wisdome? whence hath this man this wisdom? as, Mat. 13. 54. the expression of their doubt is not improper, considering that the fountain whence wisdom is, theyvvcth what it is. See Jam. 3. 15, 17. Mat. 21. 25. if it be from above, from heaven: it is good, holy and happy: but if of men, earthly, sensual, devillish.

even such mighty works] δυνάμεις, They mean such admirable works, as spake him more than man.

are wrought by his hands] That is, by him, as Vatablus interpreteth: hands are put for povver sometimes: as Psal. 28. 5. & 19. 1.

V. 3. Is not this the Carpenters son?] See Mat. 13. 55, 56.

are not his sisters] After the manner of the Hebrews, who by brethren and sisters understand, all their kinsfolk.

V. 4. A Prophet is not without honour] See on Mat. 13. 57. and on John 4. 44.

but in his own countrey] He may possibly be dishonoured elsewhere, but for the most part, his own country affordeth him least honour.

V. 5. Not many mighty works] See on Mat. 13. 58. Not because he was infirm, but because they were unbelieving, as Theophylact well noteth: he took not there do many great works, which must have been to their further condemnation, he could not, that is, they were not capable.

V. 6. And he went round about] Mat. 9. 35. Luke 13. 22.

V. 7. and he calleth] Mat. 10. 1.

over unclean spirits] To cast them out of the possessed: lest men should contemn the preaching of obscure and unlearned fishermen, he furnisheth them with this power, for the confirmation of their doctrine.

V. 8. that they should take nothing] Nothing to hinder them: otherwise we must know, this precept was peculiar to them and bindeth us not from making necessary provisions for journeys, no more than the command in the next place bindeth us: he would teach them faith Theophylact, contempt of money, and riches, τὰ ἀρίλοχρήματον, that is, ἀφιλοχρηματίαν.

V. 9. but sandals] These were instead of shooes, being onely a paire of soles, bound to, or buckled over the foot, which were, and are still in use, in hot and dry countries.

not put on two coats] That is, they should take no change of garments with them to trouble them, or hinder their work of preaching the Gospel.

V. 10. there abide] See note on Matth. 10. 11. and Luke 9. 4. left they should seem inconstant for their ease, or bellies-sake, shake off the dust] Acts 13. 51. Luke 9. 5. 10.

V. 11. Whosoever shall not receive you] Mat. 10. 14.

more tolerable for Sodom] He does not say, tolerable, but more tolerable: to shew, that as there are degrees of sinnes, so shall there be of punishments: and that the Lord is a severe revenger of the contempt and neglect of his word and ordinance, as appears in the example of Sodom, on which, as Salvian saith, he sent down gehennam è cœlo lib. 1. de gub. Dei. Hell (that is, showers of fire and brimstone) from heaven. 2 Pet. 2. 6. Gen. 19. and again, l. 4. He saith the Sodomites were lesse damnable, than those who neglect the Gospel.

V. 12. preached that men should repent] So John Baptist preached, Mat. 3. So Christ, Mat. 4. Repentance is the key of Christs kingdom, as hath been noted.

V. 13 they cast out many devils] As occasion was presented by them who brought the possessed to them, or as they otherwise met with them.

and anointed with oil] Jam. 5. 14. Though the Evangelist in his usual vvay of brevity, mention not Christs command to the Apostles, to anoint with oil: yet is it more than probable, that Christ did so command them, else they would not have done it. This might then be used as a symbolum and pledge of the divine grace, by the power vvherof, they healed: and principally to strengthen the faith of the sick, vvhose common errour is, so much to depend on second causes, that they can hardly believe they can be healed, vvithout the concurrence and use of some such outvvard means, as they fancie: vvhich vve see in Naaman, 2 Kings 5. 11. and many others. Therefore oil being in great use, specially in those countries (though Christ had neither furnished them vvith the art of Physicians, in the use of ordinary and natural means, but the povver of doing miracles, by extraordinary and supernatural vertue; neither might they so use any external means, vvhereby to obscure the evidence of Christs power given them to heal) yet thus vvould Christ comply with the infirmity of some, and exercise the faith of others, who should see such admirable effects of means so weak; so saith Jerom, infirmitatem fidei virtute corroborat, he strengthened the infirmity of faith by his power: they who now use oil, anoint their sick, and make it a sacrament, should first consider, and shew us where Christ instituted it for a sacrament (for that appertaineth to him alone) next, if they pretend from that of Saint James 5. 14. let them either shew us the like effect following, as is here specified, and whereof the Apostle speaketh, verse 15. and the Lord shall raise him up. or shew us cause, why a now naked and effectlesse sign should be used, and out-live the gift of healing in the Church: or why they commonly use it where their sick are past hope of recovery.

V. 14. Herod heard of him] See on Mat. 14. 1. The Gospel comforteth the godly, but vexeth the wicked.

that was risen from the dead] See on Matth. 14. 2. and Luke 9. 7. So wretched was the conscience of this wicked man, ὅτι τὸν τεθνεῶτα φοβεῖται saith the phylact, that he feared a dead man.

mighty works] The nower of working miracles, Possibly he might hear that John Baptist in his life time did no miracles, but that he might now, being (as he supposed) come again from the dead.

V. 15. It is Elias] See on Mat. 16. 14. and on Luke 9. 7.

V. 16. John whom I beheaded] Caused to be beheaded: See on Mat. 14. 2. Luke 3. 19.

V. 17. Herod had sent forth] See on Mat. 14. 3. Luke 3. 19.

V. 18. It is not lawfull] Levit. 18. 16.

V. 19. a quarrel against him] Or an inward grudge, and therefore watched opportunity to be revenged. The Syriack gives it, impugnabat eum, ——but the Greek word ἐνεῖχεν here and elsewhere used, is of more emphatical signification than either, to have a quarrel against, or to oppose or have a controverſie with one; it signifieth imminco: so Luke 11. 53. the Scribes and Pharisees began δεινῶς ἐνέχειν, graviter imminere, it expresseth some imminent mischief, or at least a desire or watchfulnesse thereto, a readinesse to revenge, and expectation of every occasion thereto.

V. 20. feared John] See on Mat. 14. 5.

heard him gladly] The tyrant was contented to hear Gods word, that at least he might seem holy, but the seed fell upon stony ground, and so quickly wilted away, what ever fair shewes it made at first, when the hypocrite, heard John, and thereupon did many things accordingly, as here.

V. 21. a convenient day was come] See on Mat. 14. 6. This day was fitting to Herodias malicious defigne; when wine and luxury would make them daring to any mischief: mark how vigilant malice is.

V. 22. the daughter of Herodias] Which Herodias had not by this Herod Antipas, but by Philip his brother: Iosephus calleth her Salome. See on Mat. 14. 6.

V. 23. he sware unto her] See on Mat. 14. 7.

unto the half of my kingdom] This was spoken to assure her of obtaining that which she would ask, supposing she would ask much lesse; here is a shameful example of a debauched Prince, not only giving so dishonourable a pattern of imitation to his family, and subjects; but also so evident a testimony of his own levity, and precipitate dotage, in his making so improportionable and indefinite a promise, so to unworthy a merit: mark the injustice of the wicked; John preached to save Herods soul; that was valued so much worse than nothing, that it was requited with death: an immodest dancer, for pleasing an intemperate company, is thought worthy of great reward.

V. 24 she went forth] To consult with her mother: it seemed the women sate not then at table with them.

V. 25. I will that thou give me] Seeing thou hast given me a free choice, I desire only that thou give me, &c. so had Herodias instructed her in her own bloody arts: so quickly do children learn their parents evil qualities: evil, to which corrupted nature is prone, is easily learned, but any good, hardly.

V. 26. exceeding sorry] In appearance at least. See on Mat. 14. 9. possibly he might be sorry for fear, as ver. 20. and Mat. 14. 5. it is manifest that when he vvould have put John to death, he feared the multitude because they counted him as a Prophet.

for his oaths sake] See on Mat. 14. 9.

which sate with him] See on Mat. 14. 9.

V. 27. sent an executioner] Or one of his guard: the word signifieth one that beareth a dart, and the kings guard was so called, because they did bear darts: others say they were called so, because they did cut of mens heads with a sword.

and beheaded him] See on Mat. 14. 10.

V. 28. The damsel brought it to her mother] See on Matthew 14. 11.

V. 29. and laid it in a tomb] See on Mat. 14. 12.

V. 30. And the Apostles] Luke 9. 10. It may be they were afraid at the tidings of Johns death, and durst not preach abroad any longer, but came back to Christ, as to tell him what they had done, so to knovv vvhat they should do. See on Mat. 14. 12. There Johns disciples relate their grief and losse, to Christ; here the Apostles give Christ an account of their embassy: to rivers return to the place whence they vvent out. Jerom. Eccles. 1.

V. 31. Come ye your selves] Having dismissed the people, he retireth with his Apostles.

apart into a desart place] To refresh your selves after your travell.

and rest awhile] So had Christ a tender respect to their infirmity, that by a little rest, they might be enabled to their future Ministery.

no leasure] Or fit opportunity; as verse 21.

V. 32. departed thence] See on Mat. 14. 13.

V. 33. ran on foot] Ran on foot together. See on Mat. 14. 13.

V. 34. was moved with compassion] See on Mat 9 36.

V. 35. The day was now spent] See on Mat. 14. 15. and on Luke 9. 12.

V. 36. send them away] See on Mat 14. 15.

V. 37. give ye them to eat] See on Mat. 14. 16.

shall we go and buy] This is a kind of distrustful speaking, of a thing vvhich they conceived impossible, or very difficult. So Numb. 11. 21, 22.

two hundred peny-worth of bread] Which according to the value of their peny, is about twenty five crovvnes, five pound pound five shillings; the Roman peny being seven pence halfpeny. See Mat. 18.28.

V. 38. how many loaves have ye?] See the same history. Mat. 14.17. &c. Luke 9.13. John 6.9. He asketh not this as if he were ignorant, but to make them the more sensible of the following miracle; having before surveyed their slender store, and greatnesse of the multitude. So that they might evidently perceive, in this defect of natural means, a divine hand and power of God supplying them.

V. 39. by companies] Word for word, by banquets, banquets after the manner of the Hebrews, who have no distributives: as, chap 6.7. now he calleth the rows of them that sate, banquets. See on Mat 14.19. and on Luke 9.15. John 6.10.

V. 40. Sate down] Fell down. The word ἀνεκλίθη here used, in gospel-phrase is commonly put for recumbere, or decumbere, which was a according to their custom, lying down, according to our manner, sitting down to eat.

in rancks] The word signifieth, the beds in a garden: by beds, and beds; that is, they sate down in rows one by another, as beds in a garden.

V. 41. looked to heaven] See on Luke 9.16.

V. 42. were filled] See on Mat. 14.20. and on Luke 9.16. John 6.12.

V. 43. twelve baskets full] Elias was miraculously fed at Sarephath, but we read of no remainds: Moses fed Israel with Manna, but the worms eat the remainder: but Jesus as the Lord of the creatures, ᾧ πεφίλησεν ποιεῖ, saith Theophylatt, maketh it superabound in the remainder.

of fragments] Of broken bread and fish.

V. 44. about five thousand men] See on Mat. 14.21. Luke 9.14. John 6.16.

V. 45. to the other side] Over against Bethsaida, but on the same side of the water; for the the lake was crooked. See Matthevv 14.22.

unto Bethsaida] Or, over against Bethsaida.

V. 46. When he had sent them away] That is, the people, verse 45. for his disciples were gone before; and he stayed some time after, to dismisse the people.

V. 48. toiling and rowing] A lively image of the Church, tossed to and fro in this fluctuant world.

About the fourth watch] See on Matth. 14.25. neare day; for it was the fourth and last watch of the night. So doth Christ oft-times prove the faith and patience of his, with long trials.

would have passed by them] Seemed to them as if he would have passed by them.

V. 49. a spirit] φάντασμα, an apparition; as Mat. 14.26. à spectrum Ἕλληνες θεαγόλας Suid. such as we seem to see in dreams.

V. 50. He went up unto them] For their better security, and that he might shew himself present, which in their fear they could not otherwvise have easily believed.

V. 51. beyond measure] Because they saw the winde obey him, and the sea calmed.

V. 52. considered not the miracle] These miracles seemed new and strange unto them, because they had not well considered the former.

V. 53. When they had passed over] See on Mat. 14.34.

V. 54. Straightway they knew him] See on Mat. 14.35. Christ being rejected in his own countrey, and arrived so lately among them of vvhom he vvas not expected, is received to their great profit.

V. 55. ran through that whole region] That is, the people of those parts, every one gave knowledge to his friends, vvho vvere sick and infirm, that Christ vvas come, to the end that they might bring their sick, or come to Christ to be healed. See on Mat 14.35.

to carry about in beds] See chap.2.4. they carried them about, as they had intelligence of the place vvhere Jesus vvas, until he had healed them.

V. 56. into their streets] Into their markets, open places and wayes; presuming that Christ would be intreated to cure them; who only with his word could do it.

border of his garment] See on Mat. 14.36.

as many as touched him] As many as touched Jesus, or the hemme of his garments: they touched it for his sake, by whose power they hoped for health.

were made whole] See on Mat. 14.36. They who withall believed in him; otherwise it would nothing advantage them to touch his sacred body: so did they who shrook him, bound him, scourged, crucified him, all this but further condemned unbelievers: the main is faith in Jesus; so they who novv touch him, are saved no lesse than these were.

CHAP. VII.

Verse 1, THen came the Pharisees] Matthew 15.1. συνάγονται, were congregated, as the Syriack gives it: they came together with one consent: so that howsoever some more perniciously active than others might call them together, yet they well knew each others minde, and willingly came together, to take counsell against Christ.

V. 2. eat bread] Bread, after the manner of the Hebrews, importeth any kinde of meat. See on Luke 11.3. and Luke 14.1.

with defiled hands] κοιναῖς χερσὶ with common hands, for the Pharisees would not eat with unwathen hands, supposing themselves defiled by touching of that which was (not sacred or) common. See Mat. 15.11, 12.

V. 3. oft] Or diligently, as they who wash by rubbing their hands with water, Greek. πυγμὴ which the Syriack giveth דבטי dabbeti lith, it commeth of the Hebrew among other things, signifying neglexit: and in the Syriack by an anti. phrasis לטל is tu-sa fuit, curavit solicitus. See chap 4.38. Rom. 12.17. 2 Tim. 2.15. Luke 10.34. so also בטיראות battilath, diligently, carefully, seriously; as, Luke 1.39. Theophylatt interpreteth, πυγμὴ by ἄχρι τοῦ ἀγκῶνος, up to the elbow: an expression taken from common use of those who tuck up their clothes to the elbowes, that they may wash vessels clean; with so much care did the superstitious Pharisees observe traditions of men: so little caring for the commandments of God.

V. 4. from the market] Or any other civill affairs; they would not eat, before they had washed themselves, lest they should be defiled by commercing with strangers: See John 18.28. into the market usuallly came men and women of all conditions and qualities, holy and prophane, pure and defiled, yea and Gentiles as well as Jews; therefore they thought it an high point of their religion (who might be defiled by touching any thing unclean) to wash before they (comming from the market) might eat, lest themselves becomming unclean, by touching any thing unclean, should defile themselves and their meat, and so become abominable; such fnares had the Scribes and Pharisees layed upon the ignorant peoples consciences.

the washing of cups] By these words, are understood all kindes of vessels which are appointed for ordinary use.

pots] Sextarius is about a pint and a half, with them ordinary drinking pots or cups.

tables] Or beds. Couches, or pallets, on which they lay; or used to dine, or sup on, κλίνη a bed. τρίκλινον, triclinium, by which was signified either a lodging chamber furnished with three beds, or three couches or beds set together, on which they dined or supped. Athenæ l. 4. and hence, ἀρχιτρίκλινος the ruler of the feast, John 2.9 here note, that whereas the Evangelist calleth these washings βαπτισμοὺς, baptismes of beds or couches, among other things, this must be understood of baptizing or washing by aspersion or sprinkling of water, not by immersion or dipping into water, and so no necessity of immersion, dousing, or dipping over head and ears, can appear necessary in baptisme (much lesse essential to it) from the common use of th ord.

V. 5. Why walk not thy disciples] Why live not; an usual manner of speaking among the Hebrews, vvith vvhom a vvay often vvas put for a course of life. Psal. 119.5. Psal. 128.1. Psal. 1.1. See on Mat. 15.2.

V. 6. Well hath Esayas prophesied] That speech of Isaiah, spoken against the hypocrites of his time, fits you as vvell as if he had prophesied of you by name.

of you hypocrites] Hypocrisie is commonly joyned vvith superstition.

this people] Isaiah 29.13. Mat. 15.8.

V. 7. in vain do they worship me] That vvhich they do pretending to serve me, in vain. See on Mat. 15.7.

V. 21. from within] Gen 6.5, and 8.21. Mat. 15.19.

out of the heart] See on Mat. 15.19,20.

an evil eye] See on Mat. 20.15.

blasphemy] Evil speaking or detraction.

V. 23. come from within] Discovering themselves by evil actions, proceeding from the heart.

and defile the man] See on Mat. 15.20.

V. 24. into the borders] Mat. 15.21. Into the uppermost coasts of Palestine, which were next to Tyre and Sidon. See on Mat. 11.21.

V. 25. A certain woman] See on Mat. 15.22. They that know they want Christ will lay out for him.

V. 26. a Greek] Or Gentile.

a Syrophenician] Phenicia, is that region of Asia and Syria, in which was Tyrus and Sidon; whence the inhabitants were called Syrophenicians, inhabitants of that part of Syria, which is called Phenicia. Matthew following the old custom of the Hebrews, calleth her a Canaanite. See on Mat. 15.22.

V. 27. to cast it to dogs] The meaning is, that though Christ might do good unto the Gentiles, yet might it not be to the prejudice of the Jews: See on Mat. 15.26.

V. 28. yes Lord] That is, truth Lord; for it is enough for the whelps, if they can but gather up the crumbes that are under the table; I crave no more: that which thy Israel may spare from their wants, will sufficiently relieve me.

eat of the childrens crumbs] See on Mat. 15.27.

V. 29. for this saying] For so exellent a faith; so admirably expressing it self in confidence and humility: all which importeth not her merit, but his mercy crowning his own graces in her, who had given her such faith, and such thoughts to be expressed. See on Mat. 15.28.

V. 30. her daughter laid upon the bed] Quietly, not tossing to and fro in torments, as before: for the unclean spirit was cast out by the power of Christ, though in respect of his humanity, he were absent.

V. 31. again departing] Rather going back from: for it appears not in the story, that he had been there before; or else, again signifies the working of another miracle.

of Decapolis] It was a little countrey so called, of ten Cities, which the four governments of Judea between, and compasse. Plin. l. 5. 18. they are thus reckoned. 1. Damascus. 2. Opoton. 3. Philadelphia. 4 Raphana 5. Scytopolis. 6. Gadara. 7. Hippon 8. Pella. 9 Galasa. and 10. Canatha. See Plin. lib. 5. 18.

V. 32. one that was deaf] This seemeth a natural disease, and therefore the more admirable was the cure: here again appears the faith and charity of those, who brought him to Christ, confident that he both could, and would cure him, though no meer man could have prevailed against so great a defect of nature.

V. 33. put his finger in his ear] By these external means, he pleased to comply with the faith of infirm spectators; he could as easily have cured him by his word. See on chap 6.13. though he did not this without a mystery, (as some note) intimating that the finger of God onely can supply such natural defects.

and spit] See on John 9.6.

V. 34. and looking up] To shew that he referred all to Gods glory, chap. 6.41. Mat. 14.19 John 11.41. and 17.4. and that this was done by a divine power.

Ephatha, that is, &c.] He sighed, out of commiseration of mans miseries. See chap. 1.41. The most here used is Syriac אתפתח ethphathach, which the Evangelist interpreteth, be opened: of the Hebrew word פתח pethach. (Joh. Buxtorf. Jun.) aperuit.

V. 35. His ears were opened] That is, restored again, or formed to a natural faculty of hearing.

his tongue was loosed] The tie-bond, or impediment to his tongue, or speech was loosed, or taken away: so the work of Christ appeared in curing both infirmities at once, and presently.

V. 36. so much the more] So chap. 1.45. and Mat. 9.31. Christ would have had it concealed to a seasonable time, but they, out of an importune zeal, were carried away with an immoderate fervour to publish what they saw: for it seemeth Christ charged them that brought him to be cured to be silent, and not to publish abroad among the people, what he had done in curing the deaf and dumb man, or who had an impediment in his speaking; for so the word μογιλάλον signifieth, Exod. 4.11. who hath made אלם the dumb; the Gr. Interpreters give it there, in the word which our Evangelist here useth μογιλάλον: it seemeth the same which Moses in the foregoing verse expresseth by ᾗ βραδύγλωσσος --- Vulg. tardioris linguæ, gravis linguæ. Ar. Montan. Vatabl. &c.

V. 37. beyond measure] As principally, at the effect of his power in healing; so, that for all this he neither desired any retribution of any thing, neither would have so much as applause with men; which by his command he would have suppressed.

he hath done all things well] Here seemeth a secret opposition of some ill opinion, or report of Christs enemies: as if they had said, they are wicked and injurious, who can speak evil of this man, he hath done nothing, but good, and well: it is a wonder why the Pharisees blame, and accuse him, as an evil doer, when all that he doth, is for our good: the life, preservation, and welfare of man: and they intimance in the particular cures, which they had seen done, as a certain evidence hereof. Matthew 15.30. reckoneth up more.

CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. THe multitude] Which followed him, some to hear the Gospel, some to see his miracles, some to be cured, some for other ends, Mat. 15.32.

having nothing to eat] They being in such a place, as that they could not accommodate themselves with victuals, and having been three dayes with him.

V. 2. I have compassion] See on Mat. 15.32. Christ is the same yesterday, to day, and ever; so that still he hath compassion on us in all our wants.

V. 3. They will faint by the way] ἐκλυθήσονται; to the letter, they will fall in sunder, or be dissolved; for when men fall in a swoon, there is a kinde of dissolution of the sinews: see on Matthew 15.32.

V. 4. here in the wildernesse] See on Mat. 15.33.

V. 5. How many loaves have ye?] See on Mat. 15.34.

V. 6. to sit down, &c.] See on Mat. 15.35.

took the seven loaves] See on Mat. 15.36.

V. 7. a few small fishes] Mat. 15.36.

V. 8. so they did eat] Mat. 15.37.

V. 9. four thousand] Matthew 15.38. besides women and children.

V. 10. parts of Dalmanutha] See on Mat. 15.39.

V. 11. and the Pharisees] Mat. 16.1. The obstinate enemies of the Gospel; giving no credit to the miracles already done, require new; but Christ being herewith displeased, departeth from them.

came forth] The Pharisees came out of their houses, on purpose to encounter with him.

seeking of him a signe from heaven] That they might hereby know that he was sent from God: not that they might learn and believe in him, but to tempt him.

V. 12. he sighed deeply in his spirit] Being very sorry for these mens hardnesse of heart, and unbelief, who having the key of knowledge, Luke 11.52. shut up the kingdom of heaven against men, and neither went in themselves, nor willingly suffered those who were entring, to go in, Mat. 23.13. hence were Christs sighs; nor so much for the incurable Pharisees, as for the wretched people who had such blind guides and teachers.

there shall no signe, &c.] If a signe be given: See Psal. 95.11. The Hebrews use such elliptical expressions of oaths, or imprecations; אם im. by an aposiopesis and sudden restraining the speech, as in psalsion: sometimes they speak more large, and mention a revenge from God, as 2 Sam. 3.35. Psal. 132.2. so here, εἰ δοθήσεται, if it shall be given; that is, it shall certainly not be given; it is a kind of oath, or protestation.

V. 13. he left them] Mat. 16.4. As being incurable, and therefore unworthy of his gracious presence, and further care for them.

V. 14. the disciples had forgotten] Mat. 16.5.

V. 15. Beware of the leaven] See on Mat. 16.6.

leaven of Herod] The contagious doctrine of the Herodians mentioned, Mat. 22.16.

V. 16. They reasoned among themselves] Disputed among themselves what our Saviour meant by the word leaven.

because we have] Mat. 16.7. The Lord blameth our negligence, who forgat to take bread with us: possibly they might think of his going again into the desert for some time.

no bread] They whose mindes are too much fixed on earthly things, do not quickly apprehend the heavenly, though never so plainly set forth unto them.

V. 17. because ye have no, &c.] Or, saying it is because, as, Mat. 16.8.

V. 18. see ye not] See ye not my works which I have done before your eyes.

hear ye not] My doctrine, wherein I have taught you to depend on the providence of God for things necessary to this life? Mat. 6.25.

V. 19. I brake the five loaves] Mat. 14.17. and 16 & chap 6.43.

V. 20. And when the seven] Verse 8. Mat. 16 10.

V. 21. that ye do not understand] How cometh it to passe, that ye do not understand things so plain and evident? Christ in all this speech reproveth, as with admiration the incogitancy of his Disciples, in that they did not so seriously as they ought, minde those things which they saw and heard of him: whence it came to passe, that they yet understood not (after so many miracles seen) those things which plainly spoke his power, providence, and wisdom: and it is as if he said; I appeal to the testimony of your own senses, whether you do not stupidly mistake: what have your eyes seen in my former works? what have your ears heard? Is all lost? Possibly he here awakeneth them to better attention, and casting off that sleepy thought of flesh and blood which clouded their understandings, by fixing too much on second causes; not without a secret allusion to that which he said to the Jews, chap. 4. 12.

V. 22. Bethsaida] A little fisher Town, on the sea of Galilee, over against Dalmanutha; see Matthew 11. 21. John 1. 24.

bring a blind man unto him] Led unto him; being well assured by that which they had seen or heard of him, that if he but touched him, he should recover.

V. 23. by the hand and led him] See chap. 7. 33. To avoid the opinion of those, who might else think, that he did these miracles, to gain popular applause. See John 9. 6.

spit on his eyes] See on chap. 7. 33.

He asked him if he saw ought] This he said to exercise his faith; for Jesus well knew how much he had healed; and it was not impotency, but his will to heal this man, not (as many others) all at once, but by certain degrees; for causes best known to himselfe.

V. 24. I see men as trees, walking] He perceived some motion, but could not at first discern that they were bodies of men which he perceived: a true resemblance of illumination, which encreaseth in us by degrees.

V. 25. and made him look up] He commanded him to try once more, whether he could see well or not.

V. 26. tell it not to any in the town] Possibly he dwelt in some out part, next the fields: the often repetition of the like charge, sheweth, that the time was not yet come, that he would manifest himself: but would by small and more private beginning, collect his Church, of those who should believe to eternal life. See on verse 30.

V. 27. Jesus went out] See on Mat. 16. 13. Luke. 9. 18. where the same things are likewise recorded.

V. 28. John the Baptist] See on Mat. 16. 14.

one of the Prophets] Or one of the other Prophets; as, Mat. 16. 14.

V. 29. thou art Christ] See on Mat. 16. 16.

V. 30. That they should tell no man of him] To wit, that he was the Messias See on Mat. 16. 20. Until he was risen again from the dead and the time appointed that they were to divulge the fame to the world. See chap. 9. 10.

V. 31. Son of man must suffer] See on Mat. 16. 21. Christ suffered all that he suffered, for us; not unwillingly, nor unawares, but fore-knowing it.

be rejected of the Elders] Psal. 118. 22. As one unprofitable and pernicious, as a stone to be refused of the builders. See chap. 12. 10. this sheweth the sad condition under such teachers, who instead of edifying them to salvation, did their uttermost endeavour to keep them from Christ, in whom alone there is salvation, Act. 4. 12.

and after three dayes rise again] See on Mat. 16. 21. This one point is so often beat upon by our Saviour, because it is the main ground of faith, and all true Religion, as the Apostle Paul sheweth at large, 1 Cor. 15. 3, 4, 14, 15, &c.

V. 32. openly] Not before the people for they were not present, verse 34 but in plain terms, before the disciples.

began to rebuke him] See on Mat. 16. 22.

V. 33. looked on his disciples] That he might instruct them by his rebuking Peter: forasmuch as that same thing which he said unto Peter, concerned them all, if at least they were of his mind, that Jesus should have done well to have withdrawn from those dangers, and to have spared and reserved himself to a flourishing estate of Israel under his temporal Monarchy, which it seemeth they still dreamed of: Christ well knew their thoughts, and therefore though he addressed his answer to Peter; yet by his turning about and looking on them all, he thereby intimated that, that which he spake to Peter, highly concerned them all, and every one of them, who too much savoured the things of men.

get thee behinde me] See on Mat. 16. 23.

V. 34. Whosoever will come after me] Mat. 10 38. Whosoever will be my disciple must put on this resolution, not onely not to be scandalled at my sufferings, but also to be constantly resolved, if need shall be, to be ready to suffer for the testimony of the truth; to glory in my crosse, by whom the world is crucified unto them, and they unto the world, (see Gal. 6. 14.) that they may fill up that which is behinde of the afflictions of Christ in their flesh, for his bodies sake, which is the Church --- Col. 1. 24.

let him deny himself] That is, his own natural or carnal affections. See on Mat. 16. 24 Luke 9. 23. and all love of this world; and the flesh, or whatsoever hereof retardeth them from a ready and cheerful obedience to Christ, or coileth their zeal to his honour, and the practice of true Religion: for want of which renunciation of mens selves, so many are now sick of the Laodicean disease, Rev. 3. 13. luke-warmnesse, neither hot nor cold, and so odious to God.

V. 35. will save his life shall lose it] See on Mat. 16. 25. Luke 9. 24. Herein he sheweth how irreparably worldly men disadvantage themselves, by their love of the world, and foolish self-love, which finally hurteth them more, than all the powers of hell could do, if they would indeed set their hearts to love God above all.

V. 36. What shall it profit a man] See on Mat. 16. 26. Luke 9. 25. illud solum est lucrum, ubi fruitur perpetuus. Ambros. l. 4. epist. 44. That onely is (true) gain, where there is perpetual fruit thereof: most foolish of all men are they, who purchase the transitory pleasures or riches of this world, with losse of eternal and true happinesse.

V. 37. in exchange for his soul] To redeem it from destruction; as if he said, no worldly possessions, no riches, can redeem, or be a price of redemption for a lost soul. See on 1 Pet. 1. 18. Psal. 49. 6, 7, 8.

V. 38. shall be ashamed of me] Mat. 10. 33. See on Mat. 16. 27. Luke. 9. 26. Shall refuse to own or acknowledge me: see Rom. 1. 16. or shall be ashamed of my sufferings; or think it a shameful thing to suffer perfecution for the Gospel and confession of my Name. See 1 Cor. 1. 23.

in this adulterous and sinful generation] See on Mat. 12. 39. So he calleth those who forsook God by idolatry, which is a spiritual fornication, Rev. 17. 2. or the degenerate sons of Abraham: or such as the Apostle, Hebr. 12. 8. calleth bastards.

when he cometh in the glory, &c.] His he mentioneth to intimate the greatnesse of that glory wherein he (who now came in the form of a servant, Phil. 2. and man of sorrows, Isai. 53.) should come again to judge the living and the dead.

the holy Angels] Wherewith he shall appear in judgement. See Dan. 7. 9, 10. Rev. 5. 11. Rev. 20. 12. See on Mat. 25. 31. They are here called holy Angels, to distinguish them from the impure and evil angels; so also to let the hearers know that they ought not to be scandalled, when they should see wicked men ashamed of the crosse and humility of Christ: seeing that the holy Angels should administer unto him in his state of exaltation and glory, which shall be true and eternal; left otherwise Christ be ashamed of them (that is, will not own them as his) hereafter, Mat. 7. 23.

CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. Verily I say, &c.] See on Mat. 16. 28.

taste of death] Shall not have experience of death, or shall not die; 2 Hebr. 2. 9. Mat. 16. 28. John 8. 52. the Hebrew word טעם taham, gustavit; by a metaphor is transferred to the soul, and signifieth, cognovit, sensit, expertus fuit. So Psal. 34. 8. Prov 31. 18. in the like manner, the Greeks used their word, γεύεσθαι, Hebr. 6. 4. γευσαμένους ἀλλήλων, let us try, or have experience of each other: so the Latines used their gustare, gustare ejus sermonem volo, &c. a proper and proportionable expression here, of the bitter effect of Adams tasting the forbidden fruit: he died (with his posterity) by so tasting, and we so taste by dying.

V. 2. after six dayes] Mat. 17. 1. Luke 9. 28.

V. 3. his raiment] It did as it were sparkle; the heavenly glory of Christ, (which should within a few dayes be again eclipsed and obscured by his crosse and passion) avouched by the conference of Moses and Elias, and his Fachers voice from heaven, in the hearing of his three disciples, witnesses hereof: this was manifested unto them, ne timerent opprobrium crucis, Jerom; lest they should fear the shame of his crosse.

V. 4. Moses and Elias] See on Mat. 17. 3. Luke 9. 30. because the people said, that Christ was either Elias, or one of the Prophets, he sheweth them, τὴν ὑποροφίαν τῶν προφητῶν, Theophylact. the chief of the Prophets, that they might understand what the Lord differeth from his servants: also because the adversaries calumniated him, as an enemy to the Law and Prophets: here he hath testimony of Moses, and one of the chief Prophets: all this was extream necessary for the confirmation of the Apostles, who were to preach the Gospel to the world, left their faith should have staggered at the adversaries importunate pretences of zeal to the Law and Prophets, to overthrow the doctrine of the Gospel.

V. 5. it is good for us] Mat. 17. 4. This Theophylact thinks they said, fearing left Christ would go down again, and die; they thought, if the Jews should come up against him to the mount, they should be safe, having with them Moses, who triumphed over the Egyptians, and Elias, who commanded fire from Heaven to consume the sirties.

V. 6. for they were sore afraid] For the extraordinary glory which they saw: the apparition of Moses and Elias, and the sudden fear which startled their mindes, in expectation of some change to doubtful events; they were almost besides themselves with fearful amazement.

V. 7. there

V. 7. there was a cloud] See on Matthew 17. 2. Luke 9. 34, 35.

V. 8. Save Jesus onely] See on Matth. 17. 8. Luke 9 36.

V. 9 Tell no man] See on chap. 8. 30.

V. 10. they kept that saying, &c.] They divulged it not until a seasonable time; for so Christs prohibition is to be understood; not simply that they should never tel it, but not until he were risen again from the dead, as Matth. 17. 9. the reason possibly might be, left in his passion, eclipsing all his glory for the time, the hearers unbelief of such a relation, should dangerously have shaken their faiths towards the rest of the Gospel.

what the rising of the dead should mean] They understood that there should once be a Resurrection from the dead, John 11. 24. but so much did they yet dream of a temporal kingdom, that they could not understand what he should mean by his resurrection from the dead, shortly to be, while yet he lived: how, and when this should be, they admired, thinking, as Euthymius saith, that this was but some parable.

V. 11. Why say the Scribes] If it be true that the Scribes say, that Elias must first come, how can the Messias suffer, seeing Elias is not yet come to restore all things?

V. 12. restoreth] Or fulfilleth, Mal. 4. 5, 6. ἀποκαθιστᾷ πάντα that is, tha I restore all things: the present for the future tense: Syr. Elias venturus est prius ut omnia restituat: the word תכן there used, is very emphatical as signifying, among other things, to be, or be made strait, to be restored, to correct, accommodate and fit, repair, and prepare; which seemeth to accord with that which Zacharias said, Luke 1. 76. of John Baptist --- to prepare the wayes of the Lord: and that which the Angel before said to Zachary, Luke 1. 16. concerning the same --- many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord: this was to prepare the way of the Lord, and to make his paths straight, Matth. 3. 3.

how it is written] Concerning the suffering of Christ, Isaiah 53. Psal. 22. so shall it be, so shall he suffer. See Luke 24. 26, 27.

and be set at nought] He telleth them beforehand, how ignominiously the unthankful Jews should use him, left they should be troubled when they should see it; therefore he sheweth from Scriptures, that these very things were foretold.

V. 13. but I say unto you] The foolish opinion of Rabbins is here refelled, concerning the coming again of Elias before the day of judgement.

that Elias is indeed come] And you are witnesses thereof, who saw him in person with me on the mount; but John Baptist, who came in the spirit of Elias, they have slain, and after him now the Messias will they slay also.

as it is written of him] The name of Elias given unto John, portended, that he should also find an Ahab, and a Jesabel to persecute him for his reproving their sins.

V. 15. when they beheld him, were greatly amazed] Some think, that the divine Majesty which shined in him on the mount, did yet appear when he came to the multitude; as the glory of Moses face returning from the mount Exod. 34. 29. to the astonishment of the people beholding him; with this difference, that Christ appeared to them as amiable, as Moses terrible, Exod. 34. 30. Theophylact, Euthymius, &c. therefore they came running to him to salute him: it seemeth his approach silenced the insolent Scribes contention with the Disciples in the absence of Jesus.

V. 16. what question ye with them?] That is, among your selves, or with my disciples: he asked not as ignorant of their oppositions, but taketh occasion hereby to interpole for the defence of his, and the Gospel which they professed.

V. 17. one of the multitude] The Scribes for fear of conviction, and the disciples for shame held their peace: but the man, who was the occasion of their controversie, answered for all: as if he had said, I brought my son hither, supposing thou hadst been present, but thy disciples could not cure him.

a dumb spirit] That is, making my child dumb, hindring his speech, Euthymius.

V. 18. wheresoever he taketh him] Be it never so dangerous a place, fire, water, precipice, as verse 22. it taketh him at certain times, and by fits.

teareth him] Or dasheth him, casting him down, as verse 20. with an inward torment as if he would split him, or rent his bowels. See on chap. 1. 26.

and he foameth] Or, so that he foameth: which foaming and gnashing of teeth, were signes of vehement torture, and hot pains.

and pineth away] With extreamity of pain, and grief of mind, and torment, and distemper of body proceeding from the same.

and they could not] Hence probably arose the conflict: the disciples either not confident to attempt casting out the unclean spirit; or attempting without succesle; the Scribes presently insulted, and jeered them; having such blasphemous calumnies ready in their mouths against Christ himself, they were not to seek for some impious objections against the disciples and their doctrine: therefore Christ, who permitted them for their unbelefe to this seeming toil, cometh in due time to rescue them and defend his own cause.

V. 19. bring him to me] See on Matth. 17. 17 Luke 9 41.

V. 20. when he saw him] So soon as Jesus had looked on the boy that was brought unto him, the devil began to rage in this manner. So soon as the devil perceived that Jesus was come to cast him out, he would do what mischefe he possibly could, so long as he could; which he did until a divine coercive power restrained: so doth he now with the Church of Christ (being loosed for a little season Rev. 20. 3. yet, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time, Rev. 12 12.) rage and teare lice into many pieces and schismatical factions, leaving her to the worlds judgement, (as this poor child verse 25.) as one dead; insomuch that many say, she is dead.

the spirit tare him] συνεσπάραξεν, Here συσπαράττειν, is as much as throwes, verse 18. there given dasheth him: to wit, as it were with violent convulsions tormenting him, for so the Greeks use συσπάραγμα. See on Luke 9. 42.

V. 21. how longis it ago?] He asketh not because he knew not, but that the spectatours might well understand, how inveterate, and habitual this evil was; and that he had long since destroyed him, had he not been restrained by the same divine power, who now cast him out

V. 22. into the fire] As verse 18. Gr. both into the fire, or even into the fire.

if thou canst do any thing] εἴ τι δύνασαι, which the Syriack interpreter giveth, quod possis, what you are able, help me: he mistaxed the power of Christ with humane reason, nor yet apprehending his omnipotency.

V. 23. If thou canst believe] If thou canst believe, I can do this thing for thee; if thou canst believe, fear not.

all things are possible to him, &c.] Christ can, and will do any thing which is good for them that trust in him.

V. 24. said with tears, Lord I believe] Conceiving from Christs speech good hope of his childes recovery, if the obstruction and let thereto, were not in himself, in sense of his own weaknelle, and his childes misery, he seriously professeth his faith; for as Jerom said, Epist. 9. Lib. 2. Nemo meritens plorat; no man lying weepeth, or weeping lyeth.

help thou my unbelief] Supply with thy goodnesse, what is defective in my faith. That which God giveth, he oftimes gives by certain degrees, as the conditions of the gifts and receivers require: tenon, accepta fide, difficultatis non carent, Prosper de vocat. Gent. lib. 2. cap 11. having obtained faith, yet want not some diffidence, as he well knew, who said, I believe, help thou mine unbelief; and they who said, Lord encrease our faith, Luke 17.

V. 25. that the people came running together] Toward him, to see what would be done: and knowing that there might be danger in a tumultuous throng would no longer hold them in suspence who so earnestly expected the event; but suddenly dispatched the businesse; commanding the evil spirit out, and forbidding him all reentery; that he might at once shew the admirable power of faithful prayer before the multitude; thereby to invite and encourage them to the same duty, in their several emergent necessities.

V. 26. rent him sore] The nearer the power of Christ is to cure, the more furiously doth Satan rage: see on chap. 1. 26 this Christ permitted Satan to do; not that he hath any pleasure in the misery of any of his, but to the end that the multitude (seeing a sudden calamitatibus liberandus effet; Euthymius) from what calamities he was now to be delivered, and the horrid cruelty of the devil) might the better conceive the power and mercy of Christ delivering the possessed, which no art, care, nor power of man could do.

V. 27. and he arose] When the standers by said he was dead in that terrible fit, Jesus took him by the hand, cast out the devil, and the young man was presently well again: there is no estate so desperate, whence the hand of Christ cannot raise. Let thy hand help me, said David, Psal. 119. 173. and Psal. 31. 5. Into thy hands I commit my spirit; though the Saint fall, he shall not utterly be cast down, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand, Psal. 37 24. blessed are the people who have the Lord for their God: seeing him, and fear not the malice of Satan: Christs hand of divine power is as neer thee now in every distresse to lift thee up, as was that sacred hand of flesh neer this afflicted young man then, to raise him when the standers by supposed him to be dead.

V. 28. why could not we?] See on Mat. 17. 19.

V. 29. but by prayer and fasting] See on Mat. 17. 21. we have need, not onely of faith and prayer, but also of fasting and extraordinary humiliation, to cast Satan out of his possession.

V. 30. and they departed thence] He and his Disciples, Mat 17. 22.

and passed thorow Galilee] Passed aside thorow, chap. 11. 20. and 15. 21. 29 they went by by-wayes, out of the common rode into, and thorow Galilee, because he would be private with his disciples. See chap. 2. 23.

V. 31. for he taught his disciples] Therefore he withdrew himself, as to prepare for his approaching Passion, so also to prepare and instruct his disciples, against the scandal thereof: and to sit them to preach the Gospel to the nations of the world.

V. 32. they understood not that saying] Concerning his suffering, which they thought could not befall their expected Messias, of whom they had so many glorious promises. See chap. 8. 32.

V. 33. and he came] Matth. 18. 1.

and being in the house] Where he was wont to make his abode, at Capernaum, where they were private.

V. 34. who should be greatest] In the temporal kingdom of the Messias, which they yet expected, Acts 1. 6 See on Luke 9. 46.

V. 35. If any man desire to be first] In my kingdom, they that have the best places, must not look for most honour, but take most pains for the salvation of others, and to hear and mark that which he would now speak unto them; he called all the twelve, because without exception, it concerned every one of them to beware of ambition; well knowing, as their thoughts and contests by the way: so not onely what danger the desire of primacy might, by them, bring upon the Church of Christ, by them to be planted; but also what it did, in the same in a greater growth thereof: therefore he will here blast that mischief in the bud, that it may grow no greater, neither come to a dangerous maturity.

V. 36. when he had taken him in his arms] ἐναγκαλισάμενος, that is, as Luke 2. 28. interpreteth, ἐδέξατο εἰς τὰς ἀγκάλας, he took him into his armes, to shew him for a pattern of that which he would have his be: a child is not ambitious of honour, he envieth not, is not covetous, nor revenge ful; quickly forgets injuries, and, in respect of actual sinnes, cometh neerest to mans state of innocency.

V. 37. one of such children] One like these little ones, verse 41. receiveth not me, but him that sent me] He doth not onely receive me, but also him that sent me

V. 38. and John answered him] Luke 9. 49

we forbad him] Out of perverse zeal to their Masters honour; as Joshua envied Eldad and Medad, Num. 11. 27. 28.

V. 39. for there is no man] See 1 Cor. 13. 3.

in my name] God who is the Author of an ordinary vocation, worketh also extraordinarily, so often as it pleaseth him; but an extraordinary vocation pretended to, must be justified by an extraordinary commission, and appear by some extraordinary approbation: as Amos 7. 14, 15. and here; and also by the doctrine which they preach.

lightly] ταχὺ, lightly, quickly: he shall find much to do, first to quiet his own conscience, if he shall professe, or act against the evident light thereof.

V. 40. He that is not against us] He that opposeth not the Gospel, but preacheth, or professeth it.

is on our part] Not that Christ esteemeth them his, who are indifferent, neither hot nor cold (Rev. 3. 16.) neither true friends, nor professed enemies; but to teach them who are his, a candid charity interpreting all things to the best, where appeareth no manifest argument to the contrary. Neither doth that (Matth. 12. 30.) He that is not with me, is against me, conclude any thing against this: for there he principally respecteth the minds of men; here the actions; here the Apostles, there himself: there he pronounced them his enemies, who did not with faithful and sincere hearts joyne themselves to him, there being no mean between Christ and Belial; here he admonisheth his disciples to take none for enemies who did not declare themselves such; specially those who did any thing which might serve to advance the Gospel, and cause of Christ: interpret nothing in the worst sense, where a better may be made.

V. 41. for whosoever] Matth. 10. 42.

he shall not lose his reward] This sheweth how profitable it is to further the work of the Gospel: that endeavour shall not misse of a reward: and it is most certain, that on the other part, they that take away from the Ministers of Christ, the means enabling them to subsist and preach the Gospel, shall once have the revvard of their sacrilege truly payed them.

V. 42. whosoever shall offend] Matth. 18. 6. God is so severe a revenger of offences, that a man vvere better suffer any thing here, than be an occasion thereof. One of these little ones that believe in me, importeth one of a meek, harmelesse, and humble minde; not relating to the years, but quality of the person offended; so the Apostle distinguisheth between children --- in (or as concernin:) malice be yea children; but in understanding be men; or as of ripe age, 1 Cor. 14. 20. but the words of the text are --- ἕνα τῶν μικρῶν τῶν πιστευόντων εἰς ἐμὲ one of the little ones of those that believe in me; which fetch the double article τῶν directeth to, as also the Series of the Text: for, as appeareth, Matth. 18. 2, 10. the question being proposed, who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven; Jesus called a little child unto him, and setting him in the midst of them. he said --- except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven ---- but whoso shall offend one of these little ones τῶν μικρῶν τούτων εἰς ἐμὲ --- of those that believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone, &c. and presently after he saith, take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones: for I say unto you, that in heaven their Angles do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven: and here, chap. 10. 14. &c. he saith, of such is the kingdom of God; and he took them up in his armes, put his hands upon them and blessed them.

that a millstone, &c.] See on Matth. 18. 6. and on Luke 17. 2.

V. 43. and if thy hand] Matth. 5 29. and 18. 8.

offend thee] Or cause thee to offend.

to go] ἀπελθεῖν, to go away from this world.

V. 44. their worm dieth not] Isaiah 66. 24 the worm ever biting the conscience of the damned: that is, the memory of evil done, Jerom, Theophylact: the remorse of conscience, Euthymius: the immortal torment thereof, continually afflicting them: grief of mind, Augustin. de C. D. lib. 21. cap. 9. this is that fecret tormenter, which with silent stripes reacreth the wicked, endlesse, and hopelesse cast-away.

the fire is not quenched] The fire is, pœna inconsumpta; Jerom in loc. an endlesse paine, immortalis mortis, of immortal death, as Bernard calleth it; in psal. qui habitat.

V. 45. cut it off] See on Matth. 5. 29, 30. and 18. 8.

V. 47. where their worm] See on verse 44. this repetition declareth our great need, often to be warned of the judgement to come. See also verse 48

V. 47. offend thee] See on verse 43. and Matth. 5. 30. & 18. 9.

V. 49. Every one shall be salted with fire] As every meat-offering in the law was to be seasoned: so must we be with the graces of Gods Spirit, which are cleansing like fire, Matth. 3. 11. to burn up the dross of sin. It is an allusion to the manner of sacrificing. See Levit. 2. 13. no unsavoury oblation could be acceptable. The moral is opened, Eccles. 5. 1, 4. and Rom. 12. 1. salt was prescribed them (to resist corruption) Jerom interpreteth it to be wisdom; because saith he, there is no good work without wisdom: as also their fire; the fire of the altar which came from heaven, that is, love and zeal: to offer with strange fire was abomination Levit 10 1. &c. Matth. 5 23, 24. See the moral, Jam. 3. 17. salted with fire may seem an improper speech, as also baptized with fire, Matth. 3. 11. but because both were used in sacrifice, and both are cleansing, Christ fitted one word to both: intimating, that though the word of God were as sharp as fire; or their afflictions grievous (therefore sometimes are they stiled fiery trysalls) yet men must be contented hereby to be bettered and made more pure (See Isaiah 1. 25.) it being incomparably better and easier for them so to be seasoned and refined now, that they may be a pure and acceptable sacrifice to God, then to be left to Hell fire eternally.

V. 50. salt is good] Matth 5. 13.

but if it have lost his saltnesse] If Ministers who should season others, have lost their ability thereto; who shall mend them?

have salt in your selves] Keep grace, yet lose not peace: Heb. 12. 14. See Matth. 5. 13. Colos. 4. 6. we must season our selves, as well as others; left we be like the water of baptisme, peccato baptizatorum diluen s, saith Gregory, hom. 17. in evang. washing a baptizatorum diluen s, saith Gregory, hom. 17. in evang. washing a way the sins of the baptized, and then be cast away our selves. See 1 Cor. 9 27.

and have peace one with another] Be ye cleanled from the corrupt humour of ambition, and carnal affectation of superiority: then shall ye be wise, and so love one another, that all men may know that ye are my disciples, Joh 13.35. ambition is an evident madnesse; and dissention (the undoubted issue thereof) exteam folly, if it be so, to ruine our selves: restlesse ambition was the devils ruine, and his master-piece on man.

CHAP. X.

Verse 1 HE arose from thence] ἀναστὰς, arising, or he arose and went from thence: in the Hebrew יָשַׁב jashab, signifieth sitting, tarrying, or dwelling: so also קוּם kum, which the Syr. here useth; he arose, or stood up to go away. See Matth. 19. 1. signifieth a departure from a place, or at least a preparation thereto.

by the farther side of Jordan] In respect of some creek: for Jury and Galilee were on the one side of Jordan.

V. 2. to put away his wife] ἀπολῦσαι, to loose his wife from him: for the wife while the husband liveth δέδεται is bound to him, Rom. 7. 2. in opposition hereto, is often set ἀπόλλυμι, Luke 16. 18. or ἀποθνήσκει, Matth. 19 8 among other things signifying absolutum dimittere. to dismisse one being unlooked, or dischanged from bonds, as Matth. 27. 21 26. John 19. 10. understand their question to be, as Matth. 19. 3. whether it were lawful for a man to put away his wife on every occasion? they made no question but he might for some.

V. 3. what did Moses command you?] This Christ best knew, who gave the law by Moses; but thus in all controversies he would reduce them to the Law of God, hereby taking occasion to expound Moses by Moses, the Law by the Law, one Scripture by another, (as appeareth verse 6, 7, 8.) For Genesis 2. 24. it is said, Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife.

V. 4. Moses suffered to write a bill, &c.] Deut. 24. 1. See on Matth. 19. 7.

V. 5. he

V. 5. he wrote you this precept] See on Matth. 19. 8. this precept is as much as ἐπέτρεψεν, verse 4. to permit, as Matthew hath it. For Moses commanded not dismission of the wife; but (as a civil Magistrate) permitted it, to avoid murder and cruelty: rather chargeing the unreconcileable, with a command to write and publish the desertion of their wives, than any wayes approving that which was not according to Gods law and institution: so our law restraining interest to eight per cent. rather cautioneth against extortion, than approveth usury.

V. 6. from the beginning] Of the world, chap. 13. 19 when matrimony was instituted.

God made them male and female] One man and one woman; that two united into one flesh, might be the fountain of propagation to all mankinde.

V. 7. leave his father, &c.] See on Matth. 19. 5.

V. 8. one flesh] Gen. 2. 24. As they were one, (the woman being made of a part of man) so would God have them but one, in holy unity.

V. 9. what therefore God hath joyned] See on Matth. 19. 6. God is the Author of this bond, therefore man may not at his pleasure dissolve it.

V. 10. asked him again of the same] Of that which he had taught concerning indissolubility of marriage, it being a point which the Scribes and Doctors had never taught the people, therefore they yet understood it not.

V. 11. shall put away his wife] Matth. 5. 32. & 19. 9.

committeth adultery] Except he put her away for adultery, Mat. 19. 9.

against her] Whom he hath put away.

V. 12. and if a woman &c.] If a woman shall go from her husband, and take another man, she is an adulteresse.

V. 13. brought young children] See on Matth. 19. 13. Luke 18. 15. it is manifest that here the word paidia, signifieth children in years, and that of such is the kingdom of heaven, for verse 16. he took them up in his armes and blessed them, which it is likely he would not have done to a man of years, though never so humble.

V. 14. he was much displeased] ἠγανάκτησεν, he grieved, had indignation, or took it very ill: the Syriac gives it לַח אִתְרְאֵי ethbeh leh, which Trostius gives indignatus est. The word בְּאֵשׁ baash (whence it cometh, and which out of the Syriac we translate he had indignation, Matth. 26. 8. Matth. 14. 4.) properly signifieth fœtuit: and by a Metaphor, gravis, ingratus fuit auribus, as Genes. 21. 11. it was grievous, unwelcome, displeasing, or odious: so that this giveth us to understand, that Christ abhorred and abominated (as a loathsome and odious thing which he could not endure to hear or see) this perverse zeal of theirs, which (though probably out of a good meaning) prohibited children to be brought unto him: So the Greeks expresse an odious word λόγος σαπρὸς, Ephel. 4 29. rotten, stinking, rancid, or corrupt communication, such as good men loath to hear: by this we may conjecture, how acceptable their zeal is to Christ who forbid Infants baptisme. whereby they are brought to Christ, and implanted into him. Rom. 6. seeing he giveth this reason, for of such is the kingdom of God, that is, the kingdom of Heaven, Matth 19. 13. The impediment which is commonly objected, Christ taketh away, verse 15. where he saith, whosoever doth not receive the kingdom of God as a little childe, he shall not enter therein: which is in effect as if he had said, the tender age of children is so far from barring children from the kingdom of God; that, except they who are of ripe years become like little children, their baptisme shall not advantage them to give them admission into the kingdom of Heaven. It the inheritance of the kingdom be theirs, that which is thereto subordinate must be theirs: such is baptisme, which (as the Ark in the deluge) saves us, 1 Peter 3. 20. 21 if theirs, then is it odious to Christ to keep them from that which implanteth them into him. See on Luke 18. 16.

V. 15. as a little childe] We must be like children in humility, simplicity and innocency, if we desire to enter into the kingdom of Heaven. See 1 Cor. 14 20. and here verse 13.

V. 16. he took them up in his armes] See on chap. 9. 36.

and blessed them] In the Syriac בָּרַךְ אֲנוּן abarech innun, of the Hebrew בָּרַךְ barach; which signifieth to bend the knee, 2 Chron. 6. 13. Psalm 95. 6. to pray; for the Syriac word בָּרַךְ berach or בָּרֵךְ berech, signifieth the same, Acts 20 36. Matth 27. 29 Rom. 11. 4. &c. thence metonymically it signifieth he blessed, Mark 8. 7. Matth. 14. 19. &c. that is, according to the sense of the Hebrews, he prayed for, or pronounced a blessing on them, 2 Sam. 8 10. Exod. 12. 32. Pharaoh saith וּבָרַכְתֶּם גַּם־אֹתִי uberachtem gam othi, ye shall also bless me, that is, as the Chaldee giveth it, pray for me. Concerning infants we must know that God comprehended them in the covenant as well as their fathers, and therefore Christ blessed them. See Gen. 17. 7, 10. &c.

V. 17. that I may inherit life] Two things are to be eschewed by them who will be saved; that is, 1. Opinion of their own merits, 2. Love of riches. These two undo many soules: both these were in this young man. See on Matt. 19. 16.

V. 18. why callest thou me good?] See on Mat. 19. 17.

V. 19. thou knowest the commandments] Christ answereth to his question and sense: he said, what good shall I do? thinking he must be saved by the works of the Law; which is indeed to decline and wave free justification by faith in Christ, therefore Christ to convince his conscience, remitteth him to the Law, by which is the knowledge of sinne, Rom. 7. 7. but no justification from sinne, Romans 8. 3. See on Matthew 19. 16, 17. and on Luke 18. 20.

V. 20. all these have I observed] See on Mat. 19. 20. Luke 18. 21.

V. 21. loved him] ἠγάπησεν dixit, loved, kissed, or cheerfully and in a friendly manner received him, as truely pitying him who having with so much care outwardly kept the Law of God, which many did not; yet did but deceive himself with a vain opinion of righteousnesse, as if he were perfect, or neer thereto; when yet without faith in Christ, he could not possibly be saved,

Sell what thou hast] This is no Evangelical counsel, but a precept; though not binding all particularly to sell and give it away to the poor: yet in the general it bindeth every one to be willing to leave all at Gods command, or where his honour requireth it, and to give, according to his ability, for the relief of his poor or distressed neighbours;

V. 22. went away grieved] With a sad heart and heavy countenance, affrighted, as the Syriac Interpreter hath it, See Mat. 19. 22. Luke 18. 23.

V. 23. shall they that have riches] See Mat. 19. 23. Luke 18. 24. That is, who truft in riches (as here Christ interpreteth verse 24.) the vulgar fault of rich men.

V. 24. that trust in riches] See Psal. 62. 11. 1 Tim 6. 17. The danger is not in riches, but the abuse thereof: this he saith to his disciples whom he stileth children, because so he accounted them in his love and care of them, that they might understand the misteries of eternall life.

we have forsaken all] Mat. 19 27. Luke 18. 28.

V. 29. or wife, or, &c.] The meaning is, that God is a bountiful rewarder, and that the want of that which for his sake we forgo, shall be recompensed with better spiritual supplyes.

V. 30. shall receive an hundred fold] Either of temporal blessings when afflictions and persecutions are over; as Job did receive more than he lost; or in a blessed fupport in midst of troubles; as experience of Gods mercies, the Mother of hope, Rom. 5. 4. and the quiet fruits of righteousnesse at last, Heb. 12. 11. Such a gain, is losse for Christs sake, they shall finde blessings temporall and eternall, as Jacobs sonnes parting from Egypt; found in their sacks both corn and their money again, wherewith they had purchased it.

V. 31. but many] Mat. 19. 30.

V. 32. they were in the way] Mat. 20 17.

Jesus went before them] The disciples abhorred this journey to Jerusalem, knowing that the high priests and elders maliced him to the death; therefore to animate his timorous disciples, he manifested himself a chee full leader of the way, by his pace, countenance, and gesture: to let them know that he feared not death; but now that the hour was come, offered himself thereto, they were amazed as they followed] Nor yet understanding why he would cast himself again upon such apparent dangers.

they were afraid] Full of thoughts, as misdoubting their own safety. They yet would follow him, for they were loath to forsake their Master. This was of their love to him; which being not perfect, it had a dangerous mixture of fear, left themselves should come into danger, being taken notice of as his sectatours and disciples; therefore they wished that he would rather recede into some private and more secure place, where they might be quietly with him, than expole himself to the implacable malice of the Jews at Jerusalem, See John 11. 12. 16.

he took again the twelve] See Mat. 20. 17. and on Luke 18. 31. It semeth by this word πάλιν, again, that these words relate to that which is spoken, chap 9. 31. where he to his Apostles privately declared, that yet not well understood the mystery of his death and passion: hardly do we understand that which we are unwilling to learn: therefore Christ often teaching them this same point which was of necessity quickly to be learned, the time of his suffering now drawing so nere.

V. 39. ye shall drink indeed, &c.] See on Mat. 20. 22,23. the word baptisme, and baptizing, is in this place, but translatitious importing, sprinkling or wetting, with their own blood, not immersion, or dousing into it, (as Cyrus head was, by bloody Tomaris) why therefore immersion in baptisme should be simply necessary, the Anabaptists ought to shew some better reason than from the common use of the word, which signifieth as well, sprinkling or washing, as dipping into water.

V. 40. is not mine to give] Not mine in the sense wherein you desire this priviledge; that is, as being an earthly Monarch: the heavenly rewards are not here to be distributed in such respects; nor is my kingdom or glory of this world.

V. 41. when the ten heard it] The other ten Apostles, see Mat. 20. 24.

V. 42. exercise lordship &c.] Princes and rulers according to Gods ordinance rule over their subjects in this world; but I have no such temporall kingdome here, neither must ye expect it, but be humble like me whom ye ought to imitate. See on *Mat.*20.25. Luke 22. 24, &c.

be of good comfort] θάρσει, be confident, be of good cheer. So Mat. 9. 2. 22. He calleth thee, who cureth all that come unto him for help.

V. 50. casting away his garment] His uppper garment, some Cloak or Mantle, &c. so joyful was he that Christ called him, that he cast away, or off, what ever might hinder him, and came cheerfully to Christ: So also ought we to be affected in our calling to him.

V. 51. what will thou that I, &c.] See on Mat. 20. 32. and on Luke 18. 41. he demanded that which he best knew; that he might cause the multitude to be more attentive to the miracle of restoring sight to the blinde.

V. 6 and they shall let them go] The owners heating what the Lord had bid them say presently permitted them quietly to carry away their beasts for the use of Christ.

V. 8. spread their garments] See Mat. on 21. 8. Luke 19. 36. John 12, 13.

V. 9. Hosanna] See on Matth. 21. 9. Luke 19. 37, 38. John 12. 13. He often came to Jerusalem, but never with such acclamations and shew of Majesty: formerly he came privately, because he would decline their envy; but now that the time of his passion was come which himself had determined καιρὸς ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ, he cometh more gloriously, that they might know him to be truely God, and the expected Messias; if not, that it might be to their greater condemnation, saith Theophylact.

blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord] Well be it to him that cometh to us from God, or that is sent of God.

V. 10. blessed be the kingdom, &c.] Be it now happy and prosperous as we have long expected. They generally dreamed of a temporall monarchy of the Messias, which was the bias of their votes: therefore whereas they mentioned David their father, understand that, not so by them spoken, as wh n they called themselves Abrahams seed. John 8 33. but because they owned David as the best Partriarch and father of the people, of all the kings of Israel, see Psalm 78. 72. 2 Sam 24 17. and because they well knew that Christ should be of the posterity of David their king; whose kingdom (the perpetuity whereof God had promised David, 2 Sam 7. 16. Psalm. 89. 34.) was now, and even from Solomons time, miserably rent and ruined, the scepter being departed from Judah, yet the repaire thereof by Christ being foretold by the Prophets, as Isaiah 9. 7. they seeing Jesus doing such admirable things as excelled all power of man, might think the time thereof was now come, that the decayed estate of Israel should be repaired, and their secular monarchy restored, which vaine hope stuck fast upon the hearts of good men: yea, after Christs resurrection, and their often being taught the contrary, the disciples said, Acts 1. 6. —— Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? see also Luke 24. 21. —— but we trusted that it had been he, which should have redeemed Israel: —— so that this vote of the multitude here, hath this sense; Lord blesse and prosper us so, that the long-ruined kingdom and state of Israel may be now repaired and restored again to its ancient integrity, liberty, prosperity and glory, which it had under king David.

V. 11 when he had looked round] As being Lord of that house, he appeared as viewing what was amisse, and to be amended or reformed, which he presently did, casting out prophaners from the temple.

V. 12. he was hungry] See on *Mat.*21.18.

V. 13. seeing a fig-tree] Mat. 21.19.

if happily] Or to see if happily, as Gen 3.22.

he found nothing but leaves] A true Embleme of an Hypocrite, who makes a shew of godliness, but yet is fruitlesse and near the curse, *Mat.*3. Heb.6. 8 Isa 5.5,6.

for the time of figs was not yet] Israel was represented by this barren tree, Isaiah 5. 7. Luke 13. 8. which brought forth only shews of holinesse, observation of ceremonies (that law affording them only shadows, but no fruit) but not the substance of godlinesse, which is the fruit which God looks for. In the Letter we must consider, that the time of new fruits could not yet be, it being but the first moneth, as it was called after the captivity ניסן Nisan (which answered partly to our March, and partly to April) in the tenth day, whereof the Paschal Lamb was to be taken, and on the fourteenth day the Passover (to which they were now going to Jerusalem) was to be eaten, Exod. 12. 3,6. therefore so soon in the spring, the fig-tree could not bear any of that years fruit: and certainly Christ did not irrationally go at an unseasonable time to seek fruit thereon: so that it may most probably be concluded, that he sought some figs of the old store which use to hang on all the year, specially in those hot countreys: so that in the Letter, albeit the tree could not yet yeild any new fruits because the time was not yet come; yet might it have shewed some remainds of the former fertility. And in the type, if the Jews (hereby represented) might finde excuse for their not yet believing in Christ, before the fulnesse of that time was come; yet were they unexcusable, that they neither brought forth to the Lord fruits of righteousnesse according to their first covenant under the Law, which said, Do this and live: nor according to the second covenant under grace and the Gospel, which said, Relerve and thou shalt be saved: therefore Christ came this once to the figtree, not so much for his own sake, (who well knew both it, and how otherwise to have supplyed his own wants) as for the Apostles whom he would fore-instruct concerning the rejection of the Jews, to whom he came, three years seeking fruit, Luke 13.) which may import the time before the Law, under the Law, and now under the Gospel) and found none. This, Christ necessarily instructed them in, in regard that it must have been no smal scandal and grief to the apostles, that their kindred, the Israel of God, must for their unfruitfulnesse be under the curse (like this withered fig-tree) and withered and consumed for their rejecting the Gospel, whereof they were to be preachers, as may appear, Romans 9. 2, 3. Therefore as God instructed Jonah by the withered gourd; so here Christ enformeth his disciples by this soon withering fruitlesse fig-tree. See on Matth. 20. 20.

V. 14. Jesus answered] That is, according to the Hebrew manner manner of speaking, he began thus to say on this occasion.

never man eat fruit] Possibly this was because he knew that this tree had not yet born fruit, or that it bare little, and was so unprofitable to the owner; but however, the Lord of all creatures might justly dispose of it, who (what ever right he gives men in his creatures) may justly give, and take at his pleasure.

his disciples heard] They were to be witnesses of what was done on the morrow; neither would they have admired, nor much observed the power of Christ herein, if they had not heard, when he had thus curfed it.

V. 15. and they came] Mat. 21.12.

and began to] That is, did cast out; for he had done it once before, John 2. 15. See the like phrase, chapter 10. 32.

to cast them out that sold] Christ sheweth indeed, that he is the true king, and high priest, and therefore the revenger of the abuses of the temple.

V. 16. that any man should carry any vessel] That is, any common ones, such as they brought into the temple, who made it a market place; for concerning the holy vessels, or things appertaining to the service of God, the charge whereof appertained unto the Priests and Levites, as God had commanded, this place of Scripture speaketh not.

V. 17. My house shall be called] Shall generally be for accounted and taken. See Matth. 21. 13. Luke 19. 46. John 2. 16.

of all nations the house of prayer] πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, unto all nations, this was perfectly fulfilled in the Church of Christ, gathered of all nations, which began from this Temple, out of which sounded that Gospel, which was spread over the world. See Isa. 2. 3. and 56. 7. See on Mat. 21.13. and on Luke 18. 10. & 19. 46. and on John 2. 16.

a den of theeves] Thus he calleth it, διὰ τὸ φιλοκερδὲς Theophylact, for their covetousnesse; for theeves seek gains, by any, though never so unjust wayes, as it seemes the rulers and govern rs did, who for impious gain fake permitted the temple of God, thus to be prophaned.

V. 18. how they might destroy him] They had long before determined to do it, now therefore they consult how they may, with least danger to themselves, because they feared the people would take his part.

V. 19. he went out of the city] That he might not so much as seem to give any occasion of tumult to the city, prone thereunto.

V. 20. in the morning] Mat. 21. 19. The miracle was the greater, for that in the coolest time of night, a tree so fucculent and ful of juice, should so quickly wither and drie up from the roots, this also sheweth the divine power of Christs word, it was he that dried up the water of the red sea. Josh. 2. 10. he withholdeth the waters and they dry up, Job 12. 15. he turneth the water springs into dry ground, Psalm 107. 33. he maketh waste mountains and hils, and drieth up all his herbes, Isa. 42. 15. at his rebuke the sea drieth up, Isa. 50. 2. his power knows no obstruction, his command no delay, his curse is a flying book going forth, over the face of the earth, Zech. 5. 2. 3.

dried up from the roots] See on Mat. 21.20.

V. 21. saith unto him, Master] Mat. 21. 20. it appeareth that all the disciples admired and spake of it; it may be Peter first noted and spake of it, and then the rest.

V. 22. Have faith] Or have the faith of God: See on Matthevv 21. 21.

V. 23. shall say unto this mountain] See on Mat. 21. 21.

V. 24. what things soever ye desire] Mat. 7. 7. See on Luke 11. 9.

believe that ye receive them] That is, shall receive: he speaks in the present tense, to shew the certainty of it, as 1 John 5. 15. See on Mat. 21. 22.

V. 25. When ye stand praying] So they used sometimes to do when they prayed in the temple, Luke 18. 11, 13. though here it seemeth a composing themselves to pray.

forgive] Mat. 6. 14.

if ye have ought against any] Any just cause of offence.

V. 26. your trespasses] παραπτώματα, your fallings, offences, or errours, it is of παραπίπτω, incido or offendo, Syr delicta vestra, your sins, which we commit by stumbling at some offence or example. See Gal. 6. 1. Mat. 6. 12. 14. Luke 11. 4.

if you do not forgive] See on Mat. 6. 15.

V. 27. as he was walking] Mat 21. 23.

there come to him the chief priests] See on Mat. 21. 23. the Gospel hath been long fince assaulted by them that pretend ordinary succession, and much care of religion, they having chief authority in the Church of Christ: the best things are obvious to abuse.

V. 28. by what authority] Which thou didst yesterday in the temple, verse 15. See on Mat. 21. 23.

V. 31. with themselves] Or among themselves; for it is likely that they advised one with another, what to answer. See on Mat. 21. 25. Mat. 16.7.

V. 32. Of men] Here is an elliptical speech, as Luke 13. 9. See on Mat. 21. 26. Luke 20. 6.

they feared the people] Who had an high esteem of John, here is a justreward of an evil conscience; they are afraid of those, of whom they should be feared, and honoured.

V. 33. we cannot tell] See on Matth. 21. 27. and on Luke 20. 7.

neither do I tell you by what, &c.] He saith not, neither can I, but neither do I, or, I will not satisfie you in your demand. Christ justly denyeth to give them more knowledge, who malitiously dissemble that which they have.

CHAP. XII.

V. 1. HE began to speak] Mat. 21. 33. by parables] He spake one parable, whereof we read at this time. So משל meshalim, Ezek. 14. 8. is translated, a proverbe, which is an usefull kind of teaching for moving affection, and strengthening the memory, Christ in his divine wisdome saw good to use it much in his teachings, best knowing how and when to instruct those good hearers, who desired to learne and believe, and to elude the captious and obstinate unbelievers, who came not with any purpose or minde to be converted, but to tempt and calumniate; so therefore he, who knew their thoughts, accommodated his sermons, and answers, that hearing they might heare, but not understand to converfion and salvation, see Matth. 13. 13. &c.

planted a vineyard] Isaiah. 5. 1, &c. See on Matth. 21. 33. Luke 20. 9.

went into a far country] See on Matth. 21. 33.

V. 2. at the season] When the fruits used to be gathered.

V. 3. beat him] See on Matth. 21. 35. Luke 20. 10.

V. 4. another servant] That is, one Prophet after another, whom they stoned, and unworthily entreated, as if they had been malefactors.

V. 5. and many others] That is, in his mercy and long-suffering he sent many Prophets, whom they still abused, and persecuted. See 2 Chron. 36. 15. &c.

V. 6. Having yet therefore one son] As if he said, there being no more left which God saw probable to be done for their conversion, as he expresseth, Isa. 5. 4. what could have been more done to my vineyard, that I have not done to it? He gave them his only son, John 3. 16. certainly God himself, rich in mercy, Ephes. 2. 4. hath nothing greater to give.

he will come] This answer is attributed to the chief priests and elders, Mat 21. 41. See more thereon. They could see their own faults, as men see their faces in a glasse, looking from themselves, they see themselves: we see our own sins best in another person. 2 See Sam, 12. 5, 6. &c.

unto others] The calling of God is not without exception, tied, to person, place, or time; when one nation or people abuse his mercies long bestowed upon them, he giveth it at his pleasure to some others, who shall render him better fruits.

V. 11. This is the Lords doing] Psal. 118. 23.

V. 12 to lay hold on him] They were very desirous to do it, they would faine have apprehended and destroyed him, being conscious that he had spoken the parable against them; who were therefore impatient of having their sinnes, their fouls fores touche because they were incurable: he that telleth an obstinate sinner of his faults, is as he that holdeth a glasse before the deformed.

V. 13. and they send] See on Mat. 22. 15, 16.

V. 14. thou regardest not the person of men] Gr. thou lookest not upon the face. The Areopagites did judge in the dark, that they might not be moved with any mans outward shew: these here pretend, that Christ did not so judge by outward appearance, that the truth should thereby suffer any prejudice.

with all thy strength] As much as possibly thou canst: the measure of love to thy neighbour, must be thy self; but the measure wherewith we must love God, must be to love him without measure.

V. 31. the second is like] Of the like importance in respect of thy salvation; for thou canst not be saved without love to God and thy brother, and what that is then profit us, if loving our selves we bawk our neighbours? or what again shall it advantage us, it loving our neighbours, we neglect our selves? Greg. hom. 17. in evang. love thy neighbour as thy self? but love both in God.

V. 32. thou hast [said the truth] ἐπ' ἀληθείας, &c. thou hast spoken in truth; the Syriac giveth it, as we, thou hast said the truth. He came to prove Christs wisdom, and hearing it, giveth testimony thereto.

V. 33. more than all whole burnt-offerings] More excellent and more acceptable to God, 1 Sam. 15. 22. these ceremonies never pleased God, without the other duties which we owe to him and respectively also to our neighbour. See Isa. 1.13.16.17. Hos. 6.6. Mic. 6.6,7.

V. 34. answered discreetly] νουνεχῶς, as it were from νοῦν ἔχειν: he answered as one having a ready minde, as we vulgarly say, with his wits about him, or less neatly and skilfully: for so the Hebrew חכם, chacham signifieth, and thence is the Syriac word חכימא dechachimath, here used, derived.

V. 35. that Christ is the Son of David] Christ denieth that which is vouchedh here of the Scribes, but proveth his Deity by the words of David. See on Mat. 22.42.

V. 36. said by the holy Ghost] See on Mat. 22 43. ἐν τῷ πνεύματι τῷ ἁγίῳ in or by the holy Spirit the intimates that it was not so much David, as the holy Ghost that spake by David. See 2 Peter 1.21.

The Lord said] Psal. 110.1.

V. 37. the common people heard him gladly] Many of the common people, or the greater part of them, while he taught them, cheerfully and attentively hearkened to that he spake.

V. 38. Beware of the Scribes] βλέπετε, Look to: as chap. 8. 15. Mat. 23. 5. The manners of all ministers, are not incautiously to be followed as examples of our lives.

in long clothing] ἐν στολαῖς, a stole, is a kinde of vesture or robe, long to the heels, which anciently the Persians used to wear: the Latines did more specially take it for a womans garment: στολὴν, was a short coat, such as Philosophers commonly wore: but in this place it seemeth to signifie that fringed garment, mentioned Deut. 22. 12. הכנפות thefuth. See on Mat. 23. 5. and on Luke 20.47.

salutations in the market] See on Mat. 23.7. that they might seem honourable among the people, they loved to have men rise up when they came by, and with much reverence (as we say, with cap and knee) salute them: when Ahasuerus had promoted Haman, all the kings servants which were in the kings gate, bowed, and reverenced him; he was revengefully wrath with Mordecai, that he would not, Esther 3. 2. by which we may ghesse at these ambitious Pharisees mindes towards those who saluted them not.

V 39. chief seats] See on Mat 23.6.

V. 40. devour widows houses] They spoil those whom Gods law gave a speicall charge to preserve. See 2 Tim 3.6. and on Mat. 23. 14.

receive greater damnation] That is, more than ordinary punishment in hell: because they not onely served sin and Satan in their contempt of Gods laws, but also made a pretence of his holy worship, to serve their unhallowed desires and impieties: counterfeit sanctity, is double iniquity.

V. 41. sate over against the treasurie] See on Luke 21. 4.

money] χαλκὸν, Here is a metonymie of the matter: brasse, is here put for any kinde of money, whether of brasse or other metal, which the Romans used, as do some nations now: so they used the word as, gravis are, full of mony, as alienum, debt: the Syriac hath a word here עירפנא hurephana, hereby signifying any kinde of smal money.

into the treasury] Or cheft, whereinto they put their beneficence. 2 Kings 12.10,11.2 Chron 24.8.

V. 42. two mites] It was (say some) a seventh part of one peice of that brasse money. See on Luke 21. 2. though she well knew the slendernesse of her flock, and how little those her two drops, could adde to greater floods of others beneficence, yet she would not want will, though she did ability to her minde: nothing despairing, but that God would accept the will which he had given, who had not given her wealth.

V. 43. He called unto him his disciples] He called them apart, probably, that neither his disciples might be ignorant how God accepteth the will of those; who cheerfully give, though they cannot bountifully; nor the widow might hear, to move her to any vain glory (a weed which will grow on the least ground) nor the people to envy.

this poor widow hath cast in more] See on Luke 21. 3. this was an epitome of great wealth; much in Gods gracious acceptance, who as Gregory saith, hom. 5. in evang. cor, non substantiam pensat, weigheth the heart (of the giver) not the value of the gift: for rich men give, secure of their wealth, to bear it; but poor men, of Gods favour, to supply them with more: it is our affection, not our store which commendeth our gifts to God, who can never be covetous nor lesse gracious in accepting the best we can present. See 2 Cor. 8. 12.

V. 44. but she out of her want] Out of her exceeding smal store; 2 Cor. 8. 2.

all her living] That is, all the meanes she had to live on: all that for present she had to sustain her self: so βίος signifieth, both life, and livelyhood: she gave all, who had no more left her to give, or to relieve her self; but must work for more; whereas others gave of that abundance, or store, which lay by them, whereof they had not so much as present use.

CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. As he went out of the temple] Mat. 24.1.

see what manner of stones] How beautiful, Luke 21. 5. and large, verse 2. Josephus antiq. lib. 15. c. 14. reporteth, that they were white hard stones, of a very great magnitude: no doubt it was a very strong, beautifull and magnificent structure; but no strength can resist, nor worldly magnificence appease Gods anger against obstinate sinners. Because he had said, their house (the temple in which they so much gloried) should be left desolate, because of the grievous sinnes, obstinacy and hardnesse of heart of that people, they admiring that such a goodly fabrick should be demolished: shew him οἰκοδομὰς, the comeliness thereof. Theophylatt.

V. 2. Seest thou these great buildings] Thou thinkest, they shall stand for ever, because of their strength, beauty and magnificence; which, in relation to second causes, might possibly be: but as except the Lord build the house, their labour is but vain that build it, Psal. 127. 1. so also, except he keep it, one stone upon another] That is, it shal be utterly destroyed. See Mat. 24.2. thus he foreshews their misery, and therwith their many comforts, in the midst of their calamities.

thrown down] καταλυθῆ, dissolved, or destroyed, as Chap. 15. 29.

V. 3. on the mount of Olives] See Mat. 24. 3. it seemeth it was where they had the temple in sight.

V. 4. Tell us when] See on Mat. 24.3.

V. 5. left any man deceive you] See on Matthew 24. 4.

V. 6. come in my Name] See on Matth 24. 5. many seducers pretending to my office, name, authority, or doctrine, that thereby they may seduce unstable souls: errour and impiety can no wayes deceive, but under some shew or shadow of vertue.

I am Christ] That is, he whom ye look for. See Matthew 11. 3.

V. 7. When ye shall hear of wars] See on Mat 24.6. now are these times foretold; for now also, as Cyprian l. 2 ep. 2. madet orbis mutuo sanguine, the world is wet with mutual blood.

the end shall not be yet] See on Mat. 24. 6. The end shall not be yet; that is, οὐδέπω, not by and by (not presently after ye shall hear of warres and rumors of warres) so Luke expresseth this ἔτως τὸ τέλος, for those things must first come to passe, ----nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom,----before all these things, they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, &c. probably our Saviour addeth these words, to refell and confute that vain opinion of the Jews, so much glorying and confiding in the beauty sanctity, and perpetuity of their temple, that they thought that the world must necessarily have have ending with it, albeit they might have been sufficiently instructed to the contrary, by that which the Lord permitted the Chaldees to do unto their former temple, Jer. 52.13. 2 King. 25. 9.

V. 8. Nation shall rise, &c.] See on Mat 24.7.

these are the beginnings] Ye shall have greater sortowes afterward.

of sorrows] See Mat. 24. 8. ὠδίνων; here is a metaphor taken from a womans travell, whose pains greaten by degrees, unto the birth; and are the more grievous, because sodain. See 1 Thes. 5 3.

V. 9. take heed to your selves] βλέπετε δὲ ὑμεῖς ἑαυτούς, the Syriack giveth it, respect your soul: the meaning is, take heed of the dangers which shall then befet you.

they shall deliver you up] The enemies of the Gospel shall deliver you up to secular powers, that they may persecute you: so they did to Herod Agrippa, Herod, &c.

for a testimony] For a testimony against themselves, to leave them without all excuse of their unbelief and disobedience, who having heard the gospel so evidently preached by you, yet regarded it not.

V 10. the gospel must first be published] Before ye be thus persecuted: so was it before Jerusalem was destroyed. See Rom. 10. 18. See on Mat 24. 14.

among all nations] To the Gentiles, as well as to the Jews. To some nations it was not preached until after the destruction of Jerusalem; many were remote, and some then undiscovered.

V. 11. when they shall lead you] To the Magistrates. See on Mat. 10. 19. and on Luke 20. 11. and on Luke 21. 13,14.

it is not you that speak, &c.] Gods spirit will guide your tongues: this was a special promise to the Apostles. Yet not so to be restrained to them, but that we must understand that the same spirit of God assisteth and speaketh in their successours in the ministery unto the end of the world, Mat. 28. 19, 20. although not now with an infallibility, yet with a measure of spiritual graces sufficient for the refutation of all adversaries of the Gospel; and for the edification and gathering together the elect of every age into the mystical body of Christ which is his Church. See Eph. 4. 11,12,13.

V. 12. brother shall betray brother] Out of a blind zeal they will accuse each other, and complain of each other to the Magistrate; so forgetting all laws of nature, as if their religion taught them to be cruel and unnatural: let him that readeth consider our present condition.

V. 13. ye shall be hated of all men] Of most men with whom you shall converse: or of all worldly men; or of some of all sorts. The like manner of speaking, see Phil. 2. 21.

for my names sake] For professing me to be the Saviour of the world.

endure unto the end] That shall constantly endure afflictions and persecutions, for professing the gospel. See on Matthew 24. 13. It is the end which crowneth the work; see Rev. 2. 10, the Galatians began well, yet for their inconstancy, heard, O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you? -----have ye suffered so many things in vain? ----Gal. 3. 1, 4 Judas began well, but not persevering, it had been better for him not to have known the way of righteousnesse---2 Pet. 2. 21 doctrine most necessary for these relapsing times, did the spirit addresse unto the Angel of the Church of Ephesus. Rev. 2. 5. remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy Candlestick out of his place. --- from the beginning of the creation] That is, of the world created, as chap. 10. 6. κτίσεως signifieth the creation, so here, and elsewhere it importeth the creatures, or things created. Rom. 8. 8. 21.

V. 20. except the Lord had shortned.] Except he had shortned this war of the Romans with them, none of the Jews would have been left alive. See on Mat. 24. 22. Theoph. So this οὐκ ἂν ἐσώθη πᾶσα σὰρξ, all flesh should not be saved, after the Hebrew manner, put to signifie no flesh, as Psal 143. 2. לא יצדק, col, that, all living, that is, none: this, he saved, the Syriack well giveth, non viveret, &c. not a Jew should have been left alive. Theoph.

Dan. 12. 2. John 5. 28, 29. yet the holy Angels of God shall minister herein, for the elects sake, to gather them from all parts of the world, sea and land, into the kingdom of glory. V. 28. branch is yet tender] Or now tender, or already tender, which is so, in the spring, not in the winter. See chap. 6. 35, and 8. 2. and 15. 42. 44. and on Mat. 24. 33.

V. 29. when ye shall see these things] See on Matth. 24. 39. Luke 21. 31.

that it is nigh] The kingdom of God, Luke 21. 31. Here, as also, Matth. 24. Luke 21. from the 20. verse. Some things are recorded as relating to the destruction of Jerusalem, the temple, and polity of the Jewes; and some other things as relating to the end of the world, and coming of Christ to judgment; we must for the right understanding hereof carefully distinguish between, the signs of the neernesse of approach of the one, and of the other; for albeit some signes which Christ giveth may agree to either, Jerusalems end, or the worlds, as wars and rumours of wars, false Prophets deceiving many, iniquity abounding, love and charity growing cold, Mat. 24. 11, 12. yet some signes and symptomes are peculiar to the one which were not applyable to the other; as here ver. 26 seeing the Son of man coming in the clouds, was not spoken of, as a token of Jerusalems destruction, but of the worlds end; the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, standing in the holy place, Mat. 24. 15. was not a sign or presage of the worlds imminent destruction, but of the temples, and Jerusalems.

V. 30. This generation shall not passe] See on Mat. 24. 34. Luke 21. 32.

till all these things be done] Begin to be accomplished: for the destruction of Jerusalem came, while some of this age were alive and hour] Or season.

V. 31. Heaven and earth shall passe] See on Matth. 24. 35 Luke 21, 33.

no not the Angels] Much lesse men.

neither the Son] As man, he knew not all things at once, but by degrees, see Luke 2. 52. and it seemeth that he had not yet this secret revealed unto him, untill after his ascension, wherein he laid down the form of a servant.

but the Father] The lattter day is not curiously to be searched for, which the Father alone knoweth: we must rather take care that we may be ever provided for it: for therefore God concealeth it from us, that we might never be secure, but ever stand upon a careful watch.

V. 33. Take heed, watch and pray] See on Matthew 24. 42. These are munimenta spiritualia, Cyprian epist. 1. spiritual fortifications.

the time] That is, καιρὸς, the season: that set and appointed time, which God hath determined.

V. 34. as a man taking a farre journey] Thus shall it be in the kingdom of God, as if a man should take a long journey: so is Christs going into heaven, leaving his house the Church: out of the worldly mans belief, as out of his sight: he committed to every one his charge; some to govern, some to obey: every one to be vigilant in his calling, sanctimony of life, and expectation of judgment to come. See Mat. 25. 14.

the porter to watch] Left any any misled servants should go away: or robbers and seducers enter to spoyle: See the moral, Acts 20. 28. 1 Pet. 5. 8, 9.

V. 35. For ye know not] Seeing the danger is both inevitable and intolerable, if Christ coming to judgment, find us negligent and unprepared (for there shall be then no place for repentance) and seeing we cannot knowv the hour when he will come, it highly concerns every Christian to stand upon a careful and constant watch.

at midnight, &c.] By these termes may be understood, that we may expect death and judgmentat all times; and that no age of man is exempt from death: live every dayas if it were thy last.

V. 36. left coming sodanly] That is, in an hour that ye thought not of; before ye have repented, and returned unto the Lord, in true faith, and newnesse of life.

finde you sleeping] That is, secure in your sins. See Matthew 14.41.44.

V. 37. what I say unto you] Tell the rest of my disciples, and all others, for their learning and comfort, what I have told you, verse 3.

I say unto all, watch] The word of Christ is without exception of times, places, or persons addressed to all, ut noviſſimi per primos audiant, Ierom. that the last may hear by the first. Except the hour which shall bring thee to judgment; for that is to every man his day of judgment: every man goeth hence such, qualis judicandus eſt illo die, Auguſtin. ep 80. as he shall be judged at that day: the life of a good and wise man, is a continual meditation on death, and preparation for the same; when Satan can make men to get this, he easily bringeth them asleep in sin.

Verse 1. F*East of Passeover*] See on Mat. 26.2. Luke 22.1,2. the chief prieſts] Though there were but one high priest at a time, yet there were some chief of every course or rank, (unto which David distributed them. 1 Chron. 24. 6.) which gave the name to those classes or courses, and by which they were distinguished and known: and these heads, or chief of their fathers of houses, are here meant: so that the sense is, the high priest, with his Suffragan, and the chief priests of every course. See more hereof, on Mat. 27. 1.

Luk. 13. 14 where the same word is used: it seemeth to be compounded of ἄγαν, very much, exceedingly; and ἄχθομαι, ægrè fero, to be vexed at, as at a thing intolerable or grievous to be endured: be not diſcouraged for mens censuring thy good works, never any thing was so well done, but that it was obvious, and exposed to calumny, because some body disliked it.

V. 25. I will drink no more of] See on Mat. 26. 29. He alludeth unto the custom of the Jews, who were not to eat or drink any more that day, after the concluding cup: the meaning is, I have lived and conversed with you hitherto as man with men: but henceforth I will be with you, as in the eternal kingdom, where we shall live another kind of life: and from this time, though he did after his resurrection, eat and drink with them; yet that was not for his necessity, but to confirm their faith in the resurrection: for then had he neither bodily infirmity, nor necessity.

V. 26. an hymne] Or psalm. See on Mat. 26. 30.

V. 27. all ye ſhall be offended] Mat. 26. 31. Christ foretelleth how he shall be forsaken, left they should be scandaled at it when they should see it so come to passe.

V. 28. yet will not I] Mat. 26. 33. Thus said he presuming on his own abilite, and sincere affection to Christ: here is a grave document, concerning mans infirmity, and danger in security. Concerning which the Apostle admoniſheth, 1 Cor. 10. 12. wherefore let him that thinketh he ſtandeth; take heed lest he fall; it is a pious use which *Auguſtin de doctr. to his diſciples] To his own disciples: for now none but the Apostles were with him, who were called disciples, by way of preeminence.

V. 33. with him] None were there with him but they.

V. 34. My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowfull &c.] See on Mat. 26. 38. It importeth an extraordinary sorrow: more than any humane sorrow: to him might justly be applyed that. Lam. 1. 12.

V. 35. that the hour might paſſe from him] The time of my passion determined by thee, and foretold in scripture, which I now feel coming on me.

V. 36. Abba Father] So Rom. 8. 15. Galat. 4. 6. The children speaking Syriack, used to say אבא abba to their fathers, therefore the Greek retraineth it, and expounds it by ὁ πατήρ; the Syriack rendeth אבא אבא abba abi, Abba my father, or my father; and this ingemination is proper for great exclamations, vehemency or passion, and earnest petitions for relief in extream dangers, or deprecation of the imminent: אבא abba is a Chalde and Syriack word formed of the Hebrew אב ab, by adding נא a, and doubling the ב b. See on Mat. 26. 39. Luke 22. 42.

V. 37. Couldſt thou not watch one houre?] He speaketh by name to Peter, though the rest were also concerned; because Peter, who had most, or first profeſſed constancy toward Christ, might specially be admonished to watch and pray against his imminent temptation; by the sence of this present infirmity now obreping and stealing on him: as if he had said, if you cannot watch one hour with me, how much lesse will ye be able to watch many, or resist the greater trials, which will quickly fall upon you.

V. 38. Watch and pray] See on Mat. 26. 41.

V. 39. the ſame words] τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον the same speech. See on Mat. 26. 44. It is lawful to repeat the same words, again and again in prayer, as Christ here did; if there be faithful and serious intention of the mind therein: otherwise, the vain repetitions of hypocrites are unsavory, and prohibited by Christ, where they think to be heard for their much speaking Mat. 6. 7.

V. 40. found them aſleep again] So frail is flesh and blood; where the spirit is willing, it cannot, (ot very hardly) watch against temptations: how great a care had we need to have? what to answer him] They were athamed of their sleepines, (& could not keep themselves awake) nor did they know how to excuse it.

V. 42. Riſe, let us go] See on Mat. 26. 46.

V. 43. While he yet ſpake] Mat. 26. 47. So certainly did Christ foresee the time; manner and end of every action, that he therein appeared truly God omnisicient; as truly man suffering for our sins: he had said, verse 41. the hour is come, behold the Son of man is betrayed; and that same hour, and instant, it appeared to be so.

from the chief Prieſts] That is, being procured and sent by the chief priests to apprehend Christ.

V. 44. he that betrayed him] Man forsook God, and therein betrayed his honour; and Christ is forsaken of his, and betrayed, that the satisfaction which he made to the justice of God, might be proportionable to the sin which man had committed.

lead him away ſafely] ἀσφαλῶς, diligently, and safely: be sure you suffer him not to escape, neither to be rescued: it is probable that Iudas was thus cautious, remembring how often he had before delivered himself, and escaped out of his enmies hands, when they would have killed him: as, Luke 4. 30. John 8. 59. John 10. 39. and fearing he would do so again: or that the high priests would suspect Iudas himself of fraud toward them in preending to deliver him unto them, whose power to elude and escape them (as at first. Sampſon did the Philistines) Iudas did foreknow; and so he might fail of his thirty pieces promised him for his treason, or suffer their disavour.

V. 45. and kiſſed him] See on Mat. 26. 50. 47. Luke 22. 48. For albeit this was among the Jewes an usual manner of salutation (2 Sam. 20. 9. Rom. 16. 16. Exod 4. 27 Exod. 18. 7. 2 Sam. 14. 33. 1 Cor. 16. 20. &c.) yet seeing there appeared among them who came armed unto him, only one face of enemnity, this salutation of Iudas was a designation evident enough of him, upon whom he would have the souldiers (who possibly neither knew Christ nor any of his disciples with whom he was) lay present hands to apprehend him.

V. 46. took him] See on Mat. 26. 50. John 18. 13.

V. 47. One of them that ſtood by] Peter cut off Malchus ear. John 18. 10, 11.

V. 50. they all forſook him] The eleven disciples that were with him. As he had foretold them, ver. 27. and as Scripture many years before had declared it, would come to passe. Zech. 13 7.

V. 51. a certain young man] Not any of our Saviours disciples, or of the house whence he came; but one that came out of some dwelling near the garden, who hearing the tumult, had risen, and run out to knowv what the matter vvas.

having a linnen cloth] Such as they used to lye in. By vvhich it may seem, that being waked by the noyse of the souldiers going by, he sodainly started out of his bed to hearken what the matter vvas, that so many armed men passed by at that time of night.

laid hold on him] The souldiers that came vvith Iudas, supposing him to be one of Christs disciples, took him.

V. 52. fled from them naked] As Ioſeph left his upper garment, Gen. 39. 12. This the Evangelist mentioneth, to shevv, vvhat danger it then vvas to followv; or to be suspected of his party: this forteth off the malicious rage of his enemies; and hovv hard it had been for the Apostles, to escaped their boundless violence, had not the divine providence of Christ preserved them; for the greater vvork to vvhich the Lord had assigned them: vvhich may comfort us in the enemies greateſt fury; he can and vvill preserve us to the vvork he hath appointed us.

V. 53. and they led] Mat 26. 57. they bound him, or manicled him, as if he had been some dangerous and great malefactor, and so led him avvay to Annas firſt, John 18. 12, 13. the malicious high priests thought it not enough to destroy him privately, but, to render him more odious to the Romans, and also the people of the Jews, they would have him seem guilty, and as one worthy of death, perishing by the hand of justice: such is the odious deformity of sin that it cannot endure its own face, but when it will act in publick, will be sure to borrow some mask of justice or sanctity, that it may not be discovered.

with him were aſſembled all the chief prieſts] Their highest counsel was assembled; because they blasphemously accused Christ of blasphemy: their other calumny, concerning treason, was forged against him, to instigate Pilate to condemn him.

V. 54. at the fire] πρὸς τὸ φῶς, at the light, that is, of the fire: so the Syr. hath it נוּרָא nura (over against the fire; that is, at, or before the fire) so the word is commonly used. Hebr. 12. 18. Act. 7. 30, &c. from the Hebrew נור properly signifying a light, or candle: so the Greeks sometimes used φῶς, for fire, because it shineth and giveth light; hereby they discovered Peter, so the Hebrews used their word אור, or, to signifie both fire, and light, Gen. 1. 2. Isai. 44. 16. I have ſeen אור the fire &c. 70. שׁ. so Isai. 50 11, &c. which commonly signifieth light, splendor, and brightneſſe: as Gen. 2. 2. God said fiat אור light.

V. 55. Sought for witneſſe] See on Mat. 26. 59.

V. 56. Their witneſſes agreed not together] Or were not equal to a capital accusation: that which they said could not touch life, which the Priests much desired verſe 55 59 So that Christ whose perfect innocency was above all impeachment; in end is condemned, for confessing God to be his father, that we, who denied God, and were indeed wicked, might be acquitted before Gods tribunal.

V. 57. Then aroſe certain] that is, two false witnesles (as Mat. 26. 60.) flood forth, or came into the court to testify, having been suborned, and having compacted, and premeditated what to say against Christ.

V. 58. I will deſtroy this temple] See on Mat. 26 61.

V. 59. Neither ſo did their witneſſe agree] See on ver. 56. Their witneſſe agreed not; for some said, Jesus words vvhereof they accuſe him were, I am able to deſtroy the temple of God, and to build it, &c. Mat. 26. 61. the other said, I will deſtroy the temple, &c. as here, the one speaks only a poſſe, the other a velle: and so their vvitneſſes vvere not idem, ſufficient to condemn him.

V. 60. Anſwereſt thou nothing] See on Mat 26. 62.

V. 61. The ſon of the bleſſed one] Of God, worthy of all praiſe, daily lauded of men and angels Isai. 6. 3. Rev 4. 8. the Jews commonly called God הַבָּרוּךְ baruch bu. V. 64 What think ye] See on Mat. 26. 66. he well knew their sense and sentence; but, as Lallantius noteth; the sinner would ever have a free place to sin, which is, when he can gain such consent, that there remaineth no man; Cui deliƈta non placeant, whom his sins please not.

and bound Jesus] The holy, and spotlesse lambe of God (John 1. 29) is bound (as the sacrifices used to be, which presigured him) and that before the tribunal of man, that we who are guilty sinners, might be acquitted, before the judgement seat of God.
and delivered him to Pilate] The Romans having subdued them, and given them Laws and conditions of holding their inheritances in that land, permitted them not power of judicature in any capital causes; because they could not put Jesus to death (which they so much desired) they deliver him to Pilate the Roman deputy for that time. With an enditement of high treason against Cæsar, which they supposed would easily carry on their design, before Pilat. the name of King being ever odious to the Romans: therefore Pilate in the next verse is questioneth him so, art thou the King of the Jewes? which might seem very abrupt, but that we must understand that the Jewes had accused Christ of ambition, and affecting to be King of Israel, which for brevity sake this Evangelist omitteth See verse 3.

V. 4. Pilate asked him again] Mat. 27. 13. For he had asked him once before, in the judgement-hall, where his enemies would not come to appear against him. John 18. 33. now lest they should say Pilate had not dealt sincerely, he here asketh the same question again in their presence, out of the hall.

V. 5. Pilate marvelled] Believing him to be innocent, he could not but marvel, why he spake nothing in his own defence, speciallly seeing the judge expressed so much inclination to acquit him. So far is the wisdom of man from apprehending the counsels of God concerning the great work of our redemption, which Christ would not attempt to hinder, by answering for himself, that he might be acquitted. But would therefore be silent, that the judge might proceed to sentence against him, and he might suffer to satisfy Gods justice for our sins, and we be saved.

V. 17. Platted a crown of thornes] See on Mat. 27. 29. and on John 19. 2. Christ, now to suffer for the sins of men (whose ambition reached to the throne of God himself) is condemned as one that affected a kingly power, and therefore in scorn is crowned with thorns, that we through him might be crowned with glory, and eternal blessednesse.

V. 19. Smote him on the head with a reed] Which probably they took out of his hand, into which they had put it in mockery, and contempt, instead of a sceptre; as they had the crown of thorns on his head; that they might make him the contempt of the rude vulgar, blasphemously deriding him. See on Mat. 27. 33. and on John 19. 17. & Luke 23. 33. thus by his stripes we are healed; by his sorrowes we enter into eternal joy.

However the malicious Jewes intended this for a contumely, and acted it for an aggravation of his sufferings, to be numbred and executed among malefactours, infamous persons; yet this also was one work of the Messias, concerning whose suffering the Prophet Isai 53. 12. So many generations before said, he was numbred with the transgressors; which Christ told his disciples before his passion (Luke 22. 37.) must be accomplished in himself: the Jewes would hereby have made it appear to the world, that Christ thus suffering, was not the expected Messias and Saviour of the Elect: but hereby they blindly and unwittingly executed Gods decree for his thus suffering. See Acts 4 28. to the most just condemnation of the Jewes, who reading this Prophesie, and themselves acting to the fulfilling of the same, will not yet believe that Christ in whom, and whose sufferings, all the legall ceremonies prefiguring him, as also all the divine oracles of God by the Prophets foretold, were fully, and punctually fulfilled.

V. 44. Marvelled if he were already dead] Because they who were crucified, were very long in their torments before they could die; and because probably he might hear that Jesus had power to raise the dead. he might possibly think, that he would have delivered himself from the Cros; therefore he marvelled: he knew not the counsel of God concerning Christs suffering, though himselfe were a chief actor in the performance of the same, Acts 4. 27, 28. nor that Christ delivered up himself a voluntary sacrifice for our sins; neither understood he the mystery of the Paschal Lamb to be eaten in haste, Exod. 12. 11.

Which done, every one goeth hence: neither appears there any difference between the rich and poor, noble and obscure, either in their burial of the dead, or consolation of the living.

CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. W[As past] Or had come between, as Acts 25. 13. and 27. 9. See on Matt. 28. 1. this Sabbath began at sunset, and ended at sunset: so soon therefore, as it was lawful to work, or buy, and sell, they went to buy sweet spices to embalm the Body of Jesus: which, though that sacred Body had no need of (as other corruptible bodies) he being to lie in grave, and not to see corruption, yet these women were yet ignorant hereof; and therefore it being a solemne custome with them to embalm their dear deceased friends; they would thus shew their love; although Joseph and Nicodemus had accommodated the Body with a Sindon, or winding sheet, and a mixture of Myrrhe and Aloes, about an hundered pound weight, John 19. 39. for the custome of those places was often and many dayes to embalme the dead; possibly they received it from the Egyptians, whose time of embalming, lasted fourty dayes: See Genesis, 50. 23. See Herodot. in Euterpe.
and Salome] See Chapter 15. 40. The Syriack nameth her שלומא shalom. others, שלומית selomith, it skilleth not much to be curious herein. See Jo. Drus. ad voc. N. T. com. 1. pag. 152. and Annot. in N. T. par. alt. pag. 61. she is mentioned also c. 15. 40. among those women who ministred unto Christ when he was in Galilee, and coming up with him to Jerusalem, stood farre off from the Crosse, beholding that which was there done.

V. 2. Very early in the morning] See on Matthew, 28. and on Luke 24. 1. John 20. 1. as soon as it was fit to doe it, on the Sabbath, they might not, and in the night there was no convenience.

V. 3. They said among themselves] That is, the women mentioned, verse 1. as they went towards the Sepulchre; remembring how it was shut up, they began to cast about, how they should have the stone rolled away, that they might come to embalm him: as if they said; can all we doe it? or, how shall we find any to doe it for us? It seemeth they knew not that there was a publicke seale, and guard set upon the Sepulchre, seeing they make no difficulty concerning that, which had they known, they probably would have feared the issue of their present attempt.

V. 4. And when they looked] ἀναβλέψασαι, &c. When they cast their eyes towards the Sepulchre it importeth here an intentive looking toward it, which they before did not, so the Syriac gives it, and beholding they saw, or looking more stedfastly they perceived.
for it was very great] This was the reason of their care and consultation, v. 3. they were solicitous how they should be able to remove the stone, because it was very great, and heavy above their strength to move.

V. 5. entring into the Sepulchre] John 20. 11. That is, saith Master Beza, in speluncam, in qua excisum erat Sepulchrum: into the Cave, in which the Sepulchre was hewed out of the Rock: Others say, they entred only within the seprum or fence, which divided the Sepulchre from the reſt of the Garden in which the Sepulchre was: Others say, after Augustine, l. 3. de Consen. Evang. c. 24. They entred into some space of the Cave before the Sepulpulchre. Here need not much dispute, if we consider other parts of the Gospel, mentioning their graves (Matt. 8. 28. Marke 5. 2. Luke 8. 27.) either of that capacity, or so arched, that they might go downe into them.

V. 8. neither said they any thing to any man] Either for fear of the Jevvs, they durſt tell no man by the vvay; or it vvas for haste vvhich they made to tell the Disciples, as they vvere commanded, Matt. 28. 8. Luke 24. 9. 22. 23.

that had been with him] Who followed him and had been conversant with him, as his disciples, and hearers; whose faith he would have now confirmed in the assurance of his resurrection from the dead, and not to be hazarded by any longer delay of the same.
as they mourned and wept] See on Luke 24. 17. They in their infirmity of faith, not yet apprehend what he had taught them concerning his resurrection the third day; mourned and wept; as if he had still been dead; but he would now have them cease from that sorrow, and be assured that he was alive again: Christ will ever send comfort to his, in due time, and at last wipe away all tears from their eyes. See Psal. 9. 9.

V. 11. and they] Or, Yet they, as, Acts 7. 5.

believed not] The greatnesse and strangeneſſe of the matter, exceeded their present faith (Luke 24 11. See Exod 6. 9.) which had been shaken, and almost overwhelmed, with so many and great fears. This thoweth, they were so far from any confederacy or compact in divulging Christs resurrection from the dead that it vvas long before they could believe it their selves; see verſ. 13.

V. 13. neither believed they them] All this is recorded that we may the more confidently believe those to have been most free from any compact in their testimony, who were so slowly, and hardly induced to believe the Gospel themselves.

V. 14. After ward] Luke 24. 36. John 20. 19. another time, after his appearing to Mary, and her relating the same to the Disciples.

as they sate at meat] ἀνακειμένοις, As they sate together, at supper; as may be gathered from Luke 24. 33. compared with verse 36. for those two disciples at Emaus, knew Christ in his breaking bread, and presently returned to Jerusalem to tell the disciples thereof; while they were speaking, sodainly Christ stood by them, it is probable therefore, while they sate at supper, whom he calleth the eleven; that is, the Apostles in generall, or indefinitely taken for those of the eleven, who were gathered together with others at Jerusalem; where it is said (Luke 24. 33.) that Cleopas and another of them, found the eleven together; yet Thomas was not there. John 20. 24. for after the death of Judas Iscariot unto the election of Matthias, Acts 1. 26. the Apostles were commonly called the eleven. See Matt. 28. 16. Luke 24. 9. 33. &c.

V. 15. and he said unto them] Matt. 28. 19. not presently after this mentioned apparition, but when the Disciples went into Galilee (Matt. 28. 16.) there to meet Jesus on the mountain, where he had appointed them.

Go ye into all the world] Not into Judea alone (as Matt. 10. 5, 6.) But now the partition wall is broken down, (Ephes. 2.) and they must preach, administer the Sacraments, and confirm the same with miracles among the Gentiles also.

to every creature] That is, to every nation, as Matthew expresseth it. See 1 Pet. 2. 13.) to all mankind without exception: omni creaturæ prædicatur Evangelium, cum soli homini prædicatur, &c. Gregor. hom. 29. in evang. the Gospel is preached to every creature, when it is preached to man onely, for whom all things on earth were created: this word κτίσει, sometimes signifies the creation of the world: Chapter 10. 7. Romans, 1. 20. Sometimes the things created; Chapter 13. 19 Romans 8. 22. Sometimes all mankind, men and women of all conditions, as here: Christ would have them know, that as he is the Creatour of all men, so would he now have the gladsome tidings of salvation by faith in him, and free remission of sins, to be republished unto all the Nations of the world: the Gospel was not now to be shut up within the limits of any particular Church; like the dew in Gideons fleece, while the floore was dry, (Judges 6. 37, 38.) but to be communicated to all: and as it was sent to all so was it entrusted to the care, and Ministery of all the Apostles, and to their successours the Ministers of the Gospel: the Hebrewes call man the creature, by way of excellency, or eminency, as being Gods Masterpiece, among the creatures, on whom he set his owne Image.

shall follow them that believe] This power of Miracles continued accordingly for a time in the Church, untill Christianity was more publikely professed. See Irenæus l. 2. c. 58. albeit, all believers had not this power to do miracles; yet some successively had (for many years after the ascension of Christ) for the confirmation of others; and it was necessary thereto. Ut enim fides cresceret, miraculis fuerat nutrienda, Gregor. Hom. 29. in Evangel. That Faith might grow, it was to be nourished with miracles, as we water new set plants, till they have taken good root, then we water no more: so did the power and providence of God work here.

ANNOT.

ANNOTATIONS

On the Gospel according to

S. LUKE.

The Argument.

THe Gospel is the gladsome tydings of salvation by Christ: This Gospel (as the Penman his selfe interpreteth, Acts 1. 1.) is the History of those things that Jesus began to do and teach, untill the day that he was taken up, &c. That is as much thereof, as God saw good to Record by his Ministry: that (as the other Evangelist saith) we might believe that Iesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that in believing, we might have life through his Name. John 20, 30, 31. This sacred History was dictated by the Holy Ghost, whose Penman was Luke.

Luke was of Antioch in Syria, by profession a Physitian, (Colos. 4. 14.) he was a follower and faithfull Assistant of Paul (2 Timothy 4. 11.) and so became also a Physitian for the Soul: But who was the first Ministerial means of his Conversion, is not certain: Some thinke he was one of the seventy Disciples: and that other unnamed, Luke 24. 18. who with Cleophas after Christs Resurrection, went to Emaus: If so, he had had Christ the best Teacher: But others thinke Paul converted him at Thebes: But his self best sheweth in his Preface, what Instructers he had, those who from the beginning were Eye-witnesses and Ministers of the same Gospel: Luke 1. 2. Whence it is evident, that some of the Apostles instructed him in the Mysteries of Salvation by Christ, and faithfully related to him this whole Story.

Matthew it seemeth wrote to the Hebrewes, and the other three Evangelists to the Gentiles in the Greeke Tongue, wherein Luke in an Elegant stile, dedicateth two excellent Pieces, (this Gospel, and the Acts of the Apostles) unto Theophilus, an Honourable Person, and in him to all the Faithfull, who are lovers of God.

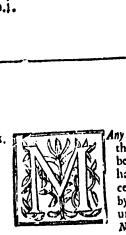
The occasion of his writing, (whether he were incited thereto by Peter, as some thinke, or, by Paul, as others) was (that which he declareth in his Preface) for as much as many have taken in hand to set forth the Story of those things, whereof we are fully perswaded —— it seemed good also to me, —— &c. Luke 1. 1. Thus God by the unanimous consent of a sufficient number of Witnesses (writing at divers places, and times) pleased to confirm the Truth of the Gospel unto us.

Concerning the Matter and Subject of this Gospel, we must know, that the Evangelist purposed to declare, That Iesus the Sonne of the Virgin Mary, was that promised Seed (whose fore-running Messenger was Iohn Baptist, according to the Prophesies:) Whose admirable Conception by the Holy Ghost, made not against the Truth of his Humane Nature, and Nativitie, according to the Flesh: who in the fulnesse of time (the Scepter being departed from Iudah) in the fourtie second yeare of the reign of Augustus Cæsar, was born in Bethlehem Iudah, grew up to mans stature and perfection, undertooke his publicke Ministery and Office of the Messiah, shewing himselfe in Doctrine and Miracles, (specially, in his glorious Resurrection from the dead, and Ascension into Heaven) truely, God and Man, in Unity of Person, the Saviour and Redeemer of the Elect: All which he relateth in this Order.

1. In the three first Chapters, he rehearseth this Conception, Nativity, and the Witnesses thereof; to which he annexeth his Genealogy.

2. From the fourth Chapter, to the tenth, he setteth downe the preparation to his Ministery, in his tentation, the beginning of his Preaching, Miracles, Ordination of Apostles, Transfiguration on the Mount, and departure out of Galilee.

3. From the tenth Chapter, to the twentieth, he recordeth what Christ did in his last passage towards Ierusalem.



4. In the twentieth, and the following Chapter, he telleth what he taught in the Temple, his Disputes with the Pharisees and Saduces, as also of the destruction of the City and Republicke of Israel, where he inserteth some things concerning his second coming to judgement.

5. Thence he cometh to the History of his Passion, Chap. 22. 23. The conclusion and lowest degree of his Obedience and Humiliation.

6. The last Chapter, containeth the truth of his Resurrection, his Apparitions to his Disciples, specially the two going to Emaus, and his glorious Ascension into Heaven, the assured Pledge of our interest therein, whereof he hath in our Nature taken Livery and Seisin.

CHAP. I.

CHAP. I.

Many have taken in hand] It seemeth that Matthew and Marke wrot not before Luke, had they, he would have spoken more reverently concerning them: Whether he mean by many, those counterfeit pieces under the Titles of the Gospel of Nicodemus, Thomas, according to the Egyptians, or according to the twelve; it is uncertain; because he nameth neither these, nor others like: but affirming a full assurance of that which he (with the other Holy Evangelists writeth, he seemeth modestly to deny, that others had the same.

to set forth in order] To compose and write the History of Christ his Life and Doctrine.

which are most surely believed] Of which we were assured, or so certified, that we nothing doubt of their truth.

V. 2. they delivered them unto us] Meaning the Apostles, who continually attending on our Saviour Christ, law these miracles, and heard this Doctrine, which this Evangelist converting with them, by the infallible assistance of the Holy Ghost, and their relations, here recordeth: for he was not αὐτόπτης ἀλλὰ μαθητὴς, ἀλλ' ὑπηρέτης χρόνων, which Theophylact noteth, not a Disciple from the beginning, but of later time.

were eye-witnesses] Of those things which Christ did, See 1 John 1.1. Hebr. 2. 3.

Ministers of the Word] He meaneth either of the Gospel (whereof themselves were a part) or of Christ, the Eternal Word, John 1. 1, 1 John 1. 1.

V. 3. it seemed good to me] By a Divine inspiration, as Acts 15.15, 28. See also 1 Cor. 7. 40. 2 Tim 3.16.

most excellent Theophylus] This was some excellent and renouned Person in the Church of those times: this Title is given to honourable persons, and men in authority, Acts 23. 26.

V. that thou mightest know the certainty] He having exactly learned all these things now writeth them to the further edification of Theophilus, something before enformed hereof by word of mouth.

5 Herod King of Judea] Herod the great, son of Antipater; not Herod Tetrarch of Galilee, mentioned, Luke 3.1.

of the course of Abia] See 1 Chron. 24. 5. 10. David appointed the sons of Aaron to minister by turns: (See on Mark. 14. 1.) or several courses.

daughters of Aaron] Of the posterity of Aaron, vers. 36. Elizabeth is called the cousin of Mary, though the were of the Tribe of Iuda, and Davids Family: for that law Numb 36. 8. which cautioned that the daughter should marry in her own Tribe, left there should be confusion in the inheritances of the Tribes; concerned them only that possessed an inheritance, in any Tribe of the children of Israel, and forbad not any of the Tribes to make affinity and marry with a daughter of a Levite; who had no inheritance in that land assigned them, Numb. 18.20.

V. 6. they were both righteous before God] That is, of sincere lives: approved of God; as Iob was, Iob 1. 8. not without all sin, but without blame before men. See Phippians 3. 6. 12. Such were they as God required Abraham to be, Genesis 17 1. Upright and sincere, free from Hypocrisie: and justified by Faith in Christ. See Rom. 4. 22.

walking in all] that is, living in, and endeavouring to keep all the Commandements. See Psalm 119. 1. 6. not that they attained perfection by the works of the Law. (See Phil. 3. 12.) but as he that walketh in a strait way, sometimes stumbleth, falleth, and doth not presently come to the end of that way, but by some other supply of his lameneſſe or infirmity; so is it here.

V. 9. According to the custome] See note on v. 5. and according to Gods Law, this office appertained to Aaron and his sons, Exod. 30. 7. 1 Chron. 6. 49 into the temple of the Lord] into that court which was called holy; into which only the Priests entred, Exod. 28. 43.

V. 10. The whole multitude] See Levit. 16. 17. then assembled to the worship of God, in that part of the Temple, which was called atrium Iudæorum, because thither the Ievvs might come to the publick service of God in the Temple. God could have privately, at his own house secretly, revealed these things to Zecharias, concerning Elizabeth his vvives conception of the great fore-runner of Christ, Iohn Baptist: but it pleased him to reserve the same to such a time and place, as might by many witnesses of those things, which then and there fell out, render this vision of Zechary, more famous and publick for the stirring up the minds of the people, to attend the event thereof.

without] in that part of the Temple, which was called the peoples Court. See Leviticus 16. 17. 1 Kings 7. 12.

the time of Incense] See Exod. 30. 1. That is, while the Priest, according to the Law, burned Incense within: this Incense was to be offered morning and evening by the Priest, when he dressed the Lamps, Exodus 30. 7, 8. not without a singular mystery; for the Lamps signified the light of Gods Word, the Incense prayers, therewith to be joyned, and that the prayers of Gods people are a sweet spiritual Incense acceptable unto him (Psalm 141 2.) being presented by Christ our High-Priest ministring in the true Tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, Hebr. 8. 2. appearing in his presence for us, Hebr. 9. 24. offered in the golden Censer of the Angel of the Covenant Christ. See Revel. 8. 3. 4. these, as that Incense offered morning and evening, ought to be continual. 1 Thes. 5. 17. as our High-Priest, ever liveth to make intercession for us, Hebrews 7. 25.

V. 12. And fear fell upon him] The sudden and unexpected sight of the Angel not only troubled, but terrified him. So Dan. 10. 8. if the appearance of one Angel sent to comfort, so much affrighted this just man, in the work of his Holy calling, what dread and terrour shall fall upon the wicked when Christ, (God and Man) shall appear with all his Angels to judge the wicked, for all their wilfull acts of impiety?

V. 13. Thou shalt call his name John] this is not only a prediction but a precept, and the imposition of a name before the nativity, was ever an argument of Gods marking those parties to some excellencie, See Matth. 1. 21. this name signifieth the grace of God: intimating that which should be in his person and office: See note on John 1. 6. So that Zachariet prayer was heard in that the Messias should now come: and in that Elizabeth, for whom he had often prayed, should also conceive and bear a Son.

V. 14. And thou shalt have joy, &c.] So great, as that it shall break out into rejoycing, for that thou shalt obtain a desired issue, above hope and the common course of nature, and for that thou shalt know the singular office, to which this childe is assigned, that is, to be the immediate Herauld to proclaim the Messias, and the fore-runner to prepare his wayes. And this joy shall not be onely domestick, but also publick, as concerning the intereſt of all those which expect Christ the Saviour of Israel.

V. 15. great in the sight of the Lord] That is, God shall highly esteem him, and make him excellent.

shall neither drinke wine nor strong drinke] σίκερα, which Theophylact, Euthymius, &c. interpret πᾶν τὸ μεθυσκον ἡμερινὸν διὰ κεράσου, any thing which may make drunken: So also Ierome lib. 2. ep. 14. Nepotiano. The word is taken from the Hebrew שכר inebriatus fuit, thence שכר sheehar, and in the Syriac ܫܟܪܐ, Levit. 10. 9. Aaron and his sons were forbid to drink יין wine, and also שכר which the 70 give σίκερα; as here, so where Hanna said she had drunk neither wine nor שכר strong drink; the 70 give it μεθύσκεσθαι the Syriac by שכר understand also, sædum, deformem, a filthy or deformed person: such are they who are overcome with drinke: and therefore the Lacedemonians were wont to make their Helots, or Slaves drunken; that themselves being sober, and observing τὸ ἀκόλαστον ἀσχημοσύνην their uncomely and filthy behaviour, it might be a remedy to them; causing them to loath that sin, the effects whereof were so shameful and loathsome. See Clemens Alexandrinus Pædag. lib. 3. cap. 8. The meaning of the Angel is here, that Iohn should be consecrated unto God, as a Nazarite. See Numb. 6. 3. Judges 13. 4. 5. 7. Sam. 1. 11.

filled with the Holy Ghost] That is, he shall have an abundant measure of the Spirit of Sanctification even from his mothers wombe; and in his ripe Age, for the execution of his charge. See Jeremiah, 1. 5. Galatians, 1. 15. Seeing then Infants are capable of Grace, and the Holy Ghost, we may say for them as Peter for his hearers, Acts 10. 47. Can any Man forbid Water, that these should not be Baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost, as well as we? See note on Acts 10. 47.

V. 16 many of the children of Israel.] See Malachi 4. 6. He shall be the meanes of their Conversion, by his Preaching, accompanied with the power of the Holy Ghost, to make it Effectuall. See Acts, 26. 18. 1 Corinthians, 3. 5, 6. James 5. 19. 20.

V. 17. he shall goe before him, &c.] That is, immediately before Christ the Messias, the King of Israel, to declare his coming, and presence. See John 1. 29. Malachi, 4. 5. Matthew, 11. 14 in the spirit and power of Elias] That is, with as great a measure of grace, and gifts of Gods Spirit, to make his Ministery powerfull. See Matth. 11. 11, 14. Mal. 4. 6.

turn the hearts of the fathers to their children] By his ministery, the unnaturall, degenerate, and wicked children, shall be converted, and become obedient children to their fathers, and to the Church of Christ; so, as their fathers shall acknowledge them to be their children indeed: For the division, which followeth the Gospel, that is, an accidental effect, which the corruption of man produceth, and not the Gospel of peace.

to the wisdom] ἐν φρονήσει, Here ἐν is put for εἰς. So the Interpreter of the Syriac, ad cognitionem rectorum, the knowledge of right things. Ierome, on Mal. 4. giveth the meaning. Ut credant posteri eorum in Dominum Salvatorem in quem & illi credederunt, that their posterity may believe in the Lord their Saviour, in whom (Abraham, Isaac and Jacob) themselves believed; the whole sense is, by the example of their holy Fathers, they shall be wise and believe, and so be of one heart and consent with their fathers.

prepared for the Lord] Prepared for Christ, as John proclaimed chap. 3. 4.

V. 18. For I am an old man &c.] Considering the ordinary course of nature, he was slow in beliving so great a miracle. Abraham laying aside all natural reason, believed above hope. See Rom. 4. 17.

V. 9. I am Gabriel] גבריאל fortitudo Dei. This name signifieth the power of God: he putteth him in minde, that he was the same Angel, who some hundred years before, was set to the Prophet Daniel, to declare the time of Christs coming, Dan. 8. 16. Dan. 9. 21. that he might assure him of the fulfilling of the same, now in the fulneſſe of time.

that stand in the presence of God] This Hebraisme, borrowed from those who wait on Kings, importeth a readineſſe to administer or serve. See 1 Kings 10. 8. Prov. 22. 29.

V. 20. thou shalt be dumb] Because thou desireſt a signe; this shal be both a punishment of thy incredulity, and a signe to confirm this faith, as Crysologus Ser. 90. saith, Ut ex te & in te credenda regulam consequaris: that from thy self, and in thy self, thou must attain a rule of believing.

V. 21. waited for Zachary] For he was to dismisse them with a blessing. See Numb. 6. 23. Now they waited longer than ordinary, without the holy place, to which the people of the Jews were to resort, as verse 10.

V. 22. he could not speak.] Not onely because a marvellous stupor of fear had invaded him, but b cause God had, for the time, taken away his faculty of speaking, for a signe unto him (that he might believe) and to the people, that at the preaching of Christ now at hand, their Priesthood should be silenced, they perceived that he had seen a vision] By his silence, pale countenance, beckning with, and lifting up his hand toward Heaven, or the Holy place whence he came, by these or the like means God would prepare the people to conceive an high opinion of John the forerunner of Christ.

V. 23. were accomplished] At Jerusalem he was to officiate one whole week. See 2 Kings 11. 1. Chron. 9. 25. which ended, he went home.

V. 24. hid her self] She kept her chamber, or otherwise concealed her miraculous conception so long, until it was evident, and out of doubt that she had indeed conceived.

V. 25. to take away my reproach] For barrenneſſe was counted a dishonour to the women. See 1 Sam 1. 6. 11.

V. 26. the sixth moneth] Reckoning from Elizabeths conception.

V. 27. to a virgin espoused] That is, promised in marriage: a woman so promised was said μνηστεύεσθαι. See Mat. 1. 18. and here, chap. 2. 5.

of the house of David] Of the stock and linage of David, (so some Greek Copies have it) as was also Joseph, Luke 2. 4. Matth. 1. 16.

V. 28. highly favoured.] Or gratiously accepted, much graced (see verse 30.) freely beloved: as the Apostle useth the word, Ephes. 1. 6. honoured with this singular grace, to be the Mother of the Messias: therefore he said she was blessed among women: he said not, he honoured as God: ἐν τοῖς ἐν Θεῷ ἠγιασμένοις, saith Epiphanius adv. hæref. l. 3. tom. 2. 23. for neither was Mary a God

V. 29. she was troubled] At the appearance of the heavenly Majesty which probably shined in the Angel, and at that strange salutation,

V. 30. thou hast found favour] Thou art in Gods favour, who hath freely chosen thee to this honour which thou thoughtest not of.

V. 31. and behold thou shalt conceive] See Isa. 7. 14.

his name Jesus] See Matthew. 1. 21. a Saviour of his people.

V. 32. the son of the highest] So he shall be called, and so is he from all eternity: the onely Son of God by nature: God manifested in the flesh, 1 Tim. 3. 16.

the throne of his father David] The spiritual and eternal kingdom over his Church, prefigured in Davids temporal kingdom over Israel. See Isaiah 9. 7. Jerem. 30. 9. Ezekiel 34. 24. Ezekiel 37. 24. Hosea 3. 5. thus the Angel declareth, that this he in whom the Prophesie of Amos 9. 11. concerning the raising up of the decayed tabernacle of David, should be fulfilled.

V. 33, and he shall reign] See Daniel 7. 14. Micha 4. 7. This spiritual kingdom of Christ is begun in this world, in, and over the Saints, by the grace of his Spirit, regenerating and governing them; and shal be perpetuated in his kingdom of glory, uniting them unto himself the head of his Church, and making them thereby fully and eternally blessed,

V. 34 How shal this be? This question was not of diffidence, but rather of admiration: for though the prophesie declared this mystery of Christs incarnation by a virgin, Isaiah 7. 14. and of the branch arising out of the decayed stock of Jesse, Isaiah 11. 1. yet the manner how was not fully understood; herein he desireth resolution: and it seemeth they were not to come together presently after betrothing.

V. 35. overshadow thee] The extraordinary power of God shall effect this: it seemeth an allusion to that, 1 Kings 8. 12.

holy thing] Christ without all sin: as God, the eternal Son of the Father: as man, conceived of a sanctified masse, or substance without all sin.

V. 36, thy cousin Elizabeth] See note on verse 4.

who was called barren] Elizabeth who was known or noted to be barren, is now six moneths gone with childe.

V. 37. nothing shall be impossible] See Genes. 18. 14. Jeremiah 32. 17. Matthew 19. 26. in the Greek it is πᾶν ῥῆμα, every word; that is after the Hebrew expression, no word. So Psalm 143. 2. כל־חי, all living; that is, none living: and so they put דבר dabar, a word, for a work, or thing, as Genes. 24. 50. from the Lord proceedeth דבר, 70. τὸ πρᾶγμα, the thing. In these words, the Angel listeth up the virgins minde to the consideration of Gods omnipotency, that the might rest secure concerning the fulfilling of the promise, which he brought her.

V. 38. behold the handmaid of the Lord] This is also an Hebrew manner of speaking, importing a ready obedience and submission. See 1 Samuel 3, 4. הנני hinneni, behold I, or here am I, Isaiah 6. 8.

V. 39. to the hill countrey] To Zatharie and Elizabeths house, which probably was Kiriath-Arba, or Hebron assigned to priests, See Josh. 14 15. Josh. 21. 11.

V. 41. The babe leaped] This extraordinary motion was by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, enabling Elizabeth to know and prophesie the incarnation of Christ, (for no other wise could she know it than by divine revelation) and shewing a secret correspondence between Christ and John rejoycing at his coming.

V. 42. blessed art thou] So the angel pronounced verse 28. she was blessed, in that God not onely vouchsafed her the honour of conceiving her Saviour in her womb but chiefly for that he gave her faith to believe in her Son and Saviour Jesus Christ. See verse 45. and Chap. 11. 27, 28.

V. 43. whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord, &c] Elizabeth respecting Gods great favours conferred on the Virgin Mary, yeildeth her due respect and honour, and acknowledgeth this visit an honour undue to her self; yet doth she not adore her to Gods dishonour, we may neither undervalue Gods graces in others, nor idol them for the same. The excellencies of the creatures are so farre forth well respected and reverenced, as no interpositon thereof cloudeth Gods Majesty.

V. 44. as soon as the voice, &c.] See note on verse 41.

V. 45. blessed is she that believed] By the instinct of the Holy Ghost, she declareth wherein the blessednesse of Mary (as also of all the elect) consisteth; that is true faith apprehending all the promises in Christ, which shall certainly be fulfilled.

V. 46. My soul doth magnifie] That is, exalteth and praiseth: not as hypocrites use in words onely, but with the inward affections of my soul. So the attributeth all the favours received, to the meere and free mercie of God, leaving nothing to her own merits.

V. 47. and my spirit hath rejoyced in God] My soul hath an inward joy in Gods mercy and salvation: there can be no solid rejoycing until we believe God to be our Saviour.

V. 48. shall call me blessed] For this favour freely bestowed on me, which all ages that speak of: the saith not, that call me Queen of Heaven, Lady, &c. much lesse, shall adore me: See note on verses 28, 42, 43.

V. 49 for he that is mighty, &c.] That is future ages shall so acknowledge me blessed, as attributing all which God hath done for me, to his free mercy, not any merit of mine: there can be nothing more in jurious to this blessed Saint, than sacrilegiously to put on her the spoiles taken from Christ her Saviour: here is no, vega patrem, jube natum, &c. See Offic. beatæ Mariæ.

and holy is his name] The name of God sometimes here importeth

teth God himselfe, as he manifested himselfe to us, See Matthew 6. 9. and ἅγιον holy signifieth also venerable and sacred, or separated from things vulgar, or prophane: so ought we to speak and thinke of the holy God, with all reverence, See Exod. 20. 7.

V. 50. his mercy is on them that fear him] This speech seemeth taken from the covenant of God: Gen. 17. 7. and Exodus 20. 6. Deuter. 7. 9. Psalm 105. 8. God is ever one, unchangable, and therefore constant in his favours, as appeareth in the example of Abraham, and his seed; but because all are not children of Abraham, who according to the flesh were descended of Abraham, but the faithfull and holy onely; therefore the here restraineth the effect of the promise to those who fear God. See Psalm 103. 17. in vain do they boast that God is their father, who degenerate from the faith, and sanctity of those saints, whom he owned for his children. See 1 Pet. 1. 17 under this word fear him, are understood, faith, obedience, and all piety, and true religion.

V. 51. he hath shewed strength with his arme] ἐποίησε κράτος: so Psalm 118. 11. עָשָׂה חָיִל hyfe chail, ἐποίησε δύναμιν. 70. that is, δυναστεύει, powerfully. So Numb 24. 18. and Israel 70. עֹשֶׂה חַיִל, ἐποίησαν ἐν ἰσχύι, shall do valiantly, which phrase is sometimes used for the atchievement of victories, wherein might and power is shewed. So the syriac interpreter giveth the words as if it were ἐκράτησεν, he overcame, &c. the arme of the Lord importeth his power, commonly in opposition to all other helpes, as Isaiah 59. 16. See Psalm 89. 13. Isaiah 51. 9.

he hath scattered the proud in, &c.] God sheweth his power in descending and lifting up the humble: the proud he scattereth in their imaginations and vain counsels, as the winde the chaffe: See Psalm 33. 10. 2 Samuel 15. 34. Job 5. 12. 1 Peter 5. 6. Isaiah 8. 10. Gen. 11. 8, 9. Isaiah 14, 13, 14. Ezek. 28. 2, 7.

V. 52. he hath put down the mighty] 1 Sam. 2. 6. Job. 5. 11. that is, Kings, Princes, &c. as appeareth not only in the examples of Nebuchadnezzar, Saul, &c. but many others: and it is the same power and providence of God to exalt and set up whom he pleaseth, as we see in David, Ester, Joseph, Mordoche, &c. and the B. Virgin here speaking.

V. 53. he hath filled the hungry] See Psal. 34. 10. 1 Samuel 2. 5. in this also he setteth out the divine and good providence of God, disposing of all persons, estates, and conditions humane.

V. 54. in remembrance of his mercy] See Jerem. 31. 3. 20. This is accommodate to mans understanding, who then properly remembreth, when he remindeth or calleth to minde and memory, that which was before out of minde and forgotten: which cannot be properly spoken of God, who cannot forget, the meaning is, that although God might seem, in the long time of Israels affliction, to have forgotten his promise made to Abraham, and the Fathers; concerning the covenant made with them, and concerning their Messiah, yet in the appointed time he maketh it appear in the fulfilling thereof, that he never forgot it nor them.

V. 55. as he spake to our fathers] Gen. 17. 9, 10, Psalm 132, 11, 12.

to his seed for ever] That is, to the faithful and holy, See Gal. 3. 16. 26, 27, 29.

V. 56. about three moneths] Until her delivery; probably that she might see that fulfilled, which the Angel proposed to her, for the confirmation of her faith.

V. 57. and she brought forth a son] So God ever fulfilleth his promises in good time.

V. 58 rejoyced with her] This is that holy sympathy which God commandeth. Rom. 12. 15.

V. 59 on the eighth day] See Gen. 17. 12. Levit. 12. 3. not without an excellent mystery was this Sacrament to be given on the eighth day; intimating the absolute circumcision of the heart, and taking away all corruptions of flesh and blood, sinnes and sinfull affections, in the sabbath and rest to come in Christ, Heb. 4. 9.

they called him Zacharias] They who were to circumcise him, as the common custom was, called him by his fathers name

V. 60. he shall be called John] It is likely that Zacharie had by writing enformed Elizabeth concerning the whole vision, and imposition of this name by the Angel. See note on verse 13.

V. 61. none of thy kindred] They relyed on the custome, which (had their assertion been true) may never be followed against the word and commandement of God.

V. 62. they made signes to his father] To end the controversie, they do by signes consult his father.

V. 63. he asked for] Or required: that is, made signes to have brought him writing tables: so understand, saying, to be writing, his name is John.

V. 64. his mouth was opened] His voice and use of speech was restored him again.

and praised God] Doubtlesse, acknowledging his dumnesse, a just punishment of his slowneesse to believe: the righteous are not ashamed to confesse their faules to Gods Honour: and this served to enforme the present, that this child was, (as conceived out of the ordinary course) so promised by an heavenly Oracle.

V. 65. and fear came on all] That is, a reverend consideration of all these things: so ought we to meditate on Gods works, as that they may seriously affect us,

V. 66. all they that heard] All, that is, many: possibly many also forgat them: as it commonly cometh to passe, in things most observable and divine.

the hand of the Lord was with him] He profited so, as that there appeared a singular power, and manifest grace of God in him.

V. 67. filled with the holy Ghost] Inspired with an excellent measure of the Spirit of prophesie concerning the mystery of our salvation by Christ.

V. 68. visited and redeemed] He speaketh of that which was speedily to come, as if it were done, to shew the certainty of Gods counsels and promises: to visit, is out of a care and purpose to relieve, comfort, and help: though God be ever present with us, he doth not alwayes manifest it: but when he sheweth in some eminent effect, that he hath care of his people, then he is said to visit them: so also when he punisheth, he is said to visit. See Jerem. 14. 10. Amos 3. 2. Psal. 89. 33. Isa. 27. 1. Isa. 29. 6. Here he visited to redeem his people from sinne and damnation, which he did by the Passion of Christ.

V. 69. an horne of salvation] That is, δύναμιν τῆς βασιλείας σωτηρίας, Theophylall, power and a saving kingdom: the Hebrews signified, strength and defence against enemies (as Psalm 132. 17, 18. Psalm 89. 17, 13.) by an horn of salvation.

V. 70. as he spake by the mouth of his holy Prophets] Who living in divers ages, yet with one conclent taught concerning salvation by Christ onely: this doctrine was from the beginning: God spake by the mouth of all his Prophets, Heb. 1. 1. 2 Pet. 1. 21. See Chap. 24. 44.

since the world began] As Acts 3. 21. and Psal. 119. 52. מֵעוֹלָם meholam, which the 70. give ἀπ' αἰῶνος, (the word here used) of old, or from the beginning of time: from the first time that God began to speak by any Prophet. Sometimes the same word importeth eternity.

V. 71. That we should be saved; &c.] This declareth the end of Christs coming: this salvation we must understand to be from our spiritual enemies; Satan and sin, with whom we have truceleile war: See Ephes. 6. 12. &c.

V. 72. To remember his holy covenant] Because in the long affliction of his people, his promise might have seemed forgotten; but God ever remembereth and in the appointed time performeth his promises in Christ: hath he promised remission of sins? he performeth in Christ. Hath he promised eternal life? he performeth it in Christ. Therefore was the book of the Law (containing the Gods promises) sprinkled with the blood of the sacrifice (Exodus 24. 7, 8. Hebrews 9. 19.) which signified the blood of Christ, in whom all these promises were fulfilled.

V. 73. and the oath which, &c.] See Gen. 12, 3. Gen 17. 4. Gen. 22. 16. Heb. 6. 13. That is, his covenant which he confirmed with an oath; the Syriac giveth it —— juramenti quod juravit Abrahæ. See Hebrews 6. 13, 14, 16, 17, 18. Genes. 22. 16. and 17. &c.

V. 74. that we being delivered] The efficient cause of our deliverance and safety is Gods free mercy: the finall our serving him in holinesse. See 1 Thes. 4. 7. 1 Cor. 6. 20. Titus 2. 11. Rom. 12. 1. Ephes. 1. 3. We are delivered from servile fear, (Rom. 8 15.) in our peace with God through faith apprehending the merit of Christ for our justification, Rom. 5. 1. without which none can rightly serve God: they who in doubtful anxiery of minde know not whether God accepteth their service or no, can never be accepted: for without faith it is impossible to please him. who loveth willing and cheerfull sacrifice: first then the conscience must be quieted in assurance of Gods mercy, that we may serve him, as David begging a mercifull audience for his prayer, saith, if thou Lord should est mark iniquities: O Lord, who shall stand? if thou Lord shouldest mark iniquities: O Lord, who shall stand? Psalm 130. 3, 4. when God giveth us peace of conscience; he sweetly inviteth us to come unto him cheerfully, and to call upon him in our wants, with a filiall confidence: as Romans 8. 15, 16. whereas, without hope of attaining, who can pray cheerfully? Tolle Gubernatori spem perveniendi, & in medio fluctibus incertus errabit; take away from the Master of the ship hope of safe arrivall, and being uncertain, he will let his vessel goe adrift, whither winde and tide will carry her. Now for the present, our freedom from fear, is as our immunitie from sin, not but that some Canaanites are still left to exercise us: but in that we are secure secure of victory in Christ. See Rom. 7. 25. 1 Cor. 15. 57.

V. 75. in holinesse] See 1 Pet. 1. 15, 16, 17. We must be constant all our life: it is not enough to begin well, we must serve him in holinesse towards him, who searcheth the hearts, and righteousnesse and equity in just dealing with men, who are witnesses of our actions: before them also our light must shine, to Gods glory, Matth. 5. 16.

before him] Before the all-seeing God, to whom no hypocrite can be acceptable. See Psal 16. 8.

V. 76. go before the face] See Mal. 3. 1. He was the voice of the cryer, to prepare the way, and proclaim the prefence of the King of kings. John 1. 23. the friend of the Bridegroom Christ. John 3. 29. the burning and shining light, (Matth. 11. 9. 10. 11. John 5. 35.) born before Christ: and as Nazianzen orat. 42. saith, τῷ ωχρῷ μὲν λύχνῳ τὸ φῶς ἀκολουθεῖ τὸ ὑπέρλαμπρον, that most excellent light (Christ) followeth (John) the foregoing light.

V. 77. to give knowledge of salvation] This is to prepare the way of the Lord: to teach them the will of God, concerning the free pardon of their sins in Christ, which is the sum of the Gospel.

V. 78. the day spring] The Sun of righteousnesse Christ Jesus, Mal. 4. 2. the worlds sun riseth from the low Horizon; But Christ descended from the incomprehensible height of Majestie, far above all creatures, to give us light of salvation: even from the Father: (John 3. 13.) as the beames from the sun; he had not his rising from the earth, where (as man) he was conceived and born: see John 16. 28.

V. 79. To give light] Or to appear to: See Isa. 9. 1. Mat. 4. 16. 2 Pet. 1. 19. until Christ our light shine in our hearts, there can be nothing but deathful ignorance therein.

in the way of peace] That is, salvation and true happinesse, in our peace with God, and peace of conscience.

V. 80. strong in spirit] In the gifts and graces of the Spirit: whereby it appeared that God prepared him to a singular office: See Chap. 2. 40. 52.

in the desert] The places of Judea which were least inhabited, as are great forrests: the rough mountainous countrey, as verse 40. See 1 Kings 2. 34. 2 Kings 3. 8. Joshua 15. 61. not that John Baptist lived like an Eremite, from all society of men, but in some obscure places, neer Jordan: (as appeareth Luke 3. 3.) until he was called to preach repentance, and to baptize. See Matth. 3. 1, &c. Luke 3. 1. &c. that he might do that office to which God assigned him, in manifesting and declaring Christ now exhibited to Israel, John 1. 31.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. IN those dayes] Some say in the fourty second year of Augustus Cæsar, Emperour of Rome, in the thirty third year of Herod the Great, Sonne of Antipater: (Epiphanius Hæref. 51. N. 22.) then came the promised Shilo, the Messias, the King of peace: that Jacobs prophesie might appear fulfilled, Gen. 49. 9. in that the Scepter and kingly power was now departed from Judah; as also that his kingdom was spirituall, not of this world, to whose princes he would be tributary, and subject, thereby declaring, that he came not to take away the order of their government, but to establish it.

all the world] All that which is subject to the Romans; these western parts of the world.

V. 2. this taxing was first made] This, first, relateth to other taxes following, whether under Cyrenius, as some think, or others: ἀπογραφή: is here, taking in writing, the pole or name of every region, city, family, and person, that they might taxe, or cesse them by the head: this taxing was first made, when Augustus Cæsar, being desirous to know the wealth and power of his Empire; (though perhaps not with any present purpose of levying moneys thereby) among others gave commission to Cyrenius to tax Syria.

when Cyrenius was Governour of Syria] That is, Sulpitius Quirinus. See Josephus Antiq lib. 17. cap. 15 and lib. 18. cap. 1. was Governour, ἡγεμονεύοντος, governing: there were other governours in ordinary, to whom this commission of taxing was not given by Cæsar; but to Quirinus or Cyrenius, jure extraordinario: the Emperours assigned great and chief men of the Empire to this office: so Drusus, this Quirinus, and others were commissionated by Augustus, so the great Germanicus, by Tiberius, Tacit. Annal. Libro primo, & extera: this ἡγεμονία, and ἡγεμονεύειν, is used to import any great power and authority in the Common-wealth: therefore in the Scripture sometimes the Roman Emperour is called ἡγεμών: sometimes it signifieth Cæsars Deputy, See Matthew 27. 2. &c. So that Cyrenius was not now President of Syria in ordinary, as afterward, after Archelaus, when hee was made Governour, both to govern that Province, and to tax and levy monies on them; where-of you may reade more in Suetonius, and Dio. Roman. hist.

V. 3. into his own city] That is, into the chief town or city of their own tribe: as the Metropolis or chief city of Benjamin, was Jerusalem; of Juda, Bethleem: hither came Joseph and Mary, though they dwelt at Nazareth of Galilee: Herein appeareth the admirable providence of God, (who doth according to his will in the army of Heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, Daniel 4. 4. 35.) by a secret instinct moving the minde of Cæsar dreaming of nothing lesse, to give that very command which must occasion the fulfilling Gods Word by the Prophet concerning Christ the Messias's birth at Bethlehem-Judah, So men shall do Gods will when they intend it not.

V. 4. city of David] The city where David, Joseph, and Christ was born, of the linage of David. See John 7. 42. Mic. 5. 2. Mat 2. 5. 1 Sam. 16. 1.

V. 5. his espoused wife] Chapter 1. 27. she is called a Virgin espoused, and here an espoused Wife: which is to shew that Joseph had (according to the Angels word) taken her to wife, Matthew 1. 24. who was before betrothed to him. For espousal is but marriage promised, or contracted: and marriage is espousal accomplished: therefore she is here called his espoused wife; because he had married her: he had not known her. Matthew 1. 25.

great with childe] See Matth. 1 18.

V. 6. while they were there] While Joseph and Mary were at Bethlehem, to be taxed, for such was the great multitude of people to be taxed, and to give in their names to the officers thereto authorized, that they could not be presently dispatched and dismissed; but here was the secret providence of God disposing of all things so, as that the truth of his promise concerning the place of Christ's nativity, might appear fulfilled.

the dayes were accomplished] The time was come that Mary should be delivered; thus God used the command of Cæsar, and issuing out of warrants by his officers, to summon the people to appear before them in their several cities to which they belonged, to that very end which himself had propoſed, and many ages before declared by the Prophet, that Christ the Messias of the seed of David, should be borne at Bethlehem the city of David: men purſue their own designes, ignorant of that which God will bring to passe thereby.

V. 7. her first-born] He is said to be the first-born, before whom was none elder by the same parents, although he be the onely Son, after whom there is no second born, as Theophylatt well observeth.

no room for them] With so great a confluence of people coming to be taxed, all the rooms of the Inne were taken up; onely they found room in a Stable.

V. 8. keeping watch, &c.] φυλάσσοντες, that is, (as Theophylatt expresseth it) ἐν τῷ ὑπαίθρῳ αὐλιζόμενοι καὶ φρουροῦντες, lying or being without in the fields, intending their flocks which were otherwise in danger of wild beasts, or theeves. Some would hence conclude against the ancient custome of the Church, observing the Nativity of Christ on the twenty fifth of December; supposing it improbable that shepherds would in so cold a part of the year abide with their flocks in the fields; not considering the diverſities of air according to the diverſity of climes, neither the vigilant industry of countrey men, when necessity requireth. The learned If. Casaubon, Exercit. 2. ad Annal. Eccles. B. An. 1. Num. 14. well adviseth, Quare temsta traditio Ecclesiæ non temere nobis rejicienda, it being but a cold argument which can be grounded on this supposition, that the shepherds would watch their flocks onely in Summer; the same hazard and necessity of feeding being also in Winter, if not greater.

V. 9. came upon them] The Syriac Interpreter giveth it, came unto them: ἐπέστη αὐτοῖς. It importeth such an apparition as suddenly came upon them, and unexpectedly, they little thinking of any such thing; that it might appear to be no compact.

glory of the Lord] Such an heavenly brightnesse and light that the amazed shepherds might by so unusual glory, perceive that he was the Angel of the Lord: Thus God adorned his Messenger, to the end, the meſſage by him sent, might deeply affect their mindes, and be received no otherwise, than as from the mouth of the Lord. Had the Angel appeared with lesse majesty and authority (as sometimes Angels appeared) perhaps this great mystery would not have been so readily believed: we more easily credit that which we believe cometh from Heaven: so that this glory was here necessary for the confirmation of these witnesses faith; who were to finde the Messias in so low an estate of his humiliation.

V. 10. fear not] As if he had said; I am not sent unto you from an angry Judge, nor with any sad meſſage, but with joyful news; so said the angel to Zechary, chap. 1. 13. fear not. It great and sodain fears, the minde cannot be attentive to that which is spoken, therefore the Angel first allayeth their fear, that they may be enabled to make a right use of his meſſage.

great joy which shall be to all people] The greatest joy which ever sounded in the ears of Men or angels, as concerning a time and eternal blessednesse in Christ: and that which concerneth all the people of God, of all nations, all which are, or shal be, Jews and Gentiles, bond and free: all believers.

V. 11. for unto you is born this day, &c.] For your good and salvation. So Isaiah 9. 6. unto us a childe is born, unto us a son is given, &c. this is that great mystery of godlinesse, God manifested in the flesh; 1 Timothy 3. 16. this day, after so many ages, foretold by the Prophets, signified by the legall ceremonies, expected by the faithfull; in this afflicted condition of Israel, now he is come: this day he is born: this is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoyce and be glad in it, Psalm 118. 24.

in the city of David] In Bethlehem, where God promised his nativity, Micha 5. 2.

a Saviour] See Mat. 1. 21. 1. Christ the Lord, the promised Messias, both signified anointed: the only Mediator between God and man, Christ our Saviour, God and man; the Angel, Lord and preserver, and mans Redeemer.

V. 12. this shall be a signe] That they might not be offended and think themselves deluded, when they should finde Christ the Saviour in so poor a worldly condition, the Angel preventeth that before hand, shewing them how they should finde him.

V. 13. with the angel a multitude] For the more evident confirmation of the truth by so many witnesses, and their faith by so glorious a company.

of the heavenly host] The Hebrews usfed to call companies of Angels מחנות אלוהים machane elohim, Gen. 32. 2. τὸ στρατόπεδον θεοῦ; the tents, or host of God: and צבאות השמים zeba hashamaim, the host of Heaven, 1 Kings 22. 19. and he is called the Lord of Hosts, Psalm 24. &c.

praysing God] Thus God would have this publique service (for so their multitude made it) performed by all that have knowledge of, and interest in the birth of Christ: as to manifest his mercy and truth, so to condemn their stupid ingratitude, who perversly refuse to joyn in this duty: as if general precepts in Gods word, right reason, and the examples of men and angels inspired by Gods Spirit chosen witnesses of our Saviours nativity, and for this same purpose sent by God himself from Heaven, that they might thus celebrate that day, were not sufficient warrant to lead them to imitation, and joyning in an holy harmony with them.

V. 14. Glory to God] Let God be glorified, in mans reconciliation to him. Or they congratulate and rejoyce praising God for both these.

in the highest] In Heaven; Hebr. במרומים bammarom, on high, Psal. 93. 4 So the Syriac hence hath במרומא (in excelsis) bamraume.

on earth peace] See on Luke 19. 38 and at this time all the world was at peace. By peace the Hebrews also signified, prosperity, health, and salvation, here was peace come, (and declared by the Angel) to the inhabitants of the world, through Christ now born; therefore to the 11 he is called, the Saviour. See Col. 1. 13, 14. 20. this peace is here principally meant.

good will towards men] The free mercy of God towards men and love and good will of one man towards another: whereas sinfull man was at enmity with God, in Christ he is reconciled. See Rom. 5. 10. Colos 1 20, 21.

V. 15. the shepherds] Gr. the men: shepherds, that is, the men which were shepherds.

and see this thing] τὸ ῥῆμα τοῦτο, this word: so the Hebrews put דבר dabar, a word, pro rebus verbo celebratis, as was noted, cap. 1. 37. for the things spoken, 1 Kings 17. 9, 21. &c. so here, this word signifieth, this thing which the Angel told us. See verse 19. and on Deut. cap. 1. 37.

V. 16. came with haste] Neither the hazard of their flocks, length of way, nor darkness retarded them: this faith and ready obedience, and good forwarded, in their finding their Saviour, to their great joy and comfort, verse 20.

V. 17. they made known abroad the saying] This was their faith, and sincerity, that they truely related to others those things which they had seen, and heard of the Angel concerning Christ. Thus would God propagate the glorious mysteries of the kingdom of Christ, by men so obscure and simple; as to beat down the arrogance of carnal reason, to confirme our faith. For, as Lactantius faith of Christians truth, adhuc ab ea fingendi voluntas, & astutia, quoniam rudes fuerunt, &c. lib. 5. cap. 3. they had neither will nor subtilty to feign, because they were ignorant: therefore they were of the minde of those four Lepers, 2 Kings 7. 8, 9. being themselves refreshed and abundantly enriched by the Assyrian tents, they said one to another, We do not well, this day is a day of good tydings, and we hold our peace, —Now therefore come, that we may go and tell, &c.

V. 18. wondered at these things] as men thoughtfull, what all these things would come to. This knowledge therfore left them more unexcusable, who thereby did not profit in the faith of Christ.

V. 19. kept all these things] συνήρει: that is, as Theophylact interpreteth τὰ παρόντα. See on verse 15. those things; the speech of the Angel, and all that which the Shepherds related, and all that which now came to passe.

and pondred them in her heart] Diligently comparing, and laying these things together.

V. 20. the shepherds returned] To their calling and habitations.

glorifying and praysing, &c.] This is an effect of faith, and the end of our coming to Christ, and of all that spiritual and secular blessing, which God bestoweth on us. See Psalm 50. 15. 1 Cor. 10. 31.

V. 21. when the eight dayes were accomplished] See Gen. 17. 12. Levit. 12. 3. Luke 1. 59. Thus would he be subjected to the law, that he might redeem those who were under the law, (Gal. 4. 4.) and deliver us from the curse of the law.

his name was called Jesus] The Jews used to name their children when they circumcised them, as we do when we baptize them: God would have him named, according to the office assigned him; to declare that there is no other name under Heaven whereby we can be saved, Acts 4. 12. Neither was this done by the counsel of man but God, who sent his Angel to name him so before his incarnation. See 1. 31. Luke 1. 31.

V. 22. dayes of her purification] S. Levit 12. 2, 5, 6 For though Mary was not made unclean, in her conception, but rather sanctified by the holy Ghost and power of the most high; yet thus obliged then to fulfill the law; which was not as yet repealed, or taken away, as it was afterward, when Christ had accomplished and fulfilled the same.

to present him to the Lord] To dedicate, commend him to, or set him before the Lord in the place of his publique worship. See Exod. 13. 12. Numb. 18. 15. Exod. 22. 29.

V. 23. every male] This was he for whose sake all the first-born under the Law were holy to the Lord, as Tertullian faith, c. 23. De carne Christi.

V. 24 according to that which is said] Levit. 12. 2, 6.

a pair of turtle doves] Which offering was appointed unto them who were so poor, that they were not able to offer a Lamb, or a Sheep, Levit. 5. 7.

V. 25. was just and devout] One that feared God, and expected the coming of the Messias, see verse 38 and Mark 15. 43.

the holy Ghost was upon him] That is, the spirit of prophesie, this is here inserted, that we may know, that this testimony of Simeon concerning Christ, was not humane, but divine, and the very dictate of the holy Ghost by him.

V. 26. that he should not see death] That he should not dye, before he had seen Christ the anointed King, Priest, and Prophet, come in the flesh. See Psal. 2. 6. Isa. 61. 1. Dan. 9. 24.

V. 27. came by the spirit] By the secret instinct and motion of the holy Ghost, he came not now into the temple, casually, or called, or invited thither by any counsel or command of man, but by the motion of Gods Spirit, who had before revealed to him, that he should not dye before he had seen the Lord's Christ, the promised and long-expected Messias come into the world.

when the parents brought the childe Jesus] That is Joseph (the reputed father of Jesus: see Heb 7. 3.) and Mary his mother.

V. 28. then took he him up] With great joy did he imbrace Christ in his arms, and blessed God: that is, gave thanks and praise to God for Christ, now born in the flesh, which the spirit of God had likewise revealed unto him; for Christ in his state of humiliation was, as it is were, fol in nubes, not known by the testimony of carnal eyes to be the Christ, the Saviour — no man can say, that Jesus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 12. 3.

V. 29 Lord now letest thou thy servant depart, &c.] Now that thou hast shewed me the fulfilling of thy promise concerning my Saviour the Messias, whom thou hast given to raise up the tribes of Jacob, to restore the preserved of Israel, and a light to lighten the Gentiles to be thy salvation unto the end of the earth, Isa. 49. 6. Heb. 2. 10. & 5. 9. now I willingly and cheerfully leave this present life.

V. 30. for mine eyes have seen thy salvation] Psal. 98. Isa. 52. 10. he did before this time see Christ with the eye of faith, as Abraham did, and rejoyced: but now he saw with his bodily eyes that fulfilled which he before expected.

V. 31. before the face of all people] As that which thou wilt make manifest to all nations; but thus he speaketh after the manner of the Prophets, concerning that which was future, as if it were present, for the infallible certainty thereof: Christ was not yet, but some time after revealed, by the preaching of the gospel, unto the nations; but he thus speaks, as of that of which he was fully assured, in its time should come to passe.

V. 32. a light to lighten the Gentiles] A light to shine unto the Gentiles who were aliants to the covenant of God, and fate in the region and shadow of death, Matthew 4. 16. that is, ignorance and spiritual blindnesse: now shall he teach them the knowledge of God, and life everlasting: he alludeth to Psalm 98 2. Isaiah 9. 2. Isaiah 42. 6. and 49. 6. this is that which God promised by all the Prophets, the sum of whose words is, that all Nations of the world should look up to Christ, the onely author of salvation. See John 8. 12. Colos. 3. 5. Ephes. 5. 3. 1 Corinth. 6. 4. Acts 26. 16. Isaiah 60. 1. &c.

the glory of thy people Israel] With whom he had a covenant; who were his adopted and first-born, Exod. 4. 22. to them peculiarly was Christ promised: among them was he born in the flesh: see Rom. 1. 3. Rom 9. 5. to them he first offered the Covenant of free-grace in him.

V. 33. marvelled] Not because they believed not (being confirmed by so many testimonies of the Angels, Shepherds, and Wisemen) but because they apprehended an admirable concurrence of all these, declaring the truth of God fulfilled in Christ.

V. 34. Simeon blessed them] He prayed for the successe of Christs Kingdom, and Josephs and Maries prosperity.

behold this child is set for the fall &c.] This κεῖται, is set, imporreth not onely the event, but also the decree of God: which when it is come to the execution thereof; then, as we must understand, that the free grace of God (calling and working faith in the Elect to apprehend the merits of Christ for their justification) cometh between the decree of saving them, and their salvation: so, between the fall of Reprobates, and Gods decree concerning them, their own corruption, and wilfull unbelief intercedeth: so that as God justly decreed to punish them for that which he foresaw in them from eternity: So doth he no otherwise execute that his counsel in time, than by a just punishment of their wickednesse; and they bear no more than that which themselves have caused, and truly deserved: and so understand this place, That Christ was set or appointed for the fall and greater condemnation of unbelievers (who wilfully fall upon this rock of offence which God layed in Sion) and for the resurrection and recovery of the Elect to whom he giveth faith, Ephes. 2. 8. So God saveth the Elect in free mercy, and casteth away the Reprobate in absolute justice, whom he predestinated to just punishment, but not to sin, but for sin. See Isaiah 8. 14, 15. Rom. 9. 32. 1 Pet. 2. 8.

which shall be spoken against] By unbelievers and wicked men, the enemies of Christ and the Gospel; who, however dissenting among themselves, yet all combine against him, as if he were the onely mark for all the powers of Hell to shoot at.

V. 35 a sword shall pierce] That is, bitter sorrows shall afflict thy heart: he seemeth to allude to Psalm 105. 18. This he saith concerning Maries heart-grief which she should conceive for her dear Sons sufferings, to which she was conformable in a double capacity: first as a tender mother: next as a true member of his mystical body wherein his sufferings were meritorious, and sanctified hers.

V. 36. A prophetesse] That is much exercised in the holy Scriptures, and inspired of the holy Ghost to declare things hidden, extraordinary, and unusual. See 1 Sam. 18. 10. or things to come. See Acts 11. 28. 1 Cor. 14. 3. Judg. 4. 4. 2 Kings 22. 14. this Luke inserteth to shew the authority by which the spake, not as a vulgar woman; and to the same end serveth the description of her.

V. 37. departed not from the temple] Not that she was a Recluse: but this sheweth that she daily frequented the temple: night and day, or continually, in such acts of Religion, import a constancy, without ceasing, not without intermission. See 1 Thess. 5. 17. 1 Tim. 5. 5. Luke 24. 53. 1 Thess. 3. 10.

V. 38. At the same instant] Gr. the same hour: see Matthew 9. 22.

gave thanks likewise] Gr. answered in confession: confessed accordingly, as Simeon had done; agreeing in her testimony with his, who had professed Christ, now presented before the Lord to be the promised Saviour.

and spake of him to all] She spake of him to all them who, frequenting the temple, expected salvation by Christ: those now heard what Anna said, and probably she spake the same elsewhere as occasion served.

that looked for redemption] (Mark 15 43. and here verse 25.) As now at hand, and at the door: though there was a fearful apostacy in Israel, and depravation of Religion, yet still God had his Church among them, some who expected salvation by Christ.

V. 39. They returned into Galilee] That is, Joseph and Mary with the child Jesus, after they had been in Egypt, as Joseph was warned by the Angel, which story Matthew recordeth, Mat. 2. 13. &c. and this Evangelist omitteth in pursuit of the following History; for as Ephiphanius. Alog. haeref. 51. 6. well observeth; God gave every Evangelist his proper task: so as that they related somethings συμφώνως ἀλλήλοις with one accord and equally; thereby shewing that they all drew out of the same fountain: other things omitted of all the rest, one of them rehearseth, as the holy Spirit gave him that for his part, as hath been noted.

V. 40. Filled with wisdom] With admirable wisdom shewing it self in him as he grew up: this was the effect of the Deity dwelling in him, shining from under the vail of his assumed humanity; to the Deity could nothing be added: an infinite cannot encrease: in the humanity he was as we in all things, without sin, Hebr. 4. 15. and so had a native ignorance of some things; from, which he grew as he encreased in age: for though the Deity and humanity were but one person, yet were not the incommunicable properties of the Deity given to the humane nature: the Deity was infinite, omniprelent, &c. so was not the humanity, &c.

V. 41. the passover] See Mat. 26. 2. and Luke 22. 1. they went up to the Passeover as was commanded, Deut. 16. 1. It seemeth Mary came up of her own free devotion, as did also Hanna, 1 Sam. 1. 2. &c.

V. 43. Fulfilled the dayes] The dayes of the feast prescribed by the Law, Exod. 23. 15. That is, the feast of Passeover, which began the fourteenth day of the first moneth at even; when the Paschal Lamb was to be slaine, in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, Deut. 16. 3. as also to prefigure Christ our Passeover (1 Cor. 5. 7.) the Lamb that taketh away the sinne of the world, John 1. 29. to be slain in the Evening of time, Acts 2. 17. Hebr. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 20. 1 John 2. 18. which we are to remember by the supper of the Lord, 1 Cor. 11. 25, 26. until he come again. Now albeit this feast of Paffover was but one day in the year to be kept; yet hereunto were joyned the seven dayes, the feast of unleavened bread immediately following the same; which began the fifteenth day of the same moneth: this vailed many excellent mysteries 1. The seven dayes figured the whole time of our life, wherein we must eat the bread of affliction, Deut. 16. 3. Gen. 3. 19. Acts 14. 22. 2 Tim. 3. 11, 12. 2. We must all our life time thankfully remember our deliverance by Christ, our Passeover. 3. We must purge out the old leaven of malice and wickednesse, not onely for some few dayes, but all our dayes, that we may keep the feast with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth, 1 Cor. 5. 8.

the child Jesus tarried behind] Not out of any disobedience, but to shew what his office was, to which he was designed by his Father; the Prophets foretold hereof, Isaiah 61. 1. and Christ mentioned it; chap. 4. 43.

V. 44. To have been in the company] ἐν τῇ συνοδίᾳ. the Syriac Interpreter giveth cum comitibus eorum with the company or companions in the way, for they used to come up to the feasts at Jerusalem from all parts of the land in great companies; and so to return home again.

V. 45. They returned back] Not without great perplexity of mind; that not onely for losse of time, labour, and the company of their friends and kindred, but principally for fear of the child Jesus.

V. 46. The midst of the Doctors] With the Doctors: it is an Hebraisme: as c. 22. 27. it may be he sat at their feet, not in the chief seats; of which Luke 11. 43.

V. 47. Were astonished] ἐξίστατο properly signifieth, they were out of themselves with admiration; it was beyond their understandings which they heard, in the preludium, and first relish of Christs ministery: the same word used c. 24. 22. Budaus interpreteth, ad stuporem usque nos perculerunt.

V. 48. Thy father and I] Theophylact thinketh she thus calleth him in respect of the Jews, ἵνα μὴ ὑποπτεύσωσιν ἕτερα; but indeed the thus called him, because though he was not his natural father, yet was he (as Epiphanius saith. Ebionit. haeref. 30.) ἐν τάξει, that is, vice, or munere, a father: the Evangelist best expresseth it, his supposed father, c. 3. 23.

V. 49. My fathers businesse] ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρός μου — in the things which are my fathers: the Syriac giveth it, know ye not that I must be, בבית דאבא beberh abbi; in my fathers house? that is, the temple where they found him; the meaning is, doing that which appertained to mans salvation: his purpose was to shew, that though duty to parents must be observed, yet duty to God must be preferred, Mat. 10. 37.

V. 50. They understood not the saying] For his office of a Mediatour and Saviour was not yet known to them, though the Angel had foretold it, Mat. 1. 21. and Zachary had prophesied it, Luke 1. 68. &c

V. 51. Was subject unto them] From that time till he was about thirty years old, c. 3. 23. Mark 6. 3. this subjection was not infirmitatis, but pietatis, as Ambros. in Luc. l. 2. c. 2. observeth, discit quid parentibus tuis debeas, saith the same, thou owest to thy mothers trouble, sorrow, and danger, in bringing thee into the world, who when she hath brought forth what the long desired, partu absoluto, non tumore; she is delivered of the birth, not her fear: many labours and cares of Parents belong to the education of children; oughtest thou not for all these, to requite them with thy obedience?

V. 52. Increased in wisdom] As a child lege humanae naturae as Euthymius saith well, he encreased by little and little; for as God, he was absolutely perfect: because he assumed a reasonable soul as well as an humane body; the Deity thereto united was so vailed, that the graces thereof shewed themselves by certain degrees, according to the maturity of his humane faculties; and so he encreased in wisdom; though the fulnesse of the Godhead dwell in him, Colos. 3. 9 and stature] ἡλικίᾳ. In stature of body, the Gr. word also signifieth age. So he, as man encreased in body and soul; Nam sicut carnis est aetate proficere, sic est animae sapientiâ & gratiâ profecisse. Fulgent. de myst. Mediat. ad Thras. lib. 1.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. OF Tiberius Cesar] This was successour of Augustus Cesar, in whose reign Christ was born, chap. 2. 1. after Julius, and Augustus Cesar, the following Emperours were stiled Cesars, as the Egyptian Kings were called Pharaohs, and Ptolmees. See Alexand. ab Alexandro. Genial. dier. lib. 1. cap 2. Mark the admirable candor and diligence of the Evangelist in historifying the circumstances of our Saviours Nativity, and entrance into his publick ministery, that the truth thereof may evidently appear: he telleth in what place, what Emperours reign, and who were witnesses, &c.

Pilate being governour] Or Deputy, appointed by the Roman Emperour to govern that Province.

Herod being Tetrarch, &c.] See on Mat. 14. 1. This was Herod Antipas. Joseph. de bel. Jud. l. 2. c. 4 whom Tiberius made Tetrarch of Galilee.

of Iturea, &c.] Hereof read Joseph. de bel. Jud. lib. 2. c. 4. & lib. 3. cap. 2. Adricomius. Theatr. ter. s. Neptalim. 59. 60. it is a mountainous Region at the foot of mount Libanus.

Trachonitis] This country saith Jerom de locis Hebraicis, is by the Desart of Arabia which joyneth to Bosra. Josephus de bel. Jud. lib. 2. chap. 4. calleth it Trachon: it is a great Region beyond Jordan, lying between Palestine and Cœlesyria. See also Plin. nat. hist. l 5. c.

of Abilene] This country Adricomius Theat. Neptalim. 4. saith, took its name from Abila, Abyla, or Abela, a famous city of Cœlesyria neer mount Libanus. Jerom de loc. Hebraic. mentioneth three Towns and Cities in several countreys called Abela; this Evangelist would not omit Lysanias Tetrarchie because many Jews dwelt therein, in the borders of Decapolis, whence many came to hear Christ, Mat. 4. 25. Mark 5. 20. & 7. 31. See Is. Causabon. exercit. 13. 3.

V. 2. Annas and Caiphas being the high priests] There were three degrees of ministers under the Law; Priests, Levites, and Nethinims: over these the high Priest was chief; and that office was successively tied to the line of Aarons first born, all the rest of his posterity were Priests: but there was to be but one high Priest, at whose death another was still to succeed: that two are here named high Priests together; some think that the Grecian Kings, at their pleasure made high Priests to officiate by the year, not for life. V. Shindler lex. pent. in כהן others impute this disorder and violation of Gods Law concerning the perpetuity of this office in one man during life, to the power and covetousnesse of the Romans. But for better resolution we must consider that the high Priest had also his suffragan, or סגן sagan, who in case of the high Priests pollution, performed his office: Such was Zephaniah, Jer. 52. 24 the high Priest his self was called כהן הראש cohen harosh: ἱερεὺς ὁ μέγας 2 Kings 22. 8. and ἱερεὺς πρῶτος, 2 King. 25. 18. the first or chief high Priest: or כהן הגדול cohen hagadol, the great high Priest; the suffragan, who also was called high Priest) was stiled כהן משנה cohen mishne. ἱερεὺς ὁ δεύτερος 2 Kings 25. 18. or as some read, υἱὸς τῆς δευτερώσεως, as we give the second Priest. Jer. 52. 24. The second Priest, that is, suffragan or vicar, so was Caiphas here suffragan to Annas his father in law, who was the high Priest: but the Evangelist, John 18. 24. after their vulgar manner of speaking, calleth him τὸν Ἀρχιερέα. See Jos. Scaliger. Proleg. in Euseb. Is. Causabon. Exercit. 13. 4 and D. Godwin. Moses and Aaron. l. 1. c. 4 See note on John 18. 13.

the words of God] That is a special revelation and command to execute his office, Luke 1. 80. without which he might not have baptized. See John 1. 33. see also Heber. 5. 4, 5. I would the Anabaptists would throughly examine their own consciences, who sent them to re-baptize; and that they would no longer deceive others, and themselves.

V. 3. And he came] Out of the desert into the inhabited places, that he might execute his charge in preaching repentance unto the people for the remission of sins. See Mat. 3. 1, Mark 1. 4.

V. 4. The voice of one crying, &c.] Isai. 40 3. See on Mat. 3. 3. and on John 1. 23.

V. 5. Every valley shall be filled] All impediments shall be taken away, so that the way of God and eternal life by Christ, shall be plain and evident to him that believeth; which by the works of the Law, as it was obscure under those shadows, so also impassable by reason of the infirmity and corruption of flesh and blood. Rom. 3. 20. Gal. 3. 11, 12. Rom. 9. Rom. 8. 2, 3.

V. 6. All flesh shall see] See chap 2. 30. All sorts of men to whom Christ the Saviour of the world shall be preached and revealed. See Psal. 98. 2. Isai. 52. 10. Acts 10 35.

V. 7. generation of vipers] See on Mat. 3. 7. That is, as Gregory hom. 20. interpreteth, Malæ soboles malorum parentum actionem imitantes, wicked children imitating their wicked parents.

to flee from, &c.] See on Mat. 3. 7

V. 8. bring forth fruits] See on Mat 3. 8

Abraham to our father] See on Mat. 3. 9. Which prerogative, similitude of manners may rather claim, Quam ordo majorum saith Ambros in Luc. lib. 2. cap. 3. than order of parentage.

of these stones] See on Mat. 3. 9 Gregory understandeth by stones cordia Gentilium, the insensible hearts of the Gentiles, not apprehending the things of God, Hom. 20. So Ambros. in Luc. l. 2. c. 3. understandeth here ædificationem ecclesiæ, the edification of the Church of Christ, consisting of living stones, 1 Pet. 2. 5. and those principally of the Gentiles to be converted.

V. 9. The axe is laid to the root of the trees] See on Mat. 3. 10. the metaphor shewed them, that the instruments of their destruction (such as were Titus and Vespasian) were near, and should quickly execute; except they repented: the axe is laid to the root. cum tota simul progenies cum parente tollitur. Greg hom. 20. when the whole progeny is cut up with the parent: which judgement then threatned the Jewish nation and long it was not, before it came upon them.

V. 10. What shall we do?] Their hearts being toucht, with Johns preaching they enquire (as Peters hearers also did Acts 2. 37.) what they should do? as if they said, what fruits must we bring forth, that we may flee from the anger to come, having heard the severe doctrine by him delivered concerning their destruction, and the remedy to prevent the same, by him also proposed; to wit, repentance, and the fruits thereof, verse 8. they now desire to be informed further, and more particularly concerning the same, as to particular callings, and duties thereof in order, to escape Gods judgement and be saved.

V. 11. He that hath two coats] As Ambrose saith, to those several sorts of men he gave an answer, singulis convenientem, omnibus unum; convenient to every particular one, but in substance it was but one precept; that is concerning mercy and charity, which is plenitudo virtutum: the fulnesse of vertue: the most acceptable fruit of repentance, without which, all religion is vain, and the anger of God hangeth over men. See 1 Cor. 13. 1. Jam. 1. 26 27. & 2. 14 1 John 3. 17. 1 John 4. 20. John 13. 35.

V. 12. Publicans to be baptized] These were officers who received tribute, and custom for the Romans. See on Mat. 9 10. and Mat. 5. 46. this office was erected among the Jews after that Pompey had subdued them (where see Joseph de bel. Jud. l. 1. c. 5.) and they became tributary to the Romans, about threescore years before the birth of our Saviour: of Publicans Cicero and other Authors make often mention.

V. 14. Exact no more, &c.] He taxeth the unjust exactions whereby such men commonly grieve the people: therefore chap. 19. 8. Zacheus in his conversion, proclaimeth restitution, without which (where there is any ability) can be no true repentance: not that the office was unlawful, but because oppression and religion are inconsistent: therefore, of many sins whereof John Baptist might have admonished them, he instanced onely in that to which they were commonly given, and which cannot stand with charity and equity; without which, faith is dead, and all religion counterfeit.

V. 14. Do violence to no man] Or put no man in fear by your violence, and ravages.

your wages] Let your pay, and allowance of victual, apparel, or appointed quarter content you: extort no more: if Christian discipline had disallowed all wars, it should have been told these that asked counsel, ut abjicerent arma, that they ought to lay down their arms. Augustine Marcelin, ep. 5.

V. 15. People were in expectation] Or in suspence; Considering the unusual austerity and excellency of John, they began to have hope that he was their long expected Messias. So the Syriac expresseth this προσδοκῶντος, by the word סבר Sebar: which signifieth hope: as also סברא Sabro, Acts 24. 15. 1 Tim. 5. 5. &c. also it signifieth joyful tidings, the Gospel, &c. Luke 2. 14. Mat. 4. 23. &c.

V. 16 I indeed baptize you with water &c.] Meaning that he administred onely the external sign and Sacrament, but Christ would give the inward effect thereof, for the washing away their sins. See on Mat. 3. 11. Mark 1. 8. John 1. 26 Acts 1. 5. Acts 11. 16. & 19 4.

and with fire] Meaning that Christ would cleanse them from their sins, as fire doth the gold from drosse. See Acts 2. 3.

V. 17. Whose fan is in his hand] See on Mat. 3. 12. the preaching of the Gospel is as a fan in Christs hand: before the truth is preached, all seem one confused heap; chaffe and wheat, good and bad are undistinctly one masse in the Church: it is the fan which separateth the chaffe: thus he shewed the Jews, that there was now coming a purging blast of the truth to be preached, which should make them fly out of the Church, as chaffe out of the floor, in which they with their many corruptions had hitherto but filled up a place: this separation Christ beginneth here, which shall be perfected in the life to come; and it is to be understood concerning the effect of the word preached, which proveth a Savour of life unto life to some, and a Savour of death to death to others: it edifieth and comforteth some, and enrageth others to an heat of persecution of Christs Ministers; concerning the final and absolute separation to life or death eternal, we may not here pronounce (of that he saith Mat. 13. 30. Let both grow until the harvest &c.) That we now see by woful experience, many separating from us, let none be offended: the wind bloweth out the chaffe from the floor, not the good grain, as Cyprian. de simpl. prælat. tract 3. saith let those of light faith, as much as they will, flee away with every breath of tentation eo purior massa frumenti in horrea Domini reponetur

netur, said Tertullian de præscript. chap. 3. the more purer heap shall be laid up in the Lords granary the Church; some of Christs disciples taking offence at his words (John 6. 66.) separated: do we wonder that some depart from his Church? these things shew us to be Christians which we suffer according to the example of Christ; they went out from us, they were not of us, 1 John 2. 19.

V. 18. Many other things] This Evangelist wrote onely the sum of Johns preaching, as much as might demonstrate him to be the fore-ordained messenger to prepare the way of Christ, to whose History he addressed his discourse. See Mal. 3. 1. The spirit of God was not solicitous by the Scriptures to satisfie mans curiosity; but to reveal therein that which is sufficient to make the believer wise to salvation. See Joh. 20. 30, 31. Joh. 21. 25. 2 Tim. 3. 16. 17.

V. 19. But Herod] See on Mat. 14. 3. and Mark 6. 17.

V. 20. Added yet this above all] This bloody fact helped to fill up the measure of his sin, in that being incensed against the word of God, he revenged himself on the Minister thereof as on an enemy: a sad document to all persecuters of Christs Ministers, would they understand it.

V. 21. Jesus also being baptized] See on Mat. 3. 13. Mark 1. 10. John 1. 32. he would be baptized, non mundari volens, sed mundare aquas --- saith Ambros. in luc. lib. 2. cap. 3. not to be cleansed, but to cleanse the waters, that they being made clean by the flesh of Christ who knew no sin, might have baptismatis jus --- an ordinance, and right to baptism.

V. 22. Like a dove] See on Mat. 3. 16. John 1. 32. Why like a dove? (saith Ambros.) simplicitatem enim lavacri requirit gratia. Our baptism enjoyneth us to be simple and harmlesse as doves.

V. 23. About thirty years of age] At which age the Priests were to enter into their function, Num. 4. 3, 35. &c.

being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph] For Christ as man, had no father; as God, no mother; as it is said of Melchisedec his type, Heb. 7. 3.

Son of Eli] Luke ascendeth from the last father to the first, and Matthew contrarywise descendeth; extending his rehearsal no further than to Abraham; to assure the Jews of Gods promise in Christ fulfilled to them. Luke rehearseth to Adam, to assure the Gentiles also of their interest in Christ, for as much as they were the sons of Adam, though not of Abraham. Note also that the Jews reckoned their genealogies, not onely by the natural, but also by the legal descents: and that whereas divers men had two names: one of the Evangelists reciting one, and the other another, they yet agree in the same person.

V. 31. son of Nathan] Zach. 12. 12. 2 Sam. 5. 14. 1 Chron. 3. 5.

V. 32. son of Booz] Ruth. 2. 1. and 4. 18.

son of Naasson] 1 Chron. 2. 10.

V. 34. son of Thara] Genesis 11. 24. 26.

V. 36. which was the son of Cainan, which was the son of Arphaxad] Moses saith Arphaxad begat Sala, Genesis 10. 24. but this Evangelist reckoneth Cainan between Arphaxad and Sala. For the reconcillation of these places, and the better understanding thereof, consider,

1. That all the word of God is infallibly true, and without all contradiction, John 17. 17. 2 Tim. 3. 16. though we understand not some; neither how to reconcile others of them.

2. That not one jot, or tittle of the Scriptures, in matter of substance, hath passed away, or ever shall, until all be fulfilled, Mat. 5. 18. Luke 16. 17.

3. That some persons mentioned in holy Scriptures were binomii, such as had two names: so Esau was also called Edom, Gen. 25. 30. Gen. 36. 1, 8. Jerom. adversus Hevild. instanceth in Raguel Moses father in law, called also Jethro. So also in Gedeon; Ozias, &c. So was Simon also called Peter, John 1. 42. Joseph was also called Barsabas, and surnamed Justus, Acts 1. 23. So Simon was called Niger. So Judas was surnamed Barsabas, Acts 15. 22. some think Shem was called Melchisedec.

4. That Gods Spirit in opening the truth of holy Scriptures (as Lactantius well noted, lib. 2. cap. 9) would have us know those things which concern life eternal, and the means thereto; other things he omitted or caused to be abridged. See John 20. 30, 31. John 21. 25. therefore Matthew omitted 3. descents. Mat. 1. 8. where it is said, that Joram begat Ozias: Ahaziah, Ioash, and Amaziah, are omitted. See 1 Chron. 3. 11, 12. See note on Mat. 1. 8. so Christ is called the Son of David, Mat. 1. 1. you must understand that many generations and forefathers according to the flesh, came between. So Luke 1. 5. Luke 13. 16. &c. It is probable which some say; that seeing Matthew proposed to mark a threefold state of Israel from the promise made to Abraham concerning Christ, unto the time of his coming in the flesh; he reckoneth three times 14 generations; within which compasse holding himself, he was not curious of choice, but indifferently mentioneth holy and wicked, and so many in succession; his principal scope being to shew the truth of Gods promise fulfilled in Christs incarnation. And certainly Moses also intending to shew how God ever had his Church, and to declare the truth of his promise concerning Christ, principally took care to shew in what line the Church continued; neither reckoning all the Saints which were in that line, nor them onely which were holy; nor all descents in a direct line, without intermission of any person.

5. There are many elliptical and short speakings in Scriptures: so that the interpreter must necessarily insert the word, or words there understood, as Luke 7. 11. ἐν τῇ ἑξῆς understand ἡμέρᾳ: which the Syriac inserteth; or καιρῷ as it seems Theophylact doth, reading ἐν τῷ ἑξῆς: deinceps, as chap. 8. 1. ἐν τῷ καθεξῆς. So John 5. 36. I have witnesse, μείζω τοῦ Ἰωάννου; that is, μείζω τῆς τοῦ Ἰωάννου as the learned Beza noteth: the full speech must have been μείζω τῆς μαρτυρίας τοῦ Ἰωάννου: greater than that testimony of John. So Acts 15. 5. ἐξανέστησαν δέ τινες, there εἶπον (they said) is understood. So Mat. 21. 30. The second son said, ἐγώ; understand ἀπέρχομαι, or ποιήσω, I will go, or will do so. So Mat. 1. 6. ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Οὐρίου where γυναικὸς and the word γενομένης are to be understood: Uriahs wife, which became Davids. So Rom 11. 4. τῇ Βάαλ, that is, τῇ εἰκόνι τοῦ Βάαλ. So Mark 14. 43. παρὰ τῶν Ἀρχιερέων: understand πεμφθέντες or ἀπεσταλθέντες, sent from the high Priests. See Acts 9. 11.

6. That the article ὁ, is sometimes put to signifie that which is, or is called something notable, Mark 15. 16. ὅ ἐστι πραιτώριον, which is called the pretory: sometimes that word is expressed: as, Luke 21 37. τὸ ὄρος τὸ καλούμενον ἐλαιῶν, that is, τὸ ὄρος τῶν ἐλαιῶν: as, Mark 11. 1. Luke 22. 39. of which ellipsis of the word הר, we read also 2 Sam 15. 30. Sometimes the Greeks double the article, and propose it to both names, Iohn 1. 42. Iohn 6. 69.

7. For conclusion then (seeing all the Scripture is infallibly true, and no jot thereof may passe away) we must understand that (whereas Luke here nameth Cainan, between Arphaxad and Sala, which Moses in the same genealogie doth not, Gen. 10. 24) Moses in that epitome of History, saying Arphaxad ילד jalad 70 ἐγέννησε begat Sala, must be no otherwise understood, than Mat. 1. 8. Joram (ἐγέννησε) begat Ozias: not immediately, but as one of his progenitors: as, 1 Chron 3. 11. &c. or as the whole series of this genealogie is elliptical υἱοῦ being so often understood: So may we here understand καλουμένου; as if we read Ἕβερ τοῦ Σαλά, τοῦ καλουμένου Καϊνάν. Eber the son of Sala, who was also called Cainan: and so this article τοῦ may here be understood, as set to distinguish this surnamed Cainan, from his ancestour of the same name mentioned, Gen. 5. 9, 12, 13, 14. and here verse 37. or if we understand here λεγομένου, it may onely point out the vulgar errour, which it may be the mistake or corruption of the 70. Interpreters brought in; that being then the vulgar and commonly received translation of the old Testament into the Greek tongue; and so may the Syriac reading here be understood, shala בר קינן bar Kainan, that is, דמח קרא בר קינן demeth kere bar Kainan, which is called the son of Cainan: ever necessary in difficult genealogies, is that rule of the Apostle, 1 Tim. 1. 4. that we give not heed to endlesse genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: the end of the commandment being charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned. See also Tit. 3. 9. These things are written that we may believe, that Iesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that believing, we may have life through his Name, Iohn 20. 31.

V. 37. the son of Methusala] Gen 5. 21 &c.

V. 38 the Son of God] God is the universal Parent, and Creatour of all men. See Deut. 32. 6. 18, 19. But Adams parentage extendeth to God his Maker, who had not (as all other meer men,) any humane Parent: therefore the Syriac readeth דמן אלהא demen elaho, who was of God.

from Iordan] After his baptisme there, Matthew 3. 13. &c. Mark 1. 9.

led by the spirit] See on Mat. 4. 1. Mark 1. 12. Christ's temptation and fasting presently follow, and are adjoyned to his baptisme; as to teach us to expect Satans fiercest charges when we give our names to Christ, and set our hearts to seek the Lord in newnesse and holinesse of life; so how we must prepare and arme our selves to resist temptations. See Mat 26. 41. Mat. 17. 21.

V. 2. Fourty dayes] See on Mat. 4. 2 Mark 1. 13.

tempted of the devil] Mat 4. 3. He was in the wildernesse fourty dayes, where the devil tempted him: he was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil: therefore he presently began his combate with him that he might overthrow his kingdom: he would not exceed the fasts of Moses and Elias; some think it was that Satan might not suspect him to be greater than they; Theophylact, Euthymius, lest otherwise, saith Chrysostom, ἄπιστον ἔδοξεν ἡ τῆς σαρκὸς ἀνάληψις, his assumption of flesh should seem seem incredible. So also Theophylact, on Mat. 4.

eat nothing] See Mat. 4. 2.

V. 3. If thou be the Son of God] Thus Christ presently after his baptism is tempted, shewing us therein, that Satans temptations most rage in the sanctified; quia vilissima est magis exaptata ad sanctos. Hilar. in Matth. canon. 3. because he most defieth victory over the Saints: others, ut captivos & victos contemnit & proterat, &c. Cyprian. l. 1. ep. 2. he passeth by as captives and conquered people, of whom he is already secure and assured.

command these stones. &c.] See on Mat. 4 3.

V. 4. it is written] Deut. 8. 3.

word of God] The meaning is by the Ordinance and Providence of God; whereby he enableth the creature to nourish man. See Mat. 4. 4. 1 Tim. 4. 5. Gen. 1. 29.

V. 5. taking him up &c.] Mat. 4. 8. That he shewed Christ here, all the kingdoms of the world in a moment, declareth that this shewing, was by a vision: otherwise all could not have been under view in a moment, as here it was.

V. 6. that is delivered unto me] This he spake of his own, as a lying spirit, John 8. 44. for he can do no more than God permitteth him, (Rev. 13. 7.) neither in giving nor taking away. See Psal. 75. 6, 7. Mat. 6. 27.

V. 7. worship me] Or, fall down before me: this the sacrilegious impudent spirit saith, that failing in his other assaults, nunc vel ambitione corrumperet, Hilar. can. 3. he might (as he did the first Adam) corrupt him by ambition: it was ambition which caft him out of heaven; in which sin he still continueth; affecting the honour due to God alone, in that he would have us serve and worship him; as idolaters do, 1 Cor. 10. 20 2 Chron. 11. 15.

V. 8. get thee behind me] Avoid and get thee gone.

it is written] Deut. 6. 13 & 10. 20. And so must we learn to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked, and to resist Satan with the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God. Ephes. 6. 16, 17.

him onely shalt thou serve] Christ interpreteth Moses words, by adding him onely, &c. because this is the true worship of God, to serve him onely: and no creature with him. See Rev 19. 10. and 22. 8, 9 Mat. 4. 10. this is an excellent shield against ambition caret enim ambitione religiosa devotio, Ambros. in Luc. l. 4. c. 4. religious devotion is free from ambition.

V. 9. brought him to Jerusalem] See on Mat. 4. 5.

cast thy self down] Thus he tempteth: perswading men to hurt themselves, because without their own consent, he can neither hurt them nor compel them to do any evil: the consent of the corrupted will is in every act of sin.

V. 10. For it is written] Psal. 91. 11. Thus the devil (as impious hereticks his disciples) perverteth Scriptures, either citing part, and leaving out the rest, as here he leaveth out (to keep thee in all thy wayes: not in any evil way) or misinterpreting and misapplying them to their own destruction, 2 Pet. 3. 16. The Scripture saith not, cast thy self down, this Satan addes. Irenæus l. 5. c. 3. See Nicet. com. in Gr. Nazian. orat. 40. n. 11

V. 12. Thou shalt not tempt the Lord] Deut. 6. 16. Matthew 4 7.

V. 13. for a season] For he set upon him furiously in his passion. See Luke 22. 53. John 14 10. in which last assaults, he came not (as Ambros. saith) tentaturus, sed aperte pugnaturus; not to tempt, but onely to fight.

V. 14. in the power of the spirit] That is, supported in that journey by divine power: so that he came speedily, by the same spirit, by which he was sustained without meat, fourty dayes in the wilderneſſe; and with which he was abundantly furnished for the execution of his Ministry.

V. 15 in their synagogues, &c.] That is, in their Churches, wherein they met to hear the Lectures of the Law every Sabbath-day, Acts 15 21. Jerusalem was the place which God had chosen for his Temple, sacrifices, and other publick worship, there onely to be performed.

glorified of all] δοξαζόμενος, That is, magnified, admired, and praised, as for his doctrine delivered with divine power and authority, beyond the manner of all other teachers, Mat. 7. 28, 29. and here, verſe 32. So also for his miracles, whereby he confirmed the same: by doing good to all, and in this (all) we muſt understand the moſt part: or excepting thoſe, who out of envy, and the ſpirit of contradiction, diſtaſted any thing that was good: all others glorified him: the preſent praiſed him, and the abſent celebrated his fame.

V. 16. on the sabbath-day] See note on Mat. 12. 1. and Luke 6 1. Mat. 13. 54.

and stood up for to read] As the manner was to read ſome portion of the Law and the Prophets every ſabbath-day. See Acts 13. 15 and 15 21.

V. 17 There was delivered unto him] By ſome officer of that ſynagogue; according to the cuſtom, to ſhew (ſaith Ambroſ. in Luc. l. 4. c. 4) that it was himſelf who ſpake in the Prophets; and to reveal their ſacrilegious perfidiouſneſſe, who ſay that there was one God of the old Teſtament, and another of the new, &c.

V. 18. the spirit of the Lord is upon me] See Iaiah 61. 1. The fulneſſe of the ſpirit; all the gifts thereof: not by meaſure, it was on the Prophets and Apoſtles, and is on the faithful Miniſters, in ſome good meaſure to enable them to their office and miniſtration. See Iſaiah 11. 2. John 3. 34. Col. 2. 9.

because he hath anointed me] That is, endued me with gifts, and aſſigned me thereto; the ſpirit reſting on Chriſt, as hereth by the effects to us-ward, and of whoſe fulneſſe all we have received, grace for grace, John 1. 16.

to the poor] He calleth them poor, who had not yet taſted of the riches of his grace, and the poor in ſpirit; as Matth. 5. 3.

to heal the broken-hearted] Thoſe who have deep remorſe for their ſins, and terrour of conſcience to repentance: ſuch he calleth to him, Mat. 11. 28. See Iſaiah 61. 2. Pſal. 147. 3.

deliverance to the captives] To thoſe who were held captive of Satan and ſin (ſuch as we all were by nature, Epheſ. 2. 3. Rom. 7. 14.) that he did when he preached and proclaimed the new covenant of God, that is, free remiſſion of ſins to thoſe who believe in him: that he hath fully ſatisfied Gods juſtice for us: this whoſoever truly believeth, is by the ſame ſpirit (working faith and obedience in him) manumiſſed, and ſet at liberty from the kingdom of ſin and Satan; although yet they exerciſed ſome tyranny over him in this preſent life. See John 8, 36. Rom. 6. 13, 14, 18.

recovery of ſight to the blind] That is, ſpiritual illumination to them who were as yet ignorant of Chriſt the true light: ſee chap. 1. 78. Mat. 4. 16. for ſo he diſcovered himſelf in deeds, that they might ſee him preſent in his works, of whom they uſed to read in the books of the Prophets. Hilar. can. 3. in Matth. See alſo Mat. 11. 5.

to ſet at liberty them that are bruiſed] The meaning is, to free them who are burdened with ſins, who wreſtling under their heavy weight, have not of themſelves, ſtrength to ſhake them off: who are throughly humbled with the ſenſe of their ſins, and miſeries: ſee Mat. 11. 28.

V. 19. the acceptable year] He alludeth to the year of Jubile, Levit 25 10. &c. ſignifying the time of grace, and reconciliation, wherein God ſetteth us at liberty in Chriſt, and ſheweth his ſpecial goodneſſe on mankind.

V. 20. he gave it again to the Minister] Of that ſynagogue, of whom he had received the ſame. It is ſaid here, ἀποδοὺς τὸ βιβλίον --- cloſing the book; that is, rowling it up again; for they then uſed to write their books in volome or parchment, which they rowled up. See hereof on Mat 2. 1.

and ſat down] It ſeemeth it was then in uſe for teachers to ſit, or ſtand, as occaſion required, Acts 13. 16.

were faſtned on him] With deſire to hear how he would interpret the place of ſcripture which he had read unto them: as alſo for the ſame they had heard of him; who without ſtudy, and ordinary means, became ſo incomparable a teacher. See John 7. 15.

V. 21. this ſcripture is] Or hath been fulfilled in your ears; meaning, that the ſame ſcripture which by his reading, had ſounded in their ears, was fulfilled, in his preaching: he being that perſon of whom the Prophet there ſpake.

V. 22. all bare him witneſſe] All approved and commended his preaching, as extraordinary and admirable.

gracious words] Or words of grace: which by a divine ſweetneſs drew their affection, with ſecret influence, and perſwaſion of the Holy Ghoſt wherewith he was filled, John 1. 14. ſee Pſal. 45. 2. Cant. 4. 3. Iſaiah 50. 4.

V. 23. Physician heal thy ſelf] If thou canſt do any thing, ſhew thy power here in thine own country; for he had done no miracle there: ſee Mark 6. 5. and here verſe 25.

V. 24. No Prophet is accepted] See Mat. 13. 57. Mark 6. 4. John 4. 44. As if he had ſaid; as the Prophets were contemned in their own country: ſo am I here, and therefore, wonder not that I do fewer miracles here than in other places; you may thank your ſelves for this: you contemn me and my miniſtration. This ſheweth that God there withholdeth his graces, where his Miniſters are contemned or undervalued.

V. 25 many widows] See 1 Kings 17 9.

ſhut up] When it rained not in three years and ſix monethes, Jam. 5. 17. that which is ſaid, 1 Kings 18. 1. --- the word of the Lord came unto Elijah in the third year, &c. underſtand of the third year of his living at Zarephath: for it rained not on the earth by the ſpace of three years, and ſix monethes, Jam 5. 17.

V. 26. unto Sarepta] God oftentimes preferreth ſtrangers before them of the houſhold; for he is debtour to no man; therefore the men of Nazareth could not reaſonably claim any privi ledge in Chriſt, becauſe they believed not as others did

V. 27 and many lepers were in Israel] See 2 Kings 5. 14. This appeareth in thoſe four lepers whom hunger emboldened to venture upon the tents of the Aſſyrians beſieguering Samaria, in the Prophet Eliſha's dayes, 2 Kings 7. 3 &c.

V. 28. were filled with wrath] As commonly it cometh to paſſe among formal hypocrites, when their ſins and punishments are touched and ſpoken of.

V. 29. and roſe up] ἀναστάντες, riſing up, and diſmiſſing the aſſembly: going out of the ſynagogue, they thruſt him out of the City.

unto the brow of the hill] To the cliff-ſide, there to deſtroy him; by caſting him down.

V. 30. but he paſſing through the midſt of them, &c.] He eſcaped miraculouſly out of their hands, which probably he did, not by making himſelf inviſible, or any wayes changing the eſſentiall properties of his body; but by his Divine power, making himſelf way through the midſt of his enemies, See Pſalm 18. 29. and that as ſaith Theophylact, ὡ τὸ παθεῖν φιλῶν, ἀλλὰ τὸν καιρὸν ἀναμένων: not to avoid ſuffering (for which he came into the world) but waiting for the appointed time, for his hour was not yet come; John 8. 59.

V 31. He came down to Capernaum] Being ſo evilly and unworthily entreated at Nazaret he did not command fire from Heaven, nor peſtilence to deſtroy them; but leaving all to him that judgeth righteouſly, in purſuit of his miniſtry he goeth to preach the Goſpel at a neighbouring city

V. 32. for his word was with power] That is, full of majeſty and convincing authority: ſo that it ſmote the conſciences of the hearers, with an awfull reverence and fear: as Matthew 7. 29. Mark 1.22.

V. 33. and in the Synagogue, &c.] See Mark 1. 23.

V. 34. let us alone] ἐᾶ, Away, Syr. ſine me; ſuffer me, or let me alone.

V. 35. had thrown them in the midſt] Had thrown the poſſeſſed man in the midſt of the people preſent.

V. 36. what a word is this? τίς λόγος, &c. what thing is this? what power is it, which with a word can doe theſe things? See Matth. 8. 27. Mark 1. 27.

V. 37. the fame of him went out] One telling another what admirable things they had ſeen him do: and hereby God confirmed the Goſpel, and drew men to Chriſt, that they might believe and be ſaved.

V. 38. and he aroſe out of the Synagogue, &c.] See on Matt. 8. 14. Mark 1. 30.

V. 39. ſtood over her] He ſtood by her; and took her by the hand to lift her up, whom he immediately cured.

V. 40. When the Sun was ſetting] See on Matthew 8. 16. and on Mark 1. 32.

V. 41. and the devils] Mark 1. 34.

thou art Chriſt the Son of God] The devils confeſſed him in hope thereby to bring him into ſuſpect with the multitude, therefore Chriſt forbad him to teſtifie of him: for as Tertul. adverſ. Marcion. 4. c. 8. ſaith, Chriſt would have men, not unclean ſpirits to acknowledge him to be the Son of God: he had ſent thoſe before him, who were to manifeſt him, utique digniores prædicatores; that is, more worthy Preachers.

to preach] Or to ſay they knew him to be Chriſt.

V. 42. when it was day] See Mark 1. 35.

V. 43. I muſt preach] Mark 1. 37. ſheweth the occaſion of theſe words; all men ſeek for thee, ſaid the Diſciples to Chriſt: therefore he ſaid unto them, I muſt preach, &c. he was not ſent for one City only, but to be a Saviour of the world.

V. 44. in the Synagogues of Galilee] Herein he giveth us an example of obedience to God; in that he, who might have lived in honour and eaſe in Capernaum, would with much labour and hazard, travel about to preach the Goſpel, and gain ſouls to God.

CHAP. V.

Verſe. 1. AND it came to paſſe] See Matthew, 4. 18. Mark 1. 16.

the people preſſed on him] ἐπικεῖσθαι ſometimes importeth to be inſtant, or importunate; as Luke 23. 23. where it is ſaid of the multitude of the Jewes, requiring Chriſt to be crucified, ἦσαν ἐπικείμενοι --- at illi imminebant, &c. yet here it ſignifieth a preſſing near to, or thronging upon him to ſee and heare him.

lake of Genezareth] which for the greatneſſe, was called the ſea of Galilee, Mat. 4. 18. Mark 1. 16. Geneſareth was a City in the tribe of Nephtali; which Herod beautified with munificent buildings, and called it Tiberias, in honour of Tiberius Ceſar: hence the adjacent region near Capernaum and Bethſaida, Mark 6. 53. as alſo this lake was ſo called. John 6. 1. It was anciently called כנרות Cinneret, and כנרות Chinnereth, Deut. 3. 17. Numb. 34. 11. Joſh. 12. 3. and Chalde גינוסר Ginnoſar, from the corruption of both words, it was called Geneſareth, See on John 21. 1.

V. 2. ſtanding by the lake] That is, lying near the ſhore: this manner of ſpeaking is uſuall with Sea-men, concerning a ſhip under ſail; whereof they ſay, ſhe ſtandeth for the ſhore; or ſuch and ſuch a place: and the Latines uſed to call a road, where ſhips uſed to lie at anchor, ſtationem, ſtatio malè fida carinis.

and were waſhing, &c.] to lay them up to ſome other time: as being for preſent without hope of taking any thing after ſo much labour loſt.

V. 3. And taught the people] This Evangeliſt ſaith not what he taught, but Matt. 4. 17. It appeareth that the ſame was, repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

V. 4. Let down your net, &c.] By this miracle, he will ſhew his new called Diſciples his power, that they might not be offended at his poverty and form of a ſervant, which others contemned and deſpiſed.

V. 5. Maſter, we have toiled, &c. ἐπιστάτης properly ſignifieth him that is chief governour or ruler.

at thy word] according to thy word: at thy command, becauſe thou wouldſt have us ſo to do.

V. 6. A multitude of fiſhes] So Chriſt bleſſed their labour; to teach them to depend on him, and his commands.

V. 7. Began to ſink] That is, as the Syriac readeth: they were neer ſinking, here appeareth an evident motive and cauſe of the Diſciples ſo ſoon leaving their ſhips, nets and callings to follow Chriſt, for they heard his admirable Doctrine, which they thus ſaw confirmed by miracle. See verſe 9. 10.

V. 8. Depart from me] This ſpake he out of conſcience of his owne vilenelſe, and the Divine preſence of Chriſt. See 1 Kings 17. 18.

V. 9. Aſtoniſhed, and all that were with him] Not onely Peter, but the reſt were amazed to ſee the draught of fiſhes; apprehending a divine power in that work: therefore feared they the preſence of Chriſt, by whoſe command all was done.

V. 10. Fear not, from henceforth thou ſhalt catch men] To comfort them, he declareth what ſhall be the effect of his preſence; that they ſhould thereby be enabled by preaching the Goſpel, (which is that great draught-net of Gods Kingdome, Matthew 13. 47.) to draw men out of the bitter floods of ſin to life everlaſting; hereto Chriſt enabled them as he promiſed, Mark. 4. 18. all our ſufficiency is of God. 2 Cor. 3. 5. who therefore did call; and ſo now can all ignorant men, to an effectuall and powerfull Miniſtry of the Word to ſave ſouls: but whom he thus calleth, he doth miraculouſly make able Miniſters of the New Teſtament, 2 Cor. 3. 6. which when the falſe Apoſtles, (who pretend to extraordinary calling) can make appear, that God hath wrought in them, we ſhall believe they are indeed called to preach the Goſpel: one thing is certain, Chriſt never called any idiot or unlearned man (to this Office) to leave him ſuch, but to ſhew a miraculous power in enabling him to that, to which he called him, though Chriſt ſaid this to Peter, (who it ſeemeth out of deeper fence of his own ſins, and the Majeſty of Chriſt ſhining in this miracle, prayed Chriſt to depart from him) yet it was a common grace here promiſed to them all; and ſo no prerogative of Peter; though Chriſt addreſſed this comfort by name to Peter whom he ſaw moſt afraid.

V. 11. Forſooke all and followed him] They were called to be Diſciples before, John 1. 39. but now to be Apoſtles: therefore, though after their firſt hearing Chriſt, they returned to their calling again; yet now they leave all, and follow Chriſt in the Miniſtry of the Goſpel.

V. 12. And it came to paſſe] See Matthew 8. 2. Marke 1. 40.

full of leproſie] this diſeaſe was ſomewhat common in theſe Eaſtern parts, and very hard to be cured: ſo that when Chriſt (by his Word and putting forth his hand to touch him) cured it immediately, the power of his Godhead appeared, which could as eaſily repaire, as create by his Word: See Matthew, 8. 3. &c

V. 13. And touched him] For, as Tertullian ſaith, adv. Marcion. lib. 4. cap 9. he touched him à quo eſſe homo inquinari potuiſſet, Deus utique non inquinatur. By whom though man might be made unclean, God could not.

V. 14. Charged him to tell no man] For the time was not yet come that Chriſt would be glorified, being now in the form of a ſervant: and leſt men who were not yet well acquainted with his Doctrine, ſhould too much depend upon miracles.

goe and ſhew thy ſelfe to the Prieſt] He would not diſſolve the Law, yet in force, but leave them more unexcuſable, in that ſeeing the miracle, they would not believe in Chriſt, See Leviticus, 14. 4. 10.

V. 15. So much more went there a fame of him] They the more admired, and ſpake good of him, becauſe they perceived that he did theſe miracles, neither for gaine nor applauſe of men.

V. 16. Withdrew himſelf] He withdrew himſelfe from the multitude which followed him, leſt he might ſeem to affect popular applauſe, or to move or occaſion fedition againſt the civil magiſtrate; as alſo ſometimes to reſt from labour of preaching and going to and fro to heal the ſick and infirm.

and prayed] thus he manifeſted himſelf God in his miracles, and man in performance of his mediators office, in preaching to, and praying for his.

V. 17. The Phariſees, &c.] See on Chap. 14 1. See Matthew 3. 7.

the power of the Lord was preſent to heale] That is, at this time the power of the Lord thevved it ſelfe in healing the ſicke: it was ever vvith him; but it did not alvvayes ſhevv it ſelfe, as nov vvhen he preached the Goſpel, and for the confirmation thereof, vvrought theſe miracles. See Marke, 6. 5.

V. 18. Men brought in a bed a man, &c.] See on Mat. 9. 2, Mark 2. 3.

V. 19. Let him down through the tiling] διὰ τῶν κεράμων through the pavements: for their houses were flat roofed, and railed, or battlemented according to the lavv. Deut. 22. 8. to secure them from falling off; these pavements layed vvith tarrice, or the like material might keep out all vvet; these they digged or brake through, Mark 2. 4. this setteth out the great faith of these men, and their confidence of Christ his power and vvill to heal their sick: as concerning such pavements, See Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

V. 20. When he saw their Faith] That is, discerned it, the faith of the sick, and the bearers.

man, thy sins are forgiven thee] meaning both guilt and punishment: insinuating, that all misery of body and soul, is an effect of sin, this sick man believed and is to be reckoned among them whose faith our Saviour saw, and therefore he pronounced his pardon, and healed him.

V. 21. And the Scribes and Pharisees] See on chap. 20. 1.

who is this that speaketh blasphemies?] thus they blasphemed in accusing him of blasphemy.

V. 22. Why reason you in your hearts] Why think you such things? by discovering their thoughts, he declareth himself to be God, the καρδιογνώστης Acts 15. 8. searcher of hearts, and therefore that he alone hath power to forgive sins.

V. 23. Thy sinnes be forgiven thee] His Divine Power appeared in the miracle, which when they either knew not, or maliciously dissembled, he repeareth the mans pardon, that thence, and upon their confession of that Principle, that none but God could forgive sinnes, they might conclude, and acknowledge him to be God and Man, and therefore the Saviour of the world.

V. 24. Power to forgive sins] See on Matth. 9.6.

V. 25. He rose up] See on Matt. 9.7.

V. 26. And glorified God] See on Matt. 9.8.

V. 27. After these things he went forth, &c. See on Matt. 9. 9. Mark 2. 14.

sitting, at the receit of Custome] that is, the Custome House, or place where they received Customes, or Impосts due to Cæsar.

V. 28. He left all, rose up, &c.] See Matt. 9.9.

V. 29. A great feast] Thus he expressed the joy of heart conceived from his present calling to follow Christ

V. 30. Murmured] Calumniating him, as if he were a friend of, and companion to the wicked: thus they hoped to discourage his new called Disciples from following him.

V. 31. They that are whole need not the Physician] See on Matt. 9.12. hereby he declareth their irrational malice: they murmured that he conversed with sinners; this was as Augustine saith, de verb. Apost. ser. 8. to find fault, quod in domum ægroti intravit medicus, that the Physitian went to the sick man: Christ came that he might dissolve sinne, the worke of man; and save man, the worke of God.

V. 32. I came not to call the righteous] Those who seem so to themselves: or it may be understood simply; before Christ called and justified them, none were righteous; had any been such, Christ needed not have died for their Redemption. See Matthew, 9. 13. 1 Tim. 1.15. Fulgentius de incarn. & gra D.n. Jesu, c.22. saith well: if that man were not by any means curable, the Heavenly Physitian would not have come to recover him: again, if he could cure himselfe, cælesti medico non egeret, he should not have needed an Heavenly Physitian, if he could by any means have cured himself.

but sinners to repentance] See Matth. 9. 12. That is, to the acknowledgement, confession and detestation of their sins, and to newnesse and Holynesse of life: for Repentance is not onely in saying, I repent, God be mercifull unto me, but in changing our minds, evil purposes and courses of life; and forsaking our sinnes: so the Syriac interpreteth לרוחא latteio butho, ad tonoessionem, rightly, for as Tertullian saith, adverf. Marcion. l. 2. c.24. pœnitentiæ nomen, non ex delicti confessione, sed ex animi demutatione compositum est: the name of Repentance (μετάνοια) is not composed, or derived from Confession of sin, but change of the mind: so the Verb μετανοέω, whence it cometh properly signifieth, post factum sapio; or I so grieve for my errour or offence, that I will endeavour to mend it for the time to come.

V. 33. And they said unto him] See Matt. 9. 14. Mark 2. 18. The Scribes and Pharisees aske this question, v. 30. When their cavil about his company wasted off, they bring a second against his feasting: as if they had said, Why do you and your Disciples feast? Why do you not rather keep some fasting dayes? the Disciples of John came to Christ with the like question: it is likely, that the Scribes and Pharisees fomented the controversie on purpose to make distention between Johns Disciples and Christs: this is the disposition not onely of Hypocrites, but also of some infirm men. John 3. 26. to desire to draw all men to their way, and to obtrude that for a Law to others, which pleaseth themselves, specially in the placing sanctity in things Ceremonial and external: so that Scribes and Pharisees, and Johns Disciples moved this question, and so they are united, Marke 2. 18.

and make prayers] they mean some solemn, extraordinary, and long prayers, such as Pharisees used in the streets and open places, Matt. 6.

V. 34. Can ye make the children of the Bride-chamber fast, &c. Meaning, that now was their time of rejoycing, not of mourning, while Christ their Saviour was with them; and that he would not burden his Disciples with too much rigour, for which they were not yet seasoned, nor more able to bear, than old Vessels to hold new Wine.

V. 35. Shall be taken away from them] He meaneth, that he would not be bodily present with them, after his ascension into Heaven.

then shall they fast] He intimateth the afflictions which his Disciples should endure after his ascension.

V. 36. A parable unto them] see Matt. 9.17. Mark 2.22. παραβολὴ, a comparison or similitude; it is of παραβάλλω, compare, it is here a comparing of Heavenly things with earthly, See on Matt. 13.3: 18, &c.

no man putteth a piece of a new, &c.] See on Matthew, 9. 16, Mark 2.21.

V. 37. No man putteth new Wine] See Matthew, 9. 17. Mark, 2. 22.

V. 38. New Wine must be put into, &c. See Matthew, 9. 17. Mark 2. 22.

V. 39. No man having drunke, &c.] The sum and meaning is; that he disalloweth not seasonable Fasts, (For himselfe fasted) if they be without Hypocrisie, superstition, and vain-glory; but would shew, that men cannot so suddenly beare a change of life, from joy to sorrow; but, must be brought to it by little and little.

the old is better] commonly wholsomer, and to them that are accustomed thereto, more pleasing; so the rule of teaching and living, which Christ prescribed his, was of the Eternal will of God, and accommodated to his Disciples: but the Fasts of the Scribes and Pharisees, as their other externall rites, were later inventions of their Elders.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. AND it came to passe] See Matthew, 12. 1. Mark, 2. 23.

on the second Sabbath] at the feast of Pentecost, when corn was ripe, Leviticus 23. 15. 14, 15, some think; others at the Passeover: for it is said, Leviticus 23. 15. ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath (το. ἀπὸ τῆ ἐπαύριον τῶν σαββάτων. ——unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath, shall ye number) fifty dayes, &c. See also Deuteronomy 16. 9. so that they understand here the morrow after the first Sabbath, or Passeover: but these Feasts contained divers dayes, and so continued two Sabbaths: so that the Sabbath here termed δευτεροπρώτῳ, was the Sabbath next after the sixteenth of Nisan, or אביב Abib, (which signifieth an eare of corn, for herein their corn began to ripen, and this was their first moneth, and contained part of our March, and part of April;) the Jewes counting the forementioned fifty dayes, by numbering the weeks from the δευτέρᾳ; whence the Feast of weeks was named, according to the number of the Sabbaths following the δευτέρᾳ: so the first Sabbath following was δευτεροπρώτῳ σαββάτῳ: the second δευτέρῳ δευτέρῳ: the third δευτερεύτερῳ, &c. See Scaliger. de emend. temp. l. 6. Jo. Druf. praterit. lib. 3. Is. Casaubon. Exercit. 14. n. 1. D. Godwin: Moses and Aaron. lib. 3. cap. 5. The. Beza, on this place.

plucked ears of corn] this was lawful for any to do, Deut. 23. 25. and for them, because they were hungry, Matt. 12. 1. as it was for David in his necessity to eat of the shew-bread, 1 Sam. 21. Rites and Ceremonies may not stand against Charity; which is the end of the Law, 1 Tim. 1. 4.

V. 3. What David did] See on verse 1. and on Matthew, 12. 4.

they which were with him] for though he went alone to the Priest, yet had he attendants staying for him, 1 Sam. 21. 2. 4.

V. 4. Which is not lawfull to eate, &c.] See Leviticus 24. 9.

V. 5. The Son of man, &c.] He that gave this Law interpreteth the works of mercy, and necessity to be no breaches of the Sabbath by, Son of man often importeth man, as Psalm 8. 5. Isaiah, 56. 2. so saith Athanasius. de com. essent. patris, &c. ἀνθρωπίνως εἶπεν, ὑιὸν ἀνθρώπου, his Humane nature, the Son of man, Christ conversant as man with man, in the form of a servant: the Hebrewes called obscure and vulgar men בני אדם bene adam, and the more illustrious and honourable בני איש so Psalm 49. 2. which give low and high. Ezekiel, is often stiled בן־אדם Sonne of man, c. 2. 1. & 3. 1. &c. Christ willingly professed Humility, who could have stiled himself the Son of the most High, intimating his Glory: but thus he would for a time be clouded under the vail of his flesh, in which he came to suffer for men, that he might make them the Sons of God, was withered] After his former works, and doctrine concerning the Sabbath, he now proved by the testimony of God the Father, whose power concurred in this following miracle also, that he taught the truth: this poor mans hand was dead and useless, before Christ healed it: so Jeroboams hand was withered, 1 Kings 13. some take it for the disease which the Greeks called ἀτροφίαν, a tabes, pining, drying up, and withering for lack of natural moysture to nourish and strengthen the distasted part.

V. 6 On

V. 6. On another Sabbath] Matth. 12. 9. Mark 3. 1.

V. 7. Scribes] See on c. 20. 1.

Watched him] seeing they could not fasten their calumny on the Disciples, they watched an occasion to accuse Christ of Sabbath-breaking: malice is as restless as the Devil.

V. 8. Knew their thoughts] Whereby his Divine knowledge might appear: for God onely knoweth the thoughts of men, 1 Kings 8. 39.

stand forth in the middest] that the miracle might be evident, in that all present, seeing his withered hand sodainly changed, and recovered, onely by his Word, might be convicted, or confirmed by the sight of that cure, which none but God could work.

V. 9. I will aske you one thing] The Scribes and Pharisees had questioned, whether it were lawfull to heal on the Sabbath. Matthew 12. 10. Now Christ asked them a question; is it lawfull on the Sabbath dayes to doe good: taking that for granted which all would confesse, that it is indisputably good to shew mercy and to heal: the whole controversie was concerning the Circumstance of time; now indeed as Prosper saith, male celebrat Sabbatum, qui ab operibus bonis vacat, he mis-celebrateth the Sabbath, who resteth from good works, and he here putteth ψυχὴν, for life: (for concerning saving of Souls on the Sabbath, there was no question) So נפש is often used for the life, though it properly signifie the soul, Genesis 9. 4. Leviticus 17. 11. Lamentations 5. 9. 1 Chron. 11. 19, &c. and sometimes a Person Genesis 12. 5. Genesis 46. 15, &c.

V. 10. Looking round] Upon his convicted adversaries, as it were to see, if any would answer, he looked with anger. See Mark 3. 5.

V. 11. Filled with madnesse] That is, extreme anger and impatience; such is the condition of carnall and proud hearers, when any thing spoken crosseth their affection, or opinion, though never so erroneous.

V. 12. Continued all night, &c.] To teach us vigilancy and perseverance in prayer: what oughtest thou to do for thine own salvation: seeing Christ spent whole nights in prayer for thee? Ambros. in luc. l. 5. c. 6.

V. 13. And of them he chose twelve] Of them that followed him he chose, according to the number of the Tribes of Israel and the Patriarchs. Matt. 10. Mark 3. 14. & 6. 7.

Apostles] the word signifieth Ambassadours, or Messengers, see 2 Corinth. 5. 20. So Clemens Romanus said well, ὁι κοπιῶντες μᾶλλον ἐναγωνιῶσιν ἀπὸ τῆ Κυρίου ἵνα ὦσι χρήσιμοι, &c. the Apostles being sent by Christ Jesus preached the Gospel to us, as Christ did being sent of God: ad Corinth. ep. pag. 54. he therefore chose these Apostles, (being to ascend into Heaven) that he might commit the charge of preaching the Gospel unto them; and that he might commit the charge of preaching the Gospel unto them; and that he might teach men by mans Ministry, sufficiently confirmed by the efficacy of his spirit and power of miracles.

V. 14. whom he named Peter] John 1. 22. Matthew, 10. 2.

V. 15. Simon called Zelotes] Or the Canaanite, Matthew, 10. 4.

V. 16. And Iudas Iscariot] See on Matth. 10. 4. and John 6. 71. Judas the traytour is chosen unto this Office, non per improvidentiam, sed per providentiam: not by ignorance, but by providence, Ambrof. in Luc. l. 5. c. 6. How great is the mercy of Christ, how great his love to us? He took on him the infirmity of man, and therefore refused not these parts thereof: Voluit deseri, voluit prodi, voluit ab Apostolo suo tradi, &c. He would (for our sakes) be forsaken; he would be betrayed by his own Apostle; to the end, that if thou be forsaken of friends, or betrayed by those thou trustest; thou mayest patiently beare the errour of thy judgement, and losse of thy love and good opinion placed on the unworthy.

V. 17. came down with them] That which Luke here recordeth, seemeth some part of that which Christ taught, Matthew 5. 1, &c. though there it be said, that he went up into the mountain, and sate and taught: for he first went up and stood, and taught a smaller company. See Mark 3. 13. but perceiving greater confluences of people coming to heare, he descended from the top, for their better convenience of hearing him; and sate down upon the edge of some Plain, which was more capacious.

V. 18. they were healed] Therefore descended he, that he might teach and heal, ᾗ διδακὼν ἐναργέστερον Theophylact, and bestow a double benefit on their souls and bodies.

V. 19. there went vertue out of him] He had power of healing all that touched him by Faith, because he was God and Man: the Prophets and other Saints had the gift of healing, but vertue did not so goe out of them, for they were not πηγαὶ ἀναπαύσεως the Fountaines of Vertue, Theophylact. See on Mark 5. 30. and Luke 8. 46.

V. 20. on his Disciples] For, them chiefly would he instruct, incourage, and fit to be teachers of the Word: though not them only, See verse 27.

poore] Poore in Spirit, Matthew, 5. 3. That is, you, who being humbled with external or spiritual wants or pressures, wholly betake your selves to Gods mercy and providence. See on Matthew 5. 3.

V. 21. hunger now] Isaiah 65. 13. Whose present afflictions being sanctified unto you, cause you to aspire to a better estate in Gods Kingdome, and to set your affections on things above, which causeth you to hunger and thirst for righteousnesse, Matth. 5. 6. however these may seem to ignorant men, non possunt tamen esse aliud quam beati, Salvian. de gub. Dei l. 1. yet can they be nothing lesse than happy.

that weep now] Isaiah 61. 3. In this present life: but he speaketh all this concerning the Elect. which shall Eternally be comforted: neither the wicked poor, nor sorrowful, can be blessed, See Psalm 126. 1.

V. 22. and cast out your name, as evil] This further expresseth what he meant by separation, or casting out of their Synagogue, John 16. 2. when they expunge and put out your names from the Register of Gods people: This is a dreadful sentence, and the thunder of the Church, when denounced on just cause, and by the true Ministers of Christ: if otherwise, whatever men thinke, they are blessed who keep not company with the wicked. Psalm 1. 1. &c. nemo enim alteno censu miser est si sit suo, Salvian q. s. therefore can they not be unhappy in the false judgement of any man, who are truly blessed in their own conscience.

for the Son of mans sake] That is, falsely calumniating you for your profession of Christ: this is to bear his reproach; Hebrews 13. 13. if any suffer deservedly for his faults, what thanks shall he have, 1 Pet. 4. 13. 14. &c.

V. 23. leap for joy] As men surprized with abundant joy: intimating the certainty and fulnesse of their joy in Heaven, who here suffer any injury for Christ his sake; Greek σκιρτήσατε ἐκείνῃ, Salio, salio, it signifieth such a leaping as wanton cattle use, and thence is taken to expresse such a rejoycing as so affecteth one, that he cannot but leap for joy, and sometimes spoken of things inanimate; as Psalm 114. 4. 6. τὰ ὄρη ἐσκίρτησαν ὡσεὶ κριοὶ —— the mountains skipped like Rams —— So the Hebrew word רקד signifieth exilivit, exultavit præ gaudio. So Michal danced at the coming of the Ark to Bethel מרקד saltantem: 1 Chron. 15. 29. which 2 Sam. 6. 14. is given, in morem capræ saltabat Ad Mont.

V. 24. Wo unto you that are rich] Meaning those who trust in riches and serve them. Amos 6. 1. James 5. 1. or those who being rich are unthankful to God, or uncharitable and evil to men: non enim ignorat, sed affectus in crimine est, Ambros. in Luc. l. 5. c. 7. wealth is not in fault, but the affections of men: such have had their consolation here, and cannot reasonably expect it hereafter, who trust in them, make them their God, or any wayes abuse them to sinne.

V. 25 Woe unto you that are full] See Isaiah, 32. 9. Isaiah, 65. 13. Amos 6. 1. Isaiah, 28. 7, 8. Ezekiel, 16. 49.

you that laugh] That live at ease, and in pleasures, distracting you from the service of God.

V. 26. when all men speake well of you] Either, when wicked men speake well of you, which shall then onely be, when you are like them: or when you affect the praise of men, and give not God the Glory in all things: or because it is very hard to hold Humility in generall applauses: For the first, Augustine saith, truely, nemo enim laudat, nisi q. od ei placet; in Psalm 48. for the last, Ignatius Epist. ad Trall. saith, μὴ ἐκκαλύπτε, μισεῖσθαι; they that praise me, scourge me: and Augustine To. 4. de sermonine in mont. Si ergo inter quos vivis te relle viventem non laudaverint, illi in errore sunt: si autem laudaverint, in periculo: if thy neighbours amongst whom thou liveſt well, praise thee not: they are in errour, but if they doe, thou art in danger.

V. 27. For I say unto you, &c.] See Matthevv, 5. 44. Romans 12. 20.

V. 29. unto him that smiteth thee, &c.] See Mat. 5. 39. Meaning, be more ready to bear new injuries, than to avenge the old: it is not bearing, but doing injuries which maketh a man unhappy; See 1 Cor. 6. 7.

V. 30. aske them not again] That is, not by any violent, or unlavvful means of recovery: otherwise, the use of Lavv and Magistrates is not denied Christians.

V. 31. as ye vvould that men should doe to you, &c.] See Matt. 7. 12.

V. 32. For if you love them, &c.] See Matthew, 5. 46.

what thanks have ye?] What revvard can ye expect from God? it is no good vvork vvhich onely self-love, carnal respects, or desire of like favour from others causeth.

V. 34. And if ye lend] See Matt. 5. 42.

for sinners,] Such as have no fear of God to lead them to these civil offices.

V. 35. Love your enemies] Matt. 5. 44.

hoping for nothing again] This is to be understood with respect to mens abilities to give to the poor, as also that verse 30. So that if mens abilities to give to the poor, as also that verse 30. So that if men neighbours needsitates require, and we be able, we must lend without Hope of being repayed by them: and in other cases we must not violate Charity, nor give scandal in requiring our debts. See Isai. 58. 3.

your reward shall be great] It may be men will requite us with injuries, or be unthankfull: it is sufficient that God will reward; for labour be lost on the wicked, yet shall not our reward be lost with a just God.

V. 36. as your Father, &c.] See on Matt. 5. 48.

V. 37. Judge not, and, &c.] See on Matt. 7. 1.

V. 38. with the same measure] See Matt. 7. 2.

V. 39. blind, lead, &c.] Matt. 15. 14.

V. 40. The Disciple is not, &c.] Matt. 10. 24.

V. 41. a mote in thy, &c.] A small fault in thy brother, and canst not see thine own great sins. See on Matt. 7. 3.

V. 42. hypocrite] See on Chap. 13. 15.

cast out first] First amend thine own faults, and then shalt thou be a more competent and fit reprover of other mens; See on Matthew, 7. 4.

V. 43. a good tree, &c.] As it be said, deceive not thy self, thou art not good, when thou dost evil; See Matt 7. 16.

V. 44. for every tree] Matt. 12. 33.

of thorns] Matt. 7. 16.

V. 45. A good man] Matt. 12. 35.

of the abundance] Matt. 12. 34.

V. 46. Why call ye me Master, &c.] See Matt. 7. 21. Mal. 1. 6. The meaning is, you doe in vaine professe your selves hearers of my Word, except you doe indeede that which I command therein.

V. 47. and doth them] See on Matt. 7. 24.

V. 48. when the flood arose] He means by this metaphor to declare, that temptations will shew how every man hath profited in hearing the word, and that they shall put a manifest difference between the Hypocrite, and the true Disciple of Christ.

CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. He entred into Capernaum] Matt. 8. 5.

V. 2. a certain Centurions servant] A captain of an hundred; he is not named; but it is likely that his company was in garison at Capernaum.

sicke and ready to die] Matth. 8. 6. The disease is specified; it was a paralysis or palsie; which oft-times bereaveth of sense and motion.

V. 3. he sent unto him the Elders, &c.] Matthew saith he came unto him: whereby it appeareth, that Matthew attributed to him, that which was done in his Name, and by his request: these whom he sent, were not vulgar or ordinary messengers, but Elders of the Jews called their Senatours and Magistrates of Cities; such as for years and authority were most reverend: probably he had heard of so great a Prophet risen among them, who could, and readily would cure all diseases: therefore first he sent, then came himself to Christ, Matt. 8. 13.

V. 4. saying he was worthy] This maketh nothing for merits of works before God (our merits are dona Dei, the gifts of God, as Alvinus hom. 8. post. pentecost. well observeth after Augustin. ep. 105.) well doe these men acknowledge this benefit received, commending the Centurions love to their Nation, and beneficence towards them, as intending this for a motive whereby to entreat Christ to helpe him, though he were a Heathen, and a Souldier.

V. 5. a Synagogue] Or Church: it seemeth he was a Proselyte; this word is from the Greek συνάγω, to gather together: and συναγωγὴ, though it be used to other matters, yet here, as commonly in the Gospel, it is taken for an house dedicated to the service and worship of God, as preaching, prayer, &c. the Hebrewes called it בית הכנסת beth hacneseth, the house of assembly: so the Syriac here calleth it בית כנשתא beth cenusheta: it cometh of the Hebrew word כנס Syr. כנס canas, cenas, or נגש cenash: which signifieth, to assemble or gather together, Hist. 4. 16. &c. the Temple at Jerusalem was as the Cathedrall Church, the Synagogues as parish-Churches, for the ease of the people, who could not come every Sabbath-day up to Jerusalem: there they offered sacrifices, but in their Synagogues they might not.

V. 6 sent friends unto him saying] That is, to say in his Name.

trouble not thy self] Weary not thy self in taking so much pains to come to an unworthy man. See Mat. 8. 8.

V. 7. but say in a word] Command that it be so, and I am confident, it shall be done See Psalm 44. 4.

V. 8. a man set under authority] See Matt. 8. 9.

V. 9. marvelled] Matt. 8. 10 This is not to be understood of admiration properly taken, which is from ignorance of the cause, but of affecting and declaring a thing which was notable, and admirable to common reason; as that this Centurion being but an alien, should excel all the Israelites (which had hitherto believed in Christ) in his profession of Faith: thus would Christ provoke them to believe. See Rom. 10. 19.

V. 10. found the servant whole] This, Matt. 8. 11. 12, 13. is more largely Historified.

V. 11. Naim] Which was a town of Galilee in the tribe of Issachar, not far from Tiberias; at the foot of mount Hermon; about four miles from Capernaum.

V. 12. there was a dead man carried] So soon as he had cured the sick, he presently doth a more admirable work in raising the dead: all things were possible to him, and he omitted no opportunity of doing good.

V. 13. Weep not] Not forbidding natural affection, but allaying her sorrow, by comfort offered, as, 1 Thess. 4. 13. and not onely in word, but in taking away the cause and occasion of her present sorrow.

V. 14. touched the bier] Or coffin, wherein the dead body was born toward the grave: this probably he did, that they which bare it might stay; and that the sorrowful mother, and others present might be the more attentive to observe the admirable power of his Word, restoring the dead to life again, that they might believe in him to Eternal life, who is the resurrection and the life. See John 11. 25.

I say unto thee] I command thee by that power which I have in Heaven and Earth, over the living and the dead, that thou live and arise to life again: these examples of Christs power, are our assurances of his raising up the dead in the generall resurrection.

V. 15. sate up and began to speake] This declared the evidence of the miracle, and a preludium of that which Christ saith, John 5. 28. 29. the houre is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voyce, and shall come forth, &c.

V. 16. there came a fear] Because of their sense of a Divine presence shewing it self in his raising the dead: it intimateth a more thankefull and more reverend Opinion, which they began to have of Christ, in whom they saw so divine a power.

hath visited his people] The present estate of the Jews was calamitous, and servile as if God had forsaken them: their comfort was, that he would send the Messias to repair them: therefore from this which they saw done by Christ, they conclude that God now began to look upon them, in that (as they conceived) he had sent them a great Prophet, as a forerunner of their expected deliverer: so weake and perplexed was their Faith, in expectation of a glorious Temporall Messias, and an Earthly Monarchy. See Chap. ter 1. 68.

V. 17. This manner of rumour] That is, that God had now visited them, and raised them up a great Prophet.

V. 18. The Disciples of John shewed him, &c.] See Matt. 11. 2. They probably were moved with some envie and emulation; as, John 3. 26. supposing that the fame of Jesus somewhat obscured the honour of John, whom they might possibly hope to be the Messias and restorer of Israel.

V. 19. he that should come] The expected Messias and Redeemer; which John was assured of: but this he did to instruct and confirm his Disciples in the Faith of Christ, by their own experience of his power working such miracles, as none but God could do; and it is very likely, that they out of infirmity and perverse zeal to Johns honour, might cause him to send them to Christ to be fully satisfied, in that which he saith unto them, John 3. 27. 28; &c.

V. 21. in the same houre he cured many, &c.] At the very time that these messengers of John came to Christ, the providence of God so disposed, that they should see many cured of such feveral and desperate maladies, that their incredulity might be convinced, not by Johns words only, but also by the Divine works of Christ: and it is observable, that by the same providence, John baptist, greater than a Prophet, should yet herein be lesse than divers of the Prophets that he did no miracle. John 10. 41. while Christ (as also the Apostles afterwards) did many that Johns Disciples might the more easily be transmitted to Christ; who possibly might otherwise have been too tenacious of that suspition which then amazed most men, chap. 3. 15.

V. 22. tell John what things ye have seen, &c.] Without any ostentation of himself, he appealeth to their own senses and reports, that they might conclude by that which was done and said, that those things which the Prophets long before spake concerning the Messias, were now done by Christ. See Isaiah 35. 5. 6. Isa. 61. 1.

to the poor of the Gospel, &c.] That is, such as are of obscure and poor condition in the world: who feel their own misery and disability to stand in Gods judgement.

V. 23. offended in me] Who shall not stumble at my state of Humiliation, as a Rock of offence: See Matth. 21. 42. Acts 4. 11. Romans 9. 33. 1 Cor. 1. 23. 1 Pet. 2. 7. 8. Psalm 118. 22. See on Matth. 11. 6.

V. 24. he

V. 24. he began to speak unto the people] How Johns disciples behaved themselves toward Christ, or what they answered, none of the Evangelists record: but Christ addresseth his discourse to the people present, to let them know that John baptist (one of his witnesses) was above exception, and constant for the truth, lest they should think him imprisoned for any evill by him committed.

a reed shaken with the winde] That is an inconstant man, or a thing of little moment.

V. 25. a man clothed in soft raiment] See on Mat. 11. 8. a libertine or voluptuous liver: these interrogations have the value of a certain appeal to their own knowledges, as if he had said, did not your selves ever finde him a man of a most temperate, stayed, and austere life, void of all pride and delicacy, or ambition?

V. 26. more than a Prophet] That is, an extraordinary or excellent Prophet: for he had the honour to be the immediate forerunner of the Messias, to prepare his way, and to shew him present. See on Mat. 11. 9.

N. 27. Behold I send my &c.] Mal. 3. 1.

V. 28. there is not a greater] In office; because he did not (as the former Prophets) onely tell of Christ to come, but pointed him out, John 1. 29. See on Mat. 11 11.

in the kingdom of God] See on Mat. 11. 11. The meaning is, in the new state of the Church, under the perfecter light of the Gospel, in which the glory of God shineth: the meanest minister of Christ, who preacheth the fulfilling of those things which John saw not, is in that regard greater than John: so that here is not a comparison of the persons, but of their kinde of doctrine. Or if we understand it of the kingdom of glory; the least therein is greater than the greatest mortal man.

V. 29. justified God] Meaning they gave witnesse to the truth of God; and acknowledged him just, gracious, and merciful according to the preaching of John, whose doctrine they had embraced.

V. 30. the Pharisees] See on chap. 14. 1. The proud and arrogant Pharisees (as many now do) thought themselves the most knowing men, and too good to be bettered with any teaching: therefore they rejected the counsel of God, &c. So the Syriack interpreteth with us: but the word ἠθέτησαν here used hath a more emphatical significatian: ἀθετεῖς, is irritas, ineptus, inutilis, and ἀθετέω imporeth to abolish, as Gal. 2. 21. to despise, John 12. 48. Jude 8. to abrogate so, that it seemeth they rejected the ordinance of God, baptisme, and the word declaring his counsel for mans salvation by Christ, as a vain foolish and unprofitable thing. See 1 Cor. 2. 14.

against themselves] To their own losse and destruction, which they did in themselves, by their unbelief and contempt of the Gospel, which declareth the counsel of God for mans salvation. See Acts 20. 27.

V. 31. Whereunto then] See on Mat. 11. 16. This double quere importeth a vehemency of our Saviours speech, reproving the Jews contumacy, and invincible hardnesse of heart, wilfully rejecting the grace of God, who used all means to reduce them, but they would not. This manner of speaking then concludeth neither ignorance, nor any hesitancy in Christ, as if he knew not to whom readily to compare or liken them, but a certain appeal to themselves; as if he had said, do you know any thing in the world so perverse and peevish as this generation? not that he condemneth all, (God had his elect among them still) but the Pharisees and Lawyers; and their followers who rejected the grace and mercy of God offered them in the Gospel of Christ. See chap. 13. 18. 20.

V. 32. children sitting in &c.] See on Mat. 11. 15. The meaning is, that whatever means God proposeth to save the wicked, and however mercifully he complyeth with their infirmities, yet their obstinacy will find some let to their reception of the Gospel.

V. 33. Neither eating bread] He lived not according to the ordinary custom of men; but alone in the wildernesse. Matth. 3. converseing with few men, being of a most adstemious and austere life and conversation.

V. 34. Eating and drinking] That is, conversing friendly with men: John was a retired man: but Christ used a more gracious familiarity, and they, who then most professed sanctity and religion, calumniated both: and would not believe their preaching.

V. 35. But wisdom] But yet they who are truly wise, embrace that as the wisdom of God to salvation, which carnal men account the foolishnesse of preaching. 1 Cor. 1, 21. Rom. 1. 16.

V. 36. One of the Pharisees desired him] See Mark 14. 3. & Luke 14. 1. it appeareth hereby that this Simon, though a Pharisee, was yet none of Christs violent enemies, neither any despiser of Christ his coming into the world, to call and save sinners (1 Tim. 1. 15.) yet had he a good esteem of his person, and reverend esteem of his doctrine, therefore Christ went to his house.

and sate down to meat] That is, according to their manner, lying on pallets covered like tables, and leaning on the left elbow. See Ifs. Casaubon exerc. 16. n. 36.

V. 37. Behold a woman] The circumstances shew, that this was not she who is historified. Mat. 26. 6. and John 11. 2. who anointed the Lord with ointment; for that was a little before his passion, but this was a good time before it.

which was a sinner] an harlot: a woman of notorious levity, a bad liver, it is likely that she had heard John Baptist, or Christ preaching repentance, grace, mercy and free remission of sins by faith in Christ; and seeing, or hearing of his works; believed him to be the very Saviour of the world: therefore came she, as the sick to the Physician.

V. 38. At his feet behind him] They lying down to meat as ver. 36. she had convenience to weep upon his feet.

and anointed them] See on ver. 46.

V. 39. He spake within himself] That is, he thought, as Fulgentius ad Monim. l. 3. interpreteth; nihil aliud est apud se dicere, quam apud se cogitare.

what manner of woman] The Pharisee had respect to the law, concerning their pollution, who touched the polluted. Num. 19. 22. he knew not the gracious mercy of God in Christ. Here was Simons failing: he thought the staines of sin so absolutely indelible, that what this sinner had been, she must be reputed still, not considering the power and mercy of God, converting sinners; making their scarlet sins white as snow; and them, new creatures, and therefore he concluded that it became not a Prophet to permit such a one to touch him: hence proceeded another foul errour, that Christ did not know what condition she was of, and therefore that he was no Prophet, he might have considered that God reserved many things from the knowledge of the Prophets, but errours are fruitful.

V. 40. Jesus answering] That is, said: the Hebrews to speak of him that beginneth a discourse: but here it properly betokeneth, that Christ being truly God the searcher of hearts, answered to the Pharisees prejudicate thoughts, and so shewed himself to be not only a knower of the external condition of others, which Prophets may be, but a knower and discerner of the thoughts of the heart, which only God can be.

V. 41. A certain Creditor] The scope of this parable is, by proportion to shew. 1. That, what, or how little lover a man oweth to God, he is ever unable to make payment, and to satisfie his justice. 2. That as the debtor (whether of a greater, or smaller sum) is absolutely discharged of the whole debt, if his creditor (that is God) forgive him all; and therefore are no more to be condemned as sinners: such are all they who truly believe in Christ for their justification. See Rom. 5. 1 Rom. 8. 1. 33, 34. this, Simon who looked only on the law, knew not.

V. 43. Thou hast rightly judged] From this principle of common reason Christ would make him understand, and condemn his own rash judgment: and therefore spake he in a parable, that he might behold, as it were the sin under a cloud.

V. 44. Seest thou this woman] Whom thou contemnest and condemnest as unworthy of this presence: yet she hath done more than thy self, who hast neglected some small and ease things in thy entertainment.

thou gavest me no water] It was their manner of entertaining strangers in those hot regions to give them water for their feet, to wash and cool them. Gen. 18. 4. & 19. 2. Judg. 19. 21. this Simon neglected: but the woman washed his feet with tears of repentance, most acceptable to God, who would not the death, but conversion of sinners; at which, the Angels in heaven rejoyce. chap. 15. 7.

and wiped them with the hairs of her head] this was a token of her repentance: the unchast women are very careful and industrious in adorning their heads, which this convert so much neglected now, that she cast off all dressings, and useth her dishevelled hair to the meanest office, the wiping of his feet which she had wet with tears.

V. 45. Thou gavest me no kisse] Which was the usual manner of salutations with the people of those parts. Rom. 16. 16. 1 Cor. 16. 20. 2 Cor. 13. 12. 1 Pet. 5. 14.

to kisse my feet] This shewed her humility, the surest ground of true conversion to Christ: God giveth grace to the humble.

V. 46. My head with oyl, &c. That is, with ointment made of oyl, and other sweet ingredients: it seemeth their custom was, at solemn feasts, to pour sweet ointment on the heads of their guests, this Simon neglected; but this convert anointed his feet, thus use the proud to condemn others, of whom themselves come short in duties to God.

V. 47. Her sinnes which are many] Many, that is, as Euthymius well interpreteth, all: for where God forgiveth one sin, he forgiveth all.

are forgiven her] here is no satisfaction on her part, but free remission on Gods: to ver. 42. ἐχαρίσατο, he frankly, and freely forgave both.

for she loved much] as this forgiveness of so great a debt of sinne; is a just cause of much love; so was that so great love a certain Argument from the effect, of her sins remission: for where God remiteth great sins, he also sheddeth abroad great love in the converts heart: fo that Christ alledgeth her love to God, not as a Cause, but as a certain consequence of her sinnes remission, remission, and so was she (as Nazianzen said of Cyprian, orat. 18 πολυς ὁ ἀνθρωπος, ἡ πολλὴ ἐν ἁμαρτίαις, abundant in sin, but more in sanctity.

V. 48 Thy sins are forgiven thee] She came with faith, but wanted comfort for her afflicted soul (which her abundant tears declared) as appeareth in his pronouncing peace to her, verse 50, and thus she heareth the judges voyce absolving her, whose preventing free grace gave her confidence to flye to the sanctuary of his mercy.

V. 49. To say within themselves] ἐν ἑαυτοῖς may be as much as πρὸς ἀλλήλους, among themselves; it skilleth not much whether of these we here understand: they thought what they said, and Christ equally knew both. See on ver. 39.

Who is this?] as in contempt of his person, bearing the form of a servant, Phil. 2. and truly reflying, that none can forgive sins, but God only. Mark 2. 7. sale of indulgences and pardons of sins by men, is but beguiling of ingnorant souls,

V. 50 Thy faith hath saved thee] To confirm her and to stop the gainsayers mouthes, he commendeth her faith, which alone can justify us before God, and bring us assurance of our reconciliation with him; this is to be understood of faith which worketh by love. Gal. 5. ever fruitful of good works: neither is our peace and salvation in the merit of faith, but in the sole merit of Christ apprehended by faith go in peace] As chap 8. 48. peace of conscience; which ever goeth with remission of sins and justification (Mark 5. 34 Rom. 5. 1.) both which he specified, ut de præterito sit solicitus, & secura de futuro, soliciteus for her sins past (that she neither relapse, nor become proud in forgetting them) and secure for the future; (that he who had once freely pronounced her pardon, would never recall it) Bernard. Serm. in fest. B. Magd.

CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. EVery city and village] For being assigned of God, to the office of a Saviour, to seek that which was lost; he would not expect that sinners should seek him: but as a good shepherd, he is found of them that sought him not, offering mercy, and preventing with his grace. See Rom 10. 20. Isai. 65. 1.

the glad tidings of the kingdom] Of the kingdom of grace here, and glory in the world to come. that is, of mans reconciliation to God by Christ, free pardon of sins, justification, and salvation to those, who were exiles and aliants from his kingdom. See Mat. 3. 2. Rom. 14. 17. Col. 1. 13.

V. 2. Mary Magdalene] This other name he addeth to distinguish her from that Mary which was Martha's sister. chap. 10. and others of the same name, mentioned in the Gospel: these seemeth to have had this name, as Suidas; and some others say so from the place: some say from a village called Magdala, (which seemeth probable from chap. 24. 10. where the denominative is first put, ἡ Μαγδαληνὴ Μαρία. Magdalen Mary; as it were Mary of Magdala) or from a castle or tower, which the Hebrewes called מגדל migdal, Chaldæ. מגדל magdal. Genes. 11. 4. &c. others reject this opinion as improbable; see the learned Is. Casaubon. Exercit. 16. n. 1. That Christ cast seven Devils out of her, and a legion out of others, we may without controversie conclude the Divine Power of Christ, out of whose hands no power of hell can take his elect, John 10. as also our comfort in that Christ redeemeth sinners out of conditions so hopelesse and desperate, as was this womans.

V. 3. Herods steward] ἐπιτρόπου Ἡρῴδου, procuratoris Herodis: Pomponius Latus saith, that unto Cæsars steward was all his personal estate committed: there was also an officer so called, whose power and trust was such, as that what he did, stood ratified, as if Cæsar had done or confirmed it under his own hand, Feneſtella de Magiſtr. Roman. c. 26. this our Evangelist here mentioneth to shew, that God can, and sometimes doth call some out of the most impious societies of men. See Phil. 4.

of their substance] in token of their gratitude to him: this received he (though he that could feed so many thousands with few loaves and fishes; and cause the fish to bring him tribute money; could as easily have rather given them riches and all other necessaries) that their reward might be the greater: that he might leave an example, that it is but just for those who administer spiritual things to receive the temporal of their hearers: hee pronounceth the labourer worthy of his hire; and threateneth them who receive not, and relieve not his Ministers.

V. 4. Much people] See Mat 13. 2.

V. 5. A sower went out] See on Mat. 13. 3.

by the wayes side] See on Mat. 13. 4.

V. 6. Some fell upon a rock] See on Matthew 13. 5. Greek. ἐπὶ τὴν πετραν---on the rock, which Mat. 13 5 is, ἐπὶ τὰ πετρωδη---upon stony, or rocky places; both to the same sense, as the Syriack giveth it in both places by, ceciderunt supra שעא Petram or Saxum. the scope and purpose is to shew, that hardnesse of auditors hearts causeth that so few of them bring forth fruits to faith, conversion, and perseverance to maturity of good resolutions', which the word worketh in them sometimes for a little season and then they wilt away again and come to nothing; and also why the word preached which worketh powerfully on some that hear it, nothing, to no good purpose, moveth others; the reason is, because of the heardnesse of their hearts.

V. 7. Among thorns] See on Mat. 13. 7.

V. 8. Other fell on good ground] Mat. 13. 8.

V. 9. Ears to hear] To understand and believe these things.

V. 10. In parables] Mat. 13. 3. That is, dark speeches: the curse was on them. Isai. 6. 9. Mat. 13. 13. &c. because they would not understand and obey. Gods word shal never want effect, it will be a savour of life to life, or of death to death to the hearers. 2 Cor. 2. 16.

V. 11. The parable is this] That is, it signifieth or representeth this: and so understand the applications following, (is) doth not always in Scripture signifie an existence a literal or real being: but sometimes a similitude, Sacramental representation, and likeneſse: God soweth when he causeth his word to be preached by his Prophets, Apostles, and Ministers: see 1 Cor. 3. 5, 6, &c. the field representeth the hearers, Mat. 13. 38. 1 Cor 3. as there are divers veins of earth some fruitful, some barren; so is it with hearers: some bring forth to newnesse of life, and salvaion: some not amending, grow worse, and nearer the curse for their contempt of Gods word, Heb. 6 7, 8.

V. 12. The word out of their hearts] The meaning is; Satan took out of their hardened hearts the word which they heard; lest lying still in their memories, like seed in the ground, it should at last take root, and convert them.

V. 13. With joy] Who take pleasure in hearing the promises in Gods word concerning eternal and temporal blessings, in which they would be glad to share, though they hate to live the life of the righteous. See Numb. 23. 10.

for a while believe] Because it was not rooted in Gods truth and love, but on temporal ends, and respects meerly mercenary; these failing, their seeming faith withered: and here, to the heat of the sun, is affliction, tentation and persecution resembled; for as the kindly heat and influence thereof maketh fruitful, and ripeneth the well-rooted corn; but burneth that which is not on good earth: so do afflictions, &c. More confirm, make fruitful, and ripe for God, the elect and true believers; but causeth formal hypocrites to fall quite away: here appeareth the difference between temporary, or seeming faith, and that which is true and justifying, which never falleth away, or is finally lost: because he that believeth, hath already everlasting life, John 3. 36. Again, the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. Rom 11. 29. Again, Christ prayeth for the elect, that their faith may not fail. chap. 22. 32. so that though they who seem to believe, may, and do fall away; yet they who truly do believe, shall never, vera fides remitti potest, amitti non potest, true faith may sometimes have lesse evidence, but can never be quite lost.

V. 14. Go forth, &c.] Return home to their affairs; and the cares and pleasures of this world, leave no place for the word of God to grow in their hearts, nor any leisure to think of it.

V. 15. Honest and good heart] That which God hath made to who taketh away the stony heart, and giveth an heart of flesh: so that here is not mentioned any cause, but a certain consequence, of a fruitful and good heart, it is true, that God only who giveth the increase, giveth faith and obedience towards the word; but wherever he giveth such an heart, he also giveth grace to retain and hold fast the word which shall bring forth good fruits.

with patience] With perseverance unto the end: these bring forth fruits of sanctification to some maturity. Rom. 2. 7.

V. 16. No man lighteth] See Matthevv 5. 15. Mark 4. 21. Luke 11. 33. he warneth his to doe good with the light they have, and shall receive, that it might guide men according to the intent of the giver,

V. 17. For nothing is secret] See Matt. 10. 26. Mark 4. 22. Luke 12. 2. 1 Cor. 4. 5. the meaning is, that though their preaching was yet but of obscure beginnings, and clouded by the malitious oppositions of adversaries, yet it should once gloriously break out and shine to the world, whereby the secret machinations of wicked and hypocriticall enemies (who under presence of religion persecuted the Gospel) should plainly appear.

V. 18. Take heed therefore how ye hear] Take heed how ye come affected to Gods word (that it be with repentance, faith, and due preparation) how ye behave your selves in hearing (that it be with reverent attention) and how you practice vvhen you have heard; that ye may bring forth fruits accordingly: See on Mark 4. 24. of Israels ear-rings, vvas the Idol made; Exodus 32. 2, &c. qui malè audit, canſare facileglum ſolet. Ambroſ. lib. 7. epiſt. 36. facrileage and most sins come of careleſſe and evill hearing: as a defect or fault in the first digestion, causeth the like in the rest, and consequently many diseases in the body; so is it proportionally in the soul: see more Mat. 13. 12. and 25. 29.

V. 19. Then came to him] See Mat. 12. 46. Mark 3 32.

V. 20. Thy mother and thy brethren] See Mat. 12. 47. These were not any sons of Christs Mother: nor the sons of Joseph by another wife (see Jerom. contr. Helvid. cap. 8. & cap. 9.) but were called his brethren according to the Custom of the Hebrews who so stiled couzens: it may be they were sons of Joseps brother, or Maries sister; as was James.

V. 21. Mother, and my brethren] Meaning that he would not neglect the work of God for any feculer respect, but chiefly attend them, who hear the word of God and live thereafter.

V. 22. Now it came to passe] Mat. 8. 23. Mark 4. 36.

V. 23. He fell asleep] Into a sound, or very heavy sleep, as that doubled cry of his disciples awaking him importeth, v. 24.

they were filled] The ship began to founder, or to be filled with water, and so in danger of sinking.

V. 24. Master, Master, we perish] Mat. 8. 25.

V. 25. Where is your faith?] Mat. 8. 26. your confidence in me, which is an effect of faith.

V. 26. They arrived] Mat. 8. 28. See on verse 27.

V. 27. A certain man, &c.] Matth. 8. 28. this is called the country of the Gergesenes, which here, and Mark 5. is called the Country of the Gadarenes: it seemeth that Gadar and Gergesſa, or Gerasa were two Towns, but both in the same continent, near the lake of Tiberias, over against Galilee. See note on Mat. 8. 28. and on Mark 5. 1. and whereas Matthew speaks of two men possessed meeting Christ, and here is but one mentioned, the order and circumstances, shew it to be one and the same history, but where Matthew speaketh of both the possessed, Luke and Mark speaks but of one of them, who either was better known, and more notorious fierce, dangerous, or more cruelly tormented, by a whole legion of Devils.

but in tombes] that is, (as the Syriack interpreter giveth it) in the place of Sepulchres: among the graves of the dead: some think in caves, or arches built by, or over the Sepulchres.

V. 28. What have I to do, &c.] The Devils usurping the parts and faculties of his body and soul whom they possessed, made the poor man cry this in his own name; whereas the presence of Jeſus, was his happineſs, but their torment. and so the spirit forced him to fay this, in his own wrong, as they caused him to do many things.

torment me not] Meaning, before the time, as Mat. 8. 29. for they knew they must not only be executioners of reprobates, but also be tormented themselves eternally, and with the greatest torments; for as much as their sin is greatest. 2 Pet. 2. 4. Jude 6.

V. 29. Caught him] συνηρπακει: snatcht him up with violence, therefore he was bound] that is, the possessed man was bound, that he might do no harm to passers by. He was used to be bound, by the care possibly of his friends, or others whom it otherwise concerned.

brake the bands] By the power of unclean spirits, he brake all chains and fetters: which sheweth that none but God was able to rescue this poor man out of their power.

driven of the Devill] ἐλαυνόμενος signifieth a violent and speedy driving: agitus, stimulo incitus, exagitus, &c. and that is here attributed either to one commander in chief; or it intimateth that it was done by a common cosent and instigation of all. Those spirits vvhich possessed him.

V. 30. and he said Legion] A legion consisted of 6100 footmen, and 726 horsemen: Vegetius de re militar. l. 2. c. 6. but here it seemeth put for a great indefinite number.

V. 31. into the deep] That is, into hell; where the devils are in darkneſſe. See Rev. 20. 3. 2 Pet. 2. 4. he calleth that ἀβυσσον, which Rhap. 16. 23. the Evangelist calleth ἀδην, Hebrew תהום tehom a gulfe, or depth without bottom: metaphorically, great, many desperate afflictions, in which men perish. Psal. 42. 7. or things unsearchable. Psal. 36. 6. literally for the depths of the seas: so some take it here: it is probable that the devils are confined to certain places; and permitted to infeſt some; but the summe of this petition vvas, that they might not be commanded to go out of this world, lest that thereby they should lose their opportunity of destroying, or hurting men.

V. 32. an herd of many swine] Mark 5, 13. about two thousand: but why say some, did the Jews keep svvine; seeing Gods lavv made them unclean to them. Levit. 11. 7. vve must knovv that Pompey had taken away Gadara from the Jevvs, vvhich (it seemeth they had seised into their hands by force: and that the Jews, there or elsevvhere inhabiting, which kept svvine which themselves might neither offer in sacrifice, nor eat) did it to make gains thereof in selling them to the Romans or others.

V. 33. choaked, &c.] Drowned in the waters.

V. 34. they fled and went and told, &c.] As being amazed, and afraid at that which svvas done, as also that they might acquaint the owners of the svvine, of that vvhich had beſalne them.

V. 35. clothed, &c.] Clothed with something which they vvho vvere presents could spare him to cover his nakednes: for veise 27. he vvare no clothes.

V. 37. back again] Into Galilee,

V. 38. that he might be with him] Mark 5. 18. The Gadarens desired Jesus to depart from them; but he that had tasted of his mercy in delivering him from the devils powver, and tyranny, peticioneth Christ for this favour, that he might still be vvith him. Something hereto Theophylatt faith, possibly he feared, lest if he should be absent, or far from Jesus, the devils might invade him again: but it is very likely also that his love to Christ his deliverer; did drave his affection toward him, and the gracious doctrine vvhich he likevvise heard from him, in this compendium of History not specified; it being most improbable, that Christ vvould fend avvay him, on vvhom he had shevved so great mercy, without instructing him in the mysteries & doctrine of the Gospel: so they in and with whom the spirit of Jesus now liveth, love his word and ordinances, in which he sheweth himself (Mat. 10. 20. Luke 10.) See Psal. 27. 4. others who have not tasted of Gods mercy in Christ, and whom Satan commandeth, hate the ordinance & word of God, and if a Gadaren vote could prevail, would be no more troubled with Ministers, preaching, nor Christ himself.

V. 39. return to thine own house] Christ would not have him depend on his bodily presence for protection against those spirits which he had tormented him: but to know that he was able (as being God) to countermand the devils, and to save his: and also that he might testify to others, what God had done for him. Mark 5. 19.

V. 43. all her living] All that she had in banck, or all that she had to live on: for βιὸς signifieth life, or livelihood, by which life is maintained; as, chap. 15. 30. &c.

V. 44 touched the border of his garment] Mat 9 20.

V. 45. who touched me?] Mark 5. 30. This he said, though he knew her thoughts, and that she was healed; ne fruſtra fidei aptæ ignorantes latere videretur. Optatus lib. 5 lest the fruit of her faith might otherwise have been cencealed from them who knew not what vvas done.

V. 46. Some body hath touched me] He speaketh of the end which some one of the multitude had proposed to their self, in assurance of being healed, if they could but come to touch his garment: this faith of the womans he manifesteth to the multitude, to invite them also to believe, that they might be healed and saved; therefore he asked who touched him; ut confeſſionem certæ prouocaret, faith *Tertul. adverſ. vertue is gone out of me] Understand here with Fulgentius ad Thraſ. l. 2. divinæ curationis effectum: the effect of a divine cure: as if he had said; I have given vertue or power to heal, according to the faith of that party who desired to touch me,

V. 47, for what cause she had touched him] For faith Mat 9. 21. she said with her self] if I may but touch his garment I shall be whole: the was in modesty ashamed to tell men, but when the saw that she was not concealed, she glorified God in declaring to others the admirable cure she had: so, as Optatus said, l. 5. invenit conſilium tactus fides; her silent faith found advice.

V. 48. thy faith hath made thee whole] Not the merit or vertue of thy faith, but his vertue upon whom thy faith relyed: he knew both her faith, and her cure,

V. 49. trouble not the Master] This they said as ignorant of the power of Christ to raise the dead: as if they should have said, she is already past help, let us not lose his labour, for he can doe no more.

V. 50. fear not] Do not despair of help: for forbiddeth not such fear as is necessary to beget an holy reverence; and to bring them for refuge and help to the power and mercy of God, who saith, Hos. 5. 15. in their affliction they will ſeek me early, but would have them confident in his power and love: ſæpe meliores ſunt quos dirigit amor: ita plures quos corrigit timor. Aug. epiſt. 50. as they are better whom love directeth; so are they more whom fear amendeth.

V. 51. he suffereth none to go in] Mark 5. 37.

V. 52. she is not dead] Mat. 9. 24. Mark 5. 39. She is not so dead, but that she may and shall be raised: this he spake to confirm their faith concerning the resurrection from the dead, intimating that it was as easie for him to raise the dead, as for one man to awake another out of sleep: and it is probable which Euthymius saith; he permitted them to laugh, that they might be a manifest demonstration or witnesse of her being really dead and raised again: that they might not afterwards say that she was not dead.

V. 54. he put them all out] All but those forenamed; verse 51. he would admit no profane scorners.

V. 55. give her meat] That they might know that she was perfectly restored to life and health.

V. 56. tell no man what was done] That verse 39. he had the disposition. A man tell what great things God had done for him, and here forbad the parents to divulge what he had done for them; the reason may be, that though he would affigne that man such an office, to expresse his gratitude to God, and to prepare the inhabitants of Decapolis for their conversion to the faith of Christ, yet being come from thence, and doing this miracle in Galilee, he would not have it noysed abroad, as for that he would decline the importune malice of the Jews towards him; so also justly to punish these excluded scorners, by permitting them to their own unbelief.

CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. Then he called his twelve disciples] Mat 10. 1. Mark 3. 13. and 6. 7. according to the number of the tribes of Israel: yet so far was the Priesthood of Christ, (after the order of Melchisedec. Hebr. 5. 6.) different from the priesthood of Aaron, that he chose not one Apostle out of the tribe of Levi, neither was he of that tribe, but of Judah.

authority over all devils] That is, to cast any of them out of the possessed; which he did, as to give them confidence and assurance of his assistance, and their good successe in preaching the Gospel: so to confirm the faith, and foment the obedience of their hearers that in both, God might be glorified, and the Gospel propagated.

V. 2. he sent them to preach] In that he gave them power to do miracles, it sheweth his deity, for no meer man could give it: in that he sendeth them to preach as well as to do such works, it declareth the principal end of miracles which is to confirm the doctrine preached; as also the difference between impostors and the ministers of Christ; they work lying wonders to gain credit to some falshoods, but these do true miracles for the confirmation and manifestation of the truth: the Gospel having been confirmed sufficiently; needech no further confirmation: neither need the ministers thereof any miracles to justify them, when according to their lawful calling, they sincerely preach the truth of the Gospel.

V. 3. Take nothing for your journey] Meaning that they should not be distracted with any cares, for God would cause those who received spiritual good of them; to administer temporal necessaries to them.

V. 4. and thence depart] As you have occasion to go or stay.

V. 5. shake off the very dust] Which was a sign of detestation, and their unworthinesse to have the Gospel preached unto them. See Mat. 10. 14. Mark 6. 11. Luke 10. 11. Act. 13. 51.

V. 6. went through the towns, &c.] According to his command who sent them.

Isaiah 57. 20.

V. 9. desired to see him] Not to be converted by him, but to satisfie his own curiosity; as, Luke 23. 8. in hope to see some miracle done by him.

V. 10. and he took them] Mat. ὑπεχώρησεν. Mark. 30. 32. Bethsaida] A man of Galilee near the lake of Genesaret, where Andrew, Peter, and Philip dwelt. John 1. to the desert hereto belonging he withdrew his disciples from the confluence of people, coming out of the near towns, that they might rest a while after their travel.

V. 11. received them] That is; graciously entertained them: teaching and feeding them: so is he mercifully provident for the soules and bodies of those that seek him. See Psal. 34. 10. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

began to wear away] κλίνω, to decline, or shut up. When it grew towards night.

V. 13. except we should go and buy] This manner of speaking sheweth that the Apostles thought it impossible to feed and satisfy so great a multitude, having so little provision, which setteth off the truth and greatnesse of the miracle.

V. 14 for they were &c.] That is, there were present so many. Five thousand men beside women and children. Mat 14. 21.

V. 15. fifties in a company] That which this Evangelist calleth here κλισίας: the Syriack interpreter giveth discubitus, and our translation company. Mark 6. 39. is given συμπόσια, συμπόσια, as it were by tables; that is, as many in a company as a table would hold: this was done for the better convenience of serving them all distinctly and orderly, which in a confused throng they could not so have done. As also that their number might more distinctly appear; to the greater evidence of the miracle, and Gods honour.

blessed them] Gave thanks. John 6. 11. praying that God would blesse and sanctifie those gifts to the receivers. See 1 Tim. 4. 5.

V. 17. were all filled] Whereby it appeareth that man liveth not by bread onely, but by the word and providence of God: and that our life is not in abundance, but in Gods blessing, who can make a little sufficient.

V. 18. And it came to passe] Mat. 16. 13. Mark 8. 27.

and he asked them] That is, when he had done praying. Either he was praying alone, and his disciples afterward came to him, or this κατὰ μόνας, alone, is put in opposition to all other company but himself and his disciples: the former sense seemeth most probable.

Whom say the people that I am?] This he asketh, not being ignorant of the thoughts of men, but because the faith and confession of the Apostles, whom he appointed to be the light of the world, ought to outshine all vulgar faith and confession, he requireth it of them, verse 20 and Peter as the speaker for the rest, answereth, the Christ of God; that person whom God fore-promised, and anoynted, above all those that (as his types) were anointed; in whom the offices of King, Priests, and Prophet met together, for the work of our redemption.

V. 19. John the Baptist, &c.] See Mat. 16. 14.

V. 20. the Christ of God] See on Mat. 16. 16. John 6. 69. Christ the Son of the living God; the anoynted of the Lord: the Messias and Saviour of the world.

V. 21. tell it to no man] Till the appointed time, when it was to be divulged to the world, Mat. 10. 27. which he saith not, as if it did not highly concern all the Elect to know and confesse the same: but because he would not yet have his glory manifested before he had accomplished the work of the crosse, in suffering an ignominious death, to redeem us from death and hell; thus would he yet leave the devil in suspense: but principally, lest the faith of the disciples thus confessing, should be dangerously shaken in the sight of his bitter passion; and lest their auditours should have suspected the truth they preached (neither these, nor they yet fully understanding the mystery of Christs death, resurrection, and ascension into heaven) and so the perversion of order in things opportune to be manifested and known, should have proved, but as removing of the steps from them who were by such degrees to have ascended to that great mystery of godlinesse and salvation by Christ. V. 22. Son of man must suffer, &c.] See on chap. 6. 5. He that was God and man in one person; in his God-head impatible, was to suffer in his humane body and soul, to redeem us, bodies and soules: to which God had assigned him from eternity: therefore as he is called the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. his crosse daily] Meaning, if God should please to call us to daily afflictions, as it sometimes cometh to passe, Rom. 8. 36. 1 Cor. 15. 31. we must yet endure and persevere unto the end. Mat. 10. 22. and 24. 13. we are therefore here admonished to be always prepared to bear afflictions for Christs sake, and to follow him in obedience and holy imitation of his humility and patience: so must all they who will follow Christ, deny themselves, not regarding their own profits or lives, in respect of his will and glory: so Christ fought not his own, but his Fathers will.

V. 24. will save his life, &c.] That is, whosoever will set more by his own ease, safety, or life, than Christ the way, truth, and life; shall lose himself to eternity: but he that will expose himself to perils and death it self, where the honour of Christ shall require it, shall be saved: Salvian therefore adviseth well, de gub. Dei l. 5. fine, repudia te, ut recipiaris à Christo, renounce thy self, that Christ may receive thee. Thou canst not by any thy endeavours, save thy self; that Christ alone can do: if thou wilt be sure of salvation, rely on Christ for it, not on thy self, or any creatures. Augustine, *si te amiseris omnia in te perdis, Timoth. ad Eccle. when he shall come] To judge the living and the dead, with glory, and many Angels attending his tribunal: then will not Christ own him, who shall here before men, deny him, for fear or favour of man, or for love of this world, and the things thereof; this doth not onely concern apostates openly denying Christ, but (as Fulgentius l. 1. ad Thras. well noteth) him also qui silentio firmat errorem, who by his silence confirmeth errour silendo non asserit veritatem; and by holding his peace doth not confirm the truth; divinam contumeliam qui non refutavit, accumulat. V. 28. it came to passe about eight dayes after] Matth. 17. 1. Mark 9. 2. Matthew and Mark say six dayes after. So that Luke taketh those six with either limit included, that is reckoning to the six, the day preceding the first, and the day following the last thereof, which the other Evangelists take exclusively.

took Peter and John and James] That they might first be spectatours of his glory, whom he would afterwards make witnesses of his bitter Agony, and fad conflict with the pains of death and hell: what this mount was we may not curiously dispute, the Scripture not declaring it: the common opinion is, that it was mount Tabor in the midst of Galilee, specified, Psalm 89. Hosea 5. Peter calleth it the holy mount, 2 Pet. 1. 18. See on Mat. 17. 1.

V. 29. his countenance was altered] Gre. ἕτερον other, or changed from the ordinary appearance, beginning to shine with an admirable and divine beauty: and so his garments were light and glorious; an heavenly glory shined in the Angels appearing, Matth. 28. 3. Revel. 4. 4. this light of Majesty which they now saw, was a ſtender ray of his Divine glory, but much more excellent, than that wherewith Moses face shined, which the people were not able to behold, Exod. 34. shewing in the mystery, the disability of men under the vail, to look unto the end of the law Christ Jesus, 2 Cor. 3. 13. by this they now saw, Christ would give them a taste of that glory, which shall be seen when he shall appear glorious in his Saints, 2 Thes. 1. 14 Colos. 3. 4. 1 John 3. 2. Phil. 3. 21.

V. 30. Moses and Elias] These also appeared glorified; possibly to shew these disciples, that Christ was not against the Law and the Prophets, as the unbelieving Jews would perswade men, for they gave testimony unto him: and because these two were the most famous in the Old Testament.

V. 31. of his decease] Of his death and passion at Jerusalem.

V. 32. were heavy with sleep] Either with joy, or fear and admiration, or a divine rapture: see Dan. 8. 18. and 10. 9. or overcome with watching, for they stayed there all night verse 17.

V. 33. not knowing what he said] So the Spirit of God opened his understanding to know Moses and Elias, whom he never before had seen.

V. 34. overshadowed them] Them, that is the disciples, by means whereof Moses and Elias were taken out of their sight, after this conference ended: it seemeth the Apostles, imagined that his kingdom was now established to him, and begun; or they spake to him that he might avoid the suffering of which they conferred, by staying still in the mount.

V. 37. and it came to passe] See Mat. 17. 14. Mark 9. 17.

V. 38. look upon my son] That is, have mercy upon him, and help him: for we willingly look on those whom we pity and would help.

V. 39. a spirit taketh him] That is tormenteth him, making him foam and tear himself, and dash himself against the ground. See Matth. 17. 15, 17. Mark 9. 20.

V. 40. and they could not] See on Mark 9. 18.

V. 41. O faithlesse and perverse] Thus sharply doth he reprove the Apostles unbelief. See Matth. 17. 20.

V. 43. the devil threw him down] Being enraged (as he useth to be) because the child was brought to Christ: and because he knew, that thereby he should be cast out of possession.

V. 43. at the mighty power of God] Which appeared in his admirable work of Christs, commanding the unclean spirits, out of their possession

V. 44. let these sayings sink down into your eares] That is, mark them diligently and remember them well; That is, lay them to heart, and remember what you hear, and see; that when ye see me dying, ye may not be scandalled, as if I suffered such things out of infirmity, or because I could not deliver my self; for in reason you may know, that he that hath wrought such miracles ἀδύνατον ἦν μηδὲ ἁφαπαγῆναι: Theophylact; could, if he had pleased, not have been crucified.

V. 45. they understood not this saying] They were so confident of Christs temporal kingdom, that they could not understand him, when he spake of his suffering death: after his resurrection they understood it, John 2. 22. now they feared to ask him, because he had a little before so sharply reproved Peter about it.

V. 46. which of them should be greatest] Possibly the occasion of this question might now be his speech concerning his death; they desiring to know, which of them should be the chief or head, of his supposed earthly kingdom in his stead; for yet they understood not his spiritual kingdom: but here, as also chap. 22. Christ reproveth their ambition.

V. 47. perceiving the thoughts of their hearts] For he is truly God, as truly man: none can search and know the heart but God, Jer. 17. 16. the very Heathens knew this: therefore some of them dedicated to their supposed Gods ὧτα καὶ τὰς διθόλμους, ears and eyes of some precious materials, intimating that God heard and saw all things. Clem. Alexandr. strom. lib. 5.

V. 48. he that is least among you] True greatnesse before God, is in sincere innocency and humility, such as is commonly in little children.

V. 49 and John answered] That is, thus began to say, Mark 9. 38. It is an Hebrew manner of speaking (See chap. 7. 40.) occasioned by the former passage, concerning their not casting out the devil.

he followeth not with us] He followeth thee, not in our society. It might seem strange that any should cast out devils in the name of Christ, who did not follow Christ: but we must know, that though this power was principally given to the Apostles to confirm their preaching, yet was it not so confined to their office, but that Christ might give the same also to other believers. See Mark 16. 17.

V. 50. Is for us] Though he be not with us in body, or external communion; yet he adhereth to us in faith, affection, consent, in doctrine, and spiritual communion.

V. 51. received up] By his ascension into heaven, after his death and resurrection.

he stedfastly set his face] This is an Hebrew manner of speaking, signifying a resolving, and setling a mans selfe to do a thing, Jer. 42. 15. Ezek. 4. 3. God saith here to the Prophet וְהַכִּינוֹתָה אֶת פָּנֶיךָ, vahacchinotha eth phanecha, set thy face against it: the word is of כּוּן, Con, which among other things, signifieth to be prepared, firme, and constant, resolved not to be diverted; or to be fitted, disposed, or intent to do something. So here, the time of Christs passion drawing neer, he resolved (whatever flesh and blood suggested; or Peter had perswaded to the contrary, Mat. 16. 22.) to go to Jerusalem. See on Mat. 19. 1.

V. 52. to make ready for him] Which was needful; because Christ was attended, not onely by the twelve Apostles, but many others who followed him, as disciples and hearers.

V. 53. his face was as though, &c.] The Samaritanes took special notice of any that went up to Jerusalem to worship, because they had a Temple of their own for their false worship on mount Gerizim, built in opposition to the Temple of God at Jerusalem. See John 4. 20. now it being neer the Passeover, the Samaritans took the more notice of their going that way, and therefore would not entertain them: moreover, the Jews having no commerce with the Samaritans, John 4. 9. there was the more need of fore-runners to make provision for them, who could not in an ordinary, or then usual course, have expected any necessary entertainment there.

V. 54. even as Elias did] See 2 Kings 1. 10. Possibly, that very Region put them in mind to desire fire from heaven, where Elias by fire from heaven obtained destruction of the two Captains with their fifties sent to fetch him to their King; thinking the Samaritans now despising Christ the Son of God, worthy of the like punishment: therefore they pretend Elias example, not attending the difference of the case, without which, imitation of holy fathers may be very inconvenient and dangerous: So the foolish Samaritans alleaged the example of the fathers worshipping in their mountain, John 4. 20. So in other cases do many more, as ill-advised now: but as a reverend Author saith, they who without due choice thus do, are rather Apes, than imitatours of holy fathers: that which they say, wilt thou that we command fire, &c. makes it doubtful whether they desired that Christ should give them that power they speak of, or that they were confident of their power, if they had but Christ his approbation and consent thereto.

V. 55. of what spirit ye are] You do not know what spirit moveth you herein: your counsel agreeth not with your calling: you shew a spirit of revenge, and therefore misapply the example of Elias: for I am come to save, not to destroy. And indeed as Augustine ad Marcellin ep. 5. well saith, vindicta ultima juste posititur, quando nullus jam vitæ correctionis locus, extremo sc. summoque judicio, final revenge is justly required, when there remaineth no place for amendment; that is, at the last judgement. So dangerous is imitation of misapplyed examples of Saints, especially to the violation of charity.

V. 56. is not come to destroy] See 1 Tim. 1. 15. John 3. 17. He now came to shew mercy, and to save the penitent, who will come again to judge and destroy the impenitent, and unbelievers: it was now a time for mercy, not judgement.

V. 57. and it came to passe] See Mat. 8. 19

V. 58. the Son of man hath not] Knowing his thoughts, he intimated to him, that he should but deceive himself in following him for temporal gains, who now possessed nothing temporal, and came to propose spiritual and eternal gains.

V. 59. and he said] Matth. 8. 21.

V. 60. Let the dead bury the dead] Meaning the unregenerate who are dead in trespasses and sins, 1 Tim. 5. 6. Ephes. 2. 1. not that Christ disalloweth a decent and seasonable performance of that office of duty and piety, but that he preferreth the advance of Gods glory in preaching the Gospel, and saving of souls before it. See Mat. 8. 22.

V. 61. bid them farewel] Mark 6. 46. the word ἀποτάξασθαι signifieth also to order or dispose of: so that the sense may be, suffer me first to go home, and order or dispose of my estate and family: so that which the Prophet saith, Isa. 38. 2. Hezekiah, עֲנֵה לְבִיתֶךָ tsau lebeitheca, command or give order to thine house; the 70 give τάξαι περὶ τῶν οἴκων σου, dispose of thy house: this probably was the main care of the man, to bid farewel, or take leave of friends; though an act of humanity, yet was it of lesse moment than to order and provide for them.

V. 62. and looking back] This an Hebrew manner of speaking, signifying repentance of that one had begun. See Gen. 19. 17. 26. The meaning is, that no man destined to the ministery of the Gospel, having in his heart a resolution to forsake his calling, and to embrace the present world, is fit for that holy work: the simile is derived from ploughmen, who looking backward, cannot make straight furrows. See 2 Tim. 4. 10.

CHAP. X.

Verse 1. After these things] See Matth. 10. 1. other seventy also] After that the twelve Apostles had preached in the towns round about, now the hearers multiplying, there was need of more preachers to confirm them: therefore he chose out of those who had heard and followed him, seventy more to send abroad to that office: so the Syriac interpreteth, he separated of his disciples seventy other, and sent them: the Greek word ἀνέδειξεν here used signifieth, to designe or appoint: as Budæus interpreteth out of Plutarch, Creare, or make: as, ἀναδεδεῖχθαι ὕπατον, to make one Consul, or to designe one thereto: so to ordain or consecrate, as Christ here did. Their return from Babylon was a kinde of type of their redemption by Christ: so here are appointed seventy, as they had their Synedrion or Council of seventy Elders or Judges after their return. So Moses appointed seventy Elders, or assistants to him, Exod. 18. 22.

whither himself would come] Whither he would follow them, more fully to preach the kingdom of heaven, and also confirm the same with miracles: he sent them two and two, as to strengthen and comfort each other; so for the more certain testimony of that which they were to affirm.

V. 2. the harvest truly is great] Matth. 9. 37. meaning a great number of people, which were ready to be converted, and gathered unto God. See John 4. 35. thus he encourageth them.

V. 3. behold I send you, &c.] Matth. 10. 16.

among wolves] These are tyranni, & raptores seculi, Bernard. ad Fast. Ser. tyrants, spoilers, bloody persecutors.

V. 4 carry neither purse] Be not distracted with care concerning ordinary means to bear your charges, for clothes, or dyet: he that sendeth you is able to provide necessaries for you; such ought our confidence to be in Gods providence, that we may ever be assured, that he careth for us, while we are careful of his work; lest otherwise, if the mind be too intent on the things of this world, minus alijs provideat æternæ, Greg. hom. 17. in Evang. he should be lesse careful over others for things eternal.

salute no man] See on 2 Kings 4. 29. this he speaketh, not forbidding comity and civility which he enjoyneth, verse 5. but distraction from, and hindrance in their duty and ministration. In the uncivil deportment of a late-grown-up monstrous sect among us appeareth how dangerous it is to take up the letter of the Scripture without due consideration of the sense and meaning thereof: It is a most necessary rule, so to interpret Scriptures, as that the interpretation of one place, may not crosse the plain sense of another relating to the like purpose: as here; Some will not be civil to those they meet, or to whom they speak; because it is said, Salute no man: but they ought to consider, many places command, ing to salute one another: whence they learn their rude salutes, of thou, thou flesh, &c. Let them consider; we have learned of St. Peter, ep. 1. c. 3. v. 8. Be courteous.

V. 5. into whatsoever house, &c.] Matth. 10. 11.

peace be to this house] See 1 Sam 25. 6. It was their manner of salutation, whereby they wished all health, and happinesse. See on John 19. 3.

V. 6. the son of peace] That is, if any man capable of that blessing, and disposed to receive the doctrine of peace, which you preach, be therein.

V. 7. the labourer is worthy of his hire] See 1 Cor. 9. 7. 1 Tim. 5. 18. From the common rule of equity, he theweth that they shall by administring spiritual things, deserve of their hearers, things necessary for their sustenance; and therefore might not doubt, but that God would stirre them up to relieve them therein, on whom he bestowed the riches of his grace in Christ, by his Gospel preached unto them.

go not from house to house] In respect of the charge you put them to; for while you minister the gospel to them, you bring them greater gain.

V. 8 eat such things] That is, be contented with such things as you find: which he saith. First that they might not seek themselves, as they whose belly is their God, Phil. 3. Secondly, that they might know, that he who forbad them to carry purse or scrip, yet permitteth them necessaries in the execution of their ministery.

V. 9. nigh unto you] See Mat 3. 2. and 4. 17.

V. 10. out into the streets and say] Publickly and openly for a testimony against them.

Tyre] Tyrus the chief City of Phœnicia, which in the division of the land, came to the tribe of Asher, Josh. 19 29. but because they could not drive out the inhabitants, Israel never possessed it, but the Tyrians kept it, and continued still in Idolatry.

sitting in sackcloth and ashes; Which were signes of mourning and repentance. See 1 King 21. 27. 2 King. 19. 1. Esth. 4. 1. Mat. 11. 21.

V. 14 more tolerable] Because, as Salvian saith, de gub. Dei, lib. 4. fine, Minoris criminis reatus est, legem nescire quam spernere: It is lesse sin to be ignorant of Gods will, than to contemn it known: he that knoweth his Masters will, and doth it not, shall have most stripes, chap. 12. 47. Jam 4. 17. John 9. 41.

V. 15. and thou Capernaum] This was another City of Decapolis, which was the Metropolis of Galilee, standing on the river Jordan, upon the borders of Zabulon and Nephtalim, that then flourished with great trade, riches, and pride.

V. 17. through thy Name] We using thy authority, and calling on thy Name.

V. 18. I beheld Satan] Satan is stiled Prince of the air, Ephes. 2. 2. ruling in high places, Ephes. 6. 12. whence he is said to be cast down, when his power is overthrown by preaching of the Gospel.

V. 19. I give unto you power] See Matth. 16. 19. Acts 28. 5. Mark 16. 18.

V. 20. because your names are written in heaven] Because by the effects it appeareth, that ye are elected to life everlasting. See Phil. 4. 3 Rev. 20. 12. and 21. 27. This is a manner of speaking borrowed from the customes of men, whose names are registred, and enrowled in some publick records, to keep in certain memory, and assure them of their freedom and priviledge in that corporation.

V. 21. Jesus rejoyced in spirit] Mat. 11. 25. being comforted in the successe of the Gospel, and in the consideration of the performance of his Fathers will.

unto babes] νηπίοις, the word also signifieth simple or weak men. Hesiod. ἔργ. & ἡμερ. νήπιοι, οὐδ' ἴσασιν, &c. fools or simple men, neither do they know, &c. See on Mat. 11. 25.

V. 22. all things are delivered] Matth. 28. 18. John 3. 35. and 17. 2.

V. 23. blessed are the eyes] See Matth. 13. 16.

V. 24. Many prophets] Which he meaneth not onely concerning the bodily presence, and sight of things by him done; though that was much desired, that they might see the worlds Saviour present (as we shall do in his kingdom of glory) but also to understand, and to be more fully assured of the admirable work of Gods mercy, and the accomplishment of their redemption by Christ.

V. 25. a certain lawyer] One that professed the knowledge and interpretation of the law of Moses, though indeed he knew not the end of the law, which was to be a School-master to bring us to Christ, Gal. 3. 24.

Master, what, &c.] Thus he calleth Christ, who yet came not with a mind to learn, but to tempt, and to find some occasion of cavil: it seemeth that when he had heard Christ teaching, he rose up to propose this question, to try whether Christ would say any thing against the law, or mention any other way to life everlasting.

V. 26. what is written] Knowing his subdolous minde, he remitteth him to the law, who boasted of, and trusted in righteousnesse by the law.

V. 27. Thou shalt love, &c.] See Deut 6. 5.

and thy neighbour as thy self] Levit. 19. 18.

V. 28. This do and thou shalt live] This answer is shaped according to the Lawyers question, verse 25. what shall I do to inherit eternal life? because he sought eternal life by the works of the law, which he could not fulfill; he referreth his conscience to the law, which onely shewed his sin, Rom. 7. & 3. 20. Gal. 3. 21, 22. knowing that it must either bring him to Christ, or leave him unexcusable, Mat 19. 17. otherwise when the keeper of the prison (far from all opinion of any merit of his own) asked; What must I do to be saved? Act. 16. 30 31 Paul and Silas answered, believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.

V. 29. Who is then my neighbour?] For they counted no man their neighbour but their friends and countrey men.

V. 30. leaving him half dead] We may not so wrest these words in their application, as thence to conceive, that man in his fall, had left in him any life of grace, or ability to recover or raise himself to any moral good; seeing that the Scriptures so expressly declare, that before our regeneration and new birth by the free grace and mercy of God quickning us by his holy spirit, we are all dead in trespasses and sins, Ephes. 2. 1. See Rom. 7. 18, 24. 2 Cor. 3. 5.

V. 31. on the other side] As if the distressed man had been unworthy of his care or pity. See Psal. 38. 11. Isai. 58. 7.

V. 33. but a certain Samaritane] Whose nation was odious to the Jews, John 4. 9.

V. 35. took out two pence] These circumstances are set to expresse the free mercy of God in our conversion; not onely preventing us by his grace, but continually supplying us with necessary increases thereof, that we may perseverce and be saved: accordeing to which Augustine de verb. Apost. serm. 15. saith, non putes te promeruisse accepisse, si non promereres, nisi accepisses; think not that thou receivedst it by deserving, who hadst not merited, except thou hadst received: and again, thou givest (saith he) almost nothing freely, thou freely savest, who findest (in us) nothing to save us: thou findest much to condemn us.

V. 36. which now of these, &c.] Which of these did according to the law, which saith, thou shalt love thy neighbour.

V. 37. Go, and do thou likewise] Help him that hath need of thee, although he be thine enemy, or thou know him not.

V. 38. a certain village] Bethania, John 11. 1.

V. 39. sate at Jesus feet] Here is not onely historified her posture, but principally her attention, diligence, and compositure of her selfe (all things elsе set aside) to hear Christ. See Act. 22. 3.

V. 41. thou art careful and troubled, &c.] Thou art too much perplexed with these cares which hinder thy hearing the Gospel, which is more necessary.

V. 42. Mary hath chosen that good part] Martha's entertainment of Christ, was good and commendable: but her too much care distracting and hindring her from better, as also her censuring her sisters hearing Christ, was not good, non tu malam, sed illa meliorem, &c. August de verb. dom. ser. 7. Thou hast not chosen a bad part, but Mary hath chosen a better.

which shall never be taken away] That which we here do for eternal life, etiam post mortem servatur, Greg. hom. 27. in Evang. is kept after death. Such is the kingdom of Heaven, *Unde nullus ejicitur beatus quo in illa nisse admittitur. CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. One of his disciples] All his Apostles were Disciples: but all his Disciples were not Apostles. Whether this were a Disciple but not one of the twelve Apostles, it is not certain: probably he was present when Christ taught this prayer to his Apostles, and the multitude, Mat. 6.

Lord, teach us to pray] We know not what to pray as we ought, Rom. 8. 26. Deus solus docere potuit, ut se vellet orari, Tertull. de orat c. 9. Onely God could teach how he would be petitioned. Therefore his self ordained and ordered the duty of prayer; and from his own Spirit, even then when it proceeded out of his mouth, animata suo privilegio, being animated and enlivened with his privilege it ascended into Heaven, commending to the Father those requests which his Son hath taught. Prayer is a principal pare of Gods worship: and there can be none other so good a teacher of prayer as Christ our Mediatour and Redeemer, God and Man: who as he died to give us life, so doth he sit at Gods right hand, to prefent our petitions in Heaven, which his own Spirit enditeth for us here on Earth, that we may obtain the same. He therefore taught us to pray, and to avoid the vain repetitions and ostentation of Pharisees and Heathens, thinking to be heard for their much speaking. Mat. 6. 7. taught us this short form of prayer, in it comprehending all things necessary to be prayed for.

as John also taught] By giving them some form of prayer: it seemeth, that because Religion was miserably corrupted by the false Glosses, and superstitious traditions of Pharisees, as also by a general depravation of manners, so that it was no marvel, if very few among them, either rightly practiced, or truly understood, that main part of Gods worship, which is in devout and faithful prayer. Therefore whereas now the long promised redemption of the faithful drew neer; it was necessary that their minds should be strengthned, and lifted up to the firm hope and confident expectation thereof, by earnest prayer: so that John baptist, whose office it was to prepare the way of Christ, did, out of most evident places of Scripture thereto pertinent, compose his Disciples (whom he was to instruct and fit to receive Christ the Messias) some private prayers suitable to their present condition, and the spiritual kingdom of Christ, which they were now to professe.

V. 2. when ye pray say] Compare Matth. 6. 9. with this place, and the circumstances shew, that Christ did twice at the least teach them this very form of prayer. And hence it appeareth, that as this is the most absolute and compleat pattern of prayer, it comprehending all that we must ask, so is it the most exact and sacred form of prayer, endited and taught the Disciples (who were to teach the whole World the rules and practise of true Religion) by Christ himself, who is best able to teach his servants to pray.

Say] Christ prescribed his Disciples this form of prayer to be used by them; not rejecting others, which his Spirit taugh or teacheth, but to abridge all necessary petitions, into this one Sum, See Augustin. ep. 121. c. 12.

Our Father] Under one person of the holy Trinity named, we understand all three: according to that of Tertullian de orat. cap. 2. In Patre Filius invocatur, In the name of Father, the Son also (and the Holy Ghost) is invocated. This excellently agreeth with the state of grace: first intimating our adoption in Christ; by whom we are to expect all that is profitable for us; as, remission of sins, preservation, temporal and spiritual goods, all which God giveth as a loving and gracious Father: also in this (our) we learn that the faith onely which worketh by love, is available, Gal. 5. 6. So that as children of one merciful Father we must be unanimous, and mutually solicitous for each others good: and lastly, it theweth us with what confidence we must pray: for this appellation & pietatis, & potestatis est, Tertul. qu. 5. is both a name of piety and power.

which art in Heaven] Who possessest, rulest, and disposest of all things in Heaven and Earth. Dan. 4. 34, 35. Filling Heaven which is thy Throne, and Earth, which is thy Foot-stool with thy power and glory: comprehending all things, comprehended of none: It is to be confessed, faith Augustine, Dardan. ep. 57. that God is every where, per divinitatis præsentiam, by or in respect of the presence of his Deity, but not so, per habitationis gratiam, in respect of his grace dwelling in, and manifesting himself to the holy. Such onely can be the Father of all the Elect, in all ages and places: this theweth us to whom our prayers must be addressed: that our God we call on is the true God: how we ought to lift up our minds in prayer, how we ought to live, if we call him Father. 1 Pet. 1. 17. Phil. 3. 20. and with what humility, sanctity, and reverence we must appear before him when we pray. See Eccles. 5. 2.

Hallowed be thy Name] By Name, understand his Nature. Majesty, eternal Power, Goodnesse, Wisdom, Righteousnesse, Mercy, Truth, &c. By Hallowed, or Sanctified we pray that we, and all may, rightly know him, adore, reverence praise, magnifie, and set forth that his goodnesse which shineth in all his works, that we may rightly worship and fear him, as Tertullian saith, de orat. c. 3. id petimus ut sanctificetur in nobis, that it may be sanctified in us: that we faithfully endeavour, as much as in us lieth, that all others may do the same: that his Name which is ever holy etiam apud homines sanctum habeatur, Augustin. Prob. ep. 121. may also be accounted holy of men. That we may think and speak of him with all reverence, and never take his holy Name in vain. That we may live to his glory, that his sacred Name be not blasphemed among the enemies, through our impiety. See Titus 2. 10. The sum of all is, that God would manifest himself to us, and give and blesse the means by which all may come to the knowledge of him in Christ, that his Name may be magnified in our salvations.

Thy kingdom come] The kingdom of God importeth fisst, his absolute soveraignty and universal government, under which, are all good and bad, Psalm 103. 19. This is not here prayed for, as Augustin qu. s. saith, Quod sive velimus sive nolimus utique veniet, which shall come whether we will or no, it being alwayes every where and none can resist it, Dan. 4. 32. Secondly, his special kingdom, whereby he ruleth in the elect, working his will in them. This is 1. The kingdom of Grace whereby he governeth the Elect by his word (the Scepter of his kingdom) and his holy Spirit of sanctification, whereby he causeth in them a voluntary subjection of the whole man body and soul, to his revealed will, Psal. 110. 3. Rom 4. 17. 18. Psal. 2. 13. with which understand the revelation of Christ and all the means of salvation. 2. The kingdom of glory; that is, the eternally blessed estate of the Elect in Heaven, as Augustine saith, Ut nobis veniat, atque nos in eo regnare mereamur, that it may come to us, and that we may reign therein. Neither may we conceive these to be two kingdoms of God: but one and the same, begun in the state of Grace, and perfected in the state of Glory: and it cometh by certain degrees, as first, illumination by the gospel, and all other divine Ordinances, whereby Gods grace and favour in Christ is revealed, and his kingdom advanced and maintained. Secondly, subjection of the whole man, body, soul, will, and affections to Christ. Thirdly, true renuntiation of the World, Sin, Satan, and our selves, in shaking off the kingdom and rule of sin, and not following the guidance of carnal wisdom and affection. Fourthly, affections set above, desires and conversations fixed on Heaven, Colos. 3 Phil. 3. Fifthly, accomplishment of all Gods promises to the Elect for the life to come; as Gods being all in all: perfection of every part and faculty of body and soul filled with glory and unspeakable joy and blessednesse in the presence of God: So that the meaning of this petition is, as if we said, O Lord govern us by thy word and holy Spirit, that we may wholly and willingly obey thee in all things: encrease and preserve thy Church, destroy the kingdom of Satan. Sin, and whatsoever power exalteth it self against thy Divine Majesty, Truth, and holy Ordinances: protect and preserve us in they kingdom of grace, and in thy good time bring us into thy kingdom of glory.

thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth] We are not here to pray that God would do what he will, by his absolute will, whereby he unresistibly ruleth in Heaven and Earth; but forasmuch as we are yet but partly flesh and partly spirit, Gal. 5. 17. And as Tertul. de orat. c. 4. saith, Earth and Heaven; we pray that we may be enabled to do what God will for his glory and our salvation: we pray (saith August. ep. 121) for that obedience; that so his will may be done of us, as it is done by his Angels in Heaven. This will of his is first that we believe in Christ for our justification and salvation, see John 6. 40. Secondly, that we endeavour to the works of sanctification, 1 Thess. 4. 3. and true conformity to our holy Saviour Christ. Thirdly, that we submit to a patient and cheerful undergoing all that which the good providence of God shall lay upon us. See Acts 14. 2. Acts 21. 13. 2 Sam. 15. 25. Mat. 26. 39. which we must do by renouncing our own wils (which are corrupt and unjust, ignorant, and commonly hurtful to our selves) and submitting and conforming up our selves wholly to the pattern, as in heaven. The meaning is, that the Lord would frame us here on Earth to such a holy, ready, and cheerful obedience, as now his holy Angels shew in the execution of his will, Psal 103. 20. and as we shall also do it in the kingdom of glory, in which we shall no more sin, Rev 22. 3. The sum is, Lord give us grace to do thy will (for that we may do his will, opus est Dei voluntate, id est, ope ejus & protectione, quia nemo suis viribus fortis est, sed Dei indulgentia. &c. Cyprian. de orat. Dom. (Si fit opus ejus) We have need of Gods will; that is, his assistance and protection; because no man hath of himself ability thereto. Let thy will revealed in thy word for thy glory and our salvation, be accomplished in our conversion, and mortification of our corrupt affections, (See Ezek. 33. 11.) denial of our selves, relying wholly on our Saviour Christ; sanctification (1 Thess. 4. 3.) and cheerful submission to thy good pleasure in all estates prosperous and adverse.

V. 3. give us day by day our daily bread] First, he teacheth to pray for (as also to seek, Mat. 6.) the kingdom of God, and then things temporal, which may accommodate and serve us thereto. We must say, give, Ne putetur esse ex nobis, Augustine ep. 143. and, us; for he would not have our prayers such, ut -- pro se tantum precetur, &c. Cyprian qu. s. the God of peace and teacher of concord, so instructed his for unity, that he would have every one pray for all. quomodo in uno omnes ipse portavit, as he being one, bore, and took care for us all. Day by day, τὸ καθ' ἡμέραν, day by day, or for the day: every day as much as is sufficient. So the Syriac, יומם ליומם, is rendred quo opus habemus quotidie. By Bread, understand all things necessary for the sustenance of this mortal life, meat, drink, clothes, house, utensils, peace, health, liberty, maintenance, and whatsoever God knoweth needful to our natures, callings, and conditions, and those whom he hath given us. So the Wiseman prayeth, Prov. 30. 8. Feed me with לחם חקי lechem chukki, bread of my allowance, or convenient for me; as is expressed Genesis 47. 12. לפי הטף lephi hattaph, to the mouth of the little one: 70. κατὰ στόμα, according to their families; we give it, according to every ones eating. Christ doth not hereby prohibit lawful care and labour in our callings to provide things necessary for our selves and families, (see 1 Tim. 5. 8. Ephes. 4. 28. 2 Thess 3. 10.) but 1. That care which distracteth from Gods service and dependance on his fatherly providence, who can blesse the least; without whose blessing, the greatest store cannot profit us. 2. All fraud, oppression, injustice, and cruelty in getting. 2. Diffidence in Gods providence for necessaries. 4 Covetousnesse and desire of more than enough, (see 1 Tim. 6. 9, 10.) Discontent and repining at that measure which Gods providence giveth us, (see 1 Tim. 6. 8. Hebr 13. 5.) 6. Intemperance in the excessive use of his creatures, making men unfit for the service of God, and works of their calling. 7. That ingrateful looking on second causes, and means of getting, which maketh carnal men forget to praise Gods providence, as if their own care and labours supplied them. The sum of this petition is; Lord God who of providence descendeth to the preservation and well being of all thy vidence descendeth to the preservation and well being of all thy creatures, bestow on us and ours, all things necessary for our present life, that we may daily and thankfully acknowledge thy fatherly providence, and faithfully and cheerfully depend thereon.

V. 4. and forgive us our sins] In this petition Christ teacheth us what we must ask, and what we must do if we will attain (Ut qui a Deo pascitur, in Deo vivat, Cypr. qu. s. that he who is fed by God, may live in God) we must ask remission of all our sins, guilt, and punishment, without which we must perish eternally: for that which S. Luke here calleth ἁμαρτίας, Mat. 6. 12. is called ὀφειλήματα, debts: to intimate what punishment we owe to Gods justice, except he remit and forgive it in mercy, (see Psalm 130. 3. 4. Psalm 143. 2.) in asking pardon, we acknowledge and confesse our guiltinesse, and disability to satisfie; as likewise our hope of mercy: thus he taught his Saints to pray: therefore as Augustine ep. 29. saith, quantum libet profecerimus, how much soever we have profited, still we have need to say forgive us; for if we say we have no sin, we deceive our selves, &c. 1 John 1. 8. The African Council contr. hæref. Pelag. cap. 67. condemned them who said, that the Saints thus prayed in regard of others sins, not their own, or rather in humility than truly: Quis enim ferat orantem, & non hominibus, sed ipsi Domino mentientem, qui labiis dicit sibi dimitti velle, & corde dicit, quæ sibi dimittantur. Se debita non habere; for who can endure one praying, and lying; not to men, but God himself: saying with his lips that he desireth to be forgiven, but with his heart, that he hath no sin to be forgiven? That which we in his heart, that he hath no sin to be forgiven? That which we must do, is to forgive our brethren who hurt us: whi h duty is not made void, is to forgive our brethren who hurt us: whi h duty is not made void, as to forgive our brethren who hurt us: which duty is not here annexed as a cause, or as a condition of our sins remission in Christ. It is impossible for to obtain remission of sins, without true faith, apprehending the merits of Christ for our justification: and as impossible for that to be without charity (Mat 6. 14. & 18. 33. &c.) therefore Chist herein gave us a law, Certa nos conditione & sponsione constringens, binding us in a certain condition, bargain, or covenant, so to forgive as we desire forgiveneste; Cyprian. qu. s. Here we see the necessity of that which Christ teacheth, Mat. 5. 23. The sum is, O Lord forgive us all our sins, guilt and punishment (for thy Son Christ his sake) as thou hast in thy mercy given us an heart to forgive all others, who have done any injury to us.

Lead us not into temptation] Mat 6. 13. He teacheth us to supplicate not onely de remittendis, for remission, but also de avertendis peccatis, for aversion and prevention of sins, Tertul de orat. cap. 8. Lead us not, that is as Tertul. and Cyprian. qu. s. interpret, Ne patiamur nos induci, &c. Suffer us not to be led into temptation: lest being destiture of his help, either deceived, we consent to; or afflicted, we yeeld to temptation. saith Augustine Epist. 121. cap. 11. As if we said, Lord leave us not to the malicious assaults of Satan, nor to the frailty and corruptions of flesh and blood: We are of our selves unable to resist the power of sin; and have by our many wilful transgresions of thy holy Commandments deserved to be given over and left to our own sinful wills and affections, and thereby to destruction of body and soul: but Lord for sake us not in any temptation, but give an happy issue; so upholding us with thy merciful hand (who best knowest our weaknesse and necessities) that we may neither faint in our tryals, nor yeeld to the power of sin or allurements of Satan; but may so resolutely stand, that, through thy good Spirit strengthning us, we may at last obtain a perfect victory, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

but deliver us from evil] Servus nos a malo, keep us from evil: the Interpreter of the Syriac giveth it. Herein we pray against all all those things which the Adversary practiseth against us in this world, who hath (saith Cyprian qu. s.) power granted him against us, either ad panam cum delinquimus, vel ad gloriam cum probamur, to our punishment when we sin; or to our glory when we are tried. And we are here admonished, Nondum nos esse in eo bono, ubi nullum patiemur malum, Augustine epist. 121. cap. 13. that we are not yet in that good estate, where we shall suffer no evill: This prayer (saith he cap. 12.) comprehendeth all that an afflicted Christian can pray for: So that it is free to pray aliis atque aliis verbis, in other words, but not for other things than those which Christ hath taught us to pray for.

V. 5. Which of you shall have a friend] The scope of this speech is to teach us fervency and constancy in prayer; by an argument from the lesse to conclude the greater: if men think no time unseasonable to help a friend in want, how much lesse will God who is ever ready, willing, and able to help his? and unto whom nothing good can be importune or unseasonable; there can be no lassitude in him whose word is his work, neither doth he slumber or sleep, so that any untimely calling on him might break his rest, therefore David said, Psal. 34. 1. I will blesse the Lord at all times, and Psalm 119, 62. at midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee — and he is every where to be found of them that seek him faithfully; therefore the Apostle saith, I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, 1 Tim. 2. 8.

V. 6. in his journeyis come, &c.] ἐξ ὁδοῦ, out of his way. Syriac מן אורחא men orecho, which word coming from ארח arach, iter feci is put to signifie, a journey, or way.

V. 7. trouble me not] Which of you will be so uncivil as to put off an importunate friend, saying, trouble me not? but rather (as verse 8.) he will rise and give him, because of his importunity: how much more will the keeper of Israel (who neither slumbereth nor sleepeth; who is ever ready without any his trouble to relieve, having in himself that eternal and unspeakable love to his elect, which can have no cause but it self, which needeth none other Solicitor, or motive to entreat pity towards us) readily hear and relieve us?

V. 8. because he is a friend, yet because, &c.] Though he would not take so much pains for any love to his friend, yet will he do it to avoid more trouble and disturbance, because he loveth himself, and his own ease, quiet and rest, rather (saith Augustine ep. 121. cap. 8.) vitando tædium, quàm benevolentiam cogitando: avoiding trouble, than thinking of good will: that we may hence understand, if he who sleeping is awakned (awakned against his wil) to give, how much more benignly, and willingly will he give us, who knoweth not sleep, and awaketh us from sleep, that we may ask of him? This, as other similitudes, is not to be drawn beyond the intent of Christ, whose purpose is to shew the excellent effects of ferveney and perseverance in prayer. (See Luke 18. 1. Mat. 15, 27, 28. Isaiah 62. 7. Exod. 32. 10, 11. Exod. 17. 11. &c.) If importunity prevail so much with man, who loveth it not, what shall it do with God, who loveth it, commandeth it, and putteth the issues and condition of obtaining upon it?

V. 9. And I say unto you, &c.] See Mat. 7. 7, & 21. 22. Mark 11. 24. John 15. 7. Jam. 1. 5. 1 John 3. 22.

ask, and it shall be given you] Understand this promise to be made to those who ask according to his will: See Mat. 18. 19. Mat. 21. 22. Mark 11. 24. John 15. 7. John 16. 23. Jam. 1. 6. Jam. 4. 2. 1 John 3. 22. 1 John 5. 14. he will not frustrate our hope of obtaining; whose own spirit both moveth us to pray, and indited our prayers: so that when he commandeth us to pray, he commandeth, not because he wanteth our prayers, but because we want his blessings; so true is that of Augustine de verb. Dom. serm. 19. illud quod hortatur, propter nos hortatur, that which he exhorteth, he exhorteth for our sakes.

V. 11. if a son shall ask] Here is another argument or motive to prayer, from the lesse to the greater from the worse to the better; if evil fathers will give their children nothing but good; how much more shall the good God (from whom cometh every good who can neither be deceived in his choyce, nor fail in his will) give his children that which is best? it is impossible for him to deceive his children by giving them any evil, when they pray for good.

will he give him, &c.] As if he said, I appeal to your own mindes and affections: do but examine your hearts herein: would any of you naturall parents, willingly hurt your own children?

V. 12. will he offer him a scorpion?] Would any man abuse the simplicity, or betray the confidence of his infant asking an egge, by giving him a deadly poyson? a scorpion is a venemous serpent which bringeth forth young, eworum specie, like egges. Plin nat. hist. lib. 11. cap. 25, that which the Hebrew calleth עקרב hacrab. Deut. 8. 15. עקרבין Chald. 70. σκορπίων. So Ezek. 2. 6. vid Tertul. adverf. Gnoftic. cap. 1. init.

V. 13, the holy Spirit] That is, the graces of the holy Spirit, the most excellent gift, in which he instanceth to assure them that he who will give himself to them, will not let them perish for want of things earthly and temporal; he is therefore (as Fulgentius ad Monim. lib. 1. well saith) to be praised for his grace and favour of either gift; both when he awaketh us from sleep to seek him, and also when he giveth himself to be found of us seeking him: who indeed, nullatenus inveniretur, nisi ipse nos excitet, ut quæramus, is by no means found, except his self excite us to seek him.

V. 14. casting out a devil] See Matthew 9. 32. and 12. 22.

and it was dumb] That is, it made the possessed dumb, or speechless, by some resolution of the nerves, or other obstruction or disaffecting the vocal instruments, so that the possessed could not speak.

the dumb spake] He who made the mouth, and the dumb, Exod. 4. 11. can dispossess Satan, and restore his creature, he onely can, verbum proferre de clausis, vocem elicere de mutis. Ambrof. in Luc lib. 5. cap. 6.

V. 15. he casteth out] See Mat. 9. 34. & 12. 24.

through Beelzebub] ἐν Βεελζεβοὺλ. Syriac בבעל זבוב, by, or through Beelzebub. The Latines give it sometimes Beelzebul, Tertul. adverf. Marc. lib. 4. cap. 26. and commonly Beelzebub, it is all one, they meant (as our Evangelist here interpreteth) the chief, or most wicked of the divils. So the Jews called that unclean spirit, in detestation of the idol of that name: 2 Kings 1. 3, בעל זבוב Baal Zebub: possibly not without a blasphemous allusion to the name of that Spirit of the Magicians, which was called Beelzebub, muscarum Dominus, the god or lord of flies: because, as some report, they drave away flies: by swarms. See Paufan. Arcadic. Plin. lib. 29. 6. cited also by Bodin. Damonom. l. 1. cap. 3. See Shindl. Penteglot. in בעל Hanov. 1612 pag 222. B.C.

V. 16. a signe from heaven] Mat. 12, 38. and 16. 1. It is likely, that seeing such miracles, and through infidelity doubting, whether all might not be some compact or collusion, they desired some such miracle, as they phancied would put them out of doubt; which was indeed to tempt God. by desire, to prescribe him: or it may be they desired to perswade the people, that except he shewed them some such miracle, he had no authority from Heaven: that is, such as was in the Manna, thunder and showers in Samuels time, &c. 1 Sam. 7. 10.

V. 17. knowing their thoughts] As the searcher of hearts, knowing to what end they required some other signes from heaven, being not satisfied with all those signes which they had seen him do by a divine and heavenly power; knowing it was their infidelity, and impious minde to calumniate him.

every kingdom] Division ruineth kingdoms; unity establisheth them: you see by woful experience, the kingdom of Satan powerful among you, not only, not the wicked cast-awayes, but in that which is more apparent, so many which are now possessed of evil spirits in Israel: therefore Satans kingdom is not against it self. Devils conspire against all that which is good; but not against one another, or any thing which is evil: they are cast out against their wils, chap. 9. 39.

V. 18. If Satan be divided] See Mat. 12. 26.

V. 19. If I by Beelzebub, &c.] Mat. 12. 27.

by whom do your sons, &c.] That which ye allow in your children, why reprehend you in me? We may understand this either of their Exorcists, or of some of those to whom God had formerly given this gift of healing.

V. 20. with the finger of God] ἐν δακτύλῳ Θεοῦ, meaning by the power of God, Exod. 8. 19. it is called מאצבע אלהים etsbah elohim, 70 δακτυλὸς Θεοῦ: which Matth. 12. 28. is called the spirit of God.

the kingdom of God is come upon you] Meaning not onely the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom; but also the power of Christ destroying the works of the devil, casting him out of his usurped possessions, and transtlating his elect from the powers of darknesse into his kingdom of grace, Colos. 1. 13. and marvellous light: this was come to them who would not believe; which was a signe and argument of their greater condemnation.

V. 21. When a strong man] Matth. 12. 29, ἰσχυρὸς, strong or powerful, Heb, גבר חיל ben chaiil, filius virtutis, 1 Sam. 14. 52. 2 Kings 2. 16. &c. a son of power or strength; so used they to cal the strong or mighty.

keepeth his palace] He compareth Satan in the heart of the unregenerate, to some usurping prince, or powerfull tyrant, or Goliah-like gyant, domineering in confidence of his own strength; and himself to be conquerer (who bare his type) till Christ came to conquer and cast him out; Satan ruleth, as it were a king, in his palace, commanding all parts and faculties of man, in peace, that is, quietly, none troubling or opposing his dominion.

V. 22. come upon him] At unawares subduing him.

all his armour] πανοπλίαν, signifieth all ammunition or furniture appertaing to compleat arming, Ephes. 6. 13.

divideth his spoils] As conquerours divide, or distribute the pillage to their souldiers: see Isa. 11. 14 Isa. 49. 24. his meaning is to shew how he came to redeem mankinde, which had no way to deliver it self from the captivity and tyranny wherein Satan held the greatest part of the world, untill Christ came, and rescued all those incorpointed vessels of honour, restoring God his elect, and to them the graces and state of holinesse holinesse whereof Satan had disporled them.

V. 23. He that is not with me] Matt. 12. 30. he that declareth not himself to be on my side; for there is no man, but he is either Christs or Satans: Christ can have no communion with Satan, (as they blasphemously imagined in his casting out devils) for Satans work is onely to destroy and scatter: but Christ, his work is to save and gather together the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

V. 24. when the unclean spirit] Mat. 12.43.

is gone out of a man] Not that Satan ever leaveth any, except the spirit of regeneration drive him out: but that in some vacations, and want of opportunities to precipitate them to sin, he seemeth to be gone for a time: the purpose is, to shew the wretched condition of those who abused light and grace offered them; or who being illuminated with the knowledge of God, seeming to have escaped from the snares and power of Satan, do yet relapse to pride envy, malice, lust, drunkennesse, &c. for their last estate is far worse than the first: sin never standeth at a stay, but groweth worse and worse; 2 Peter 2. 20. Heb. 6. 4. and the judgement shall be proportionable.

seeking rest] Meaning some other heart, where he might rule without any resistance: Satans rest is in the worst of motions to hurt men, and to make them as damnable as himself.

V. 25. swept and garnished] Mat. 12.44. by a little formal repentance, or fruitlelle resolution to do some good.

V. 26. seven other, &c.] That is, many worse, and so that mans state becometh more desperate, as v. 24.

V. 27. a certain woman of the company] Admiting the power and wisdom of Christ; while the envious Scribes and Pharisees studied, and vented their blasphemy, the thus confidently profelleth his excellency, this seemeth a proverbial manner of speaking, importing a good and excellent person; and the reason thereof may seem to be, because it is a blessing of God to be the mother of prudent, holy, and excellent children; as the contrary is a great affliction and unhappinels.

V. 28. that hear the word, &c.] Without which no carnal privilidge can make happy, but we must keep it; for not the hearers, but the doers of Gods word are justified. See Rom. 2. 13. Jam. 1. 3. Mat. 7. 26. it is the food (of the soul) which cannot nourish except the stomake retain it to a good digestion.

V. 29. and when the people] Mat. 12.38.

were gathered] When the multitude encreased, and were gathered to him.

V. 30. For as Jonah was a signe] See Jon. 2. 1. as Jonas deliverance out of the belly of the whale was a sufficient proof of his ministery, so Christs resurrection the third day, was of his mission: and therefore as the Ninevites beleeved Jonas, after he had been three dayes in the whales belly, so should these believe and repent after his resurrection the third day; Acts 2. 37. 41. 47. or else be left excuselels.

V. 31. The Queen of the south] See 1 Kings 10. 1. the Queen of Saba, or Sheba: see Mat. 12. 42.

a greater than Solomon is here] That is, Christ the Messias, God and man: the eternal word and wisdom of God: it is true that God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largenesse of heart, even as the sand that is on the sea shore: so that his wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the East, and all the wisdom of Egypt: he was wiser than all men, 1 Kings 4. 29, 30, 31. but in Christ all folnesse dwelt, Colol. 1. 19 the fulnesse of the Godhead, Colol. 2. 9. in him are hid all the treasure of wisdom and knowledge, Colol. 2. 3. so that (as Bernard saith sup. Cant. serm. 27.) he, Non tam sapiens, quam ipsa sapientia est: is not onely wise, but wisdom it self: and so CHRIST excelleth all creatures: no creature is its own essence.

V. 32. The men of Nineve shall rise up, &c.] See Jon. 3. 5. their example shall be an argument of condemnation against those, who regarded not the preaching of a greater than Solomon, than all men, as John Baptist saith, John 3. 31.

V. 33. no man when he hath lighted, &c.] See Matth. 5. 15. Mark 4. 21. Luke 8. 16. his purpose is to shew, that though his preaching found little good effect in that evil generation, yet would he not hide the light which he brought not in vain into the world: this similitude of light accommodate to the office of the ministery, is often used in holy Scripture, to teach us what we ought to endeavour to.

under a bushel] See Mat. 5. 15.

V. 34. the light of the body is the eye] See Matth. 6. 22. as a window is called a light, because it letteth light into the room: these words seem to give a reason why that generation continued blinde, in so clear a light of the gospel preached to them: because the eye of their minde was darkned with ambition pride, envy, malice, covetousnels, and other wicked affections; hence it came to pass, that they, not onely understood not the truth which Christ shewed them, but opposed the same, accounting it darknels and errour.

single] Clear without blemish, quick-sighted; if the crystal humors, and pupilla oculi, were coloured, the eye could not see any other colour, for meum existens prohibet alienum, that colour of the eye-ball would not suffer any other to be perceived; therefore hath the God of wisdom (wonderfull in all his works) made that (like a clear glasse-window to let in light to the house) without any colour in it, that through it the species of things seen, might be presented through the optic nerves to the common sense; and so we have a right apprehension of things sensible: and so proportionably is it with things intellectual.

whole body] Meaning that the whole body is directed by a sufficient light.

V. 35. that the light] That which seemeth to be light, take heed it be no darknesse of errour.

V. 36. no part dark] He meaneth this of true illumination by Gods word and holy Spirit, not as if any man (though regencrate) were free from all ignorance, but because in regeneration every part is sanctified and renewed (though not in this life perfected) so that we thereby walk as children of light.

V. 37. a certain Pharisee besought him, &c] Some of these invited him sometimes, though possibly with several intentions, he who came to save sinners, omitted no opportunity thereto. See Chap. 7. 36.

V. 38. Pharisee saw it] See Mark 7 3 &c.

first washed] They washed often according to their superstitious tradition, and he wondred why Christ did not so also, Mark 7. 2, 3, &c.

V. 39. and the Lord said] See Matth. 23. 25. See the admirable difference between Christ, and the men of this world. Christ, as a true friend, not so much endeavouring to please as to profit, plainly told the Pharisee his, and his fellows, faults; but the parasitical trencher-flies will rather betray their benefactours foul by their silence, than venture their own intereft in their favour by reproving them, and telling them the truth, that they might amend their faults.

V. 40. make that which is within also] Both body and soul, that God may be lerved in both according to his revealed will, not your own tradition: you wash the hands, and neglect the heart: it is déep hypocrilie to be solicitous for that which man seeth, and to neglect that which God seeth, and principally required. See Mat. 23.26. 2 Cor. 7. 1. James 4. 8.

V. 41. But rather give alms of such things as you have] Τὰ ἐνόντα, that is, κατὰ τὰ ἐνόντα, according to the things which you have: τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, as Chap. 12. 33. The Syriac interpreter giveth it, id quod adest: as it is Genes. 31. 13. מן חבא בר min habba betaḏ, of that which came to hand, which he had ready: the meaning is, as you are able and provided to give: it is not washing the body can make you clean or holy before God, but faith and a good conscience within: especially charity in giving according to your ability, wherein God will accept you, as clean.

V. 42. Wo unto you Pharisees] See Mat. 23. 23.

these ought ye to have done] As if he had said, you Pharisees do well to pay tithes of all the increase of the earth, for so the Law commandeth, Levit. 27. 30. and in Abrahams tithes payed to Melchisedec, it appeareth to be due by the law of nature, (the ground of the moral Law, and long before the Levitical Law commenced, in force) the transcript whereof is the Law written by God on the tables of stone. Next we must consider, that God (the best and surest interpreter of his own Law) interpreteth detention of tithes to be sacrilidge, as it is written, Mal. 3. 8 ye have robbed me — in tithes and offerings: notwithstanding, men otherwise interpreted, who said, Wherein have we robbed thee? and so a breach of the eighth precept of the morall law, therefore standing still in force; for Christ came not to dilolve the Law, Matth. 5. 17. this speech then of Christ, at the period of the Levitical Law, affirming that they ought to pay tithes of all, even to the very herbs; o ght not to be restrained as relating onely to the priesthood of Aaron, it doth as duly now concern the Ministers of the Gospel, as any other part or branch of the moral Law: it being sufficient for that, once to have said to all persons, times and places, Thou shalt not steal; the Prophet so expressely interpreting detention of tithes to be stealing and robbing; by so much more abominable, because God hath vouchsafed to take tithes upon his own accompt in the Ministers behalf, left it should be thought an humane intereft, and in the power of man to alienate them, under any pretence or colour whatsoever. It can be no lesse than impious ingratitude to detain the tenth from God, who giveth us freely nine parts for our own use. Quid faceres si novem partibus tibi sumptis, tibi decimam reliquisses? saith Augustin. de Temp. ser. 219. what wouldest thou do, if he should have taken nine parts to himself and left thee only one? All is his: he requireth but his own: he may dispose of it as he pleaseth. Neither doth he require tithes for his own sake, but for our good: as for a maintenance which his wisdom layed out for the Ministers, which watch over our souls; Proverbs 3. 9. Honour the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruits of all thy encrease: so shall thy barnes be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine. And again, Mal 3. 10. Bring ye all the tithes into the Store-house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open unto you the windows of heaven, and powre you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it, &c. the curse lyeth upon the detainers of tithes, not onely in particular, but in the general: Te are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation, Mal. 3. 9. many fearful instances to this purpose do both our histories, and memories afford us, too large for our present purpose. Two things are considerable by those, who are of other opinion, and the third not contemptible: first, whereas they say, the Ministers shal have otherwise a competency; let them consider: how dangerously the wisdom of man assaileth the amendment or bettering of Gods wisdom and decrees. Secondly, whereas they suppose tithes were due in the ceremonial Law onely, not by the moral, let them consider. First, what could tithes presigure, accomplished, (and so repealed) in Christ. And next, that (whereas all the ceremonies of the Law are repealed in particular, or in the general, so in the Gospel or new Testament, as that their abolishing necessarily concludeth the abolition of all the particulars thereto appertaining) no one Text of the new Testament evidently, or by necessary consequence prohibiting tithes, can be produced: whereas this present text saith, these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone: and the forecited interpreteth the detention of tithes sacrilidge, or robbing of God: denouncing the curse to the detainers, pronouncing the blessing to the payers thereof: now whatsoever was commanded in the Old Testament, having its ground in the law of nature, and being not repealed in the new; must yet stand in force, as a duty of the morall law. Thirdly, it is considerable, that every branch of the moral law, is indispensable: so that if Ministers and people should consent to any violation thereof: there can reasonably be expected none other sentence from the just God, than that forecited, Mal. 3. ye are cursed with a curse; for you have robbed me, even this whole nation: Yet they said, wherein have we robbed thee? confident that detention of tithes was no sin. To conclude, that which Christ taxeth here, is their vain hopes as well careful for judgement, mercy, faith, (Matth. 23. 23.) and the love of God, as they seemed to be in paying small tithes.

V. 43. Te love the uppermost seats] See Matth. 23. 6. Mark 12. 38. Luke 20. 46.

V. 44. Te are as graves] See Matth 23. 27. your filthy corruptions within you, appear not unto men, so that deceived by your shews of sanctity, they easily fall into a dangerous imitation of you.

V. 45. Then answered one of the lawyers] One of the expounders of the law.

thou reproachest us also] Thus he faid, as taking it for granted, that the interpreters of the law were unreprovable; he censureth Christs just condemning their hypocrisie: so hard is reformation, where pride, hypocrisie, and opinion of learning and wisdom, prejudicate all instruction: this was the reason why so few Scribes, Pharisees, and Doctors of the Law were converted by the preaching and miracles of Christ, evidently enough speaking him the expected Messias; and the same cause is there still, why so few are now converted, but many are perverted dayly, the spirit of pride, and giddy influence of Satan hath so possessed many, that they think themselves able to teach their Ministers, and themselves too good to be reproved: he injureth them, who but speaketh of their sinnes.

V. 46. And he faid] See Mat. 23. 4.

ye lade men] See Acts 15. 10. though they charged the people with many burdensome traditions; yet here Christ seemeth not so much to speak of these, as their rigid and imperious exaction of obedience to the whole law of ceremonies (which Peter calleth, a yoke which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear, Acts 15. 10.) and in the mean time they favoured themselves, with ease and indulgence.

V. 47. wo unto you] See Matth. 23. 29.

V. 48. ye allow the deeds] Your fathers building the Prophets tombs, whom their fathers slew, therein condemned their fathers facts, by such an honouring their memory, declaring their disliking of their fathers cruelty; you doing the like, shew your selves heirs also of your fathers impiety. Non igitur adsentatio, sed aemulatio loco criminis astimatur. Ambrof. in Luc. l. 7. c. 11. not the building of the Prophets tombs, but imitation of their fathers wickednesse is condemned: as if he had said, you adorn their tombs, but will no more obey their doctrine than your fathers did: you will also kill the messengers of God, under pretence of Religion and Godlinesse.

V. 49. Said the wisdom of God] Matth 23. 34. as if he faid I say, who am the eternal subsisting wisdom of the father, Prov. 8. 12. or, the wisdom and goodnesse of God, thus disposed to send Prophets, &c.

V. 50. That the blood of all, &c.] For in former ages they slew the Prophets of God, and the men of this generation continuing in their fathers sinnes, and adding to the measure by crucifying Christ, and persecuting the Apostles and Ministers of the Gospel; God would now no longer bear, but powre down vengeance on the bloody nation, as was seen in the destruction of Jerusalem: and as Christ foretold them, Matth. 23. 31.

V. 51. From the blood of Abel] See Genes. 4. 8. the meaning is, that God would call this nation to account for all the blood they shed; though in their blinde fury, and ignorant zeal, they thought they had done God service in shedding it (as John 16. 2.) he nameth Abel, because his blood was the first that ever stained the earth; as if he faid, no cruelty and effusion of innocent blood, when ever shed, shall escape unpunished: of Zacharias we read, 2 Chron. 24. 22. whose dying words, when they stoned him, were the Lord look upon it, and require it: which quickly came to passe: for the Assyrians invaded Joath (who commanded him to be slain) and destroyed Princes and people; and his servants confpired against him and slew him in his bed, 2 Chron. 24. 25. concerning two named Zacharias, see the learned H. Cafaubon. Exercit. 1. ad Annal. Eccles. 17. An 1. n 57.

V. 52. wo unto you lawyers] See Mat. 23. 13.

taken away the key, &c.] By your artifices, traditions, and usurpation over mens consciences, subjecting them to your erroneous opinions; and keeping them from the means of knowing the true sense of holy scriptures, which is preaching the word; it being the key of heaven: as also in that you hinder them from beleeving in me, who am the end of the law, the way, truth, and life.

V. 53. to urge him to speak, &c.] The word ἀποστοματίζειν here used signifieth, ex ore elicere: to draw something out of ones mouth: which the Syriac significantly expresseth by ומתמטין vamthatsin & aucupabantur; as if it were faid, they went a birding: or layed wait to catch him and enfnare him in his words. ומטי is a Syriac word, which, as Tremelius noteth, inter alia significat aucupari, aut carpere verba alicujus. Rabbi Salomo expoundeth משטי, vifco avibus insidiari: Vatablus interpreteth it, captiose enim interrogare de multis, they began captiously to question with him concerning many things. So they urged him to answer, by proposing feverall doubts and cavils, in hope that in many answers they should catch something wherof to accuse him: so it is expressed, verse 54. by ἐνεδρεύειν αὐτὸν, seeking as it were by hunting to catch something out of his words, wherof to accuse him.

CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. IN the mean time] See Matthew 16. 6. Mark 8. 15.

leaven of the Pharisees] Leaven is Metaphorically put in Scripture; sometimes in the good part, as Matth. 13. 33. sometimes in the bad, as Mark 8. 15. 1 Cor. 5. 6, 7, 8. Gal. 5. 9. it relateth sometimes to doctrine, sometimes to practice: in either of these, men use to receive a certain influence of qualities, from others whom they hear, or read, or with whom they converse, whether good or evill as the leaven conveigheth and communicateth its sowrenels to the meal in which it lieth: so they interpret this word ζύμη, farina fubacta, quæ racorem contrahit: Hebr חמץ chametz and Syriac חמרא acris, acerbus fuit, as 1 Cor. 5. 6. חמשתן machamath, here the Syriac hath חמירא chamira, from the Hebrew word חמר Chamar, mixed or confused. So that Christ here warneth them, that they be not infected with that same bittemesse of hypocritical Pharisees, the bane of religion: therefore is that πρῶτον used, not distributively to preferibe an order of avoiding evil; but as a mark of eminency set upon that sin; as if he faid chiefly (as Rom. 1.8.) or above all evils, take heed of hypocrisie, with which there can be no truth of Religion.

V. 2. Nothing covered] Matthew 10. 26. Mark 4. 22. Luke 8. 17.

V. 3. The house tops] Publikely and openly: he respecteth the manner of their buildings, which were flat roofs, whence they might speak to multitudes in the streets. See 2 Sam. 11. 2.

V. 4. I say unto you my friends] He speaketh thus to comfort them, and to encourage them to preach the Gospel boldly. See Mat. 10. 28. John 15. 14, 15. A man will save and relieve a friend, specially in that which he hath imployed him, and it were great dishonour, to desert him therein: therefore feare you not to preach the Gospel, stronger is he that is with you therein, than all that are, or can be against you,

V. 5. Into hell] To hell fire, and eternal condemnation; of this no creature hath power, therefore God onely is to be feared: Christ calleth it γέενναν, which some derive as a contract of גיהנום ge-hinnoi, Josh. 15. 8. the valley of Hinnom: hence the Syriac גיהנא ge-hinna, or gihannah. Greek, γέεννα: it was a pleasant and fruitfull valley neer Jerusalem upon the brook Cedron, wherein was Topheth, where they offered their sons and daughters to devils by the idol Molech (as the heathens did to Saturn (Minuc. Fel. Octavio.) burning them between two fires, with hideous noises: for the abolishing whereof Josias commanded, that all manner of carrions from the city should be cast there; so that there was continuall fire to burn and consume the same, left they should stench the city, See 2 Kings 23. 10, hence by a metaphor the Hebrews used to call hell (the place for torments of the damned) גיהנם gehinnom, as a place most abominable, impious, and terrible. See Joh. Drus. ad voc. N. T. com. 1, Gehenna.

V. 6. Are

V. 6. Are not five sparrows] Matth. 10. 29. This he addeth to confirm and comfort his disciples against persecutions, the poor birds cannot be destroyed, except God permit it; how much lesse shall you? it is injury to the divine providence, to distrust his care over us, who keepeth the creatures provided for us: he forgetteth not one of these, can he forget you? certainly you being of more value, are more deer to him

V. 7. The very haires of your head] See on Matthew 10. 30.

V. 8. Also I say unto you] Matthew 10. 32. 2 Timothy 2. 12.

V. 9. Whosoever shall deny me] To the foregoing argument he adjoyneth the mention of reward: Christ will own them, who suffer for his sake; and that before the holy Angels, who shall attend him in his judging the living and the dead, Mark 8. 38. as also the punishment of them, who (for fear, favour of men, or of this world, or the things thereof) shall any wayes deny him before men: as if any deny him to be very God and man: to be our Saviour, Justifier, redeemer, and sole mediatour: or if any deny the Gospel, or any part thereof to be the truth: if any out of malice oppose it, for fear of men be ashamed of it; or by an impious silence betray the truth thereof: To confesse him relateth, either to all Christians, of which 1 Pet. 3. 15. or to those who are called out before persecutours, to give testimony to the truth of Christ: he will deny and cast off all those who deny him: which is to be understood in case of finall impenitency: otherwise Peters denyall of Christ, (through deep perturbation of minde in sodain fear) and his bitter tears of repentance following, shew how far the elect, in some distempers are sometimes over born in temptations; and yet by Gods mercy are recovered again.

V. 10. Speak a word] See Matth. 12. 32. Mark 3. 28. 1 John 5. 16.

it shall be forgiven him] He that speaketh against Christ, through ignorance and unbelief, it shall be forgiven him when he repenteth: but he that shall blaspheme the holy Spirit of God, the Godhead, out of destinate malice, against his knowledge and conscience, wittingly and willingly, persevering therein unto his end, it shall not be forgiven him: for otherwise, we know Pauls blasphemy, was forgiven him, for he did it ignorantly, 1 Timothy 1. 13.

V. 11. When they shall bring you unto the Synagogues] See Matth. 10. 19. Mark 13 11. Luke 21. 14. the meaning is, when they shall convene you before the councils of Jews, High-Priests, Pharises, &c, or the tribunals of heathen Princes, Magistrates, or Governours, fear not, you shall finde a present assistance of Gods Spirit, in such words and wisdom as your enemies shal not be able to overthrow, chap. 21. 15.

V. 14. Who made me a judge] Christ would not intermeddle with secular government, when he was to redeem man, by subjecting himself to the judgement of man: not hereby dillallowing the right of Magistracy and government by civill judicature, but intimating that God had now given him another calling: teaching every one to contain himself within the limits of his own calling, and not to usurpe and intermeddle with others; admonishing all men, to beware of covetousnesse the fountain of contention: and lastly, laying the ground for that which the Apostle urgeth. 2 Timothy 2. 4. that the state of a Minister should herein be proportionable to the condition of a souldier; dissentangled from the affairs of this life, that he may please him, who hath chosen him to another office: not that the Minister may not meddle with any affairs secular, but that he may not thereby be entangled, and hindred from the work of his Ministery, to which God hath chosen him, and set him apart, as Romans 1. 1. nor be impropriated to the execution of civil offices of judicature or the like, because it can be no lesse than sacrilege to convert that, in whole or any part, to common uses (which is sacred by a peculiar dedication to God and his Religious service) incompatible with that consecration and ministration; wherefore Christ refused this office of civil judicature; because he had no calling thereto, but to be a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec (Hebr. 5. 4, 5, 6.) though he were in his own person of infinite abilities to have performed both these offices: the fourth Council of Carthage. chap. 20. decreed, that the Bishop should not so much as be troubled with the care, rei familiaris, of domestick businesse, but, lectioni, & orationi & verbi predicationi tantummodo vacet, attend onely to reading, prayer, and preaching the word: the third Counsel of Carthage. chap. 15. citing those words. 2 Tim. 2 2, 4. decreed, that neither Bishops, Priests, &c. should be farmers, stewards, &c. it is not unlikely that they had also in their minde that of the Apostles 1 Tim. 4. 15 that which some alleadge out of Possidonius, vit. Augustin. cap. 19. that he spent whole dayes in compounding controversies; and that which they bring out of Augustin de opere Monach. c. 29. To. 3. conclude nothing against us herein, seeing it appeareth not that Augustin executed any civil office of judicature; but that which was Ecclesiastical and immediatly subordinate to Religion, as are peace, mercy, and charity; which the first Counsell of Antioch allowed and enjoyned. chap. 20. it was ordeined that twice a year the Bishops should meet; Διὰ τὰς ἐκκλησιαστικὰς χρείας, καὶ τὰς τῶν ἀμφισβητουμένων διαλύσεις, for Ecclesiastical causes, and to compose controversies, &c. and chap. 25. of the same: it was decreed, that the Bishop should have τὴν τῆς ἐκκλησίας πραγμάτων ἐξουσίαν, &c. power of things belonging to the Church; to give alms; and to relieve his own wants: now although these controversies, did not all arise from matters of faith and religion, but probably some, or many from secular interests (which might be the reason why Augustin de op. Monach. cap. 29. nameth those secular businesses, in composing whereof he was so much distracted) yet was the making of peace immediatly subordinate to the duties and acts of Religion unto which none are, or can be well and duly fitted, without peace; unity, and charity. (Matth. 5. 23. 24. 1 Cor 1. 10. 1 Cor. 3 3. Phil. 2. 1. &c. Ps. 133. 3. &c) and so, though this office well became all the children of God, Mat. 5. 9. yet questionlesse, best those who were, or are assigned to the ministery of the Gospel of peace: yet is it considerable, that Augustin esteemed this, such a distraction from his Ministery in the word, and such a burden unto him, that he calleth God to witnesse, multa mallem per singulos dies, &c. aliquid manibus operari, &c. I had much rather every day some hours labour with my hands, that I might have others free to read, pray, and do something concerning divine Scriptures. and that he not onely complained hereof, but obtained leave in an Ecclesiastically assembly of the people to transmit and put over this burden to Eradius his successour elect. See Aug. ep. 110 If to spend time to make peace, were a known distraction and heavy burden to good Bishops; we may securely condemn of pride with Ambrof. ep. 33. ad Marcellin. tyrannis sacerdotis infirmitas est—nunquam sacerdotes tyranni fuerunt, sed tyrannos sæpe sunt passi, that is, the tyranny of a priest is an infirmity —priests (if good) were never tyrants, but have often suffered by tyrants.

V. 15. Beware of covetousnesse] Beware of insatiable desire of having more, which the Apostle calleth the root of all evil. 1 Tim. 6. 10. so it is indeed, of fraud, lying oppression, murder, &c. non ille liber qui fervit avaritiæ, Ambrof. l. 2. ep. 7. he is no free-man who serveth avarice: all abundance cannot preserve life; that is, it is in Gods hand, to give or take away; as he presently sheweth in the parable of the lecure rich man: and truely, non conservat divitem sed animus facit: Ambrof. lib. 10. ep 82. it is not so much wealth, as the minde which maketh a man rich: the law of nature is rich enough to all: unto which you may quickly finde abundance, but to desire, all abundance is scarcity: nemo pauper nascitur sed fit: no man is born, but becometh poor: therefore poverty is not by nature, but opinion: therefore you may quickly finde natures rich man; hardly desires.

V. 16. Brought forth plentifully] He teacheth that God giveth temporal blessings, even to the wicked, (as Matth. 5. 45.) many times for their greater destruction. Jer. 12. 3, Psal. 73. 18. therefore we may not set our hearts on them; but aspire to those riches which he giveth to his elect only, as the riches of his grace, Ephes. 1. 7. Eph. 2. 7. the unsearchable riches of Christ. Ephes. 3. 8. See Col. 2. 2. 1 Tim. 6. 5. 6.

V. 18. Build greater] This he saith, not to condemn an holy providence of saving and laying up that which God giveth us (for he commanded the broken meats to be gathered up. John 6. 12. See also 2 Cor. 12. 14. 1 Timothy. 5. 8.) but to shew us how evil, confidence in riches is, how vain and foolish; seeing they may be so sodainly taken away from their secureft owners, or they from them.

V. 20. Fool, this night] He was foolish in reckoning upon many years to come, who could not be certain of one night. longa nostra desideria interpat via brevis. Greg. hom. in Evang. 32. so short a way of life, reproves our long desires.

Then whose shall these things be] No man (saith Ambrof. lib. 8. 9. 10.) is rich, qui quod habet secum hinc auferre non potest: which cannot carry hence that which he hath: that which we must leave behinde us, is not ours, but some others.

V. 21. layeth up treasure: He that heapeth up riches to satisfie his worldly desires without the good provision of faith, and good works, shall be like this foolish rich man: see Mat. 6. 20. 1 Tim. 6. 19. Jam. 1. 5.

V. 22. Take no thought] See Mat. 9. 25. 1 Pet. 5. 7. Psal. 55. 22. he forbiddeth not φροντίζειν, care for your selves and your families, that we owe. 1 Tim. 5. 8. but this μεριμνᾶν distracting and dissident care proceeding from a greedy desire and love of the world, distrust in Gods providence, and undervaluing of the true riches of Godlinesse, 1 Tim. 6 5. 6.

V. 23. The life is more] Matth 6. 25. as if he said: God hath given thee life and soul, which is far better than food and raiment; therefore he will not fail to give these for the preservation of the other, the Creator never ceaseth from the work of providence, John 5. 17.

V. 24. Consider the ravens] Matth. 6. 26. God that provideth for the most abject and vile creatures, as ravens, &c. Job 38. 41. Psalm 147. 9. will certainly much more feed, and provide for man, made to his own image; whom he redeemed with no lesse a price than the pretious blood of Christ Jesus. See Rom. 8. 32.

V. 25. Which of you by taking thought] Mat. 6. 27. this is another argument argument to dissuade from worldly care, from the vanity and unprofitablenesse thereof: as if he said, all your care cannot make you rich; God only giveth or restraineth. See 1 Kings 3. 13. 1 Chron. 29. 12. Hag. 1. 6, 9, 10, 11. Job 8. 18. it is in vain to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of carefulnesse, or sorrows: except the Lord bleste it, you cannot thrive. Psal. 127. 2.

V. 26. For the rest] For that which is of greater importance, the preservation of your selves.

V. 27. Consider the lillies] See on Mat. 6. 28, 29. this argument is, like the former, from Gods liberality shewed on the creatures made for mans delight, to assure us that he is more liberal to man himself: he that thus clothes the soon-fading flowers, will not let man want clothing: the scope of all is to teach us in an holy and prudent endeavour, to cast our care upon God. See Psal. 55. 23. 1 Pet. 5. 7.

V. 28. If then God so cloth the grasse] Mat. 6. 30.

V. 29. Neither be ye of doubtful minde] καὶ μετεωρίζεσθε, it signifieth, be ye not in suspence or of mindes doubtful and wavering: so Suidas expresse it: ἤτοι δὲ μετέωρους τὰς ψυχὰς, καὶ πρὸς τὸ μέλλον ἐπ σκυλόντας erant autem animi suspensi, & ob incertum rerum futurarum eventum adhuc fluctuantes. So Thucidides, by him also cited, saith, that Greece was μετέωρος, that is, saith he, σκιαζόντων, καὶ οὐκ ἠσυχαζόντων; they were troubled, and did not rest, So he calleth ships at sea μετεώρους, that is, πλαζομένους, καὶ μὴ ἐπ' ἀγκυρῶν ἱσταμένας: that which we may not improperly render ships a drift, or at hull, which are not come to an anchor: the interpreter of the Syriack gives this word, neque disturbabitur cogitatio vestra in istis: the whole sense is, be ye not of wavering and doubtful mindes, about temporal necessaries, as they must needs be who, depending only on second causes, do not put their confidence in Gods providence, which never faileth those who trust in him. See Psal. 9. 10. Hebr. 13. 5.

V. 30. the nations &c.] This last argument is taken from the difference which ought to be between us Christians, and the profane and unbelieving heathens: we acknowledge and professe that God is our Father; we call on him who knoweth we have need of these things; and are to a tender Father, he provideth these things for us; but the Gentiles and worldly minded men, have not faith to depend on God: no wvonder if they, who have no such confidence on Gods favour toward them, depend on second causes, and endeavour to provide for themselves: a worldly mind discovereth a mans dissidence in God, and grosse unbelief, as to his relation to Gods covenant, and interest therein.

V. 31. these things] These temporal necessaries, common to good and bad.

shall be added] See on Mat. 6 33. Shall be added over and above that ye seek for; as Solomon riches were to his request for wisdom. 1 Kings 3. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

V. 32. The Kingdom] Of heaven, therefore fear not: he that giveth an eternal interest in heaven; will not suffer you to want temporal and earthly necessaries, to fit you, and bring you thereto.

V. 33. Sell that ye have] Matth. 19. 21. Acts 2. 45. Acts 4. 34.

provide you bags] See chap. 16. 9. Mat. 6. 20 1 Tim. 6. 19. This command condemneth not propriety of goods; neither reacheth it to all times, places and persons; but respecteth cases of necessity: and teacheth that charity much more safely layeth up riches in Gods hands (who will bountifully repay for the poor) than any care of worldly men, can otherwise do: and lastly this sheweth which are true riches: illa sunt vera divitiæ, quas cum habuerimus perdere non possumus; Augustin. de verbo Domini serm. 35. those are true riches which we can never lose, when once we have them.

V. 34. where your treasure is] Matth. 6. 21. Because your minds and affections will be commonly on that which is most loved, dear, and precious unto you: therefore be mercitul, and so lay up treasure in heaven, that your hearts and conversations may be there: See Col. 3. 2. Phil. 3. 20.

V. 35. let your loins &c.] See 1 Pet. 1. 13. Meaning that they should be always ready to execute their charge; alluding to their habit, and manner of girding their long loose garments unto them when they were to do any work; he willeth them to contrive all worldly necessaries so, that they may not hinder them in the service of God.

V. 36. When he will return from the wedding] The meaning couched under this metaphor is, that we should stand upon a spiritual watch, constantly expecting the coming of our Lord Jesus to judge; ἀναλύσεσι return, properly signifieth to dissolve or break up: so Athen. lib. 1. ὅσα ἀφ' ἑνὸς ἀναλυθέντα which may be interpreted breaking up company, to go home: some take it translatitiously from ships breaking ground, to returne whence they came.

V. 37. and serve them] That is, God will abundantly requite their service in Christ, with eternal blessings.

V. 38. in the second watch] They were wont to divide the night into four watches; so often they relieved and changed the turns of their watchmen or centinels, from the courts of guard. See Matthew 14. 25. Exod. 14. 24. Theophylatt understandeth here τὰς διαφόρους ὥρας & ζωῆς ἡμῶν the divers hours or times of our life. The meaning is, whether he come sooner or later, to take thee out of this life; this know, quos diu ut converlantur tolerat, non converset, durius damnat. Greg. hom. 12. in Evang. those whom he long tolerateth, that they may be converted, he more heavily damneth if they convert not.

or in the third] The meaning is, because the hour of death or judgement is uncertain; therefore we must allwayes be provided for it. See Job 14. 14. See verse 40.

V. 39. and this know] See Mat. 24. 43. 1 Thes. 5 2. 2 Pet. 3. 10. Rev. 3. 3, & 16. 15.

V. 41. this parable unto us] Whether doth this parable appertain to us Apostles, Ministers and watchmen over the house of Israel; or unto all men?

V. 42. Who then is that faithful, &c.] Matthew 24. 45 He answereth, not Peters quare directly, but so as that we may understand here, as Mark 13. 37. What I say unto you, I say unto all, watch: though it principally concern those to whom God hath committed the charge of souls, yet all that will be saved, are also to watch.

V. 43. Blessed are &c. He exhorteth to the duty by the reward propoled.

V. 44. ruler over all] Mat. 24. 45. that is, he will highly honour and recompence his diligence; as in things secular, Joseph was honoured by Pharaoh, and set over his houshold Gen. 45. 43. what this honour shall be, eye hath not seen, &c. 1 Cor. 2. 9.

V. 45. but if that servant] By punishment threatned, he dehorreth from security, tyranny, oppression, and injury towards another.

V. 46. Cut him in sunder] Or cut him off: ἀποτομήσει. So Mat. 24. 51. Tertul. adv. Marc. l. 4 c. 29. giveth it by segregabitur; so the Syriack giveth it בְּלַבֵּל, as Martin Trostius readeth it; as Tremelius בְּפֶלַג & dividet: of פֶּלַג phelag. Hebr. פֶּלַג Phalag. signifying both; divisit or separavit, all to one purpose; for so will the Lord cut off the impious servant by separating him from the number and society of them that shall be saved: as Mat. 25 46. thus he will deal with deceivers of so great a trust; this penalty is added to terrifie the idle, injurious, and those who in the Church serve not the Lord Jesus, but their own bellies, Philippians 2. 21. to these will he once give their portion or ſh re with hypocrites and unbelievers in hell fire.

V. 47. which knew his Lords will] As if he said; if the servant which offendeth out of ignorance be worthy of punishment; what is he, who knowing it, wilfully, or negligently transgresseth it; ignorance is lesse sin than wilfulnesse, 2 Pet. 2. 21. It is vain to pretend ignorance (where all are bound to know, that cannot excuse) and most wretched to abuse knowledge.

V. 48 worthy of stripes] That is, who hath committed some fault worthy of punishment: he alludeth to the custom of correcting servants.

V. 49. to send fire] Mat. 10. 34. Cyril. Hierosol. Catec. 17. understanding this of the Holy Ghost: others more probably of the fiery trial, afflictions, to which they shall be exposed who will live godly in Christ. See verse 51. &c. he speaketh this of that effect which the Gospel should produce, not of it self, but by reason of mans corruption and abuse of it.

and what will I?] That is, though I desire unity, not dissention, yet I would not for wicked mens fakes, that the Elect should want the comfort, which should come by the publishing of the Gospel: therefore he inciteth them to diligence in preaching the Gospel, notwithstanding the tumults which they should see following the same.

V. 50. baptisme to be baptied with] Math. 20. 22. meaning that he self must first suffer: this is in the Saints: is by some called the baptisme of martyrdom: so by waters, the scriptures sometimes expresse many or great afflictions. Psal. 66. 12. & 69. 1.

how am I straitned] Pained, or much prested: as if he said, I much desire that it were accomplished, and the redemption of man thereby.

V. 51. suppose ye &c.] Mat. 10. 34.

but rather divisi n] See on verse 49. He sheweth them before, what would follow by the impious perverseneſſe of men, lest finding such unexpected effects, they might be scandaled, and impute those divisions to the preaching of the Gospel, which are onely accidental thereto: so must we accompt all these intestine quarrels in or about religion here specified: See on Matthew 10. 34.

V. 53. the Father] Matthew 10. 35. one near and deare friend against another.

V. 54. When ye see a cloud rising] Mat. 16. 2. The sea bare westward from Judea, so that commonly clouds thence arising brought rain: so Elias servant saw a little bank or cloud arising from the west, before that great rain which followed the drought of three years. 1 Kings 18. 43.

V. 56. Ye hypocrites] See on chap. 13. 15.

that ye do not discern this time] As if he said; you have wit & dome to observe naturall causes, and signes; why can you not consider spiritual things, of far greater consequence, that is, this accepted time, and day of salvation, wherein God ostereth you such abundant meanes thereto.

V. 55. why of your selves judge ye not?] He discovereth the fountain of their impiety and security: they would not defend seriously to examine their own consciences, neither would they there enquire, as in the sight of God, what was right: therefore had they much more undefinding, for any thing than for matters divine and heavenly: if they were sued, or in danger of arrests, they would presently make means to compound with their adversary, lest they should be put to more charge, or fall into greater dangers: but for reconciliation with the holy Majesty of God offended, they cared not; Prosp. cont. collat. well observeth here, that Christ did not speak this, as intimating that they had either freedom of will, or possibility thereby to that which was good of themselves: but that they might know that they had lost it suo vitio, by their own fault of sin, and that therefore Gods exaction was not unjust, though they were not able to perform that which they ought; but that man, (à litera occidente, confugiat ad spiritum vivificantem, & facultatem, quam ante non invenit in natura, quærat ex gratiâ) might from the killing letter (of the law) flye to the quickening spirit, and seek that ability of grace which he could not before finde in nature: which if he did, he should finde, that great is the mercy of God: if he did not, that the punishment of his finne is just.

V. 58. When thou goest with thine adversary] See on Mat. 5. 25. The meaning is, break off contentions with thine adversaries, before thou come to dangerous issues: repent thee quickly of all thy sins, for which God hath a controversie with thee: believe in Jesus Christ, the onely Mediatour between God and man, and the price of our redemption; that being justified by faith, thou mayest have peace with God, (Rom. 5. 1.) in this life, abuse not the patience and long-suffering of a gracious God, lest he judge thee according to the rigour of his justice, which thou canst never satisfie, which is here meant by the last mite. See on Mat. 1. 25.

mite] See on Mark 12. 142. Theophylatt on this place well sheweth, that the torments of the damned shall never end, because they can never by suffering, pay the last mite, or satisfie the justice of God.

CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. WHose blood Pilate] We finde not in any other scriptures, mention of this fact: it seemeth he caused them to be slain, as they were sacrificing, so that their blood was mingled with the blood of the beasts which they offered: not that they were slain in Galilee, whereof Pilate was not Governour: but it may be that these were of the sect of Judas the Galilæan, mentioned, Acts 5. 37. as Anastasius Sinait. quæst. 146. affirmeth they were; Christ here corrected the rigid censures of hypocrites, over-quick and sharp in censuring others in their afflictions, forgetting that the same rod is over themselves for their security in sin: whereas we ought by such examples to examine our own corruptions, and by present repentance to prevent Gods judgments: however we may not judge of mens finall conditions, by their present calamities, for God many times so afflicteth his dear servants, as thereby to bring them home to him in repentance, and newnesse of life; while he giveth fulnesse and prosperity to others, who by their abusing the same, finde the broad and easie way to destruction eternal.

V. 2. suppose ye that these, &c.] As if he said, you may not think that God alwayes layeth the most heavy fecular punishments, on the greatest sinners; he doth not presently smite all great sinners: but he maketh some exemplary, that thereby others may be moved to amend the like faults, See Numb. 16. 32. Acts 5. 3, 5. &c.

V. 3. I tell you nay] Because men are too apt to condemn those as plagued of God, whom he exerciseth with temporal punishments, without regarding their own faults; he admonisheth every one to look home to his own deserts.

V. 4. the tower in Siloe fell] Neither do we read this history any where else in scripture: it seemeth to have been one of the towers on the walls of Jerusalem, which stood by the waters of Siloe. See John 9. 7. Isaiah 8. 6.

think ye they were sinners] Gre. ὀφειλέται Debtors, that is, sinners. See Mat. 23. 16. to the Syriack translateth it; and so the word is used, Mat. 6. 12. Luke 11 4.

V. 6. ye shall all likewise perish] The word ὁμοίως, which the Syriack giveth, as they, doth not here signify the same kind of judgement; but is to be understood of punishment in general, hanging over the impenitent; as if he said all impenitency is under the curse temporal and eternal; as may appear in the following parable of the barren fig-tree. See also Mat. 3. 12. Ephes. 5. 5. ye shall all (whether Jewes, Galileans, or Samaritans) be judged alike, by the impartial God, who respecteth not persons. 1 Pet. 1. 17. Rom 2. 5.

V. 6. this parable] See Mat 21 19.

A certain man had a fig-tree] This parable our Saviour spake as prepossessing a secret objection which a secure sinner might make against that which he said: the scope is to shew that many impenitent sinners who are worthy of present destruction, are yet spared for some time; all which shall but adde to their final ruine, except they truly and timely repent: continuance in sin is an high abuse of Gods long-suffering, whose justice sleepeth not; neither is he slack, but patient. See 2 Pet. 3. 9. Romans 2. 5. as the planter will try all means to make the barren tree fruitfull: so the good God will not presently cut down and destroy men; but use all means to better them: when nothing will serve, then he layeth the axe to the root. See Isaiah 5. 4. &c. Mat. 3. 10.

V. 7. these three years] That is, these many years; it signifieth the patience and long suffering of God toward sinners: some understand the time before, and under the law, and Gospel. Greg. hom. 31. See Irene. l. 4. c. 7.

why cumbreth it the ground?] καταργεῖ signifieth, among other things, to consume or work out the heart of the ground: the meaning is, that they who are not fruitfull in good works, do but make others barren by their example; and as Gregory saith, alius operandi occasionem negat, deny others the occasion of working, and possesse the place on which others might be planted, which would bring forth better fruit. See Rom. 6. 6. & 7. 8.

V. 8. He answering said] This describeth the affection of those who faithfully plant in Gods vineyard; they do not forthwith despair when they see not present fruits of their labours, but take the more pains with their plants, their auditours, by how nearer they perceive Gods judgments are on their barrennesse; and pray the Lord to spare them. See 2 Tim. 24. 25. Exod. 32. 31. Amos 7. 2. 5.

V. 9. then after that thou shalt cut it down] The Syriack readeth and if not, why should it live? thou shalt cut it down: Christs purpose is hereby to shew the Jews, and in them, all others planted in Gods vineyard, the Church, what God looketh for, that is, our fruit. Isaiah 5. 2. and what they must look for, who after much pains and culture bestowed upon them by the Ministers, remain yet unbettered and unfruitful; that is, cutting up and destruction of body and soul. See 2 Chron. 36. 15, 16. Jer. 1. 10. Isaiah 5. 5, 6. Mat. 3. 10.

V. 10. on the Sabbath] Signifying that this miracle was done publickly, when the multitude were assembled.

V. 11. a spirit of infirmity] It was not any natural infirmity, but by the malicious working of the devil; who delighteth in the misery and infirmity of man, and therefore doth not only infect and afflict the mind, but also the body; where and as far as he can obtain leave to hurt, as may appear in the history of Job, and many in the Gospel.

V. 12. thou art loosed] It hath reference to that which is said, verse 16. (whom Satan hath bound) and to shew that he had power to dissolve the work of the devil, and to rescue his captives; and the key of the bottomlesse pit, with the chain to binde Satan, Rev. 20. 1, 2.

V. 13. immediately she was made straight] Syr. She stretched out her self, ἀνωρθώθη, she stood up strait again: this sheweth that it was the immediate power of God, which perfectly cured her, without any ordinary means applyed.

and glorified God] This is an effect of faith, to give God the honour of all the blessings which we receive. See Chap 17. 16, 17. and it sheweth that this was no obscure work, but a evidence of Gods power and mercy.

V. 14. the ruler of the synagogue] That is, one of the rulers, for it seemeth there were divers, Mark 5. 22. Acts 13. 15, the Syriack calleth him רב Rab, which in the Chalde and Syriack signifieth great, major, dolor, Prince, or ruler. See on Acts 18. 8.

there are six dayes] concerning the errour of Pharisees prohibiting works of mercy on the Sabbath day, See chap. 6. 2. observe here, that there can be nothing free from the censure of malicious ignorance, the most sacred and Divine actions of Christs mercy doth Satan strive to black over with some imputation of evil, lest the spectators should believe and be saved.

V. 15. Thou hypocrite] ὑποκριτὴς signifieth also that which the Latines call, histrio, an actor or personator of others, as stage-players, in habit, words and actions imitate or counterfeit that which they are not, but for present would by all means seem to be: so do hypocrites, counterfeit, seem, or resemble Saints; when they are indeed and truly no more such, than he that acteth an Emperour on the stage, is an Emperour in power, Estate, and honour; the Syriack excellently expresseth it, by נסב באפא naseb baphe assumens vultum, or accipiens personam, faciem, &c. thou who assumest the countenance, or rakest on thee the person or face of another. Mat. 7 5. Luke 6 42. this dissembling of the ruler (who under pretence of much zeal to the sanctification of the Sabbath, calumniated Christ the Lord of the sabbath) Christ here reproveth: as also their perverse zeal, who did not think the sabbath violated, by works of mercy towards their beasts, but towards men: thus he convicteth them by their own practice.

V. 16. daughter of Abraham] She was such, either by nature, or imitation, (Rom. 2. 12. Luke 19. 9.) or both: in any of which respects they were extream perverse, in denying that comfort to a Saint these eighteen years] The time of her suffering which Christ well knew, he reciteth, as to convince their peevish malice; so to comfort those who suffer long: God measureth all, and in due time will help. Psal. 90. 10. long this afflicted woman suffered, long the lame man. John 5. 5. 9. much longer Israel in Egypt; yet God delivered at last. Gen. 15. 13. Acts 7. 6. See Habac. 2. 3.

Saint of God, bound 18. years together, with the bonds of Satan; in great affliction, and pain of body, which they would not deny to a beast, by themselves tyed up with the bonds of men, for their own good, and for a convenient time only; malice is ever blinde, and impiety unreasonable.

V. 17. All his adversaries were ashamed] They were ashamed as convicted of calumny: it doth not appear that they were converted: but a more happy effect of this miracle appeared in the rest who rejoyced for the power and mercy of God shining in these works of Christ.

V. 18. Unto what is the kingdom of God like] Mark 4. 30. that kingdome of God which is now offered unto you which he governeth by the sceptre of his word, shewing the way thereto.

V. 19. Like a grain of mustard seed] This he speaketh to declare the admirable encreases and power of the Gospel, whose beginnings were so slender, and that the Church hath divers states, sometimes it is small and hardly discerned for the paucity of professors and true believers (Revel. 11. 12.) sometimes glorious with multitudes, and by them very conspicuous, stretching out her branches. Psal. 80. 9 10, 11. to the river, and her boughes to the sea.

V. 20. Whereunto shall I, &c.] Mat. 13. 33. See Luke 7. 31.

V. 21. It is like leaven] This similitude is to the same purpose. See chap. 12. 1. to shew the admirable increase of Gods kingdom of grace.

V. 22. Journeying towards Jerusalem] Mat. 9. 35 the first part of this verse sheweth the unwearied industry of Christ in teaching the people the way to salvation, in the second appeareth his zeal to the ordinances of God: for in that he made journeyes to Jerusalem, it seemeth to have this meaning, that however he preached constantly in the towns and villages, yet so often as their appointed festivals approached, he went up to the solemn assemblies to worship at Jerusalem.

V. 23. Are there few that be saved?] This seemeth a captious question, occasioned by Christ his pressing repentance: as if it had been said; what shall become of the Israel of God if so few as you pretend, shall be saved? therefore he answereth not directly, but admonisheth rather to be very careful for their own souls health (Mat. 7. 13.) than inquisitive after the counsels of God concerning the number of the elect: and to avoid that common read to hell, following multitudes to sin. See Exod. 23.

V. 24. Strive to enter in] See on Mat. 7. 13. Christ according to his usual manner, answered not directly to their question, to satisfy their curiosity, but to that which more concerned them to know and do.

many, I say unto you will seek] That is, they will endeavour for salvation, by a blinde desire thereof, but not using the right means, nor going the right way (by Christ the onely door thereto) shall not get admission. See John 7. 34. & 8. 21. & 13. 33. Rom. 9. 31, 32. many shall strive in vain, as they who seek righteousnesse and salvation by their own merits and works of the Law, not by faith in Christ: or who continue wilfully in known sins: yet must strive in that way of faith which worketh by love. Gal. 5. which God hath appointed, in whom our labour is not in vain. 1 Cor. 15. it is true, few shall be saved, in respect of the multitude of unbelievers which shall perish: there is little wheat in respect of the chaffe, yet enough to fill Gods granary: as many as are written in his book of life: that certain number, whose election is sure and immutable, having this foundation, the Lord knoweth who are his: our wisdom therefore shall be, not to trouble our selves with those things, which are within the vaile, and ark of Gods secret counsel, but to strive to make our calling and election sure to our own consciences (which is sure in Gods decree) by doing those things which may as happy fruits of our election, calling and regeneration, assure us that we shall never fall. 2 Pet. 1. 9, 10.

V. 25. And hath shut the door] He meaneth, that God affordeth us time, and opportunity of salvation which if we omit, we shall be shut out like those foolish virgins. Mat. 25. 10. Psal. 32. 6. Isai 55. 6.

I know you not] That is, I own you not for mine.

V. 26. We have eaten] He meaneth here the Jewes, who had opportunity of salvation offered them, by Christs presence, and familiar conversing with them; and yet they neglected it, it shall be, to their profit to have eaten and drunk with Christ on earth: nor to of he heard him preach; except we believe, and forsake our sins: Judas, and the Pharisees heard him, yet were sons of perdition.

V. 27. But he shall say] See Mat. 7. 23.

depart from me] Mat. 25. 41.

V. 28. Weeping and gnashing of teeth] Mat. 8. 12. & 13. 42. & 24. 51. This expresseth the miserable and hopelesse condition of the damned; who shall indeed rise again to eternal sorrows which the scripture expresseth in several terms; everlasting torments in hell fire, unquenchable; the worm that dieth not, utter darkenesse, and here weeping and gnashing of teeth: that is the most intense sorrowes and torments of soul and body, the pœna sensus and pœna damni, in that they shall be sensible of the blessednesse of the Patriarks, Prophets, and all the elect, in the presence of God, which they wilfully lost. See Mat. 8. 11.

V. 29. Come from the east] He seemeth to speak here principally concerning the Gentiles, alluding to Isai 43. 5, 6. the sense being, God will call his elect out of all nations, and they shall have eternal life and blessednesse with faithful Abraham, which he expresseth by the similitude of a feast or banquet, as chap. 14. Mat. 22. Mat. 8. 11. Luke 22. 20.

V. 30. there are last, which shall be first] Mat. 19. 30. & 20. 16. Mark 10. 31. in this speech he overthrows the vain confidence of the Jews, who so pretended to be the peculiar people of God, that they would disinteresse all other nations, whom they despised as cast-aways, themselves presuming on Gods favours, as if he were bound to them, however they degenerated from holy Abraham; he telleth them here, that shortly that order should be changed; the Gentiles being preferred before them, and they through their invincible obstinacy and unbelief, being rejected, and becoming a scorn and reproach to all nations.

V. 31. Herod will kill thee] Herod Antipas: This seemeth not advice proceeding of any good will to Christ, but in hope to rid him away, that he might not teach there. See Amos 7. 12.

V. 32. Tell that fox] He calleth him so, for his subtilty, and fraudulent disposition (See 2 Tim. 4. 17.) which Christ hereby intimateth was well known to him, though Herod lurked like a fox, to finde advantage to hurt.

I cast out devils] intimating that he had no cause to fear Herods power, who commanded the powers of hell: and his self had taught, that in the service of God, they are not to be feared who can only kill the body: which must teach us constancy in our ministery. See on chap. 12. 4.

to day and to morrow] That is, for a short time by God appointed; and therefore not in the power of man to prevent or abridge.

be perfected] namely in being offered up, and perfecting the work of mans redemption. See John 19. 28. 30.

V. 33. Perish out of Jerusalem] He sheweth that he must suffer at Jerusalem, where so many of the Prophets had been murdered, that few, or none in respect of them, perished elsewhere; the sense is, as if he said, tell you me that Herod will kill me? nay but more bloody enemies are you and your high Priests.

V. 34. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem] Mat. 23 37.

how often would I have, &c.] In this similitude he declareth, as the tender love of God to them (John 11. 25.) sending them many Prophets to instruct them (Jer. 7. 2. Chron. 36. 15.) so also their obstinacy in contemning his counsel against themselves: here it no freedom of will to good, but only self-destruction by sin.

V. 35. Behold your house is left unto you desolate] See Mark. 23, 38. that is, the temple in which you glory. Jer. 7. 12. this city Jerusalem, and this whole people shall be ruined, here is used the present for the future, both for the certainty of that he saith, and also because it was then hard at hand.

Ye shall not see me] That is, after my death and resurrection, ye shall not see me again until I come in glory. See chap. 19. 38. Psal. 118. 26. Mat. 23. 39.

CHAP. XIV.

Verse 1. ONe of the chief Pharisees] Either one of their Sanhedrin, or chief councel in matters Ecclesiastical; or else one of the rulers of a Synagogue: for Mat. 9. 18 Jairus is called ἄρχων, a Ruler, who Mark 5. 22. is named ἀρχισυναγώγος, a Ruler of a Synagogue: also there was a difference between these; Elders, Scribes, and Chief Priests; as between the offices of civil and Ecclesiastical rulers. See c. 24. 20. Acts 4. 5. as Moses also distinguisheth them, Deut. 19. 17. for all rulers of Synagogues were not Pharisees, John 7. 48. for Pharisee was a name of a Sect, of פרושים pharasih separavit, or exposuit from פרש as it were, separated from others in sanctimony of life (at least in their own opinions) as Luke 18. 11. so Theophylatt saith they were separating from others. See Epiphan. lib. 1. 16. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 3. & lib. 18. cap. 2. so also Suidas interpreteth φαρισαῖοι, by ἀφωρισμένοι, separates those who derive the name from interpreting, must consider, that their interpreters and doctors were called סופרים Sopherim, scribes, from the word ספר saphar scripsit, but the Pharisees observed the law and exposition thereof from tradition of their elders. See Ezra 7. 12. 21, 25.

to eat bread] This known Hebrew phrase importeth to dine or sup, the like History we have chap. 7. 36. why he would eat with such treacherous inviters, the cause might be, lest he should seem to hate their persons, or ecclesiastical order, and that in his affability, he might finde occasion of converting or convincing them, and leaving them without excuse at the day of judgement.

they watched him] They observed his words and behaviour, that they might finde something to accuse him of.

V. 2. Which had the dropsie] Whether he came of his own accord, or was sent in by the Pharisees, for that frequent occasion of quarrel about the Sabbath, it is not certain: the disease is mentioned; he was ὑδρωπικὸς, ill of the dropsie, either a Timpany, or that which is the Anasarcha, or dropsie, universally spread over the whole body, the swelling flesh becoming spongie and senseless; and so much the more uncurable by how much longer time, the crude humour from the corruption of the liver, hath prevailed, and setled an evill habit upon every part: whatever, how desperate soever to man; he that made man, can repair any ruine in man, and perfectly cure him; but here Christ provoketh the Pharisees to a dispute concerning the Sabbath; first, because he knew their thoughts who watched what he would do; again because on the like occasions, he formerly had sundry contests with them.

V. 3. Jesus answering] The Hebrew manner of speaking many times signifieth, he began to speak.

is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day?] Mat. 12. 10. as if he had said, what is your opinion in this case? is it any breach of Gods law to cure and heal the sick and diſaffected on the Sabbath day? or is such a work of mercy to be accompted a Sabbath dayes work? he asketh this, not as doubting, for he best knew the intent of the law, who was the authour thereof; but that by this propoſition he might correct their errour who thought otherwise; that thereby he might shew the unjustnesse of their calumny forsooth, who would be bitterly incensed at his doing such a work in their presence who were of a contrary judgment, and took themselves to be the only knowing interpreters of the law.

V. 4 they held their peace] Not able to contradict as verse 6. nor daring to incur the hatred of the people, for whom Christ wrought so much good; or thinking there was no present danger of death in the sick man, and having also been so lately put to shame in the same argument. See chap. 13. 17.

V. 5. Which of you shall have an axe, &c.] See chap. 13 15. which of you is so unreasonably unjust, as that he would not, without making any scruple of conscience, relieve and save a poor beast on the Sabbath day: how much rather is mans life and safety (for whom God made all the creatures on earth) to be regarded and preserved? See Mat. 12. 11, 12.

V. 7. A parable] Matthevv 13. 3. 9. That is, a dark speech covertly to taxe their ambition, and to teach them humility.

chief rooms] Gr. πρωτοκλισίας, πλισία, as Suidas saith, is κλίνη, or κραββάτος a bed on which they lay down: though that same discubitorius lectus in Plinie. l. 33. c. 12. on which they used to sup, differed from the bed on which they slept, as also their triclinia, which were three beds or pallets set together to lye down and to eat on, specially at their feasts: the Syriack word here used is of שמך Semach: as John 13. 23. Mat. 26. 7. 20. Luke 7. 37. & 22. 27. 1 Cor. 8. 10. &c. the same which the Hebrew שמך Samach: in the pallets, it seemeth there was (as at our tables) some observation of places for guests respectively to be set, which some ambitiously affected, as thinking themselves more worthy than others present, this Christ reproveth as an effect of pride, and occasion of many breaches of charity.

V. 8. Sit not down in the highest] This he saith to beat down ambition, and to perswade to modesty and humility, as the Apostle admonisheth. Phil. 2. 3. that in lowlinesse of minde they esteem others better than themselves.

V. 9. He that bad thee, &c.] See Prov. 25, 6, 7. that is, he that invited thee to his house, or otherwhere to eat with him.

V. 10. Sit down in the lowest] ἀνάπεσον, ἀναπέσου accumbo, according to the custom of those countreys. See on chap. 7. 36. he giveth not this as an universal rule to all men, but forbideth ambition in all. See on chap. 11. 43. Mat. 12. 38.

V. 11. For whosoever exalteth himself] Mat. 23. 12. Job 22. 29. Prov. 29. 23. Luke 18. 14. Jam. 4. 6. 1 Per. 5. 5. whosoever arrogateth to himself, or thinketh too highly of his own worth.

he that humbleth himself] to humble ones self, is to think lowly of ones self, attributing all the good he hath to God: which Samuel expressed by קטן אעשינך katon behenecha, little in thine own eyes, 1 Sam. 15, 17. not overvaluing thy self, he saith not, he that is humbled, &c. but he that humbleth himself, it may be no fault to be exalted, and so no vertue to be humbled, therefore he speaketh not here of that humility which is ex tristitia or necessitate, as Bernard sup. Cant. serm. 34. speaketh, for that may be with pride and an undisciplined mind, but that which is, ex voluntate, of a will either meekly bearing afflictions, or humbly enjoying prosperity, the sum is, that which Fulgentius de praedest. ad Monim. l. 1. saith, sicut ------fit elatione humilis: sic fit humilitate sublimis, as a man is made low by pride, so is he exalted by humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. 1 Pet. 5 5. not that God findeth any thus humble before he giveth them grace, but because dando gratiam, humiles facit: by giving grace, he maketh them humble.

V. 12. When thou makest a dinner or a supper] This forbiddeth not entertainment of Parents brethren or friends, but condemneth the errour of Pharisees, who thought thereby they satisfied the law of charity, which is indeed in relieving the poor and needy.

V. 13. Call the poor] For these are the objects of charity: the good thou dost to these, Christ taketh as done to him. Matthew 25. 35.

V. 14. For they cannot recompence thee] meaning, that in justice, a recompence shall be made, which, because the poor cannot, God certainly will.

at the resurrection of the just] Where the just shall receive reward (the wicked shall rise again, but to eternal punishment) see Mat. 25. 34. Eccles. 11. 1. Prov. 19. 17. the poor mans hand is gazophylacium Christi, Christs treasury, and a bill of exchange for heaven, whereby we may there lay up treasure, where we shall be sure to find and enjoy it, in vasto hereditas ponitur, quae Deo custode servatur. Cyprian. de op. & misericord. in safety is that inheritance laid up, which God keepeth.

V. 15. Blessed is he] Rev. 19. 9. It appeareth that this was one of the sect of the Pharisees who acknowledged the resurrection of the dead, and the blessednesse of the just in the kingdom of God; and it seemeth that he was affected with some apprehension thereof, in that he took occasion from the present discourse to break out into these words; though whether he understood the state and condition of glorified bodies free from necessities of eating, drinking, &c. it appears not.

That shall eat bread in the kingdom of God] chap. 13. 29. the Hebrews by this manner of expression meant, to be partaker of the joyes of heaven: posibly this speaker dreamed of some imaginary heaven in which men should eat and drink: but Gods kingdom consisteth not in such things.

V. 16. Then said he unto him] Mat. 22. 2. upon this speech, Christ taketh occasion further to instruct him and others concerning the kingdom of God, and that it should indeed be happy for them who should enjoy the same, but that against the common opinion of their Doctors, who thought themselves and their sectators the only heires apparent of the kingdom of heaven, that the generality and chief of them, though thereto first invited, yet for their love and study of things secular, contemning, slighting, and neglecting Gods merciful invitations thereto, should be excluded from that happinesse, and that the despised party of Jewes and Gentiles should enjoy the same. See verse 21. See 1 Cor. 1. 20. 26, 27 28.

a certain man made a great supper] that is, God rich in mercy, who by his servants inviteth man, proposing the bread of life, which remaineth to eternity. John 6.

bade many] Mat. 22. 1. many were and are called to the knowledge of God, of the Jewes and Gentiles: in respect whereof it is called a great supper, or feast, as also in regard of that which is set before them, which is eternal life and compleat happinesse in Christ. See Mat. 22. 14. Rom. 10. 18. this is a great feast which lasteth not for some dayes only, as did Solomons, 2 Chron. 7. 8. Nehemiahs, Nehem. 8. 18. or that of Ahashuerosh, Esther 1. 3, 5. and 2. 18. but to eternity: neither is it for the nation of the Jews onely, Rom. 3. 29. or like Belshazzars Dan. 5. 1. to a thousand lords, but to all nations and people, without acceptation of persons. Acts 10. 34, 35.

V. 17. Sent his servant] Meaning his Prophets; who though many, yet having one commission, message and Spirit by which they all spake, are here signified by the name of a servant.

come, for all things] Prov. 9 2. 5. intimating speed, and undelayed apprehension of Gods mercy offered in the Ministery of the Gospel, as Hebr. 3. 15.

V. 18. All with one consent] with one accord, though they alledge several causes, yet they all agree in refusing to come.

V. 19. Another said I have bought] In these excuses, it appeareth, how dangerous a Remora and obstacle to the kingdom of Christ, the care of secular things is, and that all things and businesses of this world, however seasonably lawful and necessary, in their due times must yet give place to those, which concern Gods honour, and our eternal life and salvation.

V. 21. Master of the house being angry] Mat. 22. 7. is mentioned the injury done to the servants sent to invite the guests (meaning the persecutions of the Prophets and Ministers) and the just punishment inflicted; destruction of the foolish and ingrateful people who so requite the Lord; which Luke omitteth.

into the street and lanes, &c.] Hereby signifying the calling of the poor, lame and blinde (See Rev. 3. 17.) and a people gathered as it were from the high-wayes and hedges.

the poor] The poor in spirit, Mat. 5. So, Peccatores superbi resipiuntur, ut peccatores humiles eligantur, Greg. hom. 36. Proud sinners are refused that the humble may be chosen. God chooseth those whom the world despiseth: the infirm and despicable sort of World, commonly do more readily hearken to the voyce of God, by how much lesse they have in the World to please and distract them: so hold all worldly things, that you be not thereby held from God, ut terrena res possideatur, non possideat, Greg. ut s. that you may posselle earthly things, but not be posselled thereby.

V. 22. and

V. 22. and yet there is room] Many being collected of the Jews, yet was there place left for a greater fulnesse of the Gentiles, August. de verb. Dom. ser. 34 nicely distinguisheth, the Gentiles came from the Streets, and Hereticks from the Hedges. The meaning is, to shew Gods inexhaustible mercy to all sorts of penitent sinners.

V. 23. compel them] Not by violence, but by the power of preaching; so Theophylact understandeth it, as Rom. 1. 16. God compelleth no man to sanctity, but enclineth the will thereto: he forceth none by violence, though he draw them by perswasions, promises, or threatnings, which is the spiritual compulsion here intended, when the rigour of the Law preached terrifieth the sinners conscience, and so fear of judgements forceth him to seek salvation and comfort in Christ. So John Baptist compelled his hearers, by telling them, that the axe was laid to the root of the tree, Matt. 3 10. So Ministers are commanded to do, 2 Tim. 4. 2. So God draweth us to Christ, John 6. 44. which is never done. Sine inclinatione mobilis, without the inclination of him that is moved, it being an immediate effect of the will sanctified, moved, and enabled by the Spirit of God. This he doth, saith Bernard, de gra. & lib. arbitr. Cum terret aut persuit ut facial voluntarios, non salvet invitos, when he terrifieth or smiteth to make them willing, not to save them against their wills: when he changeth the will from evil to good, he doth but change, he doth not take its liberty away: as for the coercive or compulsory power of Magistrates, it belongeth not to this place, because not to Ministers: certainly the civil Magistrate beareth not the Sword in vain, Rom. 13. 4. Therefore ought he to revenge all wickednesse, specially, that wherein Gods honour and truth are interessed: yet it is most requisite, that a tender hand be used toward the weak, on the Ministers part, as is commanded 2 Tim. 2. 24. On the Magistrates, by providing all proble means to enform them better, ever considering the difference between him that erreth out of that which they call invincible ignorance, and him, that not onely erreth wilfully, in fundamentalls, but also seduceth others therein: See Deut. 13. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15. Deut. 17. 7. and it is by proportion considerable, if he that murdereth the body, may not be spared, (Numbers, 35. 31, &c.) much lesse may he, who murdereth bodies and souls to Eternity, by making their Proselytes children of Hell, Matthew, 23. 15.

V. 24. none of these men which were bidden] None of those who absolutely and finally refused the grace and mercy of God offered in the Gospel. He meaneth not here, an absolute, but a generall rejection of the Jewes; as if he said, few of them (in respect of the multitudes of the Gentiles to be called) shall be saved. See Rom. 11. 1, &c.

V. 25. said unto them] The severe many followers of Christ present, but not all of one minde and resolution: he who saw all their thoughts, addresseth his speech to some of them: and so prosecuteth the former argument concerning mens excusing themselves from Gods service, by secular businesses: shewing, that except men can put off their mind and vain love of this world, they cannot be any true Disciples of Christ.

V. 26. if any man come unto me] Mat. 10. 37. Matt. 16. 24.

and hate not his father] That is, removeth not all carnall affections, contrary to the calling of God; or he who is not disposed (where these loves are incompatible) to hate Father, and all for the love of Christ, can be none of his; so that these things are by no means simply to be understood (as if the service of Christ required any violation of the Lawes of God and Nature) but comparatively: I ought dearly and tenderly to love Father and Mother; but to prefer my Creatour and Saviour before all: as Ambros. orat. funebr. deob. Valent. very well saith, Debeo affectum parenti, sed magis obsequium debeo salutis auctori. I owe affection to my Parent, but I rather owe obedience to the Authour of my salvation.

V. 27. bear his cross] That is, (as may appear from the following comparison) when the Lord shall call men thereto to be ready and willing to endure afflictions for Christs sake. The Cross here, as elsewhere, signifieth torments, miseries, calamities, in allusion to those sorrows and torments which Christ on the Crosse suffered for us, though all that we can suffer are incomparably less than those. And in this manner of speaking he intimateth that we cannot reasonably expect, that the condition of us servants should be better than Christ our Lord and Saviour. See Matthew, 10. 38.

V. 28 sitteth not down first] This sheweth the means how to bear the Cross patiently and constantly; that is, by resolving beforehand so to do. That which maketh men startle away in afflictions, is principally their unpreparednesse thereto, and vain hope of secular prosperity. Concerning preparation hereto he propoſeth two similitudes: First, of the unconsiderate builder, who for want of forecast, loseth much charge on that which he is not able to perfect: So shall they who do much in Christs service if they reckon not upon the Cross if need require. Secondly, of the unadvised Souldier, who will not timely consider the power of those with whom he must encounter: this life is a warfare, and that truceless; it is great folly ever to be secure.

V. 33. forsaketh not all that he hath] That is, when Gods glory so requireth, for otherwise, as appeareth in sundry instances, the Disciples of Christ, did not in their following him, leave all their proprieties in that they had; though they were ready ever so to have done, when Gods honour, and the testimony of the truth should require them thereto, or to lay down life it self for the same: See on Matt. 8. 14 and 19. 27.

V. 34. Salt is good] By Salt, he meaneth the uncorrupted integrity and vigour of mind in the midst of afflictions (which seasoneth, hardneth and keepeth from corruption of flesh and blood, ever indulgent to its own ease) without which, we can be profitable for nothing: especially, if Ministers be not wise to season themselves, and others herewith, they are utterly unprofitable.

but if the salt hath lost his savour] Matt. 5. 13. Mark 9. 50. The Disciple of Christ must be as Salt, not onely good in himself, but also by his Ministery communicating that savour to others, that they may be found: as it is written, Titus 1. 13. Rebuke them sharply that they may be found in the faith.

V. 35. He that hath ears to hear] He that heareth, let him mark diligently. This admonition, as we have continually need of, when ever we heare any part of Gods Word, so special vvhere this subject, the Doctrine of the Crosse is preached; vvhich vve most unvvillingly hear of.

CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. Drew near unto him all the Publicans, &c.] Who were odious to the Jews, because they gathered up the customes and taxes for Cesar: by all, he meaneth many: or all that came to him to be converted: Of sinners there were (and are) two sorts: Some acknowledged or were ashamed of their sin and misery; some were just in their own eyes. Of the first sort were those who came to hear Christ preaching mercy to penitent believers in him. Of the second sort were the Scribes and Pharisees, who highly valued their own merits, and pretended righteousnesse by the works of the Law; therefore they embraced not the faith in Christ for their justification. So that Christ came not to call them, but those other sinners, Mat. 9. 13, by sinners here understand notorious sinners; for all are sinners.

to hear him] They came not to make their liberty from the curse of the Law, a cloak for sin, but to hear his Doctrine and to convert: they came as the sick to the Physician, to be healed and saved. Feeling the restlesse stings of their own consciences, against which the rigour of the Law could afford them no ease or relief, but rather cause of greater terrour and unrest, they come to Christ who preached to them the comfortable doctrine of justification by faith, repentance, and remission of sins, with deliverance from the severe curse and rigour of the law; which doctrine is therefore called εὐαγγέλιον, gladsome tidings.

V. 2. murmured, saying, this man, &c.] They calumniated Christ among the people; which he perceiving, answered as in the following Parables: they, being puffed up with vain opinion of their own righteousnesse, blamed him: first, for admitting sinners into his company: Secondly, for eating with them: this ὁ τὸς, this Man, is emphatical: as if they had said; this your excellent Doctor, whom you count the Messias and teacher of righteousnesse, look what company he keepeth, Publicans and notorious sinners. Pride and Malice are ever censorious and blinde. See cap. 7. 39. And in this example it appeareth, that it is more posible to be without fault than unjust censure.

V. 4. What man of you] Here is a kind of appeal to their own consciences, as chap 14. 5. The scope of all these Parables, is to teach the bounty of God, and his care of poor sinners recovery, and how they that are truly sanctified, are so farre from envying the conversion of other sinners, that they heartily rejoyce thereat.

having an hundred sheep] See Mat. 18. 12. He compareth sinners to sheep going astray. So Psal. 119. 176. Isaiah 53, 6. and himself to a careful shepherd, as John 10. Ezek. 34. 15. Acts 20. 8. he leaveth ninety and nine for a time; not meaning any deserion of the flock, but a solicitous intending the recovery of that which is strayed, speaking to mans sense. He compareth Publicans and sinners to stray carrel, intimating his care to save the elect, and joy in their recovery from sin and death. Wherein he secretly taxeth the envy of Pharisees for impious and Satanical, which so much differed from the joy of holy Angels in the presence of God at sinners conversion: So layeth he down a singular ground of comfort to the converted: for if God bear such love to the elect, that he would own them, and seek them, who had no hearts to seek him, being yet dead in trespasses and sins: how shall he not much more know them and hear them, when being found of him they seek him in truth. See Esay 65. 1. Rom. 5. 10. Rom 8. 32. & 10. 20.

untill he finde it] Christ the good shepherd came to seek that which was lost, and will never give over his work unperfected: the sinner is then prevented by Gods grace, and enabled to seek him, as Fulgentius de incarn. & grat. Dom. Jesu saith, quando illuminatur ut credat, when he is illuminated that he may believe.

V. 5. layeth

V. 5. layeth it on his shoulder, rejoycing] Hereby also Christ declareth his love and care of sinners, who hath born all our infirmities, Matth. 8.17. And the duty of Pastours which is to labour, as well to recover the lost, as to preserve the remainder of their flock. See 2 Tim. 2.24,25,26. Matt. 18.14, 15, &c.

V. 7. joy shall be in heaven] Which he interpreteth v. 10. joy in the presence of the Angels of God; and thus he accommodateth his speech to vulgar capacities: understanding by just persons, those who seem so to themselves, having no sense of their sins and need of repentance. See Prov. 30. 12. Eccles. 7. 22. or those who continue in the right way, Psalm 119. 1. Those who being justified by faith, yet dayly pray, forgive us our trespasses. This understand, as joy is defined, an affection arising from some fresh or new good: Hence we may conceive how God and his good Angels are displeased at sins, whereas his spirit is said to be grieved at them, Ephes. 4. 30. Ezek. 18.23.

V. 8. ten pieces of silver] This similitude is to the same purpose, Drachma's, here translated, pieces of silver, is the eighth part of an ounce, which cometh to seven pence half penny, and is equal to the Roman penny, Matt. 18 28.

if she lose one] As if he said, you would all justifie that care and pains which were bestowed in seeking that secular thing which is lost, abroad or at home: would you allow the seeking of lost beasts, and not of lost man? Is it justifiable to use all lawfull means for the recovery of a little piece of silver with Cæsars Image upon it: and is it with you condemnable to seek a lost man, who hath Gods Image on him? By this reason he evidently convinceth their malice: So doth he admirably comfort the Elect, insinuating, that God will leave no means unattempted for the recovery of them.

V. 9. calleth her friends] Here he proveth by an Argument, from the lesse to the greater, that the Angels rejoyce at the conversion of a sinner; because they have greater love and joy than man: also he sheweth what the captious Pharisees should have done, if they would imitate the Holy Angels, who were so far from envying any mans salvation, that they rejoyce with one another for it: also here appeareth the great pains and care which ought to be taken for the recovery of lost sinners, contrary to the course of proud Pharisees, who swelling with a deluding conceit of their own Holyness, esteemed penitent Sinners and Publicans no better than forlorn castawayes.

V. 11. a certain man had two sons] By this third similitude, he declareth the wretched condition of those who live in sin and unbelief, which he proposeth in the younger brother: as also how ready God is to forgive the penitent.

V. 12. Give me the portion of Goods] That which thou intendest to give me for my portion: by this, τὸ ἐπιβάλλον μέρος, the portion of goods which falleth unto me, he meaneth that part, which jure hæredis, or filii, was to fall to his share: Syriac, quæ credit ad me exdomo tua; as if he said, I am now of age to manage an estate; grant me now the free use thereof, that I may trade for my self.

he divided unto them his living] Τὸν βίον improveth here, as elsewhere, that by which life is maintained, which the Syriac interpreteth, his possession. See Mark 12. 44. Here is a Character of an evil son. First, in desiring a division of the estate, his Father being yet alive. Secondly, in that having possession of his portion given him, he prelently forsaketh his Father. Thirdly, in that he quickly consumed all in riotous living: in all which is seen an image of man fallen into sin; when ambitious (as it were) of having with God, and seeking happinesse in himself, and his owne foolish wayes and inventions, rather than in God, the onely Fountain of true Happynesse, he departed from God, sin separating him: thus evilly using that freedome of Will which God gave him for good, he lost himself and all Will and ability to doe good: Hence flowed in that Deluge of sin and misery on men, God permitting the Heathens to their own lusts and errours, Romans, 1. 24. Hence also those miseries shadowed under this young mans poverty and extream want.

V. 15. he sent him into his fields to feed swine] Here in the letter appeareth the sad condition of ungoverned young Prodigals, to be vilified most by them, on whom they vainly spent their Estates: as also the just judgement on the rash and disobedient: He that would not cleave to a loving Father, that it might have been well with him, is compelled to adhere to an unkind stranger, and to be made a stranger, and to be made a servant of the vilest beasts, who undervalued the dignity of a sonne: He that would not understand the blessing of plenty, is better instructed by extream want: and in the Moral, the base servitude which the Devil putteth his servants to, in feeding and communicating with the most unclean affections.

V. 16. and would fain have filled his belly with the huskes] by these κεράτια, huskes, whether we understand those siliquas or pods of pulse, pease or beans: or, as Theophylatt seemeth to understand, and others say, of the fruit of the carob tree, which beareth a pleasant fruit in pods also, it skilleth not much; though the latter seem a very probable opinion, the Syriac reading here חרובא charuba, some give it κεράσια: Vitgia dulcis, a sweet pod. Strabo cited by V. Shindler, Penteglot. faith, multum hæc cognita Nicææ, & maris Ligustici accolis, ubi eam efficiant, pueri, etiamque porci: this is much known in Nicea, and to those who dwell by the Sea of Liguria, where children, and also hogs use to eat thereof. Galen also mentioneth this tree bearing these κεράτια, by later Writers called the Carob tree, and the fruit thereof Saint Johns bread; (that which John Baptist eat, Matt. 3.) or Locusts. See John Gerard. hist. plant. lib. 3. cap. 82. J. Druf. præterit lib. 3. Plin. lib. 15. c. 24. whatever they were, no man gave unto him: as if he said, they who allowed their Swine a certain measure thereof would not allow him to fill his belly therewith. The Moral is, that in Gods House his children are satisfied, as it were with fatnesse, Psalm 63. 5. there is distributed the bread or portion of sons, Matt. 15. 26. 32. but out of his Family, huskes of unclean Swine, the lying fables of traditions, which do rather puffe up with vain pride, than nourish to Eternal life: so are prophane men compared to Swine, 2 Pet. 2. Of the famine of Gods Word. See Amos 8. 11. See Theophylatt hereon.

V. 17. when he came to himself] Hitherto he was beside himself like a mad or drunken man, not knowing what he did, but necessarily brought him to his right mind: Happy affliction which bringeth men to God by serious repentance and newnesse of life; truely may such a one say with David, Psalm 119. 71. It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy Statutes.

have bread enough] The moral is, the meanest in Gods family abound with spiritual comforts, and are in a condition incomparably better than any out of it. See Psalm 84. 11. which God maketh them at last to understand, to whom he giveth an heart to know their own condition, and to convert.

V. 18. I will arise and go, &c.] Not that any sinner can prevent Gods grace, see John 6. 44. Jer. 31. 33. Ezek. 11. 19. 20. God alone giveth repentance, who in Christ forgiveth the penitent: the sinner indeed faith in his heart, as this young man, I will arise and go, &c. but never untill God works such a Resolution on him. See Phil. 2. 13. So that here are represented the effects of Gods mercy in the conversion of a sinner. 1. Dislike and detestation of the former courses of life. 2. Arising from the drunken sleep and dotage of sinne. 3. Certain purpose to leave sinne, and to return to God in newnesse of life. 4. Confidence of Grace and merciful reception with our Heavenly Father. 5. Ardent and longing desire of the fweet and true comforts which are in Gods House and Family. 6. Ingenuous confession of our sinne before God. 7. Humble acknowledgement of our unworthynesse (I am no more worthy to be called thy sonne) I have indeed forgotten the duty of a son, yet, O unchangeable God of mercy, forget not thou the love of a Father. See Psalm 130.3.4.

against heaven] against God, whose Throne is in Heaven, where his Divine Majesty and glory most evidently shineth and is manifested to the creatures there being.

V. 19. As one of thy hired servants] Let me be any thing, so I may be thine, See Psalm 84. 10. I am unworthy of that first dignity of thy son, from which I willfully departed, of which I foolishly deprived my self, it shall be of thy abundant mercy to forgive me, and to admit me to any share of that grace of thine, wherof the meanest of thy servants partake.

V. 20. He arose and came] This action described in an inseparable condition of true Repentance, which is not so much in resolving, or saying, as in doing according to Holy resolutions of turning to God.

yet a great way off] this intimateth Gods preventing grace toward us. So are all sinners of themselves, far of from God, (for their iniquities have separated between them and their God, —— Isa. 59.2.) and far from any thought of good, (2 Cor. 3. 5.) or resolution to leave their sins and impious courses of life to return unto the Lord in newnesse and sincerity of living.

his father saw him and had compassion, &c.] the meaning is, as if he said; if men naturally desirous of revenge, and too tenatious of priviledge in punishing, can yet out of fatherly affection, so easily forget childrens offences, and be reconciled; how much more will God, who is of infinite mercy and pitty, receive penitent sinners? certainly (saith Salvian, ep. Ipatio, &c.) though Parents have just causes of being angry, yet nothing can more happily, or which they more wish, fall out; than that their children may so satisfie for their faults, ne necesse habeant vindicare, that they need not to revenge, the word ἐσπλαγχνίσθη, had compassion, signifieth, a velh ment moving to pitey, such as proceedeth ex intimis visceribus from the bowels and earning of the heart. See Psalm 103, 13. Isa. 49. 15. Ezek. 16. 6. Jer. 2. 2.

V. 22. bring forth the best robe] signifying the Robe of Christs Righteousnes; which is incomparably, and in infinite respects the best. We all are as an unclean thing, and all our Righteousnesses are as filthy rags —— Isai. 64 6. No wonder that Paul touching the Righteousnesse which is in the Law, blameless, yet counted all things but losse, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, —— and but dung, that he might win Christ, and be found in him not having his own righteousnesse which is of the Law, but that which is of the Faith of Christ, the Righteousnesse which is of God by Faith, Phil. 3 6.7,8,9. this is the best robe; in which onely the blessing of eternall life and salvation is to be attained. See Romans, 9. 30, 31.

a ring on his hand] it may import the riches of Gods bounty, as also the Saints honour and ornament, the pledge of Gods love, or seal of faith.

and shoes] the moral may be that which the Apostle expresseth, Ephes 6.15. in all these things are signified Gods goodnes and our happynes in our conversion; wherein so much more is restored than was lost, by how much more excellent that state is, wherein we shall never fall, than that from whence we all did fall.

V. 23. And kill it] That is, Christ to be offered in sacrifice on the Crosse, when the Gentiles (the younger brother Japheth) returned to the Tents of Shem, and to the God of the Fathers: and he is brought (as it were) to be slain for every believer, when the Gospel is preached to him. See Galat. 3. 1. Augustine To. 4. quæst. sup. Evang. lib. 2. cap. 33.

V. 24. this my son was dead and is alive] The unregerate is dead in trespalles and sins, Ephes. 2. 1. conversion and regeneration is a resurrection from the dead works of sin, to newnesse of life, Revel. 20.6. Rom 6. 11. 12, &c.

they began to be merry] This is the same which is expressed, verse 7, 10.

V. 25. his elder son] By which is meant, he that taketh himself to be just, as verse 29. or is so accounted of others; who never ran out into any apparant exorbitancy, as the Gentiles did, and so the elder brother might signifie the Jews, or those that continued in an upright course of life: indeed the proud Jews envied the mercy which God shewed the penitent Gentiles, as Acts 10. 13. So Augustin. q. 5. understandeth it: Theophylatt of the Pharisees envying the reception of sinners.

V. 27. safe and sound ὑγιαίνοντα, in health and safety: In the morall it importeth the safe and blessed condition of the Gentiles believing in Christ, who freely justifieth sinners, and sanctifieth those whom he justifieth.

V. 28. would not go in] That is, would not believe and partake with the Church of Christ, specially of the Gentiles, whom they counted desperate sinners, unworthy of Gods favour, as Rom. 11, 28. 31.

his father came out] Signifying that God left no means unattempted to win the Jews to Christ: but sent his Ministers to preach the gospel to them first, untill they put the Word of God from them, and judged themselves unworthy of everlasting life; Acts, 13. 46.

V. 29. these many years] This thadoweth out the arrogancy of the Jews, presuming on their merits and righteousnesse by the Law; not that they did not continually transgresl the Law of God, and provoke him to anger, but because they had been many years his Church, and peculiar People; and because they were as high minded, as if they had never sinned and as unthankfull, as if God never had done any thing for them worthy of their service.

V. 31. all that I have is thine] Intimating his abundant goodnesse toward that nation. See Psalm 147. 20. Isaih, 5, 4, &c. Deut. 32. 7. Jer. 31. 9.

V. 32. was lost, and is found] This importeth the dangerous alienation of sinners specially of the Gentiles, from the Covenant of grace, until they were called by the Gospel according to the Prophesies; wherein Noahs prophetical prayer took effect, and Japheth (of whom came the Gentiles) was perswaded by the Word and Spirit of God, to dwell in the tents of Shem, Genel. 9. 27. that is, with that people of the Jews which believed in Christ.

CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. There was a certain rich man] So verse 19 the drift of that which followeth, is to shew us, that they who bestow their riches or other gifts of God on their pleasures, or worldly interests onely, must give account to God for them: and that Charity shall stand us in such stead in the day of judgement, that God will accept thereof, and abundantly requite it.

V. 2. give account of thy stewardship] By this manner of speaking, he mindeth us, that we are Gods stewards of all those temporal goods, which he putteth into our hands for a time, to use them to his glory, others good, and our own comfort: and that we must at last give a strict account hereof to God, See 1 Pet. 4. 9, 10. Hag 2.8. Psalm. 59. 10.

V. 4. I am resolved what to do] This perverse reasoning of his, is not proposed to our imitation, neither fuch robbing of his master, by deceiving truft, and making up false accounts: that being forbidden of God, and the contrary commanded. See Psalm 37. 3. Ephes. 4. 28. 2 Thes. 3. 10, 11, 12.

V. 6. an hundred measures of oyl] ἑκατὸν βάτους, Syr. Interpreter, metretas: the Hebrew word בת bath, signified a measure of liquid things, Oyl, Wine, &c. Isai. 5. 10. 1 Kings 7. 26. 2 Chron. 4. 5. it contained nine galons three quarters: the same in quantity with the Ephah, a common measure among the Hebrews. the חמר homer, contained ten baths (Ezek. 45. 14.) or ephahs; and the ephah contained ten עמרים omers, Exod. 6. 36 so that it contained about nine gallons: some say much lesse. ce Godwin. Moses and Aaron, lib. 6. cap. 9.

V. 7. an hundred measures of wheat ἑκατὸν κόρους. Solomons provision for a day (1 Kings 4. 22.) of fine flower, was thirty כרים chorim, measures. See Joseph. Antiq. lib. 8. cap. 7. and lib. 15. cap. 12. where he saith, cornus autem capit decem medimnos Atticos, it contained as much as the homer, Ezek. 45. 14. which some reckon five bushels and five gallons (See Godwin q. 5. Io. Drusius præterit. lib. 3. in loc.) Some about 14 bushels, some much more.

V. 8. commended the unjust steward] We must not strain similitudes beyond the intent of the speaker to make every particular agree: the meaning is, that God commended them, who so used their temporall goods that thereby they might prepare them treasure for the life to come, Matthew 6. 19, 20. 1 Timothy, 6. 18, 19.

are in their generation] Meaning that worldly men commonly shew more care and providence for fecular things, than others for things eternal: ὑπὲρ τοὺς αἰῶνας τοῦτου children of this world; is an Hebrew manner of speaking, signifying those that are wholly addicted to the care and study of things fecular. So the Syr. hath it, filii fecculi hujus, those that love, serve and imitate the world and worldly men, not much caring or regarding what becomes of them in the next world, to whom he opposeth in a contrary quality and condition —— children of light.

children of light] That is, the children of God illuminated by his Word and holy Spirit: the sum is, that the master of that steward (commending the wit, not the fidelity of his servant) representeth Christ stirring up our minds to a prudent and careful providence for our future safety seeing that even the blind worldlings (who mind onely fecular things) are so circumspect for things which perish in using.

V. 9. make to your selves] This figurative manner of speaking, is accommodated and fitted to the allegory: the meaning is, by your beneficence to the poor, give them occasion to pray for you, and make your advantage of being rewarded by God. See Proverbs, 19. 17.

Mammon of unrighteousnesse] The Greek calleth that here μαμωνᾶ, which the Syriack calleth ממונא mamuno: so they said, mammon, mamuna, or mamonas: as Satan, Satana, or Satanas. See Jo. Druf. ad voc. N. T. com. 1. and ib. com. 2. cap. 14. Irenæus lib. 3. cap. 8. Augustin. de verb. Domini ser. 35. and lib. 2. ser. Domini in monte, saith, that mamon in the Punick tongue signifieth gaine: or as he de verb. Dom. in Luc. serm. 35. and quæst. Evang, lib. 2. cap. 34. divitiæ fecculi, riches of this world. Suidas interpreteth μαμωνᾶς, χρυσὸς, χρῆμα πολύτοκον, ὅ παρέρχεται, καὶ ὑπὸ γῆν κρύπτεται, gold, earthly riches, pecuniacunque or more than necessary to mans self. Shindler. in Lexicon derive it from the Heb. ממן manan, among other things signifying nutrire, sustentare, and so mamon signifieth food or sustenance for this life: as also it may come of the same root, as it signifieth credere, because men usually trust therein: See Psal. 37. 3. and Jo. Buxtorf. Jun. lex. chald. & Syr. ממן, it is called here mammon of unrighteousnesse: not that we should give for almes or holy uses goods unjustly gotten: (for all such must be restored again to their right owners; and as Basil saith well, Reg. Fusius exp. ἐξ ἀδίκων κερδῶν, almes given of goods or gains unjustly made, are not acceptable to God, though almes be a sacrifice wherewith God is pleased, Heb. 13. yet as Isidor. epist. ad Euseb. Epise. noteth: ὑ χαίρει ὁ Θεὸς ἐξ ἀδικείων δώρεας, he hath no need of sacrifice out of other mens goods, but abominateth it, as him that offereth a dog, or buildeth up Zion with blood) but riches are so called, because commonly either in their getting, using or keeping, they administer matter of sin, 1 Tim. 6. 9, that when ye fail] That is, when ye dye, or when your interest in, or further use of these things (of which ye are for prefent appointed stewards) shall fail you, which may be in this life, in death it must be: the short time of this life, and uncertainty of fecular dispensations of those things which Gods providence allotteth us, should teach us to hold all that we have here with a loose hand; and not to be foolishly tenacious of that which may sodainly, and most certainly at last be taken from us.

everlasting habitations] What manner of habitations these shall be in heaven whereof Christ speaketh, John 14. 2. potius debet credi, quam dici, Prosper. de vit. contempl. lib. 1. cap. 2. See 1 Cor. 2. 9, 10. the meaning of this place is not, that we shall merit to finde favour with God by our almes, for he was our friend, when we were his enemies, (Rom. 5. 10.) and of no strength to do any good: and merit is between them where there is no debt, or grace: but here, where man can never discharge his debt of sin, all our merit is Gods mercy: the meaning therefore is; if the unjust steward wanted not friends for giving his masters goods; how much lesse shall we, if we give ours to relieve Gods poor, for whom God hath promised repayment? Works of mercy shall both here testifie to the givers conscience, that he is the elect of God, who hath given him so happy an use of those secular riches he gave him, and it shall be rewarded in the everlasting life to come, Mat. 25. 2 Pet. 1. 10. James 2. 22, 23.

V. 10. he that is faithful, &c.] This seemeth a proverbial speech, commonly true: as if he said: he that is found unfaithfull in a little, shall not be trusted with much: he that is true and trusty in a little, shall be trusted in much: if you use fecular things well, whereof God hath made you stewards for a time, he will give into your hands heavenly and eternal riches.

V. 11. unrighteous

V 11. unrighteous mammon] If you abuse Temporal riches, whereof ye are but stewards to an omniscient God, how can you hope that he will trust you with spiritual and heavenly, which are true riches.

V. 12. that which is another mans] He calleth external goods another mans, because we are but stewards thereof, and must leave them to others spiritual goods are our own, because they shall never be taken away; not but that God gave them all, nor that we may use them any otherwise than to Gods honour.

who shall give you that which is your own?] That is, God will not give you, in whose power alone it is to give: this manner of speaking by interrogation, was with the Hebrewes very emphatical, and here is as if he had said, assure your selves none will give you, that which is your own, importeth here heavenly and eternal riches; not that we have them of our selves, or not of God, but in regard of our eternal interest therein, for being once had and possessed, they shall never be lost again, because God who giveth us grace, therewith ever giveth us perseverance: so that the seeming grace which ever faileth or falleth quite away, was never true grace of God, whose gifts of this kind, are without repentance. Rom. 11, 28.

V. 13. can serve two masters] See on Matt. 6. 24.

yee cannot serve God and Mammon] You may possess and be served of riches, and withall serve God, and lay up a good foundation for your selves, 1 Tim. 6. 19. treasures in Heaven: but you cannot serve riches, but with Gods displeasure: to serve riches is to be an idolater, and so, no servant of God. See Col. 3. 5.

V. 14. And they derided him] As the manner of carnal men is, in any thing which crolleth their corrupt mindes: these men thought none happy but the rich, ἐξεμυκτήριζον, naso suspendebant, Clem. Roman. ep. ad Corinth. p. 5. i. faith, ἐκαυχῶντο ὑμεῖς ἐν μακροθυμίᾳ, to contemne as a thing of nought, and unconsiderable: therefore these men being rich, covetous, and making wealth their God, and decided him, as if he broached vain Paradoxes, excentrick, and far out of the way to the worlds affections: and such esteem have all covetous men of the doctrine of alms, and holy contempt of the world.

V. 15. ye are they which justifie your selves?] Who magnifie or excuse your selves: or you would fain seem just before men: here he toucheth the secret cause of their contempt of his Doctrine, their impious pride: and thus he as it were conventeth them before Gods Tribunal, by the testimony of their own Conscience, shewing that such pride and hypocrisie, is abominable before God the Searcher of hearts, however beguiled men applaud or canonize them. See Job 10.4. 1 Sam. 16, 6. Matth. 23.25. Isai. 5. 15. and on Matt. 6. 2.

V. 16. the Law and the Prophets,] Matt. 11. 12. when John Baptist shewed Christ present, all prophesies concerning his coming ceased, and all the types prefiguring him in their accomplishment, μετ' ἐκεῖνον γὰρ οὐδεὶς ὅλως προφήτης πᾶν ὅσιον γένγνται said Justin Martyr, to the Jews after him (that is, John Baptist) was there not one Prophet born amongst you, which is true, if he mean none speaking of a Messias to come.

presseth into it] See Matth. 11. 12. every one who doth believe zealously followeth the Gospel: Greek ἐις αὐτὴν βιάζεται, presseth as a man in a throng; so the Syr. premit ut ingrediatur; the word signifieth, vi contendere; here, as it were forcibly by might and main, all possible endeavours to enter into the Kingdome of God; See Matt. 11. 12.

V. 17. easier for heaven and earth to passe, &c.] See on Matt. 5. 18. Gods Decree for our salvation shall not fail.

V. 18. whosoever putteth away his wife] See on Matt 5. 32. and 19. 9. Mark 10. 5. 1 Cor 7. 11. except in case of adultery: the Bill of Divorce was permitted for a time, because of the hardnes of their hearts, and cruelty towards their Wives, Mal. 2. 15. 16. and that by their judicial Law, not by the Moral, which admitteth of no dispensation: and therefore Christ recalleth all his to the first Institution.

V. 19. there was a certain rich man] Having spoken concerning the right use of temporal goods; now he proceeds to shew the horrible punishment of those who do not use them well: this was one of those rich men, who (as Cyprian. l. 2. ep. 2. saith) possident ad hoc tantum, ne possidere —— alteri liceat, possesse goods onely to keep others from possessing them.

in purple and fine lunnen] By these things which were in use among them, he describeth the luxury of worldly men, as Revel. 18. 16. also their unhappinesse who abuse riches, and their happinesse who make an Holy use of poverty; which he doth by proposing one, as Fulgentius speaketh, ad Gal. ep. 2. in divitis & sanitate miserum; and another, in egestate & vulnere multum beatum, one unhappy in wealth and health, the other abundantly blessed in wants and sores. The abuse of his riches was, 1. in curious clothing: 2. in gluttony: 3. in neglect and contempt of the poor. Clem. Alexandrinus, Paed l 2. saith the ancient Lacedemonians, were wont to permit whores onely to weare gorgeous apparrel. See 1 Peter, 3. 3, 4.

V. 20. a certain beggar named Lazarus] Some write the name Eleazarus, Tertul. de idolatr. cap. 13. (as some copies have it) Hebr. אלעזר Eleazar; and the Syr. לעזר lahazar, this was a poor diseased man, therefore not that Lazarus, John 11. the brother of Mary and Martha. In these we see an Image of the World, wherein the wicked flourish, and the righteous often want: the antithesis is remarkable; in the one riches, in the other, poverty and beggery; he clothed with purple and fine linnen, this with rags; he feasting, this lying hungry at his gate, desiring but some crumbs or scraps falling from the rich mans table, or left after meals; this full of sores, a pitifull creature, he wore pittifels than his dogs.

V. 21. dogs came and licked his sores] Sine cibo, sed non sine Christo: canibus exp-situm, sed jecorum Angelorum, saith Fulgent. q. 5. ad Gallam. ep. 2. without meat, not without Christ: exposed to the dogs, yet accompanied with Angels.

V. 22. into Abrahams bosome] He meaneth the communion of Saints and faithful, who walked in the steps of Abrahams faith and sanctity, and therefore called his sons, Rom. 4. 12. 16. Gal. 3. 7. 9. Luke 19. 9. sinus Patriarcharum, recessus quidam est quietis aterne, Ambros. orat. Funebr. de obit. Valent. the bosome of the Patriarchs is a certain retiring place of eternal rest.

the rich man also died] This is common to all estates and conditions: poor and rich die alike: See Psal. 49. 10. the future makes no difference: to the one, whom men regarded not living, in his death the Angels are minist'ring spirits to conveigh him safe to Heaven: (a precious soul is sometimes lodged in a diseased body; the graces of Gods Spirit, are so covered with the deformity of afflictions, as that carnal reason can sometimes discern nothing therein, but the appearance of the curse) he saith no more of the rich man, than that he was buried, leaving his passage to be gathered from verse 23.

and was buried] Possibly with great pomp; no funerals or tombs can shelter men from the wrath of God.

V. 23. in hell lift up his eyes] Gr. ἐν τῷ ᾅδῃ, in that lightlesse or dark place where nothing can be seen, elsewhere called utter darkness. Matt. 25. 30. Syr. בשיולי bsheyoli, Heb. בשאול, in hell, the place of the damned, Numb. 16. 33. sometimes it signifieth honour of mind, Psalm 116. 3. sometimes the grave; so Gen. 37. 35. Jacob saith, I shall go down שאול sheol Chald. לשאולא lesheolo juhsad. Jacob ὁ πατὴρ, to the house or place of the grave. The Greek Fathers used this term, as the Latines, apud inferos, promiscuously for any state or condition of the dead. See Irenaus lib. 5. c. ult. Tertul. de Idolatr. cap. 13, &c. Chrysost. hom. de divite, &c. (in that lifting up the eyes, is attributed to a spirit, it must either be humanitus dictum, as Phil. 2. 10 bowing the knee is spoken by things in Heaven: or it must conclude this rather a Parable than an History) sometimes the word importeth an afflicted, wretched, hopelesse, and irreparable condition. See on Matt. 11. 23 Act. 2. 27. here is expressed the torments of the damned, aggravated v. 25 by their remembrance of worldly prosperitie and the consideration of the Elects happinesse whom they formerly despised.

V. 24. and he cried] The meaning is, that they who will not now hear and pity the cries of the poor, shall cry in hell and not be pitied: See Matt 25. 11. Prov. 21. 13 James 2. 8 he that would not give the crumbs which fell from his Table, shall cry in hell for a drop of water, and not obtain it; that is, the least comfort to asswage his torment shall be denied him, though he eternally beg for it: flamma insatiabilem moriturum divitiis non refrigerantur haredum; the flames of the unhappy dead, are not cooled by the riches of their Heirs. Tim. ad Ecclesiam Catholicam lib. 3.

V. 25. Son remember] This is a common manner of speaking; otherwise, the wicked are not to be accounted Sons of Abraham, John 8. 39. Gal. 3. 9. This title, fondath in it a tacite reprehension, seeming to have this sence; thou calleft Abraham Father, admit thou art of his carnal feed, this prerogative can profit thee nothing, who livedst so unlike holy Abraham: he was commended for beneficence and hospitality, Gen. 18. 2, 3, &c. but thou usedst to shut thy gate against the poore and needy: If thou were indeed a son of Abraham, thou wouldst have done the works of Abraham. See John 8. 39.

receivedst good things] In the end, that appeareth true which Chrysostome proveth, conc. 3. de Lazaro, prosperous impiety is very dangerous: There are two reasons of His denyal, First, from Equity: thou hast had thy part of comfort on Earth, where Lazarus hath been afflicted; it is but equall, that now, thou who so much abusedst prosperity, shouldst be afflicted, and Holy Lazarus comforted. See 2 Thessalonians, 1. 6. Secondly, from impossibility, there is a vast distance, so that none can passe from Heaven to Hell, nor from Hell to Heaven: as the blessednesse of these, so the misery of the other, is unchangeable, and Eternall.

V. 27. send him to my fathers house] Herein is described their vain desires, who tempt God in the neglect or contempt of his Ordinances, requiring miracles or testimony from the dead, to perswade them; whereas God (the onely sufficient witnesse, and teacher of things Divine and Heavenly) sendeth all men to the Law, Prophets and Holy Scriptures. See Isaiah 8. 19, 20. John 5.

V. 28. may testifie unto them] That he may testifie to them what woefull tormentes are in this place, that they may not come hither by their sins and unbelief.

V. 29. Moses and the Prophets] That is, the Law given by Moses ministry:

ministry: and the writings of the Prophets, and also preachers of the same word.

V. 31. neither will they be perswaded] He that will not believe the Spirit of God speaking in the prophets, will not belive a man pretending that he came from the dead, and telling what the wicked suffer there; for who could belive a creature, who cannot rest assured in the infallible testimony of God himself? neither would the Jews believe Lazarus, who had been four dayes dead, and was raised again from the dead, John 11.

CHAP. XVII.

Verse 1. It is impossible] Matth. 18. 7. It must needs be that offences or scandals come; or, I foresee it will be so, because of mens wickednesse, σκάνδαλα · ἐκσκανδαλίζω is of σκάζω, claudico: it importeth impingere facio. See 1 Pet. 2. 8. Theophylatt interpreteth here, by τὰ κωλύματα τῆς ἀγαθῆς ἡμῶν πολιτείας, hinderances to a good and godly life, and that which is pleasing to God. Nazianzen orat. 1. interpreteth by σφύσκωμμα, offendiculum, as λίθος · σφυσκώμματος · a stone of stumbling, 1 Peter 2. 8.

V. 2. offend one of these little ones] That is, to make them halt, or fall away from God: he discovereth the sinne of those times (which was to think it little or no sinne, by their pride and impetious importunity, to scandal an infirm, poor, or inferiour brother) here he telleth also of the punishment; speaking of scandals given by Heretick, Schismaticks, apostates, or the like, whether in word or deed: (See Rom. 16. 13. Titus 1. 16.) for otherwise offences are often taken, by perverse and ignorant men, from good and laudible things done or spoken, because they crosse their blinde and corrupt opinions: so were the Scribes and Pharisees; were scandaled, and offended at Christs doctrine and works of mercy: but blessed are those, who are not offended in Christ, Matth. 11. 6. It were better, or more tolerable (as the Syriac hath it) for a man thus scandaling one of the meanest of Gods children, to be cast into the most desperate or helpleste condition of this life, than to endure the eternal torments which await him in Hell.

V. 3. take heed to &c.] This may be referred either to that he said of scandals, or that which he will now say concerning love and mercy, seeing there is the like hazard in both, if thy brother trespasse] See Mat. 18. 21. This is spoken concerning private or personal offences, of the publick, See 1 Tim. 5. 20. Mat. 18. 15. are layed down certain degrees of admonition and Ecclesiastical discipline, rebuke him] Or reprove him: both are joyned, 3 Timothy 4. 2. but it must be done respectively, or with regard had to the person. See 1 Tim. 5. 1. for charity must not connive at sinne, but discreetly reprove it. See Lev. 19. 17. Ephes. 5. 11. 1 Cor 5. 6.

if he repent forgive] That is, call him not into question or sue him not: forgive as much as concerneth thee, even though he offendeth thee not onely seven times, but many times; if he do not acknowledge his fault to thee, yet let thy heart be ready to forgive: commit thy cause to God: as often as he offendeth, forgive, which is meant by seventy times seven times Mat. 18. 22.

V. 4. seven times] Many times. See verse 3. as often as he offendeth and repenteth.

V. 5. encrease our faith] Herein they acknowledged that faith is his gift, as Ephes. 2. 8. and that their faith wanted confirmation: for, faith Fulgentius ad Prob ep. 4. though the Lord give new strength to his, in their conflicts, lest they should fail, permittitur tamen fatigari, propriæ infirmitatis onere, &c. yet overladen mortality is permitted to be wearied with the burden of its own infirmity; that, finding no strength in it self, it may quickly addresse it self to implore aid and Divine assistance.

V. 6. and the Lord said] Mat. 17. 20. Mark 11. 23.

it should obey you] See Mat. 17. 20. This manner of speech he useth to shew the admirable power of faith; to wit, that it should overcome all difficulties, as Mark 9. 23. All things are possible to him that believeth: certainly the effects of faith in fervent prayer have been more than removing trees, or mountains, See Hebrews 11. 29, 30, 33. &c. James 5. 15, 17, 18. 1 John 5. 16. John 10. 12, &c. Exod. 17. 12. By a grain of Mustardseed is meant the least measure, Mat. 13. 32. by be thou plucked up by the root he meaneth that they should do wonderfull things.

V. 7. which of you having a servant plowing] By this similitude taken from the duty of servants to their masters, he preventeth a conclusion, which haply the Apostles would have gathered from their merit, who had followed Christ, and therefore might expect so much favour of him, as to give them such faith to do great works: but he sheweth them that God is debter to none, (Rom. 4. 4, 5.) that they must do all their duty, and expect Gods leisure for the reward, as also to referre all to the good pleasure and providence of God concerning the measure of grace, which he best knoweth to proportion unto them, so as shall most make for the advancement of his glory and the good and salvation of his servants.

V. 10. we are unprofitable servants] ἀχρεῖοι] this title is also given to evil servant, Matthew 35. 30. Phil. 11. to shew us what our merit is if God should be severe, Job 22. 2. Psalm 143. 2. See also Job 35. 7. and Psalm 16. 2. as also by an argument from the lesser to the greater, to shew that we cannot merit any good at Gods haind, for if a servant be so bound in duty to a mortall and sinfull master, that whatsoever he doth, and how diligently soever he serveth, yet shall he not deserve so much as thanks at his masters hands: much lesse can we, (that are not onely servants, but unprofitable servants, continually falling short of our duties, and also creatures of God, with all our best endeavours) merit at Gods hands: we owe our selves, and all that we have, are, and possibly can do, to Gods service, by whom we live and are: thou therefore that dreamest of meriting, renounce thy interest in, and claim to grace, (for grace and merit are incompatible, Rom. 4. 4. Rom. 11. 6.) and as Ambrose, de panit. l 2. c. 8. saith (if those books be his) prius solve debitum, ut quod speraveris impetrare mereare. First pay thy debt, that thou mayest deserve to obtain that thou hopest for. We are indeed faithfull, good, and profitable servants, not of our selves, or by any works which we can do, but by the free imputation of Christs righteousnesse. See Heb. 13. 21.

V. 11. thorow the midst of Samaria] Omri King of Israel, 1 King 16. 24. bought the hill Samaria of Shemer, and built thereon, and called the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer owner of the hill, Samaria, Hebr. שמרון Shomeron, 70. τὸ ὄρος τὸ σαμαρών, See Anastasius Sinait. qu. 45.

V. 12. which stood afar off] As unclean persons were to do, lest they should infect others. See Levit. 13. 45, 46. these lepers hearing of the fame of Jesus, that he cured all diseases, and was most ready to shew mercy to all those who came to him for help, and possibly hearing that Jesus passed by that way, would not foresee their oportunity of coming to entreat him to heal them. It seemeth that their disease brought them acquainted, and so they joyned in petition, for otherwise, the Jews have no commerce with Samaritans, John 4. 9. and one of this company was a Samaritan, verse 16.

V. 13. and said, Jesus Master, have mercy] It was a cause common to them all, and they joyned in one and the same petition, short, but pithy: they say not wherein they desired him: no instance his mercy: their misery was evident, and spake their own meaning, for a cure which they were confident he could work: however, they believed (as often it cometh to pass) ingratitude in nine of them extinguished the sparks of grace, or miserably obscured and weakned them in these nine.

V. 14. shew your selves unto the priests] See Lev. 14. 2. to them it belonged to judge of the Leprosie, and hereby the unbelieving Priests might be convinced: it may also teach us humility and subjection to authority: sacerdotem adhuc appellabat quem sciebat sacrilegum esse, Cyprian lib. 3. ep. 9. he yet called him Priest, whom he knew to be sacrilegious.

V. 15. turned back] Whether he came back to Christ before he had shewed himself to the Priest, as Christ enjoyned him, it is not certain. It is most probable that these were not sent to the Priest to know that they were clean, or to pronounce them so, for that evidently appeared, but to convince the Priests unbelief, seeing that Christ had done such evident things to confirm his doctrine.

V. 16. fell down on his face, at his feet] So adored he the divine power of Christ: and this sheweth that he was perfectly cured, otherwise he ought not to have come so neer.

and he was a Samaritan] These words condemn the Jews of high ingratitude, who being instructed in the Law of God, and having received the same favour from Christ to be cured, yet not so much as came back to thank Christ, which this Samaritan did, though he were a stranger from the Common-wealth of Israel, and of a Nation which they condemned as most impious, and vile, so that they held no commerce with them. John 4 9.

V. 17. where are the other nine] As if he said, I have healed ten of you, will none be thankful but this stranger? Not that he did not foresee their ingratitude, but that he might note and declare it unto others then present, to the intent, that they might learn to beware of that most ignoble sin of ingratitude to God, or man.

V. 18. there are not found] He compareth the Jews with this stranger: when the Samaritan shewed himself not only thankful in his own person, but modest in not accusing the rest: Jesus thus speaketh to his disciples and others present; there are not found, that is, no man appeareth thankful.

to give glory to God] By confessing that Christ had cured them by a Divine power, for this mercy was shewed them not for their fakes, but that the power; and mercy of God in Christ might therein be manifested and declared; therefore this their ingratitude was sacrilegious, for as much as their silence robbed God of his honour due; and Christ of the testimony of the truth of the gospel which he preached and confirmed by this and other like miracles, save thy stranger] For the Samaritans were Colonies brought into those parts by Salmanasar King of Assyria out of divers Provinces. See 2 Kings 17. 24. &c. he calleth him stranger, not to disgrace him but to set off the taste, and to condemn the ingratitude of the Jews; that no stranger might despair, nor any glory of holy parents; if their selves be degenerate.

V. 19. arise, go thy way] He graciously raiseth him that was prostrate before him, neither doth he dismisse him without commending his faith and gratitude; and it is most likely, that Christ, who shewed him this mercy, would not leave his own work imperfect, dismissing him without further instructing him in the mysteries of eternal life and salvation.

V. 20. the Pharisees] See on c. 14. 1.

not with observation] Or with outward shew: meaning that it should not be, as they dreamed, a kingdom temporal and glorious, with external pomp and Majesty, but spiritual, and so not to be discovered or observed by the world: for otherwise it appeared to the faithful by many evident signes and demonstrations, that Jesus was indeed that long expected Messias, and King of Israel, John 1. 49.

V. 21. within you] Or among you, in the Gospel preached, which is the scepter of his kingdom; and the Messias, whose kingdom you have with ardent votes desired, is now among you in your houses and Synagogues, and ye acknowledge him not, John 1. 7. and the spiritual kingdom of God is also in the hearts of the faithful, and so to be discerned by them only, who are subjected thereto, Rev. 2. 17. See Rom. 14 14.

V. 22. when ye shall desire to see, &c.] For the great afflictions which ye shall suffer, ye shall after my departure out of the world, desire this my bodily presence with you again, to comfort you. See Matthew 9. 15. John 17. 12. but I shall be no more conversant on earth, after my ascension, untill I come again to judgment: therefore beware of seducers coming in my Name.

V. 23. and they shall say] See Mat. 24. 23 Mark 13. 21.

go not after them] He speaketh here of seducers and false Apostles, whereof he warneth. See also Deuter. 13. 3. 8. Jerem. 23. 16. Jerem. 27. 9. It is a dangerous thing to tempt God, by listning to the temper: God oftentimes therefore giveth them over to strong delusions, to believe lies and be damned, who believed not, neither rested contented with the truth, 2 Thes. 2. 11, 12.

V. 24. as the lightning] Meaning, that it should be sudden, which Matth. 24. 27. ----- is expressed by,——out of the east, and shineth even unto the west. See the like manner of speaking, Deut. 4. 32.

so shal also the Son of man be in his day] He speaketh here of Christs second coming, which veste 30, is called the day wherein the Son of man, Christ, shall be revealed: the Apostle calleth it the day of the Lord, 1 Thes. 5. 2. and Jude 6. the great day, and Paul, 1 Cor. 1. 7. the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. See also 2 Thes. 1. 7. 1 Thes. 4. 14. &c. Mat. 24. 30. this shall be sudden, as the appearance of lightning in the air, in the twinkling of an eye, 1 Cor. 15.

V. 25. first must he suffer] See Mark 8. 31. Luke 9. 22. that is, Christ must first suffer.

and be rejected] That is, be disallowed, contemned and despised of the Jews, as evil or unprofitable; which phrase seemeth to relate to Psal. 118. 22. See also Mat. 21. 42. 1 Pet. 2. 4. in these words Christ would remove the scandal of the crosse, telling them before hand what he must suffer, lest they should startle and be offended at it, when they should see him suffer: he would also teach us patience in his own example, and confute the vain dreams of Jews concerning his temporal kingdom and glory: for as the Prophets foretold of his sufferings, so did he enter into his kingdom of glory, through ignominy, sufferings, the Cross, and Death. See chap. 24. 26. 1 Pet. 1. 11. Mark 8. 31.

V. 26. in the dayes of Noe] Gen. 7. Mat. 24. 37. 1 Pet. 3. 20. as if he said, no warnings could then persuade men, to leave their sins and turn to God, in newnesse of life, but securely flattered themselves, until they all perished: so shall it be when I come to judgement. Augustin saith truly, de verb. Dom. Luc. ser. 37. Seculi latitia, est imponita nequitia, the joy of this world, is unpunished wickednes: How short and beguiling must that needs be, seeing man is so short lived, and God so inevitably just? magna misereor dia est, nequitia impunita tem non relinqueret; it is Gods great mercy not to leave wickednesse unpunished here, lest he should be compelled at last to condem to Hell, he now vouchsafeth to correct with the rod, that he might by correction amend us, and not destroy us in the rigour of his justice.

V. 27. they did eat and drink] Christ doth not herein condemn any holy use of the creatures or the ordinance of God. but security in sinne, and contempt or neglect of Gods warnings, as 2 Peter 3. 4, 9. 10. &c. 2 Peter 2. 5, 6. &c. there is a time and measure to eat and drink: a time and measure for all things, Eccles. 3. 1. 1 Cor. 7. 5. So that we suffer not our hearts to be surcharged hereby, and that day of the Lord come upon us unawares, chap. 21. 34.

V. 28. likewise, &c.] Genes. 19. by another example he sheweth the same which he had before taught them, that at his second coming he should finde a secure world unprovided for judgment, the generality thereof thinking of nothing lesse than their destruction, which should sodainly come on them, as those showers of fire and brimstone upon Sodome and Gomorra; while they were eating, drinking, or following other worldly affairs.

V. 30. is revealed] From heaven, coming in flaming fire to render vengeance to the ungodly. 2 Thes. 1. 8. 2 Pet. 3. 10. Matth. 24. 30.

V. 31 he which shall be on the house top] Mat. 24. 17, 18. these things are related as spoken promiscuously concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, and the coming of Christ to judgement: this place mentioneth them as speaking of the general judgement: some things in Mat. 24. are to be understood as peculiar to the destruction of Jerusalem; some things as common to both: that is sudden destruction, and vain care to flie, resist, or save any temporal possession out of the flames.

V. 32. remember Lots wife] Gen 19. 26. A memorable example is propofed in her, who contrary to Gods command, but looking back to that which she unwillingly left behind her, was thereby overtaken with the judgement: and the monument thereof remained after the time of Christ. Clem Rom. ep. ad Corinth. p. 15. σημεῖον ἐτέθη, ὅτε γυνὴ Λὼτ ἐξῆλθεν ἐκ τῆς χώρας αὐτῆς, she was for a signe being turned into a pillar of salt (which, saith he) continueth unto this day.

V. 33. whosoever shall seek to save, &c.] See Mat. 16. 25.

V. 34. there shall be two] Mat. 24. 40. he calleth it night, in respect of the dreadful afflictions and horror of mens souls.

V. 35. two women] Mat. 24. 41.

V. 36. two men shall be in the field] Meaning, that no society of man in this world shall not then be dissolved, neither shall any be joyned in their future condition, as in this present, in respect of temporal relations.

one shall be taken] It importeth a reception to safety, as Psal. 27. 10. the Lord אספני Iasapheni, will gather me.

V. 37 they answered] That is, the Disciples.

where Lord?] Mat. 24. 28. in v. 2. he addeth his speech to the Disciples: now they having heard him speak of the taking of some, ask him where they shall be taken.

thither will the eagels] Christ answereth them by a similitude, and sentence taken out of Job 39. 30. used also Mat. 24 28. signifying by the flight of the Eagels, the sudden assembling of the Saints unto Christ coming unto judgement, whereof see 1 Thes. 4. 17. 1 Cor. 15. 52.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. Always to pray] That is, in every opportunity, ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ; as often as need and season require: this πάντοτε, is that which 1 Thes. 5. 17. the Apostle expresseth by ἀδιαλείπτως without ceasing, which the Syriac giveth by omni tempore, as Psal. 34. 1. Hebr. בכל עת bcol gheth, at all times. 70. ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ in every opportunity: according to that of Augustine ep. 121. c. 10. the brethren in Egypt are wont, Crebras quidem habere orationes, sed eas tamen brevissimas & raptim quodam modo jaculatas, to have frequent prayers, but very brief, and in a manner suddenly ejaculated. The meaning here is, the next words interpret, and not to faint; not to be dismayed by the length of any afflictions, so as to let go their hope and exercise of prayer. but to watch therein. See on c. 2. 37.

V. 2. there was in a city a Judge] The sum and scope of this place is to encourage us to fervency and constancy in prayer: by an argument from the lesser to the greater: if the unrighteous judge, which neither feared God nor reverenced man, was intreated by the importunity of the widow, to do justice to her whom he regarded not; how much more will God be intreated to relieve his dear children, whom he so loved, that he gave his only Son to death for them, whose necessities he knoweth before they ask? See Isaiah 65. 24.

neither regarded man] He describeth a wicked judge, first by the cause of all such injustice, want of the fear of God. See 2 Chron. 19. 6, 7. next by a mischievous effect thereof come to such an highth of impudency and presuming to abuse power and law, that (all bonds of modesty broken down) he cared not so much as vail or dissemble his injustice: but (as out-daring censure, and not caring who knew it) openly exercise it. So the Syriac giveth this neither reverenced man, and from the sons of men לא מיהדר אנש non se abscondebat, he concealed not himself. He was so openly wicked, that he feared not the judgement of God nor man. See Hos. 4 18.

V. 3. and there was a widow] In the description of this Widow are certain degrees of comfort to be gathered, and motives to perseverance in prayer. 1 She was a widow: by so much more helpless; therefore God cautioned in his law for such, Exod. 22. 22. Deut. 24. 17. Isa. 1. 17. 2. She was injured. 3. She had a wicked judge to appeal unto, and so little hope of relief. 4. she complained long without answer: yet her importunity at last prevailed; how much more shall Gods children for mercy, which he is readier to shew, than we to ask?

V. 4. though I fear not God, &c.] This further encouragement us to prayer:

prayer: Judge, who could say to his own conscience, that he neither feared God, nor reverenced man; whom neither equity of the cause, pity to the widow, loathing of injury, zeal of justice, nor love of any good, could move; yet had another motive to make him judge for the widow, left the should, by continuall solicitation, weary him: the word ὑπωπιάζῃ, here used, is borrowed from combatants, and signifieth, left she should, as with continual strokes, beat my ears: the Latines expresse it, obtundere.

V. 7. though he beare long] Though he long suffer the wicked to insult, and though he long delay the execution of his judgements; yet will he hear his elects, and be their refuge in due time. Many times, quod dare vult, differt. he deferreth that which he will give, that we may the more fervently desire that which is delayed, ne vilescat nimis datum, lest that which is quickly given should be undervalued. Aug. de verb. Dom. serm. 9.

V. 8. he will avenge] When he knoweth it most seasonable, Psal. 9. 9. Hebr. 10. 37. 2 Pet. 3. 9. So is it on Gods part, μακροθυμία long-suffering, verse 7. (see Exod. 34. 6. Num. 14. 18. Rom. 2. 4. Rom. 9. 22. 1 Pet. 3. 20. 2 Pet. 3. 9.) but on the sinners part speedy vengeance, verse 8. because it cometh long before they would or did expect it. See Mat. 8. 29. 1 Thes. 5. 3. Prov. 24. 22. & 29. 1. Deut. 9. 12. Isa. 29. 5. & 30. 13. Hab. 2 7. Jer. 50. 24. Mat. 24. 44. Luke 12. 39. Rev. 3 3.

when the son of man cometh] When Christ shall come to judge the world, he shall finde few truly faithful on earth: and therefore wonder not at the evil of the times. See Mat. 24. 12. where the immediate causes of so general an apostacie seemeth to be rendred: that is, persecution of Gods ministers: breaking out of false Apostles, or Prophets: malice, the grand nurse of all impiety: abundance of iniquity, and charity (without which faith is dead, Jam. 2. 20.) growing cold; it must needs be hard to finde faith where these things are found: yet still God will have a reserve, his elect, here to be excepted, as also in judgement, Ezek. 9. 6 Rev. 7. 3.

V. 9. which trusted in themselves, &c.] Or, as being righteous; that is, in their own merit and worth, as if for that God were bound to hear them; whereas indeed this is a certain effect and signe of their spiritual blindnesse, security, hypocrisie and pride, all which is abominable before God; for saith Salvian de gub. Dei lib. 3. though one study to please God, yet this is a kinde of the greatest wickednesse, si se justum presumat if one presumeth that he is just: and again, lib. 4. he saith, the greatest accuser of guilty men, is that arrogance which usurpeth (a shew of) innocency; for among many who are guilty of the same crimes, nullus est criminosior, quàm qui se non putat criminosum: none is more guilty than he who thinketh not himself guilty: this onely can we adde to our sinnes, that we judge our selves not sinners.

and despise others] ἐξουθενοῦντας ἑαυτοὺς, pro nihilo ducos: here is meant such a despising: as counteth others as nothing worth; so do proud hypocrites undervalue all but themselves, the worst of all.

V. 10. into the temple to pray] For that was, בית תפלה beth tephilla, an house of prayer, Isaiah 56. 7. οἶκος προσευχῆς, Matth. 21. 13. See Acts 3. 1. they went up because the temple stood on mount Moriah, 2 Chron. 3. 1. in the threshing floor of Ornan. See 2 Sam 24. 16. 22. where Abraham would have sacrificed his onely beloved son Isaac (Genes. 22. 2.) a type of Christ: hither came saints and hypocrites (as the clean, and unclean into Noahs ark) the just and wicked pray: but with much different ends and effects. Prayer was ever esteemed a principall part of Gods worship: see 1 Kings 8. 29, 30. Psalm 138. 2. here God is said to have put his name, 1 Kings 8. 16 not that God hath confined his grace and mercy to that place See 1 Tim 2. John 4. 21, 22, 23.) but that the people of God might be restrained from the temples and service of idols: and that this temple might bear a representation of him who was to come thither, Mal. 3. 1. through whom alone the prayers of the faithful are heard, John 14. 13. John 16. 23. Matth. 7 7. Mark 11 24.

the one a Pharisee, the other a Publican] The Pharisees being of a strict life, fwelled with great opinion of their own sanctity: the Publicanes were esteemed of the Jews, an impious, ungodly, and prophane people: See concerning Pharisees, Chap. 14. 1. Chap. 15. 1. and of Publicans, Chap. 3. 12. Chap. 15. 1, 2. yet Christ said, except your righteousnesse exceed the righteousnesse of Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven, Matth. 5. 20. and here the humble Publicane is justified before the proud Pharisee: so much do Gods judgements differ from mans.

prayed thus with himself] ταῦτα πρὸς ἑαυτὸν, standing or setting himself apart: or by himself: so the Syriac interpreter giveth it, he stood alone: this scripture sheweth his proud heart, as far from the true fear of God, as his opinion had set him from the vulgar, whom he counted wicked and unclean: See Isa 65. 5. This word ταῦτα here determineth not any posture or bodily gesture, (for they used also to kneel in prayer, 1 Kings 8. 54. Mic. 6. 6. Dan. 6. 10. Luke 22. 41. Acts 7. 60. and 9. 40. and 20. 36.) it also importeth a commencement or beginning of an action, or perseverance therein: he stood (some think) alone, above in the temple, leaving the despised Publican in the utmost porch, or court of the people; so far it was lawfull for reputed sinners to come; and strangers also. See Joseph. contr. Appion. lib. 2. 1 Kings 8. 41. he prayed thus, Greek ταῦτα, these things; so Syriac: instead of a prayer, he sayed these things.

God I thank thee] Though he attributed to Gods grace all the good he speakes of himself: yet he seemeth to be placed not all his confidence in the free mercy of God through Christ. in humility accounting all that he had, losse for Christ, (Phil. 3. 7, 8.) that he might not be found in his own pretended righteousnesse, which was of the law but in that which is through the faith of Christ; he was not justified: though he did not here proclaim his merit unto men, but spake to God: yet the searcher of hearts condemned that secret pride, and confidence in his own merit, which shewed it self: 1. in contempt of others (whom he counted ungodly) 2. in magnifying himself as free from the sins of others, and just in doing those things he spake of, which probably he did, and possibly might be unreprovable herein before men. (see Phil. 3. 6.) how dangerous is spiritual pride, even in the most glorious and greatest of excellencie. of men: humility is a safe vertue: leave all to God, who is a plentiful rewarder of the holy, and will abundantly crown his own gifts; and be assured thou shalt lose nothing thereby: See Matth. 25. 34, &c. Hebr. 6. 10 Hebr. 10. 35. & 11. 26. 2 John 8. Rev. 22. 12.

as other men, extortioners, &c.] As if other mens vices were his vertues; to justifie himself, he contemneth and condemneth others: his self being by so much worse than others, by how much more proud than others: he confesseth no faults, but as faultlesse casteth stones at others: which is, as if the sick man should onely tell what parts of his body were well affected and found: it seemeth he praised God, (as hypocrites use) only to colour his ostentation.

or even as this Publican] Hypocrisie is blinde at home, and too quick-sighted abroad: it is natural to the malicious, to judge all those evil, whom they hate, when proud hypocrites censure the just, God yet seeth how much more damnable the judge is, than the condemned.

V. 12. I fast twice in the week] That is, on the second day of the week, to which our munday answereth; and the fifth, which is on our thursday, according to the tradition of the Pharisees as their writers say; he that had reckned others faults, will be sure to put his own pretended vertues to account; as if he had perfectly learned that precept, Isai. 1. 16, 17. Cease to do evil, learn to do well; yea more than the Law required; as though he were better than the best: he mentioneth two things of which the Pharisees mach gloried, fasting and paying tithes. See Matth. 9. 14. and 23. 23.

I give tithes of all] See on Chap. 11 42.

V. 13. the Publican standing afar off] In that part of the temple, where all sorts of people, Publicanes and sinners might come, 1 Kings 8. 41. here he stood in humilitie, and deep sense of his own unworthinesse, far from the altar, and holy of holies, where God more evidently manifested his presence; yet not so far off but that the Pharisee had him in sight, when he said, or even as this Publican, verse 11.

not lift up] This was also an argument of an humble and lowly heart, as a self condemning sinner, he durst not look up toward the throne of God (the courts of the temple were all open, as they say, Jub bio, whereof Florus lib. 3. c. 5. faid —— vidit illud grande impiæ gentis arcanum patens, sub aureo uti cælo) now as this posture of his signified, dejection of minde and diffidence in his cause, so lifting up the head, or looking up importeth boldnesse and confidence of favour and indefinitely, as chap. 21. 28. when these things begin to come to passe, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh; but this Publican would not lift up his eyes to heaven, judging them, saith Theophylatt, ἀνάξιος, unworthy to look up to heaven; who had set them so much on earthly things to enjoy them; viz. which contempt of the heavenly, smote his breast] See Chap. 23. 48. as it were correcting and punishing his heart ὑπὲρ τῶν πονηρῶν βουλευμάτων, for its evil thoughts, and as to awaken it from its sleep and security in sinne, Theophylatt.

God be merciful to me a sinner] He well maketh hast to his sins remission, who is displeased with himself; for with the just and merciful judge, qui se accusat, excusat; he excuseth, who accuseth himself. Prosper.

V. 14. justified rather than, &c.] Acquitted of his sins, and received to mercy, fo was not the other, because he justified himself, and was so far from forsaking his sins, that he did not so much as confesse them. See Prov. 28. 13.

for every one that exalteth himself] Mat 23. 12 Luke 14. 11. so that it is true which Prosper saith after Augustine Melior est in malis facilis humilis confessio, quam in bonis superba gloriatio; humble confession in evil deeds, is better than proud boasting in good.

V. 15. brought unto him also infants, &c.] Mat. 19. 13. Mar. 10. 13. touch them] Lay his hands upon them, blesse, or pray for them: for imposition of hands was anciently a signe thereof. See Gen. 48. Exod 29, and a common symbolum of blessing among the Jews.

they rebuked them] That is, those that brought them : as Mark 10. 15.

V. 16. called them] Those that brought the infants.

for of such is the kindom &c.] Meaning infants, and those who in simplicitie, humility contempt of the world, innocencie, harmelessenesse, freedom from malice, soon forgetting injuries, and the like, become like little children; if the inheritance of the kingdom of heaven be theirs, who can reasonably barre them of the seal of adoption, baptisme ? of which it may not improperly be said (which Jacob said of the place he rested in) this is the gate of heaven, Genes. 28. 17. where did God ever forbid children to be baptized ? It is a true speech of Optatus, lib. 7. Quicquid enim Deus fieri noluit, ore suo prohibuit; whatsoever God would not have done, he hath forbidden with his own mouth : that is, the holy Scripture.

V. 17. whosoever shall not receive, &c.] Mark 10. 15.

V. 18. a certain ruler asked him] Mat. 19. 16. Mark 10. 17. See also on Chap. 14. 1.

V. 19. Why callest thou me good, &c.] Because they commonly abused this word, Jesus sheweth him that he could not confesse him to be good, except he also acknowledged him to be God.

V. 20. Thou knowest the commandments] It was a very necessary question which he asked concerning a way to eternal life, and a blessed care of a young man : neither doth he put it on good words, or any thing lesse than good works really to be done : yet because he asketh a legall question, verse 18 What shall I do? Christ accommodateth his answer thereto : thou knowest the commandments : but when the terrified keeper of the prison asked Paul the like question, he answered, believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved; Acts 16. The scope of this speech is to shew, that it is but vain to enquire for the way to heaven, while men trust in their own holinesse, or have their hearts set on this world. Here good works and obedience to the Law are proposed, as Levit. 18. 5. Deut. 30. 19. as the whole Law, that shewing us our sin, Rom. 7. 7. and miserable condition and disability to be justified by the Law, it may be our Schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. Gal. 3. 24. teaching us that we can no wayes be saved, but by his merits: thus Christ would convict the dangerous confidence of this man by remitting him to the second Table of the Law, against which mens sins are more evident and apparent.

Do not commit adultery] Exod. 20. 13. &c.

V. 21. All these have I kept] This answer is full of youthful confidence, wherein he was neither sensible of the rigorous weight of the Law : nor his own disability to avoid the curse thereof, nor his own many sins whereof he was guilty; and stood charged before the tribunal of the all-seeing God; for there is no man that liveth and sinneth not, 1 Kings 8. 46,

V. 22. Yet lackest thou one thing] This he speaketh, first by way of concession, admit it be as thou sayest; next he tryeth him by this one precept, that he might make the corruption of his heart appear, who pretended unto so absolute an obedience to all the commandments.

V. 23. he was very sorrowfull] Because he loved the world, and yet would fain be saved in the world to come; it grieved him that he could not have both : carnal gospellors would fain go to Heaven, if they could find a cheap way, thereunto : otherwise they wil not purchase the hope of future blessednesse, with a present price : the reason is, because they do not so much hope for salvation; as fear damnation.

V. 24. how hardly shall they that have riches, &c.] That is, as Mark 10. 24. they that trust in riches, love them, set their hearts on them, serve them, and so give them that place in their hearts, which God alone should have.

V. 25. it is easier for a camel, &c.] This seemeth to have been a proverb, whereby they signified some impossibility : this he saith, arguens cupiditatem ejus, taxing his covetousnesse. Irenaus lib. 4. cap. 26.

V. 26. Who then can, &c.] That is, what rich man can be saved?

V. 27. are possible with God] Who so governeth the hearts of his, that their riches do not blinde them, nor take away their hearts from God, Jer. 32. 17.

V. 28. then Peter said] See Matthew 19. 27. Mark 10. 28.

V. 30. more in this present time] For, the sweet fruit of the spirit, and assurance of eternal life, which the faithful here receive, is more to them than all the world, Phil. 3. 8.

V. 31. then he took unto him the twelve] Matthew 20. 17. Mark 10. 32. He spake not concerning his passion before the multitude, but to his disciples apart : for the multitude was not yet capable of this great mystery, neither did his disciples understand it, when he told it them plainly, verse 34. for two reasons saith Theophylact : first that he might shew them that he should suffer, ὀυκ ἄκων ὀυδὲ ὡς ψιλὸς ἄνθρωπος, neither unwillingly, neither as mere man, not knowing that he should be crucified : secondly, to teach them to bear patiently, that which was to come, being thereof foretold.

we go up to Jerusalem] There he was to suffer, that the truth might answer the type, which so many ages before preceded in Isaac, Gen. 22. and here he foretelleth certain degrees of his passion : 1. how she should be delivered to the Gentiles, Pilate and the Roman Souldiers : 2. how he should be mocked and spitefully entreated, and spitted on : 3. how he should be put to death after scourging, &c. These things are fulfilled, and to balance these sad things, he proposeth three things consalatory : 1. that he foresaw, and foretold what he was to suffer; so that it was neither fortuitous, compulsory, nor by the counsel of man; but voluntary, and by the determinate counsel of God for mans redemption. See Acts 2. 23. Acts 4. 28. 2. that herein should be fulfilled all that God had declared (concerning these sufferings of our Redeemer) by his Prophets. See Acts 3. 18 Psal. 22. 1. Matth. 27. 46. Psal. 69. 20, 21. Dan. 9. 26. Isa. 53. 3, 4. &c. 3. that he should rise again the third day according to the Scriptures; Hosea 6. 1. Psalm 16. 10. which was prefigured in Jonahs being three dayes and nights in the belly of the whale, Matth. 12. 39. Luke 11. 29. 30.

V. 32. the Gentiles] See on verse 31.

spitted on] See Mat. 26. 67.

V. 33. they shall scourge him] Matthew 27. 26. John 19. 1.

V. 34. this saying was hid from them] It was the great infirmity of the disciples still dreaming of Christs temporall kingdom, and restitution of Israels prosperity by some glorious victories over their enemies, which errours after Christs resurrection, being cleared by the holy Ghost, better instructing them, they remembred what Christ had said unto them, John 2. 22. thus we see how blinde carnal reason is, (specially being infected with some perverse opinion) untill it be illuminated by the spirit of regeneration : the things here mentioned, were plainly preached without any trope; yet that which they had once fancied concerning a temporall kingdom, so prepossessed them, that they could not at present understand any thing spoken concerning Christ's death and passion; but possibly they supposed that he spake concerning some other person, or some other mysterie.

V. 35. it came to passe] Mat. 20. 29. Mark 10. 46.

nigh unto Jericho] Jericho was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, Joshua 18. 21. once great and populous. See concerning it, Joshua 2. 1. and 6. 1. it was destroyed by Joshua, and there was a curse pronounced on the repairer thereof, Joshua. 6. 16. it was redifyed by Hiel, 1 Kings 16. 34. in the siege of Jerusalem by the Romans, propter perfidaim civium, for the perfidiousnesse of the citizens (saith Jerom de loc. Hebraic.) it was taken and destroyed, and repaired again, a third city being there built, which Jerom saith, remained to his time.

a certain blind man] Bartimeus, Mark 10. 46. this Evangelist nameth one blinde man, (so doth St. Mark also) who, it seemeth, was best known of the two mentioned by Matthew 20. 29. that which is here historified of Bartimaus, verse 35, 36, 37, 38. probably was at Christs entrance into Jericho, but that which followeth to the end of the Chapter, concerning restoring his sight, &c. was done at his going away from the city, as the other two Evangelists write.

V. 36. hearing the multitude passe by] Matth. 20. 30. by the noise of their feet, and confused voices (such as use to be heard of men talking one with another) as they went along. So the Syriac expresseth it, & audivit קל כנשא vocem turba transeuntis. Some of the multitude telling him upon his enquiry, that it was Jesus of Nazareth, whom such a confluence of people attended, passing by.

V. 38, Jesus thou Son of David] Matthew. 20. 30. See on verse 39.

V. 39. rebuked him] Matth. 20. 31.

but he cryed so much the more] The multitude reproved him, and enjoyned him silence, as not willing that he should trouble Christ with clamours; but he cryed so much the louder; not that his mercy needed to be awakened with such cries, nec clamoribus admonendus est, qui cogitationes videt, Fulgentius de persona Christi lib. 2. neither is he to be admonished with clamours; which seeth the thoughts : but this was an effect of the petitioners confidence : true faith (like water sources) by so much more strongly breaketh over all lets, by how much more it is dammed up : all oppositions strive with it. as the winde with the fire, enflame it more : let not afflictions stop our mouths, but rather administer matter of more fervencie in our prayers. See Chap. 22. 44.

thou Son of David] They used to stile the Messias, because they knew he should come of the stock of David, Psalm 132. 11. Acts 2. 30.

V. 40. Jesus stood and commanded] Christ loveth the importunity of faith, as verse 1. See Psalm 9. 18. See Mat 20. 32.

V. 41. what wilt thou, &c.] Thus he speaketh, not because he was ignorant what the blinde man desired, who could restore him sight, sight (See Matth. 6.) but for the spectatours sake, that they might take the more notice of the miracle done : God best knoweth what we want, but will have us perform our duty in asking (ut cor ad orationem excitet, Greg. hom. 2. that he may stir up, and awake our heart to prayer) and as occasion serveth, testifie to others what we beg of him, that others may with us be moved to praise and glorifie him.

V. 42. thy faith hath saved thee] Here, as in many other like places, chap. 7. 50. chap. 17. 19. &c. he attributes that to faith, which is proper to Christ, whose power to save, faith apprehendeth, and applyeth to us for our salvation.

V. 43. and immediately he received his sight] This sheweth that he is that eternal word, John 1. 1. which made all things, and who alone can repair that which is decayed : and thus he exemplieth his promise; Ask and ye shall have, Matth. 7.

glorifying God] This is the double effect of the miracle : he ascribeth the power and mercy which cured him to God : here was his gratitude. So did that Samaritan, chap. 17. 15. and the people which saw it, they praised God on his behalf, while their blasphemous doctors, attribute that which he did, to Beelzebub.

CHAP. XIX.

Verse 2. CHief among the Publicans*] That Christ vouchsafed his presence in Jericho (once subject to so grievous a curse, c. 18. 35.) exemplifieth two notable things. First, that he who came to save sinners, and deliver from the curse, called and saved some out of the most infamous and despicable places, as Samaria, John 4. 39 Galilee, Mat. 4. &c. that we may know, that in Christ, there is neither Jew nor Grecian, bond nor free; all are one in him, who is rich in mercy to all that call upon him. See Rom. 10. 12. Gal. 3. 28. Secondly, that it was possible for rich men to be saved, he demonstrateth in the example of Zacheus; because, though it be very rare, yet it is possible that God should touch the heart of rich men, causing them to give liberally to the poor and to restore all that which they have evilly gotten, or detained from others; so repenting and believing they may be saved. Zacheus is here called ἀρχιτελώνης, a chief Publican, or chief Officer among them, or a Collector-general for that place.

V. 3. who he was] That is, what manner of person he was, of whom he had heard so much.

because he was of a low stature] Having heard much of the fame of Jesus, and by the multitude attending him, that he was now come into Jerico, he might possibly out of a natural desire to satisfie his own mind, resolve to overcome the lets thereto : but God had another work in hand, which was to bring salvation to his house; and therefore by his secret providence, all hinderances wrought to the greater evidence of Zache's conversion : so his low stature sending him up into the Sycamore-tree : and his wealth (which was a common impediment to others) being the matter of almes and restitution, rendred him the more exemplary to the multitude, and conspicuous, to Gods glory, his own and others comfort, who can imitate him. So all things work together for good to those who love God, Rom. 8. because he loveth them first, 1 Joh. 4. 19. yea those very things which to carnal reason seemed impediments thereto.

V. 4. into a Sycamore] It concerneth not much precisely to know what tree this was, concerning which there are so many opinions : It was not of that kind which is mentioned c. 17. 6. that was συκάμινος, a Sycomine-tree, a kind of Mulbery-tree. See Dioscorid. l. 1. c. 144. Galen de aliment. l. 2. But this is, συκομορέα (as Suidas and Theophylact writeth it) or συκομωραία. So Greg. Nazianzen, orat. 39. readeth. The Syriac calleth it תאתא פכחתא titho phacchibotho, a wilde Fig, Hebr. שקמים, which grew plentifully in those champain countries, 1 Kings 10. 27. 2 Chron. 1. 15. See Chrysost. Tom. 7. p. 404. edit. Savil. Gregor. Nazianzen orat. 29.

V. 5. to day I must abide at thy house] Christ expected not his invitation, but in mercy prevented him, who probably durst not have invited him : he that was ambitious but to see Christ, obtaineth much more, to entertain him at his house, and to hear him open the mysteries of eternal life and salvation : God every where preventeth us, saith Theophylact, he is a plentiful Rewarder of them that seek him, giving them who but set themselves in the way, more than they could ask or think, Eph. 3. 20. See c. 1. 13. 1 King. 3. 12. 13. when Christ asketh of us, he meaneth to give some unvaluable blessing to us.

V. 6. and he made haste and came down] Christ had made him willing, præparavit sibi ejus animum cujus elegit hospitium, Prosper. cont. Collat. he prepared his mind to receive him whose entertainment he chose. Thus Zache's faith brake out, in a ready and speedy obedience. So Gen. 22. 3. Mat. 4. 22. And secondly, in the joy which he conceived at Christs calling him. See Acts 8. 39 Rom 14. 17. Gal. 5. 22. true faith cannot be concealed, its own flame will discover it.

V. 7. they all murmured] That is, the most part of those present, which were adversaries; neither entertaining him their selves, nor willing that others should, that he might shew them mercy : the main cause of their murmuring was, their malice to him, and envy to others who believed in him : these murmuring speeches they cast out in hope to possesse the people that he could not be the Messias, who frequented the company of sinners. So c. 5. 30. Mat. 9. 11. Luke 7. 39 This was upon the matter to murmure, quod in domum agroti intravit medicus, August. de verb. Apost. ser. 8. that the Physitian went into the sick mans house; they arranged Publicans with notorious sinners.

V. 8. And Zacheus stood] Doubtlesse Christ spake many things to instruct him : and possibly Zache might say many, which are not here recorded in the Gospel, whose scope is to set down that which may serve to bring us to faith and salvation, John 20. 30 31. This was a sure sign of Zache's conversion, effected by the providence of God, to stop the mouthes of murmuring and unbelieving Jewes.

I restore him fourfold] According to the Law Exod. 22. 1. Numb. 5. 7. And this is true repentance in case of injurious taking away, or detaining anothers goods, which without restitution, were but counterfeit and vain.

V. 9. this day is salvation come to this house] In his conversion and doing the works of holy Abraham, by Gods mercy shewed to him and his Family : as if he had said, heretofore Zache went with the perishing world in the broad way of destruction; his main care, study, and endeavour, being to get wealth by right or wrong : but this day God hath shewed mercy in his conversion, so that now he doth loath his former life and conversation : now he hath chosen the better part; restoring that which he had by any means injuriously gained, that it may appear that his repentance is true, and so acceptable to the God of mercy; and giving so largely to the poor that he may lay up treasure in heaven, Mat. 6. 19. and a good foundation in store against the time to come, that he may lay hold on eternal life, 1 Tim 6. 19. by faith (in Christ the onely Saviour) which worketh by love, Gal. 5. 6. Salvation is come to this house wherein the Saviour of the Elect, Christ, is this day entertained, heard, and beleeved; this house whose master is become of a Publican, a Convert; of a sinner, a Saint : salvation; the means to, and assurance of eternal life and true blessednesse, therein to be enjoyed; his sins free remission, his peace with God, and his justification, is this day sealed unto him by the spirit of regeneration.

is the son of Abraham] To be a son of Abraham, is to be chosen freely, Rom. 9. 8. to walk in the steps and faith of Abraham, Rom. 4. 11, 12. and generally to do the good works of Abraham, John 8. 39. whereby we may be assured of our election to eternal life, Rom. 8. 29. 30. 2 Pet. 1. 10.

V. 10. the son of man is come to seek, &c.] Mat. 18. 11. Hereby he confuteth their murmuring; shewing the end of his coming into the World, which was to seek and save sinners, 1 Tim. 1. 15. Mark 2. 17. Mat. 9. 31. therefore among the rest he came to call Zacheus. That which was lost by original, as also actual sins, as Augustine ep. 106. understandeth As also Ambros. in Luc. l. 7. 15. and Prosper. advers. Collat. c. 18 and so as Fulgentius saith, de incarnat. &c. c. 8. pro mortuis natus est ad mortem : He was born to dye for the dead, that we after the death of our first nativity which we have of the flesh, by the grace of the Spirit might be born again to life eternal.

V. 11. kingdom of God] Meaning a temporal and earthly kingdom, such as they expected by the Messias, which they supposed should be manifested now in his approach toward Jerusalem. They might think that by doing so much good among the people in several divine miracles, he had gained so much honour and good will, that the people were generally his; and there remained little more now to be done, but going to the Imperial City, and ascending into the Throne and ancient honour of his Father David. Thus still dreamed they of a secular kingdom of Christ the Messias : to correct this errour, he addeth, to that he had plainly said, this parable; wherein he teacheth them, that he should indeed very shortly begin and enter into his Kingdom, but in heaven, into which he must go by his death and passion; so that the glory thereof should not appear until in the end of time, he should come again to judgement.

V. 12. he said] See Mat. 25. 14.

went into a far countrey] By this parable he describeth his going up again into his kingdom of glory, and his return to judgement : by the servants are meant the faithful and Ministers of the Church : by Citizens, verse 14. the Jews who rejected them : by the money, their several gifts : by their trade, the usage of the same to Gods honour, and the salvation of his people.

V. 13. pound] Mina here translated a pound, is twelve Ounces and an halfe : which pound according to five shillings the Ounce, is three pound two shillings and six pence Sterling money.

V. 14. we will not have this man reign over us] By this he taxeth the rebellion of the wicked against Christ; to whose power they shall be unwillingly subject, if they will not willingly be so to his kingdom of grace.

V. 15. when he was returned] That is, Christ coming in glory to judge the quick and the dead.

V. 16. then came the first, saying] In these several sums and accounts, accounts, he describeth the several graces and gifts of God of which these must be variable accounts at the day of judgement: the first greatly advanced Gods glory; he shall have a proportionable reward: the second endeavoured according to his gifts; though far short of the first, he shall have a proportionable reward, and be full of glory and blessedness, though little than the other. See Dan. 12. 3 1 Cor. 15. 41. The third is the negligent servant, who making no good use of those gifts which he had received, with his vain excuses, is condemned out of his own mouth: and that is taken away which was entrusted to him, as was the Gospel from the Jews, Mat. 21. and given to the Gentiles, as Acts 13 46. See Luke 8. 18. And the Spirit from Saul, 1 Sam. 15. 14. which was bestowed on David; and the gifts and Apostleship from Judas bestowed on Matthias, Acts 1, 26.

V. 17. well th'u good servant] See on Mat. 25. 21.

V. 18. the second came] Mat. 25. 22. See on v. 16.

V. 19 over five cities] This is to signifie, that the glory of his kingdom in his second coming should be much differing from that which now appeareth. We now painfully, through scorn, injury, and contempt of the World, negotiate (as it were) for our absent Master; but then we shall be full of glory, joy, and happinesse, which Mat. 25. 23. is more plainly expressed, by enter thou into thy masters joy.

V. 20. and another came] Mat. 25. 24.

V. 21. I feared thee] Mat. 25. 25.

V. 22. out of thine own mouth, &c.] By the confession of thine own conscience; which telleth thee that thou oughtest not to suppresse the gifts of God, and live in idlenesse.

V. 23 my money into the bank] ἐπὶ τὴν τραπέζαν, that is, πὶ τὴν τραπεζίτικὸν, to the common stock of Bankers. which made profits of money by exchange, and lending out for interest.

V. 24. take from him] See Mat. 25. 28 and on v. 16.

V. 25. Lord he hath ten, &c.] He is rich enough or hath grace and glory enough: which we may not conceive Men or Angels shall say in the last judgement, as envying the fulnesse of glory or blessednesse given to any of the Elect, but as witnessing and admiring the abundant liberality of God.

V. 26. to every one that hath] Mat. 13. 12. and 25. 29. Mark 4 25. Luke 8. 18.

from him that hath not, &c.] The meaning of all is, he that faithfully useth the graces of God, shall have them increased: but even the common graces shall be taken away from him that useth them not to Gods glory. Some understand here want of charity making all gifts and excellencies void: Quifquis charitatem non habet, etiam dona quæ percepisse videbatur amittit, Alcuinus (after Gregor.) de confes. whosoever hath not charity, loseth also those gifts which he seemed to have obtained. See 1 Cor. 13. 1. &c.

V. 27. and slay them before me] He alludeth to the manner of men, executing rebells: the meaning is, that eternal destruction is prepared for Gods enemies, as Mat. 25. 41. this Christ speaketh to comfort the persecuted and others who observe that the wicked flourish, and securely despise Gods laws; affuring them, that though he suffer them to go on for a time, he will yet once appear a severe revenger of iniquity.

V. 28. he went before] Mark 10. 32. Toward Jerusalem, where he knew he should suffer death, as he had often enformed his disciples that they might know that he willingly suffered for the redemption of man, for whom he hath poured out his soul unto death, Isa 53. 12.

V. 29. when he was come nigh unto Bethpage, &c.] Mat. 21. 1. Mark 11. 1 Here is described his last going up to Jerusalem. Bethpage was a little Village of the Priests at the foot of the East-part of the Mount of Olives. See on Mat. 21. 1. of Lethany. See John 11. 1.

V. 30. at your entring ye shall find, &c.] Mat. 21. 5. Christ being omniscient God, as well as truly Man, saw the colt as if they had been present. See John 1. 48. all this was done that that might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophet Zacharyas, 9. 9.

V. 31 if any ask you] Christ preventeth such difficulties as might in the execution of his command have troubled his Disciples; though he were Lord of all, yet would he not destroy the civil rights of men, by taking away any thing without the owners consent. See Mat. 21. 3

V. 32. and they that were sent, &c.] Mat. 21. 6. Mark 11. 4.

V. 33. the owners thereof] Mark 11. 5. They did but rationally require an account of their own goods until they knew, what they were that loosed the colt, and that Jesus had sent them so to do; then they consented, and we read of no more they said. See Mark 11. ---- and they let them go.

V. 34. the Lord hath need of him] Mark 11. 6.

V. 35. and they brought him to Jesus] Matthew 21. 7. Mark 11. 7.

V. 36. they spread their clothes in the way] That is, they who were come to the feast, John 12. 12. this was a token of honour done unto him, as to their King, possibly they supposed that he now went up to Jerusalem to take the kingdom upon him, which might cause this their extraordinary rejoycing and acclamations, verse 37, 38. See John 12. 13.

V. 37. at the descent of the mount] Where he was in sight of Jerusalem, unto which he was then going.

the disciples began] That is, the multitude of those which followed him either to hear his doctrine, or see his miracles.

for all the mighty works] Among the rest for the raising Lazarus from the dead. See John 12. 17.

V. 38. blessed be the King] Psal. 118. 26. See on Mat. 21. 9. Mark 11. 9.

peace in heaven] That God may be reconciled unto us by the Messias: that all glory may be given to him for his mercy thewed us in these works of his: and that the Angels, formerly our enemies for our sin, may become friends and ministers of our safety. See Colos. 1. 20.

V. 39. Master, rebuke thy disciples] Mat. 21. 15. That this acclamation ceased not in the way but came into the very Temple, the children there crying Hosanna, it stung the hearts of envious Pharisees, so that they came to Christ to silence them.

V. 40. the stones would immediately cry out] Meaning that they laboured in vain to suppresse his testimony; for God would rather cause the senselesse creatures to testifie for him (as in the renting of the vail of the Temple, in his passion, and of the Rocks, &c. Mat. 27. 51.) than that his will should not be done by him: and indeed Christs person, doctrine, and miracles, was so evident, that they could not be concealed.

V. 41. he beheld the city and wept over it] In his love to the people of Israel, zeal of their salvation, and knowledge of their final destruction at hand; in grief and pity he burst out into tears: plangit eos qui nesciunt cur plangantur, Gregor. hom. 39. in Evang he bewailed them who knew not why they should be bewailed, who rejoyced when they did evil: all this theweth that he took on him, as our nature, so all our affections without sin: so oft-times the Deity (as it were) rested and clouded it self under the vail of his humanity, when the accomplishment of the work of our redemption required his passion, or compassion. See Hebr. 4 15. He was the Minister of the circumcision, Rom. 15, 8 sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Mat. 15. 24. Seeing therefore how wilfully they perished, for whose salvation principally he was sent; and that the elect city which God had chosen to put his Name there, rejected their Saviour, out of a fatherly and deep compassion, he wept for them who were not sensible of their own misery.

V. 42. if thou hadst known] It is a pathetical speech, and therefore abrupt: abundance of affectionate thoughts, as it were thronging the heart, like some violent preasse of people at a door, hinder each others passage: the sentence may be supplyed with would God, or how happy were it for thee if, &c. The sum is, I do now present the fulfilling of the promise for thy salvation; but thy destruction is near, because thou wilt not receive it, nor understand that which is so plainly taught thee: thus hath your pride, who say you are wise and holy, b inded you. Extrema dementia est, impræcantium suam non sentire, & iniquè agentes, non agnoscere peccatum, it is extream dotage not to be sensible of ones own folly, and sinning, not to acknowledge our iniquity. (Theodoret in Ser. 8.) and to be unwilling to learn: for as Chrysostom de reprehend. ferend. saith, it is no fault to be ignorant, but to be unwilling to learn.

the things which belong unto thy peace] Which thou now heareſt spoken, and seest done by me; all but for thy malice and obstinacy blinding thee should bring thee to beleeve, to be justified, and to have peace with God.

but now are they hid from thine eyes] Through the hardnesse of thy heart and incredulity, see Isa 6. 9 Mat. 13. 14, 15. John 12. 40 Jer. 5. 3. when the measures of a peoples iniquity are full, and they shall perish, providentia ab eo tollitur, ne pereiturus evadat. Salvian. de gub. l. 6. providence is taken from them, lest they which must perish, should escape.

V. 43. Thine enemies shall cast a trench] Which was done by Vespasian the Roman: (as it was foretold by Daniel c. 9.) and the city and temple demolished, by his son Titus.

V. 44 One stone upon another] Mat. 24. 2. Mark 13. 2. Luke 21. 6.

of thy visitation] As if he said, in thy visitation, in which God manifested himself in my person, offering thee mercy: see Gen. 50. 24. 25. Exod. 3. 16. chap. 1. 68.

V. 45. he went into the temple] Mat. 21. 12. Mark 11. 15 this was not his first going into the temple mentioned, John 2. 14. but another after that.

V. 46. it is written] Isa. 56. 7. See Mark 11. 17.

my house is the house of prayer] See chap. 18. 10. Jer. 7. 11. Matth. 21. 13.

V. 47. taught dayly] Or in the day time: every day after his solemn entrance into Jerusalem, unto the day of his passion: openly contemning the incurable malice of their Priests and Scribes; he taught all day, and at night went out of the city.

V. 48. Were very attentive] ἐξεκρέμαντο, that which the Latines expressed by pendebat ab ore ejus, they depended on his mouth, or attentively harkned unto him, as taken with astonishment at his doctrine. See Mat. 7. 28, 29. John 7, 46. the Syriac giveth it, all the people appensus erat ei, ut audiret eum, where, all, is put for a great or major part of them that heard.

preaching the gospel] The gladsome tydings of mans salvation, then at hand and near the accomplishment in his death and passion.

and the Scribes] γραμματεῖς: Suidas interpreteth this by ῥοφισταὶ: a Worker, whose office was to write, and recite the written publick acts: but in the New Testament, they were interpreters of the Law also: There were of those two sorts, 1. Laikes which were called γραμματεῖς τῆς λαὸς: Scribes of the people, Mat. 4. publick Notaries in drawing up Deeds, Contracts, and such like fecular writings. To these Phil. 45. 1. alludeth, My tongue is the pen (קולר מהיר sopher mahir. 70. γραμματέως ἑξυγράφου) of a swift writer: out of these possibly the Kings chose some to be Secretaries of state: such were called γραμματεῖς τῆς βασιλέως, 2 Kings 12. 10. סופר המלך sopher hammelech. So, 2 Sam. 20. 25. 2. The other sort were Ecclesiasticks: their office was to transcribe, read, and expound the Law of God, and therefore were called διδασκαλοι τῦ νόμυ. Epiphan. adv. hæref. lib. 1. cap. Interpreters, and Doctors of the Law. So was Saphan, 2 Kings 22. 3. סופר בית יהוה sopher beth Jehovah, a Scribe of the house of God. So was also Ezra, Ezra 7. 6. סופר מהיר בתורת משה, A ready or a swift Scribe in the Law of Moses: These being conversant in Scriptures, were principally Text-men, cleaving to the written word of God, wherein the Pharisees were mainly for traditions of the Elders. And it is observable, that the Scribes and Pharisees, aggreeing in one resolution of maliciug and calumniating Christ, yet much differed in their grounds.

V. 2. by what authority] See Mat. 21 23. Mark 11. 28. Gr. ἐν ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ. by what power, &c. here signifieth by, as also Hebr. 1. 1. he hath spoken unto us in his Son, by his Son, because he cast out the buyers and sellers out of the temple, and also taught the people; they not knowing or acknowledging him to be the Messias; and conceiving that the government of the temple, and matters of Religion were in their power and disposing, question him by what authority he did those things. See 1 Kings 22. 24

V. 3. I will also ask you, &c.] See Mat. 21. 24.

V. 4. the baptism of John, &c.] By baptism he signifieth the doctrine and whole ministery of John, bearing witnesse to Christ.

was it from heaven or of men?] That is, of divine, or humane institution? See Acts 5. 38. Christ understanding their intention to be onely that they might calumniate, not that they might learn and beleeve; answereth their question by a question, and that very satisfactory, if they would have understood: for seeing John baptist testified concerning Christ, that he was the promised Messias, the Son of God; they ought to have beleeved John, whom they believed sent of God: and in so doing, they should not have doubted Christs authority to purge his temple, and to preach: withal he taxeth their preverse unbelief, who knowing in their consciences that Johns doctrine was from heaven, and that he baptized in the name of Christ, yet would not beleeve his testimony concerning Christ. See John 3. 36.

V. 5. they reasoned with themselves, &c.] Mat. 21. 25.

V. 6. but if we say of men] Mat. 21. 26 They feared to be stoned by the people as blasphemers; but feared not Gods judgement on their hypocrisie, who withheld the truth in unrighteousnesse: dissembling their knowledge, left their fecular gains or reputation should be impeached.

V. 7. they answered that they could not tell] Mat. 21. 27. thus doth Gods wisdom non-plus mans, and drive it into unrecoverable straits and disadvantages, whence it cannot unwinde it self. See 1 Cor. 3. 19 here was a miserable refuge to lye against their own consciences, before him who is greater than all hearts, and knoweth all thing, 1 John 3.

V. 8. Neither tell I you] You dissemble this because you would not confesse your wilful unbelief, and therefore I will not answer you. Mat 21. 27.

V. 9. a certain man planted a vineyard] Mat. 21. 33. Mark 12. 1. Isaiah 5. 1. Jer. 2. 21. which is interpreted, Isaiah 5. 7. to be the Jewes: the noble vine which God brought out of Egypt, Psal. 80. 8.

forth to husbandmen] That is, committed it to the care of governours and Priests: It was a long time that they had the managing of his vineyard the Church, even from the people of Israels coming into the land of Canaan, unto the coming of Christ in the flesh: or as some understand it, unto the final destruction thereof in the demolishing of the temple and city by Vespasian, and Titus.

V. 10. sent a servant] To require in the name of God, fruits worthy amendment of life, See Mat. 21. 34. By servant, he meaneth the Prophets; who, though many perſons, were but one in office of declaring Gods will for mans salvation, speaking one truth, as being inspired all by one Spirit of God beat him, and sent him away empty] Mat. 21. 35. the meaning is, they abused, and persecuted the Prophets, See 2 Chron. 36. &c. and sent them away empty, without the fruits which God expected; which fruits are specified, Isa. 5. 7. Gal. 5 22, 23. in general, their salvation, the fruits of preaching: otherwise they have not laboured in vain, their work and reward being with God, Isa. 49. 4.

V. 11. he sent again, &c.] See Mat. 21 36.

V. 12. he sent the third] By this definite number is meant many Prophets, at several times, and in several ages: for as he ever had a Church, so he never left them destitute of competent teachers, though sometimes for the wickednesse of the people, their contempt of the word, and abuse of the Prophets, the word of God became precious, as in a famine thereof. See 1 Sam. 3. 1. Amos 8. 11.

V. 13. it may be they will reverence him] This theweth how Gods invincible goodnesse striveth with mans wickednesse, their unbelief cannot make void his truth, Rom. 3. 3. God had promised them a Saviour, and now he sent him, to confirm and accomplish the promises made unto the fathers Rom. 15. 8. this Jesus, it may be, importeth not ignorance of the event, which God foresaw: but as it is usually in parables, he thus accommodateth human affections to God, that it might more evidently expresse their desperate impiety in raging against Christ, whom God sent into the world to save them.

V. 14. that the inheritance may be ours] Mat. 21. 37. This is to shew the vain and impious hopes of Jewes crucifying Christ; wherein they thought, that by taking him away, who by his mighty works appeared to be the Son of God, they should keep the holy city, honour of the priesthood and domination over the Saints, in their own hands: two things are here remarkable. 1. The blind ambition and avarice of the Priests, who would fain their usurped authority and tyranny over mens consciences might still be upheld, to which rather than their desires should fail of effect, they would make way through the precious blood of the Lord of life. 2. The admirable goodnesse of God which could not be defeated by so matchlesse wickednesse of men; all which he well foresaw: but in mans greatest malice, he made his love most clearly shine, turning it to his glory in our redemption and salvation

V. 15. they cast him out of the vineyard] Thus did they, when apprehending Christ, they delivered him as a blasphemer and excommuniate person to the power of the Gentiles to be crucified. See Chap. 23. 1, 2. 22 23 John 9. 22, 28.

what therefore shall the Lord of the vineyard do to them?] Mat. 21. 40. It is a kind of appeal to their own consciences; as if he had said, Make the case your own, and tell me, what would you do to such tenants? See the like, Isa. 5. 3 &c. Gods judgements are so clear, that the sinners own conscience shall acknowledge their equity, in their own self-condemnation.

God forbid] Mat. 21. 41. Christ first extorted this confession from themselves: they said unto him, he will miserably destroy those wicked men, &c. which they said when at first they thought some others, not themselves concerned in this parable: but perceiving that themselves were the wicked men herein perſonated, they retract their sentence, and say to Jesus, pronouncing the sentence from their own mouth (which this Evangelist, and Mark 12. 9. record) μὴ γένοιτο, let it not be, God forbid: the Syriac giveth it, this shall not be, We shall not kill the Son of God, &c.

V. 17. the stone which the builders, &c.] Psal 118. 22. Isa 28. 16, Acts 4. 11. Rom. 9. 33. 1 Pet. 2. 7. Mat. 21. 42.

head of the corner] Mat. 21. 42. The Syr. interpreteth caput anguli, קרנא here used as the Hebrew קרן keren, among other significations, importeth an high and eminent place, strength, power, &c. So Christ uniteth two walls together, meeting in one angle of the corner stone, by which is signified, that Christ is the most high and powerful head of the Church of Jewes and Gentiles to be united into one. See John 10. 16. Ephes. 2. 15.

V. 18. shall fall upon that stone] They to whom he shall prove a rock of offence through their unbelief, 1 Cor. 1. 23. and thereby also provoke Christ to fall upon them as a severe Judge to their utter destruction.

V. 19. against them] Greek, κατ' αὐτῶν: the Syriac giveth it, concerning them: the word is often used as here, for against: as they say, εἰς φάρμακα βασιλέως, against deadly poison; so was this mention of Christ to them, whol some against their self-destructive malice; had they not (by dissiling the counsel of God against themselves) made that to be against themselves, which otherwise would have been for them, he sure it was against their sin, which had infected and poysoned their souls.

V. 20. sent forth spies] Mat. 22. 16. Mark 12. 13. they are named Pharisees and Herodians, a sect instituted by Herod the great, who among other enemies wherewith they mixed and corrupted rupted the truth of religion took Herod to be the Messias: Of which opinion, though it have many grave Authors, yet others justly doubt: let those who will be further satisfied herein, read *D. which should feigne, &c.] Vainly thinking thereby to have deceived CHRIST, who knoweth the secrets of all hearts.

V. 21. Master we know] Mat. 22. 16. Mark 12. 14.

truly] Or of a truth.

V. 22. is it lawful for us] For us who are the peculiar people of God, who gave us this land according to his promise: thus they and the Herodians (who, as Hierom on Mat. 22. 16. faith, stood mainly for payment of tribute to be made to Cæsar) would have found something in Christs answer, whereof they might accuse him to the Romans, to whom they were now become tributary.

V. 23. he perceived, &c.] See Mat. 22. 18.

V. 24. a penny] Mat. 22. 19. and 18. 28.

V. 25. Render therefore, &c.] God commanded to give every man his due, tribute to whom tribute, custom to whom custom is due, Rom. 13. 7. they are deceived who think stealing of customs due to Princes or States is no sin, because a penal statute lieth thereon; if they be taken, to forfeit all: for in the Levitical Law, it was penal to restore fourfold, for him that was found, or convicted of stealing ox or sheep, &c. Exod. 22. 1, &c. yet such stealing was no lesse theft then before God, than now; the moral Law saying, Thou shalt not steal.

V. 26. could not take hold on his words, &c.] Their purpose being to render him odious unto the people, they hoped by this question to have enstnared him, whatever he should have answered; as if he had said, It is not lawful; then they would possibly have cryed; Behold a seditious man, who (like that former Galilean) would imbark us in rebellions against Cæsar, and so bring the Roman sword upon us; if he had said, it is lawful: they would have murmured among the people that he was a flatterer of Cæsar endeavouring to confirm the servitude and oppression of Gods people; and in case they could have wrought but an ill opinion of him in the people, they might destroy him without tumult: their chief aim was that they might find some occasion to have given him up to power and authority, to destroy him whom their selves durst not destroy for fear of the people, or the Romans who permitted them not the power of judicature in matters capital, or concerning life and death.

V. 27. came to him certain of the Sadducees] Mat. 22. 23. Mark 12. 18. The Sadducees, denying the Resurrection, and holding that the soul dyed, were off-sets of Dositheus the Samaritan, who rejected the writings of the Prophets: and these Sadducees received only the five Books of Mses: Hieronym. adv. Luciferian. and on Mat. 22. Epiphan. lib. 1. 14. (who saith, they named themselves Sadducees, ἀπὸ δικαιοσύνης, of righteousnesse, which they profelled above others) See Tertullian de præscript. cap. 45. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 2, 3. Drusius ad voc. N. T. com. 1. Godwin. Moses & Aaron lib. 1. cap. 11. The Sadducees held some things with the Samaritans, though they were Jews: here we may note, that they derived a vain scruple out of Moses law, that they might tempe Christ: but he knowing that they held none of the Prophets as Canonical, but onely Moses, produced no testimony to confute them, but onely out of Moses whom they received, Hierom in Matth. 22. See v. 37.

V. 29. Seven brethren] Or kinsman. See Mat. 22. 25.

V. 33. Whose wife of them is she] One absurdity by them received, begat them many: they beleeved no relurrection: thinking, that if they should grant a resurrection, they must hold also that it must be to an estate like unto this present; subject to infirmities and necessities: whereas Theophylatt saith well, marriage is ἐοικὸς τῷ θνητῷ, an aid of the mortal, and supplement of that which perisheth in time: where then all are eternal, what needeth marriage? also they possibly thought that if they should have confessed that there were any angels or spirits, subsisting without a body, then they must also have confessed, that separated souls might live; wherefore they denyed all: that is, the being of angels and spirits, and the resurrection of the body, and immortality of the soul, which the sober Heathens beleeved. See Mat. 22. 29. Christ sheweth them the cause of their grolle errour, ignorance of the Scriptures, and power of God to raise the dead.

V. 34. children of this world] Men and women here living in this present world: for we must not understand, children of this world, here as chap. 16. 8. for men addicted and given over to the care and love of this world, but for all that live in this world: for the children of light do marry as well as others: the sense is, that there shall be a great difference between this present life subject to many necessities, and that which is to come, subject to none: there shall be no more encrease of Gods Kingdom, the number of the Elect being accomplished; there all fecular relations, and interests shall cease, and be no more.

V. 35. shall be accounted worthy] He speaketh principally of the elect, in whom he here instanceth. The wicked indeed shall rise again, but to eternal misery (Dan. 12. 2. Joh. 5. 29.) shame and condemnation, which is not worthy the name of life; and therefore as the Scripture calleth an impious life, death, 1 Tim. 5. 6. So stileth it the unhappy life of the damned, raised from the dead, the second death, Rev. 20. 6.

V. 36. neither can they die any more] Therefore shall there be no more matrimony for the preservation of mankind.

children of God] By adoption in Christ, with whom they are co-heirs of glory and happinesse, fo compleat, that they want nothing. See Rom. 8. 23. 1 John 3. 2.

children of the resurrection] This is a phrase familiar in Scriptures, children of youth. Psalm 127. 4. children of Zion, Psalm 129. 2. son of the bow, that is, the arrow, Job 41. 28. sons of strength, that is, strong men, 2 Sam. 2. 7. 1 Kings 1. 52. Deut. 3. 18. so they said, בן־מות ben maveth, a son of death, 1 Sam. 20. 31. worthy of death, or designed to death, Psalm 102. 21. So Acts 3. 25. υἱοὶ τῆς προφητῶν, &c. sons of the Prophets: so they said, בן שנה ben shana, the son of a year, 1 Sam. 13. 1. for that which was of one years continuance or age: the son of an hundred years, Gen. 17. 17. the son of a night, Jonah 4. 10. son of the morning, Isa. 14. 13. sons of God, Job 38. 7. that is, the Angels, &c.

V. 38. God of the dead] Of them that live nor at all: for the souls of the Elect live with him in joy and blessednesse, even while their bodies rest in the dust of the earth until the last day.

V. 39. thou hast well said] Because he confuted their adversaries the Sadduces.

V. 40. they durst not ask him] That is, the Sadduces were so confuted, that they durst not ask him any more captious questions; the Pharisees it seemeth did, Mat. 22. 35, 36.

V. 41. how say they, &c.] Mat. 22. 41. Mark 12. 35.

V. 42. the Lord said] Psalm 110 1.

V. 44 How is he then his Son?] Christ, as eternal God, was Davids Lord; and as man, his son, that is, of his linage, Rom. 1. 3.

V. 45. in the audience of all, &c.] Hypocrisie being, as it were the canker at the root of Religion, eating up the life and power thereof: It concerned his disciples and all men, to beware of it: therefore he here did, that which his spirit enjoyneth by Saint Paul, 1 Tim. 5. 20. Those that sin rebuke before all men, that others also may fear.

V. 46. beware of the Scribes] Mat. 23. 5. Mark, 12. 38. Luke 11. 43.

which desire to walk in long robes] He condemneth not the use of any civil and convenient garments, but the excesse and abuse thereof. The Eastern people did use, and still do use long robes: and the Prophets had a kind of mantle, or proper garment distinguishing them from other men; and it was meet for the teachers so to be clothed, that in their habit there might appear more than vulgar gravity: but the Scribes (as some since) abused this to pride and ostentation: placing Religion chiefly in the outward appearance, wherewith they veiled their detestable impiety.

V. 47. which devour widows houses] Mat. 23. 14. who under pretence of holinesse, long prayers, and other religious exercises, consume their estates who entertain them: Or by deceiving the trust which friendlelle widows repose in them, whom they took to be so religious. See 2 Tim 3. 5, 6. Mark 12. 40.

greater damnation] That is, an heavier weight of Gods judgement; because the sinning under shews of godlinesse, do more cause the holy Name of God to be blasphemed of the wicked (who usually cast all personal sins, upon the very religion profelled by those sinners) than they do (who do not so much as pretend to sanctity) when they sin.

Verse 1. And saw the rich men] Mark 12, 41.

the treasury] See on verse 4. there were other treasuries about the temple; but this was a chest set at the Eastern door, through which all the people passed in and out, that every man with his own hand, might cast in that, which eith er was taxed upon him, or he voluntarily offered, or gave unto the poor. See 2 Kings 12. 9. 2 Chron 24. 8. Nehem. 10 38.

V. 2. two mites] Mark 12. 42. the least money they had in use among them, which they called χαλκοῦς, Syr. ofhanin, ofhanin, or eight part of that which they called δίτλους. Theophylatt. See hereof Beza major. annot. in Marc. 12. 42.

V. 3. more than they all] More in proportion, considering her estate and theirs: and because God esteemeth not the gift by mans value thereof, but by the givers heart.

V. 4. The offerings of God] That is, those things which as free-will offerings were consecrated to God, for the use or service of the temple, and his publick worship: we may take this εἰς τὰ δῶρα, for ἐν τοῖς δώροις, among the gifts: or the treasury and continent, for the treasure contained therein: that is, their אוצר aron, mentioned 2 Kings 1. 10. (as the Chaldees called it, and the name was now in use, קרבן corban, which Josephus lib. 4. c. 4. Antiq. interpreteth, the gift of God) so is it interpreted, Mark 7. 11. κορβᾶν (ὅ ἐστι δῶρον) and Mark. 15. 5. where the Greek hath δῶρον, the Syriack hath קורבנו curbanni, my gift, or oblation, of the Hebrew קרב legrab: Josephus, also lib. 1. adv. Ap. calleth it δῶρον θεοῦ. So here verse 5. such gifts are called ἀναθήμασιν, gifts consecrated to God and Holy uses: yet by a Synechdoche, this also imported their treasury in which they kept the gifts offered to God, Mat. 27. 6. it is not lawful to cast it into τὸν κορβανᾶν which there the Syriack calleth בית קורבנא beth Curbono, the house of oblation: for which Mark 12. 41, 43. is set, γαζοφυλάκιον, the treasury of the Temple: So Suidas saith, Κορβανᾶς, παρὰ Ἑβραίοις ἱερὸς θησαυρός: the Corban with the Jews was the sacred treasury.

V. 5. and as some spake] Matt. 24. 1. Mark 13. 1. As some of the Disciples spake in admiration of that beautiful structure.

and gifts] As plate, jewels, or the like precious things dedicated to the use or ornament of the Temple, by the devotion of them who gave thither to worship: See on verse 4. the word here used, ἀνάθημα or ἀνάθεμα, signifieth that which is devoted, or consecrated to God, and it is taken either in the good or evil sense; it cometh of ἀνατίθημι which signifieth to hang by or feperate from common use, as Trophies of victories, things dedicated for deliverances or other monuments of thankfulnels, used oft-times to be by the walls, or on the pillars of Temples; but here the conjecture of Theophylatt, is very probable, I think (faith he) that they speak de sculptis & tornatis ut erant Palmæ & Cherubim & Similia, of the ingraving and polishing, as were in the Palmes and Cherubims or the like (carved in the beautifull ftones of the Temple) πῶτε γὰρ ἴσως τὰ ἀναθήματα, φησὶν —— for perhaps he calleth these gifts.

one stone upon another] Chap. 19. 43. God would have Jerusalem the place which he had chosen to put his Name there, and so vvhich he had for a time esteemed the publick service, and sacrificing, prefiguring Christ the Saviour to come and suffer there) vvholly destroyed, with the temple, in which the Jews so much gloried; after that Christ was come, and had suffered there, and had accomplished the work of our redemption: to give the Jews to know, that now all their ceremonies were ended, he being come and having finithall things which they prefigured; and that they ought no more to stick in the now dead and antiquated letter of that Levitical law; circumcision, sacrifices, &c. but to come to Christ the end of the law to every beleever. And because God well knew, how unwillingly they would part from their rites, in which they had been instructed hitherto; and wherein they esteemed themselves more more excellent and holy than any nation in the world, to joyn the faith of Christ, and therein to be equalled with the Gentiles whom they despised; therefore God (who as Chrysostome adver. Jud. orat. 1. faith) every where present, and filling every place, yet reduced τὸν μὲν λατρείαν, εἰς δυσὶ τοὺς τόπους ἐν ᾧ ἔδει θύειν, τὸν δὲ τὸν εἰς καιρὸν, τὸν δὲ καθ' ὃν εἰς ἀεὶ χρόνον: his worship to facrifices, facrifices to a certain manner, that manner to a certain time, and that time to one city; and again overthrew that city, to declare the utter determination & abolition of that law and ceremonies, which were tyed to that place, and which were no where in the whole world to be used but there.

V. 5. and they were glad] So sweet is revenge where the Devil ruleth: so welcome is any thing to such, which compleyeth with their own mischievous desires and designes: probably they thought it some advantage to their cause, that one of Christs own Disciples and Domesticks, appeared on their party against him: therefore how ever they might think of the Traytor, as Augustus Cæsar, or Aurelianus are said to have done in such cases, yet they were glad of the treason.

V. 6. in the absence of the multitude] or without tumult: See note on Matthew, 26. 16. ἄτερ ὄχλου without tumult, in the absence of the multitude: ὄχλος signifying either; as comparing this place with Mat. 13. 36. Mat. 21. 8. John 7. 49, Luke 6. 17. Acts 6. 7. will make it appeare. The prefent sense is, when the people which were wont to follow him were away, left there should be any tumult or uproare about him, which might bring them in danger of the Roman governours displeasure, or violence of the people, the chief Priests had hereof cautioned, and Judas was impatiently careful to comply with them herein: therefore he fitted the time when Jesus in the silent night, was out of the city with his disciples in the garden.

V. 7. then came] Mat. 26. 17. Mark 14. 12. according to the law; the 14. day of the first moneth, from that evening that solemnity was to begin: the Syriack giveth it, in which the custome was to kill, &c.

V. 8. he sent Peter and John] Mat.26. 18. two disciples most familiar with their Lord: he sent not Iudas, though he were the steward; Christ well forefaw what he had designed: not a supper, but destruction for Christ.

V. 10. bearing a pitcher] Mark 14. 13. κεράμιον ὕδατος, a pitcher of waters, either for purification or some other domestick use. Some give it Iagenam a bottel, but more improperly; the Syr. word גרבא here used signifieth either; it significth also hydream, a water-pot.

V. 11. where is the guest-chamber?] Where we may eat the Passeover. See Mark 14. 15.

V. 12. a large upper room] See Mark 14. 15. the word ἀνάγαιον her used, signifieth, as Suidas interpreter giveth it, cœnaculum in superiore domus parte situm: a room in the upper part of an house, where they used to eat: so called in the Greek of its distance from the earth; so the Syriack ܥܠܝܬܐ haliitho which coming of עָלָה hala ascendit, &c. signifieth a room into which they ascended by many steps: such rooms they had, as for ordinary entertainment of strangers, so specially for the feast of Passeover.

V. 13. and found it as he had said] Both the signes and marks told them by Christ, whereby they might know the place, and be assured of the successe: all which was extraordinary in respect of the dangerous and active malice of the Scribes and Pharisees, against any that should entertain Christ, or so much as confesse him. Job. 9.22. also in regard that it was near the feast, that their rooms were generally taken up before hand, by reason of so great a confluence of people, then coming up from all parts of Iudea and other Nations: the confideration of all this, gave them to know that his providence ruled all; that they might not be dejected at any thing which they should see come to pass contrary to their expectation in his passion.

V. 14. And when the houre, &c.] Matt. 26. 20. Mark 14. 17. which was the evening, Exod. 12. 6.

he sate down Κατέκλιθη accubuit, as the Syriac readeth; ܡܬܟܢܫ tetkenash after the manner of those Countreyes. See on Chapter, 7. 36.

V. 15. with

V. 15. with desire have I desired] ἐπιθυμίᾳ ἐπεθύμησα: It is an Hebrew manner of speech, to signifie his earnest and longing desire of the accomplishment and fulfilling the will of his Father for mans redemption, which he knew should presently follow that Passeover.

to eat this Passeover with you] He desired before his death to expresse his matchlesse love to them, to give them an example of humility, and to ordain the Seal of the New Testament, the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, the pledge of their Spiritual Communion with him: and by them to commend it to the Church as a remembrance of his Passion until his return to judgement: which was then necessary to be done, when the Passeover being accomplished in his death, was thence with all the Legall Ceremonies to be abolished.

V. 16. untill it be fulfilled] Untill that which now is presented in the figure, be really exhibited in the oblation of my self, once for all to take away the sin of the vvorld, John 1. 29. and untill my rising again to immortality, the first degree of my exaltation, and Spirituall Kingdome of Glory; of which verse 18. Matth. 26. 29.

V. 17. he tooke the cup] This first mentioning the taking of the cup, appertaineth to the celebration of the Passeover, and not unto that which is mentioned, verse 20. This was the cup of thanksgiving, which they used also in other their Peace-offerings; wherein they took up the cup of Wine in their hands, and blessed God, to which the Apostle alludeth, 1 Cor. 10. 16. calling the cup in the Lords Supper used, The cup of Blessing; properly, for the Lords Supper, is the Eucharist, and Sacrament of Thanksgiving: So Christ took the Cup, and gave thanks, &c. Matt. 26. 27.

V. 18. I will not drinke] Matth 26.29 Mark 14. 25.

V. 19. and he tooke bread] Matthew 26. 26. Mark 14. 22. 1 Cor. 11.23.

this is my Body] That is, the Sacramentall sign of my body; for instituting a new Sacrament, he speaketh after a Sacramentall manner, wherein the things signified are spoken for the sign; as verse 7. the Passeover must be killed, that is, the Paschal Lamb, the remembrance or sign of the destroying Angels passing over, and sparing the Israelites, Exod. 12. 12, &c. so he calleth the Cup, the New Testament, or Covenant in his Blood; that is, the sign or remembrance of his bloud shedding.

V. 20. which is shed for you] Understand this after the manner of the Prophets speaking, in which, things to come use to be pronounced Sub enunciatione praeteriti, Fulgent; obiect. Ar. under a Declaration of that which is past.

V. 21. Behold the hand of, &c.] Matt. 26. 21. Psalm 41. 9. Mark 14. 18. John 13. 21. as if he had said, behold, or consider a horrid and impious thing, although I am about presently to suffer death for you; though I leave you in this now instituted Sacrament, the Symboles and pledges of my dearest love to mankind (John 3. 16.) for a remembrance of my death, untill my coming again to judgement, to be observed in the Church; yet the hand which betrayeth me, is with me at this Table; and while he eateth with me of my bread, he is meditating how to betray me to death.

with me at the Table] That is, Judas who will presently betray me, now at Table with me.

V. 22. was determined] By God in his eternal Counsel, Acts 4. 28. Revel. 13. 8. God determined not sin, but he determined the salvation of man by Christ his being betraid, and being crucified: so draweth he good out of evil; so gave he Christ into the hands and power of sinners, that he satisfiing Gods Justice for us, we might be saved: so God used that to good, which impious men designed to evil, and acted most sinfully: observe the several ends here proposed. Judas betrayed Christ for gain, the Devil put it into Judas heart so to do, in hope to take him away who destroyed his works: the Priests were instigated hereto by their malice and envy, because their honour and gains were impeached by Christs preaching and miracles; Pilate gave sentence to please the people; the people cried, Crucifie him, to ingratiate with their Rulers; the Souldiers acted as the Priests, Jewes and Devils moved them; but God, out of his unspeakable love and mercy, permitting these voluntary agents every one herein to act as he would, bringeth all to his determinate will and councel for mans salvation, which none of the actors either knew, or would: nor is it the least admirable effect of Gods providence that some of them who were to be saved by the death of Christ, should be actors in, and promoters and carriers on of the same, which is evident, Acts 2. 36. 37. 38, &c.

V. 23. to enquire among themselves] John 13. 22. they looked one upon another, doubting of whom he spake; probably enquiring among themselves, whether any of their company knew any thing concerning any plot against their Master.

V. 24. there was also strife] Matt. 20 24. the occasion of contention about superiority is set down; whether it revived again on this occasion: or that this Evangelist relating the same thing, followeth not the same order of the story, it skilleth not much: the same controversie was on foot at other times among them, Matt. 18. 1. it was a dangerous symptome of a great remainder of the old man in them: see 1 Cor. 3. 3. which ought to be a document of caution and humility unto us; considering men otherwise of excellent, had yet such faylings: as also of confidence, that God will not cast us off for our infirmities, who tolerated so much in them, whom he made lights of the world.

V. 25. he said unto them] Matt. 20. 25. Mark 10. 42.

called benefactors] Job 12. 21. εὐεργέται the Hebrewes called their Nobles נְדִיבִים nedibim liberall, beneficent, Psalm 113.8. Psalm 47.10. from נָדַב nadab, he gave willingly, or liberally. So was Ptolomie King of Egypt stiled εὐεργέτης from his beneficence to the Cities of Greece, which being at first given to Princes and great Lords, for their personall Vertue; at last it became common to Princes and Lords, as Augustus, and other titles, whether in their persons they were such or not: the meaning of Christ here is, that he would not have the Ministers of the Gospel affect any high and ambitious titles of domination.

V. 26. is greatest among you] In gifts, authority, or other qualities: meaning that such must carry themselves without pride, arrogance, ambition, violence, oppression, and contempt of others; and with that humility and moderation, which would become the meanest in the Church: not that he appointed equality of ministers, for he appointed orders in the Church, which cannot be without the relations of inferiour and superiour, onely he prohibiteth Tyranny and domineering, Romans 12. 8. 1 Cor. 12. 28. 1 Timothy 5. 17. Hebr. 13. 17. 24. 1 Pet. 5. 3.

V. 27. Whether is greater] By another argument he teacheth them, that they are not called to rule, and domineer, but to serve: as if he faid, might justly challenge dominion: yet have I taken on me the form of a servant, who am Lord over all; I came to serve, not to be served: how much lesse ought you to dream of dominion, and worldly greatnesse?

V. 28. Ye are they which continued, &c.] Matt. 19. 28. He declareth that they who had shared with him in his suffering, should also communicate with him in glory.

in my temptations] In my perfecutions and troubles, Hebr. 2. 18. and 4. 15. Iames 1. 12. You who constantly adhered to me, neither feandaled at, nor separating from me for my Doctrine, as those, John 6. 67. You, who neither for fear or favour of men were ashamed to confesse me, as many of the chief Rulers did, John 12. 42. you who have been constant to me in all those injuries, persecutions and tribulations, which I have suffered, Matt. 19. expresseth this by ——ye that have followed me in the regeneration, which here is called temptations: Indeed God, among mere men, corrected his sons, and exercised their patience by sundry trials and tentations, that being tried, and persevering to doe his will in all these trials, they might know that of themselves, which God foreknew concerning their constancy: so tried he Abraham, Gen. 22. 1. with that grivous precept; and these tentations must try the whole Church, which must through many such enter into the Kingdome of God, Acts 14. 22. which began in Christ her head, who was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin, Heb. 4. 5.

V. 29. I appoint unto you a Kingdome] As if he faid: your present contention is vain: you are appointed to an Heavenly Kingdome: onely learne patience of me: and be contented to go to that joy (as I shall do) by the way of temporall afflictions: shake off this dream of secular greatnesse and life up your minds to Eternall blessednesse: here we must serve, that we may reign there.

V. 30. That ye may eat and drinke] Matt 19. 28. from his last supper, he deriveth this manner of speaking to signifie the effect thereof, life eternal, by their participating of him: this he speaks, in metaphorâ —— Theophylatt, by a metaphor taken from these who have the honour to sit at Table, with kings; as if he had faid, you shall be highly honoured.

sit on thrones] Matth. 19. 28. the meaning is, that you may partake with me in glory and happinesse. Now if this condition remain for you, why do you contend for a miserable and momentary primacy in this world?

V. 31. Simn Simon] This ingemination and doubling of his name, is to stir him up to a serious attention, and to him doth Christ address his speech, before the rest, though all of them were concerned; first, because he foresaw that Peter (being more fervent and confident than the rest, and so more exposed to Satans charges) would more grievously fall, than his fellow Disciples: secondly, because afterward he should excel them also in a singular example of constancy: or as Chrysostom (on John 17. 12.) thinketh, because he had high thoughts, as trusting to some merit of his more fervent love to Christ.

Satan hath desired, &c.] as if he faid, I have indeed told you of a Kingdome, which I intend you: but be ye not secure, who have a fierce and subtile adversary to encounter with: ye are the good Wheat; for many tryals must you look to cleanse you that ye may not be cast away with the unhappy chaffe to unquenchable fire, and Matt. 3. and thou Simon Peter, Satan hath desired to overthrow thee, but he shall onely cleanse and refine thee, by humbling thee in the knowledge of thy infirmity.

sift you as wheat] this σινιάσαι Suidas interpreteth by σεῖσαι, κοσκινεῦσαι, διαζῶσαι παρελθεῖν, and περιφέρεσθαι: that is to shake to and again, as in a sive: to trouble, terrifie and discompose as the tumultuous waters in a storme; here is the malice of Satan principally ayming at the ruine of the best, he pafteth by wicked men, as his own slaves and vassals of whom he is already sure: eos quos in dejicere quos videt stare. Cyprian. lib. 3. ep. 1. He is ambitious to cast them down whom he seeth standing. See Isaiah 30. 28. Amos 9. 9.

V. 32. I have prayed for thee] not for Peter onely doth Christ mediate, but for all the faithful, John 17. 20. and therefore he will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able: whosoever therefore faileth not in tribulation, ab illo se non dubitet adjuvari. Prosper. con. Collat. let him not doubt but Christ solicitoth for him and helpeth him; so admirable is Gods patience quâ contemptus parcit —— he spareth even being contemned, never can he want mercy, quando hominis & indulgentiâ consulit, & flagello. Seeing he provideth for man, both in indulgence, and the rod. ib. Prosp. sent.

V. 33. I am ready to go with thee, &c.] Peter ignorant of his own infirmity, is thus confident; but having learned by experience that the beft meaning man easily falleth into the moft grievous sin, if God take away his sustaining hand, he afterward answered more modestly, Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee, John 21. it is a very hard matter to excel in any gifts and not to be too confident thereof; which is the cause why God usually humbleth those by some great trials whom he hath richly nitheth with gifts extraordinary, as Paul also acknowledgeth, 2 Cor. 12. 7.

V. 34. And he said] Matthew, 26. 34. Mark 14. 30. John 13. 38.

V. 35. He said unto them] Matth. 10. 9. Luke 10. 4.

sent you without purse] He compareth his absence from the Disciples before his passion, with that which followed after his passion; noting the variation of the times; as if he had said, the instruction which I gave you for the execution of your first Commission (Matt. 10. 9, 10.) was but temporal, and for that time onely observable: at that time though you take no viands with you, you wanted nothing, for I did extraordinarily provide for you: by enclining their heares to whom I sent you, to supply you with all necessaries: I then complied with the weakneffe of children, instancing my miraculous providence: now the time requireth that you be armed to succeeding Ministers, who are not always to expect or depend on miracles for their supplies in things temporal: and this which he saith concerning a purfe or sword v. 36. is to intimate their necessities and dangers imminent, which he speaking of, allayeth their unseasonable ambition: as if he said, you contend about superiority; but you muft all undergo many necessities and dangers; thus he warneth and armeth them against imminent afflictions; specially, with spiritual arms, wherewith external means are not to be neglected.

V. 37. Muft yet be accomplished in me] that is, I who am your Lord am now to suffer for the redemption of man, according as it was foretold by the Prophets.

he was reckoned among the transgressours] Isaiah 53. 12. Mark 15. 28. So they apprehended him as a malefactour with swords and staves, and they crucified him among thieves.

the things concerning me] that is, which the Prophets have written, or the Law prefigured concerning me.

have an end] all is, and shortly shall be fulfilled, for the accomplishment of your redemption, so that it should be an Argument of your confidence, not of fear and dejection. (See Matt. 27. 38. Mark 15. 28.) seeing that Christ doth indeed fulfil all that was foretold of him: thus Christ confirmeth the authority of Scriptures, the scope whereof is to bring us to Christ, eternal life and true happiness, John 17. 3.

V. 38. Here are two swords] this said they, not understanding of what armour he spake.

it is enough] thereby teaching them that he spake not of a bodily armour, for which, against a world of enemies, many thousand swords had been too few.

V. 39. And he came out]Matth. 26. 36. Mark 14. 32. John 18. 1. He went away out of the house, in which he had eaten the Passover, toward the garden where he was to begin his Passion.

as he was wont] unto Gethsemane, Matthew 26. 36. Mark 14. 32. which is a Village at the foot of the mount of Olives (Jerom. de loc. Hebraic.) whereto he was wont to resort with his Disciples, John 18. 2.

V. 40. And when he was] Matt. 26. 41. Mark 14. 38.

pray that ye enter not into temptation] as if he said, if you are not solicitous for me now entring into my sad Passion: yet be carefull for your selves: you also are in present danger of being surprized with a fearfull temptation, (of which, verse 31. See Peter, 5. 8.) to enter into temptation, here importeth to be overcome thereof: we being not able of our selves to resist, are to beg assistance and deliverance at Gods hands in vigilant and incentive prayer.

V. 41. He was withdrawn from them] the word ἀπεσπάσθη here used, signifieth he was pulled or drawn away: it is of σπάω trabo, or evello: the Syriac interpreteth it by פרק perach, which among other significations, separare, segregare, se secedere, and thence פרוש parich. remotus, abiens, distans. He withdrew himself a small distance from his Disciples, that he might pray alone: possibly as men in bitternes of spirit, and anguish of mind, use to turn away, or withdraw from company. (See Gen. 43. 30. Gen. 42. 24.) to give their passion freer vent: so Christ having taken on him all our infirmities with our sin, being now to wrestle with this heavie agony and deep fence of his fathers auger against sinners, in whose place he now stood, withdrew a little from his Disciples, lest he should have had zarded their yet weak faith, by their too near sense and apprehension of his bitter sorrows.

V. 42. Remove this cup from me] this is an Hebraisme כוס cos, by a metaphor signified that condition which was prepared, and imminent, whether good or evil. See Psalm 11. 6. Ifai. 51. 17. Lam. 4. 21. Matt. 26. 21. Pfal. 64. 8. Pfalm 16. 5. and 73. 10. Ezekiel 23. 33. Zach. 12. 2.

not my will, but thine be done] as God, he was of the same will with the Father and holy Spirit: but as he was man subject to all our infirmities (sin onely excepted) so was he of another, yet not contrary will, because by the unmeasured grace which he had received in his Divine unction, John 3 34.) he subjected that humane will (naturally desiring to preserve the humanity) unto the will of the Father, even unto death; teaching us this Precept, chap. 11. 2. by his own present example, and as Bernard, faith, de quæmod. orandi: Deo magis committere, quàm temere aliquid apud nos desinere, to commit our desires and necessities to God, rather than rashly determine any thing of our selves, we may and do often erre in petitioning, God cannot err in giving: we know not what to pray as we ought, Rom 8. but God knoweth what is best to bestow on us: what is good for the sick, the Physitian better knoweth than the Patient himself.

V. 43. Strengthning him] Not by communication of any vertue; but by presenting his Humanity the certain assurance of his speedy victory and glory, while the Deity, as it were hid his light and comfortable presence.

V. 44. In an agony] That is, a vehement conflict in his soul, through the deepest sense of of his fathers wrath against sinners, for whom he now stood as a surety and Redeemer, 2 Corinthians, 5. 21.

prayed more earnestly] more fervently, for he wrestled not onely with the terrours of death as other mere men are wont to do (for then many Martyrs might have seemed more constant and resolute than he) but with the terrible justice of God powring out his anger on sinnes, than which nothing more dreadful can be thought of; for he bare the burden of all our sins, Isai. 53. 4, 5, 6. and what ever punishments were thereto due; this conflict therefore, and passion of Christ is the sum of our consolation the having therein fully overcome death and Hell for us, and the fear and horrour thereof: so that all this lessened not his Majesty; but encreased our assurance of reconciliation with God and salvation with Christ risen from the dead, Gods justice, which we have provoked, being fully satisfied by the inestimable merit of Christs passion.

great drops of blood] θρόμβοι αἵματος, clottered, or congealed blood: Dioscor. l. 3. c. 44. θρόμβος αἵματος & βαλὸς, it differeth congealed blood, So. Suidas θρόμβοι ἁλὸς congealed salt, the Syr. giveth it, droppings down of blood that is in greater and grosser drops distilling.

V. 45. Sleeping for sorrow] it seemeth they were stupified with an heavy grief, for that which he had told them: otherwise, for now and care are usually sleeplesse: mark how little truft there is in frail flesh and blood; they who had boldly promised, (and doubtlesse meane no lesse) to goe to prison & death for Christ, could not so much as watch with him one hour in so grievous an affliction, so much as watch with him one hour in so grievous an affliction, Rise and pray Matt. 26. 41. See v. 40. as if he said, it is now no fit season to sleep in the midst of these imminent and now ——instant dangers, arise and watch in earnest prayer, that ye fall not into temptation, but that God may be pleased to hear and deliver you.

to kiss him] which was their manner of friendly salvation. Luke 7. 45.] Judas had given them that sign by which they should apprehend Jesus, Matt. 26. 48.

V. 48. Betrayest thou the Son of man with a kisse] doest thou clothe thy treason with shews of love? Judas would after such evident detection, yet vail his treason; therefore he would not act it openly: possibly he might fear, left otherwise he might escape their hands, as he had sometimes done: therefore he maketh semblance of love and friendship: but Christ discovereth his vain hypocrisie, under which they could not have taken him, had he not offered himself to that passion whereby he was to redeem man.

V. 49. Shall we smite with the sword] it seemeth they were confident of extraordinary assistance, who durst draw two swords against a multitude; but understood not that Christs kingdom was spiritual, not secular; and so nor to be defended with arms and violence, but with spiritual armour, 2 Cor. 10 4 Eph. 6. 13, 14, &c.

V. 50. One of them smote] Mat. 26. 51. Mark 14. 47. this was Peter, John 18. 10. who out of zeal to defend his Master, stayed not to expect Christs answer, but presently strooke. See Matthew, 26. 51.

the servant of the high Priest] This was Malcus John 18. 10.

V. 51. Suffer ye thus far] Meaning that they might take him, and do what God had appointed. Mat. 26. 52. Christ biddeth him put up his sword, intimating that neither Peter, nor any other private person or persons might take up the sword, to defend the cause of Christ. 1. Because the jus gladii belongeth not to any private person, but to publick authority. Rom. 13. 4. much lesse to the Minister. Secondly, because they who smite with the sword, shall perish with the sword. Mat. 26. 52. Thirdly, because Gods will muft be done in our sufferings, John 18. 11. Lastly, God can, and ever will as he knoweth best, defend his own cause: he hath legions of Angels at command. Mat. 26. 53.

V. 52. Captains of the Temple] See verse 4. they that commanded the guard of the Temple. See on John 18. 12. Acts 4. 1.

V. 53. But this is your hour] The time wherein God hath permitted you to rage against me; and wherein the Devil the Prince of darknesse, endeavoureth by you to destroy me, who am the light of the world.

V. 54. Then took they him] Matthew 26. 57. Mark 14. 66. John 18. 12. then when he who offered himself a sacrifice for our redemption permitted them so to do: so blinde were they that they were nothing moved by the feare of that power of Jesus, which in their approach cast them to the ground, John 18. 6. nor his present healing Malcus ear, to consider either his mercy to save, or divine power to destroy, and, if he pleased, to frustrate all their power and endeavours against him.

V. 55. When they had kindled a fire] Mat. 26. 69. Mark 14. 66. John 18. 17. in the midst of the hall, that they might sit or stand about it, & warm themselves who were to attend their masters coming out.

V. 56. A certain maid] Mat. 26. 69. Mark 14. 66, 67. John 18. 17. See verse 60.

V. 57. Woman I know him not] So dangerous a temptation is carnal fear: it was an undoubted effect of love that Peter followed Christ into that danger, as also of a violent perturbation of minde by fear, that he denied him: they that truly love God (by the grace of God) are yet of themselves infirm; because, yet, but partly flesh. Here were three immediate causes of Peters falling. 1. Too much confidence in himself. 2. The company of Christs enemies, with whom it is very difficult, not to fall: because he seemeth to correct their errour, who dissenteth from their practice. 3. The wisdom of flesh, here suggesting to himself, what he once spake to Christ speaking of this his passion. Mat. 16. 22. Iλεώς σοι, regard, or favour thy self.

V. 58. Man, I am not] Once fallen, he could not presently recover: the falls of a sinner take away the present sense of sin, and affect the minde with such a stupor, that therein it cannot understand the evil done: so easie is it for the best to fall, so hard to rise again.

V. 59. About the space of an hour after, another] Satan (who never wanteth variety of imployers) doubleth his charges, and violently followeth his mischievous advantages upon those whom he casteth down: it should enforce the Apostles admonition. 1 Cor. 10. 12. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

V. 60. Peter, I know not what thou sayest] Here seemeth much difficulty (which hath wrestled some learned pens into very dangerous inconveniences) in the reconciliation of the seeming differences between the Evangelists, relating the same story of Christs convention before the High-Priest, and Peters denial, but with some different circumstances: as for example.

1. The three first Evangelists relate all as acted before Caiphas, to whom Christ was led. Mat. 26. 57.

2. That Peter followed him thither. Mat. 26. 58. and warmed himself there, Mark 14. 54. Luke 22. 55.

3. That they stroke Christ in Caiaphas presence. Mark 14. 65. Mat. 26. 64. and here v. 63.

4. That two maids accuse Peter. Mat. 26. 69. 71. Mark 14. 66, 69. but here verse 58. another man said: which was the second charge.

5. That John 18. 24. saying, Annas had sent him bound to Caiphas; yet he saith v. 25. Simon Peter stood and warmed himself: and then upon a second charge denied Christ, and upon a third v. 26, 27. that he denied a third time.

For the reconciliation of these seeming difficulties, we must know. 1. That all the word of God is infallibly true, and such as there cannot be any errour or falshood in it. 2. That one of the Evangelists recieveth some things, which another, or all the reft omitted. So that, all that which they or any of them wrote, is certainly true, though neither any one, nor all of them wrote all that which was true. See John 20. 3. and 21. 25. for instance: John wrote concerning Christs being carried to Annas first, (John 18. 13.) who was father-in-law to Caiphas (which Caiphas was High Priest, that is suffragan to Annas the High Priest. (See on John 18. 13. the same year.) this, the other three Evangelists omit: but relate the main actions, without this circumstance. 3. They also relate Peters following of Christ into the High Priests hall: Mark and this Evangelist, speak of warming himself; but omit the place, Annas hall, which John mentioneth: also John speaketh of his standing and warming himself; which circumstance appertaineth to that part of the story which was acted in Annas hall, except we shall say that Malcus charge was against him standing by a second mentioned fire in Caiphas hall also: three bring the same reason for a fire in that place as well as the other. 4. That John saith Christ was ftrucken in Annas house john 18. 22. but the reft relate it as done in Caiphas hall: either those Evangelists observe not the circumstances and order of the story (omitting, that he was first carried to Annas, which John relateth (consented to historifie the things themselves: or else, which is possible, they did twice strike Jesus: so john sheweth the occasion was, their ill taking the manner of his answering the High Priest Annas, John 18. 22. but the other Evangelists relate to the matter of his answer (Mat. 26. 64, &c. Mark 14. 62. &c.) as the end of their smiting him, and the occasion subordinate thereto: that is, their blind-folding him, and bidding him prophesie who smote him: because the people esteemed him a Prophet. 5. That Matthew and Mark say two maides accused Peter, the first, and second time, but Luke 22. 58. it is said, that first a maid, and then a man charged him: both are true; and John 18. 25. it is clearly reconciled, where mentioning the second charge he saith, ἄλλος, they had; that is the maid, and a man at least, it may be with some others also; so Matthew and Mark, mention the woman in the second charge: and this Evangelist mentioneth the man, but John signifieth both, if not divers others. 6. That after John said Annas sent him bound to Caiphas) he recordeth the second denial, it maketh not that this second denial was at Caiphas (the surrogates) house: for who knoweth not the many anticipations in sacred histories; wherein that is not first set down, which was first acted; as so, that is not always to be understood, to be first in time, which is first set down in the series of a story: understand therefore the two first denialls to have been at Annas house, and the last at Caiphas house, whence he went out and wept bitterly; for between the two first; and the last denial, verse 59. it evidently appeareth, that there was about an hours space: and this last denial was occasioned by Malchus (whose ear Peter had cut off) his charge: which the other Evangelists omit, as also their carrying him to Annas; and his sending him bound to Caiaphas; which John recordeth, John 18. 13.

the Cock crew] Peter could not take warning by the word and premonition of Christ himself: but hearing the cock crow, he came to himself and remembred: that stayed him not from sin; this occasioned his repentance: in the first, Christ left him to himself; the sense and sad expetience of his own disability to resist a temptation: in the second, he minded him of the signal whereof he foretold him. The most powerful means cannot awake the sinner, until Gods remembring spirit make them effectual; the least shall, where he so doth.

V. 61. Then the Lord turned back and looked on Peter] He looked back as Theophylatt faith, ἀπλῶς βλέψαντι with a benigne aspect: then Peter remembred, forgetting Christs words he fell; but recalling them to mind, he repented.

before the cock crow] Mat. 26. 34. John 13. 38.

V. 62. went out and wept bytr.] This was the effect of his fight, detestation of his sin, and grief that he had so offended a gracious God: we read that he wept, we read not that he satisfied: God accepteth the sole merit of Christ for a full satisfaction for our sins, but yet he justly requireth our repentance, that his mercy may have place: repentance is the key to the kingdom of grace. See Mat 3. 2. Mat 4 17. Such is Gods mercy and patience (as Prosper fore-cited faith) quia parcit contemptus, parcit etiam negatus; wherein being contemned, yea being denied, he spareth, and forgives.

V. 63. mocked him] Mapzeyov; Mark 14. 65 John 18. 22. μαίζειν, whereof the word here used is properly signifieth, to jest childishly; or foolishly; or else which the Hebrews expresse by פתל halla. which in its first signification importeth, to praise, by an antiphrasis signifieth, in Hithpael, derisit, subsannavit, he jeered, which is a scoffing by seeming to admire, praise or approve him whom he derideth: or by some disagreeful term, as 2 Kings 2. 23. so פתי halal, among other significations, importeth a doing or saying something in scorn and contempt: so saith Theophylatt, ὅσα παρόντων ἀνατόνων ὡς ἀγνοούντων πλανᾶσθαι, the Lord of the Prophets, is mocked as a false Prophet, or an impostor.

V. 64. prophesie, who is it that smote thee] With these scoffing blasphemies they insult; because the people honoured him as a Prophet.

V. 65. blasphemously spake they, &c.] See on verse 70. possibly some saying that he was a glutton, wine-drinker, and friend of publicans and sinners, as chap. 7. 35. others that he had formerly cast out devills by Beelzebub, (chap 11. 15.) who now failed him, so that he could non deliver himself from punishment, now they had apprehended him: another, that he was no Prophet who would not foresee his own dangers, and deliver himself from them; that he had but deceived foolish people, &c. Satan was witty to invent blasphemous suggestions, and they malicious to apprehend and utter them; all which Jesus heard, and patiently endured in his sufferings for our sins.

V. 66. as soon as it was day] Mat. 27. 1. Mark 15. 1 John 18. 28. so industrious is malice, Satan will not let the wicked, his servants, sleep when any mischief is to be done, but sits heavy on their eyes at Church, or when they should rise to go to it, for fear they might be moved to faith and repentance, and so he should loose them, and their service.

into their councell] Their consistory, or Sanhedrim; which sate about matters of religi n. See Mat. 5. 22. Mat. 26. 3. thus would they colour their malice with shews of justice and legall proceeding.

V. 67 art thou the Christ?] The expected Messias, promised by the Prophets; the King of Israel, as they disciples believe? thus they hypocritically and captiously ask, not with any intent to believe the truth; but to find something whereof to accuse, and condemn him as an enemy of Cæsar, or blasphemer of God.

If I tell you, you will not believe] You, who would not believe for so many miracles as you have seen me do, will not believe my words; unbelievers are sometimes importunate to hear the word, which shall serve onely to condemn their disobedience and unbelief. See Jer. 42. 2, 3. Jer. 43. 2. and 44. 16.

V. 68. you will not answer me] See chap. 20. 3, 4. 7. 17, 44. you will not be instructed, being resolved, not to put my cause on truth; and evincing reason, but violence.

nor let me go] You are already resolved to destroy me.

V. 69. Hereafter shall the Son of man] Mat. 26. 64. Mark 14. 62 at his second coming, he whom you now judge and condemn as a malefactour, shall judge you; though you destroy this life, he shall live again in heavenly Majesty and glory.

at the right hand] In the power and glory of his heavenly kingdom. Hebr. 1. 3. and 8. 1.

V. 70. Art thou then the Son of God] As if in blasphemous scorn they said; thou Carpenters son; thou friend of Publicans and sinners: thou prophaner of sabbaths: thou the Son of God? See verse 65.

ye say that I am] That is, I am. Mark 14 62. or, you say the truth, for I am so.

V. 71. What need we any further, &c.] The Syriack readeth, what need we (תוב) again; as the Hebr. עוד hod importeth, any addition, or a second time; for they had in the night sought for witnesse against him, but found none: for many have false witnesse against him but their witnesse agreed not together. Mark 14. 55, 56. as if they said, we had before, and have enough against him now; for he professeth himself the Son of God: The wicked think the very profession of the truth of Christ evidence enough to condemn the professours thereof.

CHAP. XXIII.

Verse 1. And the whole multitude] Mat. 27. 2. Mark 15. 1. 1 John 18. 28. when they supposed they had enough now to perswade Pilate to condemn him to death, which themselves, had great will, but no power to do, in prosecution of their malicious desire to destroy him; the multitude of those that were in the councell, and the attendants thereon (the Priests, Elders, Scribes, &c.) none would be absent.

unto Pilate] The Romans deputy, and chief governour of that province; who had power of judicature in matters capitall, which the Romans permitted not to the Jews.

V. 2. perverting the nation] See Acts 17. 7. by new pernicious doctrines seducing the people, perswading them against the divine law, and institutions of God by Moses.

forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar] This was a false calumny, as appeareth, Mat. 17. 27. & 22. 21. (as was the former) and here chap. 20. 25. but this they said, that they might ingage Pilate the Roman deputy, in their impious quarrell. See Isaiah 53. 2. John 6. 15.

Christ a King] &c. an annointed King; Syriack that he was the King Messias; they took that for granted (which was most untrue) that the Messias should have an external and fecular kingdom, glorious for wealth, armies and victories: and that under him they should be delivered from all other powers, or jurisdictions; by this complaint to Pilate, they labour to intimate, that the interest of Cæsar was highly concerned, by Iesus pressing himself to be a king, and the Messias, or by any of the Jews believing the same.

V. 3. Pilate asked him] Mat. 27. 11, Mark 15. 2. John 18. 33.

art thou the King of the Jewes?] He asked him not whether he perverted the nation, or forbad men to pay tribute to Cæsar: it is likely that he being a vigilant deputy, had his intelligence and information concerning Christ: the rather for that the Herodians went with the Pharisees to catch him in this point. See Mat. 22. 16. &c. who, if he had denyed the right of Cæsar, would quickly have informed against him: nor doth he mention the third cavill, as suspecting him of competition for his deputy-ship; because he knew him to be poor, unarmed, and a contemner of fecular honours; but to satisfie the impious Iews, left by any malicious complaint to Cæsar, they should have beproten him trouble.

thou sayest it] See on John 18 37. I have no need to affirm it, seeing thou sayest it; thou answerest thy self for me.

V. 4. Then said Pilate] After he had examined him in the Pretory he giveth the Iews there attending, this answer at the door; I find no fault in him worthy of death, as you suggest.

V. 5. they were more fierce] They grew more violent: as the Syriack hath it, they cryed out upon him: thinking by violence to prevail, seeing by right and equity they could not.

beginning from Galilee] They mention Galilee, partly to minde him of the sedition there formerly bred: and partly to intimate that Herod might finde some dangerous advantage against him, in case he should not hearken to their informations concerning the maintenance of Cæsars right.

V. 6. a Galilean] That is, a native, or an inhabitant of Galilee, and so of Herods jurisdiction.

V. 7. he sent him to Herod] As to acquit himself of him; so to ingratiate with Herod: this was Herod Antipas; the murderer of John Baptist. Chap. 3. 19, 20. Herod the great his son. Mat. 2. was at Jerusalem at that time] In those dayes of the Passover, Herod was at Jerusalem, at the feast. See Exod. 23. 17.

V. 8. he had heard many things of him] See on Mat. 14. 1.

hoped to have seen some miracle] He rejoyced that Pilate so much honoured him, as to send him one that had done so many admirable works: as also in hope to satisfie his own curiosity, in seeing some miracle done: or do impious men abuse the holy power of God, as if it were some fecular spectacle, ordained for admiration, and pastime.

V. 9. he answered him nothing] He knew Herod asked not with any intent to be converted; but for his curiosity, which Christ would not satisfie.

V. 10 accused him] Wickednesse is ever jealous: they fearing left Christ might satisfie and ingratiate with Herod, and so escape their fury who had resolved to destroy him: they repeat to Herod those things whereof they had accused him before Pilate: the more admirable was Jesus present silence, verse 9, who neither by the presence of so great a Prince, nor the importunate malice of his enemies, was moved to answer any thing.

V. 11. a gorgeous robe] Rich and honourable clothes, which they put on him in scorn. Gr. λαμπρὰν glittering, shining, or splendid. Vulg. candidam. Mat. 27 28. a skarlet robe. So Hebr. 9. 19. skarlet wool; all this in derision, because Jesus would not satisfie Herods vain desires, in shewing some signe; had he found him guilty, he would otherwayes have proceeded against him; this injury they did him, because the Iews accused him of affecting a kingdome.

V. 12. Pilate and Herod were made friends] It seemeth their former contest was about jurisdiction. See chap. 13. 1. which Pilate in this instance salving, ambitious Herod was satisfied: caused friendship and unhappy peace is that, which is made to the injury of Christ: nor was this blasphemous fcoffing of Herod long unevenged; as Josephus writeth Antiq. Jud. l. 18. c. 9. being accused to Caius Cæsar, he was by him put out of his kingdom, or Tetrarchie, and his goods given to Agrippa; himself condemned to perpetuall banishment into Lions in France (some say into Spain) he died with grief.

V. 13. called together the chief Priests] Their Sanhedrin or great councel.

V. 14. no fault in this man] This heathens justifying Christ, condemned the Iews malice against him.

V. 16. I will therefore chastise him, &c.] Mat. 27. 26. Mark 15. 15. John 19. 1. Offences not capital, the Roman presidents used so to punish with stripes, or scourging: this Pilate would have done to appease the Iews rage: he had not learned, that we may not do evil, that good may come thereof. Rom. 3. 8. much lesse may we do evil to avoyd evil: he ought to have defended the innocent, and to have delivered him: but once declining from justice, he fell to that impious complyance with the Iews malice, which was against justice, and the testimony of his own conscience.

V. 17. for of necessity] Of custom granted them by the Romans. See Mat. 27. 15. Mark 15. 6. John 18. 39.

V. 18. they cryed out all] That is, the generality: Israel the now peculiar people of God, ragerh and thirsteth for the holy blood of Christ; Pilate the heathen abhorreth such cruel injustice. See 1. How easily an holy people may be misled, or degenerate, 2. What trust there is in fickle multitudes, who so quickly can change their Hosanna's to crucifige's. 3. Whether enraged malice will carry men, making professours of truth do that which foher heathens loath and are ashamed of?

V. 19. for a certain sedition, &c.] See on Mat. 27. 16.

V. 20. willing to release Jesus] See on Mat. 27. 17.

V. 21. but they cryed saying crucifie him] The vehemency of their impious desires, causeth them to double their cryes, to make the voyce seem the stronger: thus wicked men use to second their sins with greater and greater wickednesse.

V. 22. the third time] Peter, for fear denied Christ three times, and yet repented; Pilate three times justified Christ, and yet for popular favour condemned him: it may teach us, neither to despair if we repent, nor to presume though we have begun well.

V. 23. ch ef Priests prevailed] These voyces overswayed Pilates conscience. Some Greek copies have not ἢ τῶν ἀρχιερέων but the best generally have, the Syr. have it, & ingens erat vox eorum, & summorum sacerdotum, noting a danger of, and propensity to some uproare, if they were not satisfied with the blood of Iesus.

V. 24. Pilate

V. 24. Pilate gave sentence] Or consented: neither according to law, conscience, nor custome, but to please the people: possibly he thought to avoyd an insurrection hereby, but this injustice followed him: for about seven years after, being banished to Lyons, and reduced to miserable straits, he slew himself.

V. 25. Jesus to their will] That is, to crucifie and do what they would with him. See Mat. 27. 26.

V. 26. as they led him away] Mat. 27. 32. Mark 15. 21. out of the city to Calvary. See Hebr. 13. 12.

they laid hold upon Simon a Syrenian] That is, the souldiers took him to carry the crosse of Christ: there are many Simons mentioned in the Gospel; Simon Peter. Mat. 10. 2. Simon the Canaanite. Mat. 13. 4. Simon the leper. Mat. 26. 6. Simon father of Judas Iscariot. John 13. 2. Simon the tanner. Acts 9. 43. Simon Zelotes Acts 1. 13. Simon Magus. Acts 8, 9. Simon Niger. Acts 13. 1. Simon of Cyrene; there were two cities of this name; one in Lybia. Acts 2. 10. the other in Assyria, called קיר Kir. 2 Kings 16. 9. Amos 9. 7. that is, as Hierom there interpreteth Cyrene. See Plin. l. 5. c. 5. Strabo. l. 17. Ammian. Marcellin. l. 22. hom. de Pastor. afeript. Augustino. Here Simon the Cyrenian; that is, Σίμωνα Κυρήνιον Suidas. Simon a man of Cyrene, father of Alexander and Rufus. Mark 15. 21. Christ first bare his crosse, but as they went between the Pretorie and Calvary, they met with this Simon coming out of the countrey. Mark 15. 21. and they compelled him to bear the crosse of Jesus. Hierom on Mat. 27. 32. Christ being wearied with watching, stripes, and so long attendance on the varieties of judges, was not able any further to bear such a weight, as being man subject to all infirmities, without sin, to suffer for mans redemption; therefore the next seeming-strong man they meet, they command him to carry it for him: so he first set up the trophe of his crosse, and then delivered it to the Martyrs to erect it, said Ambrof. in Luc. l. 10. this came to the lot of Simon father of Alexander and Rufus (which were either Christs disciples, or men well known of them; for of such he seemeth to speak.) Such was the unbridled liberty of the Roman souldiers, under whose command the Jewes then there; which their intestine feditions brought upon them by the quarrels of ambitious Aristobulus and Hircanus, calling in forreign forces to aid them: So that they who would, according to Gods ordinance maintain the sweet bond of mutual peace, nor obey their superiours, now suffered the grievous insolencies of strangers, ruling over them, in an arbitrary way: the like distention in the republikes of Greece and Rome, have found the like event: wee have smarted for the same fault, God grant we do not againe.

V. 27. and of women which bewayled him] A great multitude followed him: some to insult, some of those of whom the Pharisees spake, John 7. 49. among them many women, some who believed in him: and because they are usually more compassionate, them Christ admonisheth to weep for themselves, for the imminent destruction which would be most grievous to them.

V. 28. daughters of Jerusalem] Women of Jerusalem; it is an Hebraisme. Frequent in Scripture. See 2 Kings 19. 21. Isa. 37. 22. Lam. 2. 13. 15. Mich. 4. 8. &c.

weep not for me, but weep for your selves] He relateth in this prohibition, as to the supream cause of his present passion (Gods counsell and his complyance thereto) so also to the end thereof, Gods glory; his exaltation to Gods right hand, and mans salvation hereby accomplished: in his admonition he pointeth at the sad calamity in their siege by the sword, pestilence, and famine, so grievous, that mothers should eat their own dear children.

V. 29. The dayes are coming] In the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman. You now insulting over my afflictions, think your selves safe and well, because your governors have their will to destroy me, but alas a terrible revenge followeth, and is now at hand.

blessed are the barren] He further describeth the bitter sorrow of that tender sex in publick calamities, more afflicted with their helplesse childrens sufferings, than their own.

V. 30. then they shall begin, &c.] See Isaiah 2. 19. Hos. 10. 8. Rev. 6. 16. that is, then they shall too late say; in their fear and inevitable calamity.

fall on us] He expresseth the passion of men in extream agonies, wishing rather to dye speedily, than to live in the lingring misery of famine: or desiring rather any wayes to hide themselves, than to be exposed to publick ruine.

V. 31. For if they do these things, &c.] He compareth himself to a green tree, lesse combustible and apt to take fire? and the Jews to a dry tree: as if he said; if so severe be the fire of Gods judgement, and the rage of men permitted to execute the same on me, who have no sinne, and matter of punishment in my self, but onely as I stand in the place of sinners: what shall become of those vessels of wrath, (Rom. 9. 22.) the Jews who have in them such abundant matter of condemnation? in this the more, because they now crucifie their Saviour and Lord of life. See Isaiah 5. 24. and 33 11. & 47. 14. Obad. 1. 18. Mal. 4. 1. the sum of this proverbial manner of speaking is, if judgment be so heavy on me, in whom they can find no fault, what shall they suffer who are the smell of Gods wrath? 1 Pet. 4. 17.

V. 32. and there were also] Mat. 27. 38. Isaiah 53. 12.

two other malefeasours] Two other men which were malefactours; so that not only on the crosse, which Mark meeth, chap. 15. 28. but also in his leading out, was fulfilled that which Jesus foretold, chap. 22. 37. out of Isaiah 53. 12. and he was reckoned among the transgressours.

V. 33. is called Calvarie] Or the place of a skull, Mat. 27. 33 Mark 15. 22 John 19 17. See note there, and Druf. ad voc. N.T.

there they crucified him] It was then in use the most ignominious death. See Hebr. 2.

V. 34. Father forgive them] Acts 7. 60. Acts 3. 17. Being now in such intense torments, so purfued in death, with the implacable malice of his undeserved enemies, before he provided for his weeping Mother (John 19. 26, 27.) he prayeth for his enemies: there is no temporal thing of so great importance as saving of souls: Christ taught us to love our enemies, not onely by precept, Mat. 5. 44. but here, by his most admirable example thus began he on the Crosse, to shew himself not only a Redeemer by his bloodshed, but also a Mediatour by his intercession, the effect of this prayer appeared, Acts 2. 36. in Peters Sermon (addressed to them who had crucified the Lord of life) and the conversion of his auditors added to the Church that day. See also Acts 4. 4. Acts 6. 7. So that by the mercy of God, they who in their ignorance impiously shed the blood of Jesus, in the mystery, through faith, drank the same to their salvation.

V. 35. derided him] See on ch. 16. 14. This was an addition of sorrow to his passion, that all sorts of Jews despised him, insulting over him: all this was that our sin (who fell by Adams ambition) might thus be expiated, by the bitter ignominy of Christs passion.

the chosen of God] This is an epithete and title of the Messias. See Isaiah 42. 1.

V. 36. offering him vinegar] Mixed with Myrrhe and Gall. See on John 19. 29. herein was fulfilled that which was spoken. Psal. 69. 21.

V. 37. if thou be the king of the Jewes] That is, the Messias whom the Jewes expected to deliver them: this also they insultingly speak, implyedly charging him with vain ambition and usurpation of regality, and name of a King; being (as they thought) not able to deliver himself from the power of the Romans,

V. 38. a superscription] See on Mat. 27. 37. a title, or cause of his death, Augustine epist. 8, So Mark 15. 26. and Mat. 27. 37. to make the spectatours believe that he was therefore condemned and crucified, because he affected the kingdom of Israel. Pilate finding no fault in him, set down this in place of an accusation, which yet the Jewes (suspecting it, might reflect on their reputation) quarrelled at, John 19. 21.

Greek, and Latine, and Hebrew] That the thing which concerned all Nations, might thereby be divulged to all. To the East by the Hebrew, to the South by the Greek, to the West by the Latine: This was necessary in regard of the present confluence of people to the feast at Jerusalem, from all Nations, John 12. 20. There were the professed foes of all Nations, and Jewes of the dispersion among the Gentiles, who (though born of Jewish parents) yet spake the tongue of that people among whom they had been born and bred. See Acts 2. 8.

V. 39. were hanged] Being nailed to the Crosse, as the Roman manner of execution then was.

V. 40. doest not thou fear God] Doth not the punishment thou sufferest, cause thee to fear God, whose hand hath thus overtaken thee? It is a desperate condition in the bitter effects of sin, not to be sensible of the cause thereof. However the prosperous securely and inconsiderately contemn the judgements of God, yet doest not thou now under the heavy burden thereof, fear an intolerable accession thereto, whom neither present tormens, nor bitter death, under whose arests thou art, any thing astonish? It was a great addition to Asa's sin, that in his disease he fought not unto the Lord. 2 Chron. 16. 12.

V. 41. but this man hath done nothing amisse] Greg. hom. 22. in Evang. he suffered without sinne, that which we suffer for, and with sin.

V. 42. Lord remember me] When thou comest into thy glory, receive me to mercy as one of thine. Remember not my sin (so Psal. 25. 7.) but accomplish thy mercy which thou hast now begun to shew me in my conversion. Remember me when thou comest into that place of blessednesse which thou hast purchased, unto which thou art going from the Crosse, that I may follow thee into that blessednesse: here was a rare and excellent faith apprehending the merit of Christ for his salvation: he beleeveth him to be the Saviour, whom men condemned as a malefactour, whom the tormenters crucified, the impious Jewes derided, now dying, to mens sense, forsaken of God; in this doleful state and posture he believed him to be the holy Son of God, able to save in death; the disciples forsook him, Peter forswear all acquaintance with him; but this poor convert acknowledged him dying to be the Lord of life: true faith hath peircing eyes, seeing the glory and kingdom of Christ through the dark ignominy of the Crosse,

V. 43. to

V 43. To day thou shalt be with me, &c.] This day thou shalt be with me in Heaven. See 2 Cor. 12. 2, 4. Rev, 2. 7. By the Garden of Paradise where Adam was placed in his state of innocency; is signified here (as elsewhere) the state of eternal blessednesse.

V. 44. about the sixth hour] See on Mat. 27. 45. Mark 15. 33, about noon. His passion began about nine of the clock in the morning, which was their hour of prayer, and the ordinary hour of the morning Sacrifice dayly offered; and ended at the ninth hour, that is about three of the clock in the afternoon: at the time of the evening Sacrifice, Mark 15. 25, 33. and this was the time for the Passeover. By this time of the day God foreshewed the sufferings of Christ in times evening (the last dayes. Hebr. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 19, 20.) about the same time of the day when the Paschal Lamb usually died. See Exod. 12. 6. בין הערבים between the two evenings, that is as the 70. give it πρὸς ἑσπέραν, towards the evening, in the afternoon, before Sun-setting. All the forenoon was counted morning, and all the afternoon evening: so their later evening began at Sun-setting. Iosh. 10. 26, 27,

V. 45. the vail of the temple was rent] Syr. the face of the port of the temple. Gr. καταπέτασμα τοῦ ναοῦ, the hanging, which divided (as some think) the Holy of Holies, from the holy place: as others, with Jerome, the holy place into which the Priests went to officiate, from the outward Court: it is uncertain which was rent now. See Is. Casaubon exerc. 16. N. 127. Ioh. Drus. præt. l. 1. in Mat. 27. 51. In this relation Luke prepossesseth that part of the story, which should hath fallen with Christs giving up the ghost, Mat. 27. 50. omitting some things which the other Evangelists recite. See Aug. de cons. Evang. l. 3. c. 19.

V. 46. into thy hands I commend, &c.] Psal. 31. 5. now holy Father, that I have performed thy will in all things for the redemtion of thine elect, it remaineth onely that I commend my soul to thy blessed keeping, and so dye, the Hebrew word אפקיד in the Psalm signifieth (as doth also the Greek παραθήσομαι, by the 70. and so here used) so to commend as a thing safely deposited. 1 Pet 4. 19 Luke 12. 48. 2 Tim. 2. 2. to teach us confidence in our deaths, when we commend our soules into the merciful hands of God, we but deposit them in the hand custody of a faithful sequestration, who will in the time appointed faithfully restore them again, and we shall rise to life eternal.

he gave up the ghost] Mat. 27. 50. He died, It appeareth that this his bitter passion on the Cross lasted full six houres. For Mark 15. 25. it is expressely said----it was the third hour, and they crucified him (the third according to the Jewish account; who began their day at Sun-rising (our six of the clock) so their third hour answered to our nine in the morning, the usual time of their morning sacrifice, at which hour Christ (thereby prefigurod) began to be crucified, and Mark 15. 34, 37. it appeareth that about the ninth hour he died, that answered to our three of the clock in the afternoon when the evening sacrifice was killed: so that six houres (to wit from nine in the morning to three in the after-noon) he was on the crosse in torment.

V. 47. when the centurion Mat. 27. 54 the Roman Captain, who commanded the souldiers who crucified Christ.

he glorified God] Convinced in cnnscience by that he saw, he confessed the truth. See Mat 27. 54. See John 7. 17. confessing the truth in such case is to glorifie God, V. 48. smote their breasts] Chap. 18. 13. As being touch't at heart for that which they and the rest had done, in giving their voyces to crucifie Christ.

stood afar off) For fear of the Jewish fury, they durst not appear near him: So was that fulfilled in him, which was written, Psal. 88. 18.

V. 50. a man named Ioseph] Mat. 37. 57. of Arimathea, to distinguish him from others named Ioseph, Acts 1. 13. Mat. 1. 18. &c. Some think Arimathea, the same which is called Ramah in mount Ephraim, where Samuel dwelt, about 20. miles distant from Ierusalem, 1 Sam. 1. 1. &c. Ierom. de loc. Hebraic calleth it Armatha Sophim, Unde fuit Ioseph qui in Evangeliis, ab Arimathi esse scribitur; whence Ioseph was, who in the Gospels is called Ioseph of Arimathea. Matthew calleth him a rich man, and Mark 15. 43. an honourable Counsellour. This Evangelist, to Counsellour; addeth the best Epithets, good and just. All to shew how he had the easier access to Pilate, and the more ready favour to take down the body of Jesus; which probably a poor obscure man could not have obtained; he was a Disciple of Christ, John 19. 38.

V. 51. waited for the kingdom of God] He looked for the Redeemer, the Messias, and his kingdom.

V. 52. begged the body, &c.] Mat. 27. 58. See Mark 15. 43.

V 53. never man before was layed] Thus Gods providence disposed it; lest, had he been buried in some old Sepulchre, the unbelieving Jewes should have said after his resurrection, that it was some other risen from the dead, and not Christ. Ier. in Mat. 27, Or that he was raised again by the vertue of some other there interred, as 2 Kings 13. 21.

V. 54. that day was the preparation, &c.] Wherein they prepared all necessaries for the feast, which on the Sabbath they might not do, of which it is here said σάββατον ἐπέφωσκε, that is, did then begin, or drew on; about Sun-set, for they began the day at even, the word ἐπιφώσκω properly signifieth illucesco, to dawn or wax light, as at break of the day, Mat. 28. 1. but here the word is catachrestically put for incipiebat, begun; for their Sabbath began with darknes.

V. 55. and beheld the sepulchre] Mat. 27. 61.

V. 56. according to the commandement] Which forbad them to do any servile work on the Sabbath dayes.

Verse 1. UPon the first day of the week] Mat. 28. 1. Mark 16. 1. John 20. 1. which was the first day after the first Sabbath of the feast, which is the Lords day; 1 Cor. 16. 2. Rev 1. 10.

very early in the morning] Mat. 28. 1. Gr. the deep of the morning, Mark 16, 2. saith λίαν πρωῒ, very early, while the Sun was rising, though not very near the horizon (for John 20. 1. it was yet dark) but rising toward it, as in the dawing and day-break; probably it was dark when they began to set out, and much more light before they came to the Sepulchre.

they came to the sepulchre] That is, the women which came with Christ from Galilee, chap. 23. 55. Mary Magdalen, Ioanna, and the other Mary (verse 10. and chap. 8. 2. Mat. 28.) that is Mary the mother of Iames and Ioses, also the mother of Zebedees children, with many other women, Mat. 27. 55, 56.

V. 2. stone rolled away] See Mat. 27. 60, 66. concerning which it seemeth Mark 16. 3. they were very solicitous, for it was very great, and so the rowling it away was beyond their strength.

V. 3. entred in] Into the Sepulchre, which was hewed out of a rock, like some vault or arched room, or they entered within the enclosement of the sepulchre, and stooping down looked into it. John 20. 5, remember how he spake unto you] Christ had foretold them of his death and resurrection, Mat. 17. 22. Mark 9. 31. John 9. 22. And these women were among the Disciples, but understood not, or forgat what they had heard concerning these things; now the Angels mind them hereof, that considering that nothing had befalne Christ but that which his self had foretold them, they might beleeve that he was risen from the dead.

V. 11. seemed to them as idle talke] Gr. ἐνώπιον αὐτῶν, coram, in conspectu eorum, as Luke 1, 6. So the Syriack בעיניהון in oculis eorum----before them: it is an Hebrew phrase importing, to them, or their understanding: that is to the Apostles, and others which heard these things ὡσεὶ λῆρος, nugæ, ineptiæ, vain rumours, or womens tales: Theophylact interpreteth ληρεῖν, to dote; Syr. שׁניותא, shoniotho, delirameta: of the Hebr. שנה shana, the Syr. שנא, mutatus fuit mente, insanivit, See 1 Sam. 21. 13. Prov. 24. 21.) so John 10. 20. for which the Gr. have μαίνεται----he is mad: the Syr. readeth ומשנא שנא umeshno sheno, & insaniendo insanit, he is altogether mad. Thus seemed the womans relation to the Apostles, velut ægri insomnia, as feverish dreams: supposing them either deluded by some apparition, or some fantacies begotten of their own fears: note here, how slowly the seeds of faith take in the thoughts of flesh and blood: we easily beleeve fables, but hardly truth, however taught or testified.

V. 12. then arose Peter] John 20. 6. Though Peter had, out of much infirmity denied Christ, yet he returned to his old love and zeal to him again: such is their condition who sin not of malice, but infirmity: John ran with Peter to the sepulchre, John 20. 3, 4. where they diligently examine all circumstances, they ran with fervent desire of satisfying themselves concerning the report, but with unequall strength: John out-ran Peter, but Peter first entred the sepulchre.

V. 13. and behold two of them went] Mark 16. 12. Two Disciples, one is mentioned ver. 9. not among the eleven, but as comprehended under those words of the same text, τοῖς λοιποῖς ----to the rest, of the disciples (for the eleven, are before expressely mentioned) and named Cleopas. v. 18. whose wife stood by the Cros, Joh. 19. 25. Paul* The Evangelist seemeth not to recite it for any excellency of the place, but for the certainty of the History.

about threescore furlongs] About seven miles and an half.

V. 14. talked together] As it commonly cometh to passe when some extraordinary accident amaseth men.

which had happened] Concerning Christ, his death and resurrection reported by the women, and possibly many other things concerning the same, which had so filled their hearts with sorrow, and possessed their minds with a fluctuant desire of knowing what these things would at last come to, that they could hardly intend to think or speak of any thing else: probably they lamented the Jews unworthy usage of him whom they loved and honoured, as principally their losse of a Master so incomparably excellent.

V. 15. while they communed] Filled with grief they ease their mindes, by talking of their yet supposed dead Master: nor could the barbarous ingratitude of the Jews towards Christ, and his sufferings; neither the admirable works which they had seen him do, easily fall out of their mindes: now therefore he evidently fulfilleth that promise, Mat. 18. 20. then in a bodily presence, which he now doth by a spiritual; like a Traveller by the way he joyneth with them in company.

V. 16. but their eyes were holden] So hindred by the power and providence of God, that they could not know him. See John 20. 14. and 21. 4. in which sense the Syriac saith, their eyes were shut: So Mary Magdalen saw him in the Garden but knew him not. So were these mens eyes held, not, that they saw no form, but that they mistook the true. For though Christ had now a glorified body, freed from all human necessities; yet was and is it a true body; which he really shewed to the witnesses thereto appointed: his state of glory gave immortality, it took not away nature.

V. 17. and are so sad] σκυθρωποί, sower countenanced, as Mat. 6. 16. So men use to look in sorrow.

V. 18. named Cleophas] See on verse 13. This seemeth to be none of the Apostles: for verse 33. these men came the same hour to Jerusalem and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them: neither could the other here mentioned, be Luke, as may appear, if we consider the preface of the Acts of the Apostles.

art thou onely a stranger] The things they talked of were so publick, that it seemed strange to them, that any man near Jerusalem could be ignorant thereof.

V. 19. mighty in word and deed] Powerful in divine Doctrine and miracles. See Acts 7. 22.

before God] Approved for such of God, and the consciences of all good men. See Luke 2. 52.

V. 20. chief priests and rulers] For they did that evil, who set on others to do it; the people cryed crucifie him, but per Sacerdotum persuasionem. Bernard. de duob. discip. &c. by the perswasion of the Priests: So true is that of Gregory Nazianzen orat. 1. οὐδὲν οὕτω ῥᾴδιον, ὡς τὸ γενέσθαι κακόν: there is nothing so easie as to be made wicked, though no body lead or teach us.

V. 21. but we trusted] We hoped: they yet understood not what was the deliverance which Christ purchased for the elect, but looked for some worldly kingdom, and therein deliverance from the power of the Romans.

V. 22. women of our company] Of Christs disciples. See v. 1.

made us astonished] This setteth out their slownesse to beleeve: so far were they from any compact in the matter of the Gospel which they preached to the World; that after many instructions by Christ concerning his rising again the third day, and the event it self demonstrating the truth thereof, their selves were very hardly brought to beleeve it.

V. 23. found not his body, &c.] See verse 3, 4.

V. 24. certain of them which] Peter and John, this was sufficient confirmation of the Womens testimony, so that their unbelief was strange, considering that they had the Word of Christ to forewarn them, the Womens, the two Disciples, and the Angels testimony to assure them of the same: no wonder that Christ reproved their incredulity and hardnesse of heart, Mark 16. 14.

V. 25. O fools and slow of heart] ὦ ἀνόητοι: Syriac, O mindlesse men: it is indeed the greatest foolishnesse, rather to beleeve our own reason than Gods Oracles. Christ hitherto spake to them in the person of a stranger; that seeming to speak in another mans cause, he might the better perswade them; and that they being not onely Israelites, but also Christs Disciples, might be ashamed of their unbelief; in that a seeming stranger not onely beleeved, but was able to convince their unbelief, by evident testimonies of the Prophets.

V. 26. ought not Christ] See 1 Pet. 1. 11. Christ, knowing their thoughts, cureth their unbelief, by that which they took for a ground thereof: they thought he could not rise again, neither be the Messias promised by the Prophets, who suffered an ignominious death, by their hands whom (if he were the Messias) he came to save. Christ will therefore shew them out of the Prophets, that Christ the true Messias, promised by the Prophets, ought to suffer those very things, which also were foretold by the Prophets: and that they ought not to look so much on the Jews malice and injustice, as on Gods decree, who had so appointed it for mans redemption, and foretold it for our confirmation. This (ought not) relateth to the predictions concerning it: as if he had said; Did not the Prophets foretel it? must not their words be true? See on Matth 26. 54.

and to enter into his glory] This he saith to comfort their drooping mindes, who said, verse 21. we trusted that it had been he.

V. 27. and beginning at Moses] He began to interpret that which was written of Christ by Moses; and that which the law prefigured concerning him: as also the writings of the succeeding Prophets. See verse 44.

V. 28. nigh unto the village] That is, unto Emaus.

he made as though] He seemed to them prepared and resolved to go: Gre. προσεποιεῖτο; præ se ferebat; either going on foreward, or by some gesture of taking leave of them: this did Jesus, not to deceive, but to give them an occasion of inviting him to stay with them, that he might opportunly manifest himself unto them.

V. 29. they constrained him] They over-intreated him by their importunity, they compelled him by entreaty, not by violence; for they urged that it was neer night: probably, as Jerom saith, Cleophas entertained him at his own house, whom he found so expert in the Prophets; his heart burning in him with musing who this should be, who so admirably discoursed of these things.

V. 30. and blessed it] According to the custom of the Jewes, among whom the Master of the family, or chief man of the company, gave thanks, or prayed; and then distributed the bread, or carved to all the company. See Matth. 14. 19. It is probable that Christ used some accustomed form of thankfulnesse, or else some other action or gesture, by which these men knew him again, verse 35.

V. 31. vanished out of their sight] Or ceased to be seen of them; by a miraculous and unusual manner they lost sight of him.

V. 32. did not our hearts burn] Were we not inwardly moved, as by a divine fervour of Gods Spirit? it intimateth a soveraign power and authority in the words of Christ. See Mat. 7. 29. John 7. 47. Psal. 45. 2. Psal. 39. 4. This sheweth that they were terrified and thoughtful, as v. 37, 38. in which the sudden recourse of the vital spirits to their fountain the heart, use (as it were by thronging it) to make it hot and throbbing with extraordinary pulses.

V. 33. and they rose up the same hour] Considering the sorrow into which the Disciples were now plunged, they thought long to comfort them, by assuring them that Christ was risen from the dead: therefore leaving their own present affairs and rest, they intend that which was far more necessary: such was their joy, and desire to communicate the same to others: All private interest must give place to Gods honour, and the comfort and salvation of souls Nor may we therein defer that until to morrow which can be done to day.

V. 34. saying, the Lord is risen indeed] It must needs be late at night, when these two came back after supper from Emaus to Jerusalem to the disciples; yet they found them together conferring about the passion and resurrection of Christ: and they who came to bring comfort to them, found it of them: thus God rewarded their mutual care to confirm each other: they tel how Christ was risen and appeared to Cephas: see 1 Cor. 15. 4 that which we read, Mark 16. 13. neither believed they then, is to be understood distributively; as if he said, some (as Thomas, John 20. 25.) beleeved not yet: but some of them beleeved.

V. 35. what things were done in the way] Though yet they were not fully setled, yet they conferred testimonies; so confirming each other: faith hath its infancy and growth.

V. 36. as they thus spake] Mark 16. 14. John 20 19.

peace be unto you] It was an usual manner of salutation with them: as we use to say, God save you as Chap. 10. 5.

V. 37. but they were terrified] Though they now confidently beleeved his resurrection, yet the suddennesse of his appearing startled them: possibly they might think it rather presented unto them in a vision; than that Jesus himself, lately crucified, was now standing alive by them: so hard is it to beleeve divine and certain truths; so timerous is unbelief (See Levit 26. 36) Faith giveth courage or confidence in greatest dangers (Psalm 23. 4. Psalm 46. 3.) but unbelief causeth fear, where no fear is. See Mat. 14. 25.

V. 38. why do thoughts arise?] That is, perplexities, and doubts concerning some delusion.

V. 39. handle me, &c.] See John 20. 20 he admitteth the testimony of their own senses to assure them it was no vision, or spirit; but a true and real body risen from the dead which they now saw: what ever is essential to a true body glorified, is yet in Christs body: Fulgentius de fide orthod ad Donat. saith well; If any shall so preach the truth of the Deity in Christ, ut ejus veram carnem negare contendat, non est Christianus catholicus, sed Hæreticus, tical, &c. as that he should strive to deny the truth of his flesh, or that his flesh is true flesh, he is not a Catholick Christian, but an Heretical Manichee: and Augustine ep. 146. Consentio; ego proinde Domini corpus ita in cælo esse credo, ut erat in terra quando ascendit in cælum, &c. I therefore believe that the body of our Lord is in heaven, so as it was on earth, when he ascended into heaven: for he said to his disciples, See my hands and my feet, handle me and see, &c. and again a little after he saith, therefore that flesh was then a spiritual body, yet was it not a spirit, but a body: See 1 Cor. 15. 44. if a true body obvious to sense, then circumscribed (it could not else be seen and felt) and so not carnally in the Sacrament under the species of bread and wine.

V. 40. he shewed them his hands and his feet] With the prints of the nails wherewith he was fastned to the crosse. See John 20. 27. he that with a touch healed Malchus ear, could as easily have healed and taken away both wounds and skars; but he who rose again for us, would for our sakes yet bear these remains of the crosse for a time: that he might assure us, that it was he, who was indeed the first fruits of the dead: we may not think he retaineth these still; if while yet he bare mortal flesh and blood, his face shined like the sun in his brightenesse, and his clothes were white as the light; what is he now in his Divine glory? as he would eat before his disciples (who had no need of meat) to testifie his resurrection; so would he yet bear these skars: by all this, the Spirit working thereon, he fitted them with great power to testifie unto the world the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, Acts 4. 33.

V. 41. have ye any meat?] See John 21. 5. To which place of the History, these words here recorded by St. Luke (who for brevity take omitted many things, which happened between this appearing of Christ, and that at the sea of Tiberias, Joh. 21. &c.) appertain.

V. 42. a piece of a broiled fish] John 21. 9, 13.

V. 43. and did eat before them] Not that he was now subject to human necessities, but onely for the greater confirmation of his disciples faith.

V. 44. these are the words] As if he had said, this is that which I told you concerning my death, burial, resurrection, &c. and what ever else was foretold of me: therefore this should not seem any strange or new thing unto you.

V. 45. Then opened he their understanding] As Acts 16. 14. by his holy Spirit giving them understanding: the word of God shineth as a true light, yet as the cloudy pillar was darkenesse to the Egyptians; so is this to carnal and corrupted mindes: It is spiritually discerned, 1 Cor. 2. until the Holy Ghost open the understanding, it cannot apprehend: so much need is there of the Apostles rule, Let him become a fool, that he may be wise, 1 Cor. 3. 18. there is no worse cloud to obscure the light of the Spirit, than confidence in our own wisdom. See 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4. Psal. 119. 18. 1 Cor. 3. 7.

V. 46. thus it is written] Isa. 53. 7. Ps. 22. 16. Ps. 16 10. Jonah 2. 10. Hos. 6. 2. It seemeth he cited these, or some of these, and the like places of Scripture, concerning Christs sufferings; as for example — he is brought as a lambe to the slaughter, &c. they pierced my hands and my feet, &c. by which he evidently proved, that in all his passion nothing befel him, but that which the Spirit of God had foretold by the Prophets should come to passe: which much taketh off from the scandal of the crosse, when it appeareth that all came to passe by the determinate counsel of God; and serveth to the confirmation and certain evidence of the truth of Christ, seeing that all that the law prefigured in the Messias, and whatsoever any prophesie foretold concerning him, were truly and really fulfilled in Jesus Christ, the son of the Virgin Mary.

thus it behooved] That is, necessitate consequentia, because Gods counsel had so appointed to accomplish mans redemption, by the death and resurrection of Christ.

V. 47. should be preached in his name] By his commission and authority; as concerning preaching of the word: and by his grace and holy Spirit, as concerning the effect thereof in remission of sins. He began to preach repentance and remission of sins, Mat. 4. 17. and after his resurrection commissionated his Apostles and successours in the Ministery to do the same. See 2 Cor. 5. 20. Acts 2. 38.

among all nations] Psalm 22. 27. Psalm 2. 8 Isaiah 49. 6. Michah. 4. 2. Isaiah 60. 1. See Chap. 2. 32. So he gave them commission to do, Mat. 28. 19. Mark 16. 15.

V. 48. ye are witnesses] Ye have been witnesses of that which hitherto passed: and you shall be my witnesses hereof unto all nations (Acts 1. 8.) concerning my doctrine, miracles, death, resurrection, and ascension into Heaven.

V. 49. the promise of my Father] He saith ἀποστέλλω, I do send, for, I will send, as the Syriac giveth it; because he would shortly send: he calleth it the promise, of his Father, because God promised it by him: the promise, that is, the gifts and graces of the holy Ghost promised them. See John 14. 6. and 15. 26. Isa. 44. 3. Ezek. 36. 26. Joel 2. 28.

but tarry ye] You who are now fearful, stay at Jerusalem expecting the fulfilling of this promise to confirm and assure you: thus will he have them stay, till they are compleatly armed.

endued with power] Until ye be furnished with the gifts of tongues and healing; as also with enlarged hearts, enabling you to perform the great work to which I have assigned you: and also the spirit of divine and undoubted fortitude.

V. 50. and he led them out as far as, &c.] Understand this leading out to be on the fortieth day after his resurrection; for so long he was seen of them. Bethany was near Jerusalem, on the Mount of Olives, Mark 11. 1. Acts 1. 12. Christ being to ascend into heaven, leadeth his disciples hither, out of Jerusalem, lest being seen, there might arise new troubles: and because he reserved the knowledge thereof to certain witnesses thereto fore-ordained.

and blessed them] Like a father before his departure, praying for his children, and blessing them. See Gen. 27. 4. and 48 9. and 49. 1, 2. That he lift up his hands was a fit gesture for prayer. See Exodus 17. 11. and 19. 11. as it were expressing whence they expected the blessing, 1 Tim. 2. 8. which seemeth a very dictate of nature, teaching men that heaven is the Throne of God; πρὸς ὃν ἀναπτύσσεται ἡ ψυχὴ, and that he dwelleth in the highest habitations; so also another, duplices tendens ad sydera palmas.

V. 51. and it came to passe] Mark 16. 19. Acts 1. 9. We may not here with some, understand that this came to passe suddenly, before he had finished the blessing: this ἐν τῷ εὐλογεῖν is used also for postquam, &c. after that; as Luke 14. 1. ἐν τῷ ἐλθεῖν is put for μετὰ τὸ ἐλθεῖν --- after he came; So Mark 16. 19. interpreteth this, ἐν, by μετὰ τὸ λελαλῆσαι αὐτοῖς --- after the Lord had spoken unto them: the Syriac here giveth, ἐν τῷ εὐλογεῖν, by רבך cum benediceret, that is, postquam benedixerat; for such is the value of that particle with an infinitive, importat significationem temporis præteriti. Shindl. Pent.

V. 52. and they worshipped him] They fixed their eyes upon him, as far as they could see him, until the cloud took him out of their sight, and the Angels admonished them to look no longer after him with bodily eyes, Acts 1. 9. &c. which when they understood, they adored him in spirit, and confession of him their Lord and Saviour, to whom all power in heaven and earth is given.

V. 53. were continually] That is daily; for otherwise we cannot understand that, Acts 1. 13, 14. concerning their abode in an upper room. then, that they daily met there, and had constant and frequent assemblies there: So here we must understand this, διὰ παντὸς Jos. continually, that is frequently, or daily.

Amen] This word importeth the consummation and certainty of all that which the Evangelist hath written. See on Mat. 28, 20. Mark 16. 20. and on John 3. 11.

On the Gospel according to

S. JOHN.

The Argument.

THe holy Penmen appointed by God to write the Gospel of Jesus Christ, were some Apostles, as Matthew and John; and some Apostolical men their Disciples, as Mark and Luke.

John was one of those whom Christ named Boanerges, Sons of Thunder; James his brother, and son of Zebedeus (Mark 3. 17.) His calling is recorded, Matth. 4. 21. He was the beloved Disciple, usually present at Christs chief miracles; as, on Tabor (Matth. 17. 1.) in raising Iairus daughter from the dead (Mark 5. 37.) and so in his Passion in the Garden, and under the Crosse while he suffered, where Christ commended his mother to his care. He lived longest of the Apostles. In Domitians time, he was banished into the Isle Pathmos, where he wrote the Revelation: After which, under Nerva, he was recalled to Ephesus, (being aged about 97. years, which was the one hundreth year of our Lord) where he wrote this Gospel, some say, at the entreaty of the Christians of Asia, for the Refutation of Ebion, Cerinthus, and others, who blasphemously denied the Deity of Christ: Having therefore read the other three Evangelists, recording principally those things which concerned the Humanity and Miracles of Christ; that which they omitted concerning his Deity and Doctrine, this high-flying Eagle discovereth; his main end being to shew, that Christ is indeed the very Son of God, God manifested in the Flesh, coequal, coeternal, consubstantial with the Father; and that we believing in him: may have eternal life, John 20. 31. which he layeth down by three main Arguments: First, from the effects; as before his Incarnation, in the Creation of the World; after his Incarnation by his Miracles. Secondly, from the testimony of men (Moses, the Prophets; John Baptist, and the Apostles) and of God the Father and the Holy Ghost, evidently declaring him such. Thirdly, from his Doctrine peculiar to the Messias, speaking with power, as he that had the word of eternal life; not as the Scribes and Pharises, as Matthew noted, Matth. 7.

First therefore, he sheweth that Christ is very God, as very man: as also, how he was manifested, what Disciples he first had, and what beginning of miracles, unto his first ascension to Ierusalem, Chap. 1. 2.

Secondly, how, about the first Passeover there mentioned, he entred on his publick Ministery, casting the buyers and sellers out of the Temple; instructed Nicodemus concerning Regeneration; returned into Galilee; discoursed with the Samaritan at Iacobs Well, about true worship.

Thirdly, How at the Feast he went again to Ierusalem, and healed the Lame man at Bethesda, Chap. 5.

Fourthly, How at another Passeover he fed 5000. Walked on the sea, and taught concerning the Bread of Life, at which many were offended, Chap. 6.

Fifthly, How, he went up to the Feast of Tabernacles, and taught in the Temple, Chap. 7. He, dismissed the Adultresse, by touching the Conscience of her accusers, Chap. 8. Healeth the blinde, Chap. 9. Discoursed of the good Shepherd, Chap. 10. Raised Lazarus, Chap. 11. Returned into the city with great Acclamations of the people, Chap. 12. Washes his Disciples feet: Admonished concerning Iudas treason, And Peters denyal, Chap. 13. Taught and comforted his Disciples, Chap. 14. 15, 16. Prayed to his Father, Chap. 17. Suffered, Chap. 18. and 19.

Lastly, How he rose again from the dead, and appeared to many, Chap. 20, 21.

CHAP. I.

IN the beginning] 1 John 1. 1. ἐν ἀρχῇ, that is, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς from before the beginning of any creature: quod in principio erat, nunquam non erat, Fulgentius ad Thrasimund. that which was in the beginning was ever. So Christostom hom. 1. faith in the beginning was, is nothing else, but ἦν ἀεί, &c. ever to be, from eternity, in the beginning, not temporal, determinate, or to be measured by time; but indeterminate, eternal, and before all time, Colos. 1. 17. ὃ ἀρχὴ ἐν ἀρχῇ ὢν ὁ λόγος, Greg. Nazianzen. orat. 35. the word was the beginning, in the beginning: the meaning is, the Word, that is the Son of God, had not beginning with the creatures, but was before their beginning from eternity was] Not made when the creatures were, but before any of them were, he was. This ἦν is, as much as ὑφέστατο. he was in being. Being is most proper to God; who is יהוה; that name is of היה Haia. fuit, extitit: it signifieth God, qui fuit, est, & erit. See Avenar. in יהוה. The Greeks expresse it by ὁ ὤν who is, or truly subsisteth: by whom all things were made, in whom they have their being. See Revelations 1. 4. See V. Shindler. Pentaglot. in יהוה. See Exodus 3. 14. The 70 there have, ὁ ὤν, the being or existence, as Suidas giveth it. Θεὸς γὰρ ὤν, it is properly spoken ἀπὸ τοῦ εἶναι, of God, and is as much as ἀΐδιον --- eternal: for he is his own eternal being; so is none of the creatures, they have being of and in him, Acts 17. 28. and had beginning in time from him.

the word] The promised Messias of whom God spake before to all the Fathers (it is usual with the Hebrews to put דבר dabar: for, a word, or work, and thing, as Gen. 24. 50 where the 70. have τὸ πρόσταγμα, see Deut. 19. 3. 1 Kings 6. 19. and 12 24. Psal. 18. 2. &c.) and he is the same who is the onely Interpreter of the Father, verse 18. by whom God revealed his will to the Prophets, Hebr. 1. 1. See Jer. Pa. Isn. ep. 2. l. 2. this is, verbum subsistantiale, non prolativum. As Fulgent. ad Thrasymun. l. 1. expresseth a substantial or subsisting word, &c.

was with God] Coeternal, consubstantial, coequal with the Father, Aequalis veræ divinitatis, equal in his true Divinity, Iesse in his true Humanity. Fulgent. de fide ortho. ad Donat. See Prov. 8. 22. 1 Cor. 1. 24.

and the word was God] Christ is eternal God, Deus Patri, ἀμέσιος, and ὁμοούσιος, consubstantial and coeternal with the Father. See the Nicen Creed. Athanas. Tom. 1. ad Jovian. ep. de fide. Christ the Son of God did not then begin to be, when he was manifested in the flesh; but was God from all eternity, made flesh in the last times. Primam quippe nativitatem filii, nullatenus præcessit æternitas patris: cujus tamen secunda nativitati præcessit temporalis nativitas matris: For the eternity of the Father did not at all precede the first nativity of the Son; whose second nativity yet the temporal nativity of his Mother preceded. Fulgentius qui supr. de fi. ortho. ad Donat.

V. 2. the same was, &c.] Genesis 1. 1. God of the same substance with the Father, God of Gods; not by multiplication of the Essence, but by unity of the Deity: For as Greg. Nazianzen saith, Orat. 37 The Father was that true light, &c. and the Holy Ghost was that true light, οὔτε, οὔτε, οὐκ ἄλλο, ἀλλ' ἓν φῶς, ἓν ἔξ ἑνός, ἓν ἐξ ἑνὸς, ἓν Θεός. Here is a was, and was, and was, and yet but one was, or being; light, and light, and light, yet but one light, one God. So that the Word was in the beginning with God, ὡς μὲν φησὶς πῶς πανὸν πατρὸς, as Athanas. Tom. 1. ad Serap. expresseth it, as the stream to (or in respect of) the Fountain.

V. 3. all things were made by him] See Col. 1. 16. Hebr. 1. 2, 3. This declareth the Deity of Christ for none can create, but God only. So is he equal with the Father because all things were made by him; and Iesse than the Father (in respect of his Humanity) in that he was made of a woman, &c. Gal. 4. 4. all things subsisting were made by him: yet no sin was made by him, because that is no substance or nature; but the corruption of nature, as Prosper theweth, Epigr. See Genesis 1. and 2. He only is the true God: false gods made not Heaven and Earth, Jer. 10. 11. The creatures can make something of a preexistent matter; but to create, which is to make something of nothing, οὐκ ἐξ ὄντ. 2 Macab. 7. 28. or rather as the 70. read it, ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων, of that which had no being before, this is peculiar to God; this neither Men nor Angels can do: Hence there is proved the Deity of Christ.

V. 4. in him] In Christ the eternal Word; before he created the World: or ἐν is put for διὰ; so it thews the cause of the creatures life effectricem, and conservatricem; effecting and preserving. Heb. 1. 2, 3. Acts 17. 25, 28.

was the light of men] The fountain of reason and understanding to Men made to Gods own Image: he speaks not here of Angels, but of Men; nor of the Jews onely, but of all sorts of Men, as Chrysostom notes.

V. 5. and the light] Christ, who illuminateth by the Holy Ghost, ὁ χορηγὸς ὧν τοῖς ἐν αὐτῷ σωτήρων, Athanas. ad Serap. it is Christ who enlighteneth in (or by) him. And as the Sun is not lessened, or made more dim, by giving his light to multitudes; so neither is Christ after he created the World, and theie numberlesse creatures, ἀνενδεὴς, μᾶλλον μᾶλλον ἐπαυξόμενος, ὡς ἂν τῆς δημιουργίας τῷ σοφῷ, Chrysost. hom. 4. in Joh. 1. He remaineth indefficient, perfect, neither diminished, nor languid by that great work.

shineth in darknesse] In mans mind (after the fall, full of darknesse, Rom. 1. 21. Such is carnal wisdom, Rom. 8. 7. and in the world, as that is a clear speculum of Gods wisdom, Rom 1. 20.

comprehended it not] Understood it not, 1 Cor. 2. 14. neither acknowledged Christ, as v. 10. to know things appertaining to the kingdom of Heaven, non dat natura, sed gratia, nature giveth not, but grace. saith Fulgentius ad Thrasim. ep. 6. See 1 Cor. 2. 14.

V. 6 there was a man] Mat. 3. 1. Luke 1. 57, 80. and 3. 2. One truly man, though so excellent, as that Christ testified. Mat. 11. 11. among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist. Christ so being man, that, Interior in eo Deus. Aug. there was sent before him, a great man, by whose testimony he might be known to be more than man, concerning whom he testified.

sent from God] Therefore (Mal. 3. 1) he is called מלאך malach, 70. ἄγγελον μου, my Angel, which signifies, a Messenger or Ambassadour of Christ (Mark 1. 2. 3.) to prepare his way, by manifesting him to Israel. See Luke 3. 2. God assigned him to his Office, and sanctified him thereto from the womb. Luke 1. 15. and by his word which came to him in the Wilderneste, Luke 3. 2.

whose name was John] Luke 1. 13. 60. 63. Syriac יוחנן Yohannan; which name (saith Theophylact) is interpreted Θεοῦ χαρισμα, the grace of God; Hebr. יוחנן or יהן Jochanan or Jolthanan (See V. Shindl. pent. in יחן) Gr. Ἰωάννης, thence our name John.

V. 7. witnesse of the light] Christ the light; witnessing, and declaring preaching, and testifying to Israel, that this Jesus Son of the Patriarch Abraham, and King David, was their promised and expected Messias.

through him] That is, Johns testimony and ministery: not because he wanted mans testimony, as Chrysost notes. hom. 5. but that man might believe: It was onely for our sakes that he became man, and subjected himself to the testimony of man.

V. 8. he was not that light] John Baptist was not Christ, that increated light, which the Jews once supposed, Luke 3. 15, 16.

V. 9. that was] Christ was the eternal light, before John testified of him.

the true light] ἀνυπόκριτος, Light it self, Original light; which properly deserved the name of light, a light by nature; not onely by participation, as the creature hath light. the light promised to enlighten the Gentiles, which sate in darknesse, Mat. 4. 15. Isa. 42. 6. Isa. 49. 6. Luke 2. 32. Act. 13. 47.

that cometh into the world] Which is born: he speaketh of the common benefit of reason and understanding: no man is born without this light; though Infants have little or no use of reason, yet have they a reasonable soul, apt to understand, though by reason of the infirmity of body, they little do.

V. 10. the world was made by him] As verse 3. Hebr. 11. 3. who is the eternal word, and wisdom of God. See Prov. 8. 22. &c.

knew him not] Gods wisdom, power, and glory shined in all the creatures yet they knew him not, nor glorified him as God. See Psalm 19. 1. Rom. 1. 23. of his manifestation in the flesh he speaketh verse 11. They of whom the World was not worthy (Hebr. 11. 38.) knew him, but they who love the world, know not the Maker thereof. The worldly man acknowledgeth him not; though he know as much, as shall serve to convince his conscience; fitte he calleth the wicked multitude, ignorant and blind sinners, the world, as Chrysost in moreth: the Saints before his Incarnation, knew him, and expected salvation by him.

V. 11. he came unto his own] To Israel his own peculiar people: though he were in the world before (for he made, and by the same power, still sustaineth and continueth all the courses of nature in all the creatures, Heb. 1. 2, 3. John 5. 17.) yet he seemed not to be present τῷ μέτρῳ γνωσείζεσθαι, for that he was not yet known; or manifested, Chrysost. hom. 7. He came to his own land, Psal. 33. 12. and 78. 71. and 79. 1. &c. which he chose of all the world, for the people by whom, and the place in which he would be worshipped: so as being of the seed of Abraham, the land of Canaan was his own countrey; and as the son of David, Jerusalem was his: to own countrey; and as the son of David, Jerusalem was his: to these he came, not because he had need of them; but because they had need of him their promised Saviour and Redeemer, yet so foolish was this ingrateful people, that they would not receive him.

received him not] Acknowledged him not for their Messias.

V. 12. but as many as received him] By true faith and obedience: which (saith Fulgentius ad Monim. de prad. l. 1.) because the evil will of man could not deserve, non est ejus causa, nisi sola Dei voluntas bona; there is none other cause thereof than the good will of God (See Phil. 2. 13.) who, though he would have all men good, yet compelleth he no man: but perswadeth and draweth as Chrysostom noteth: making men willing of unwilling, by his preventing grace.

power to, &c.] this dignity, right, or priviledge, 1 John 3. 1. adoption of sons, Gal. 4. 5. to be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, 2 Thes. 1. 5.

on his name] In Christ, our Mediatour and Saviour.

V. 13. the will of the flesh] That corrupt nature of man which is contrary to the Spirit: not by any natural course. See Gal. 5. 17.

but of God] Of God, the Fountain of regeneration and free grace.

V. 14. the word was made flesh] Mat. 1. 26. The word, the Son, not the Father, nor the holy Ghost, became Man, not by confusion of natures, but by uniting the Divine and human natures in one person of Christ, God and Man. Thus would the eternal Word become flesh, Quando, quod fecerat, factus, opus suum dignatus est reparare. Fulgentius de myst. mediator. ad Thrasym. l. 1. When being made, such as himself made, he vouchsafed to (become man for the) repair (of man) his own work. He became flesh, that is, man of a reasonable soul and human body; for so the Hebrews by בשר bassar, flesh (as the Greeks by σαρξ) understand the whole man, consisting of body and soul, Gen. 6. 12. Job 12. 10. Isa. 40. 5. Rom. 3. 20. &c. he became man, non mutando quod erat, sed assumendo quod non erat. August. Palcent. ep. 174. Not by changing the Godhead, but by assuming the Man-hood. So he became man as still remaining God: the God-head became not a Man-hood; nor the humanity, a Deity: he was made flesh; that is, made himself, or assumed flesh in which, manifestaretur sensibus hominum. Aug. de trin. l. 5. c. 11. he might be manifested to the senses of men: the Nicene Synod excellently determined it, ὁσσαφῶ ἡμῖν τὸ πνεῦμα καὶ μαθόντες ὰκ ἐνθυμεῖται πῶς ἰδίαν ἑαυτῶν οὐσίαν ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς ὁ δι' ἡμᾶς ἀνθρωπος, καὶ σῶμα φορέσας, οὐ δι' ἔνδειαν τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγου ἐγένετο ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὴν τῶν ἀνθρώπων σωτηρίαν. (Athanas. tom. 1. Synod. Nicen. contr. Arrian. 2.) the meaning is, we receiving the Spirit of God, do not thereby lose our own being: so the Lord Jesus, becoming Man for our sakes, and bearing an human body, doth notwithstanding still remain God unchangable. His taking on him the form of a servant, was not any lessening of his Deity; because (saith Fulgentius de incarn & gr. Dom. c. 2.) hoc habet, semper esse quod est: he hath ever the same being. Be comforted ye sons of God in the sorrows of transitory flesh and blood: we now decay, and must see corruption; but who can fear the resurrection of

of this now corruptible flesh? who can but seriously consider that Christ, God eternal, became flesh, to redeem this body (as well as soul) of ours? Quid futurus est homo, propter quem Deus factus est homo? Prosper. sent. ex Aug. 310. what shall Man once be, for whom God became Man? and again, the Deity of the eternal Word, coequal with God the Father, became partaker of our mortality, that we might be made partakers of his holy Spirit. And as Chrysostome saith, hom. 10. the beloved Son of God, became the Son of Man, that he might make the sons of Men the sons of God.

and dwelt among us] ἐσκήνωσεν, It signifieth a dwelling in Tents, or Tabernacles: a short time he was bodily present with men, until his ascension: quasi habuit inter nos tabernaculum, Budæus as if he had a Tabernacle among us.

beheld his glory] The manifestation of his divine Majesty, not only in his transfiguration, Mat. 17. 2. 2 Pet. 1. 19. but also in many works, which shewed his power and glory, John 2. 11. and 11. 4.

as the only begotten] As, signifieth not here similitude, but identity, the very truth: such glory as became the Son of God, and was a certain testimony of his Deity. Fulgentius objecti. Arr. discuss. noteth the difference between unigenitus, the onely begotten, and primogenitus, the first begotten: in that Divine and Incomprehensible generation, in which before all times he is God of God, he is the onely begotten, the Son by Nature: but in this generation wherein he became flesh, he is the first-born of every creature, or the first-born among many brethren, Rom. 8. 29. that is, of those whom he vouchsafed, through faith, to adopt his brethren.

full of grace] See Colos. 1. 19. and 2. 9. As if he said, he did indeed nobly converse, as man with man among us, but with that fulnesse of grace and truth, which never before appeared in any of the sons of men. By grace, understand all the essential properties of the Godhead, power, wisdom, righteousnesse, goodnesse, mercy, truth, &c. which were in the Son, by that eternal and incomprehensible generation, wherein the Father communicated his essence unto him. And we saw his glory, in many effects of his Deity, miracles, transfiguration, resurrection, ascension, and mission of the holy Ghost, enabling us with gifts of tongues, and knowledge of the truth to preach the Gospel, and to confirm the same with miracles.

V. 15. cried] Freely and publickly, as verse 23. not in a corner, nor privately, or before few that heard, but freely, boldly, and publikely: he alludeth to Isa. 43. 1. Isa 58. 1.

cometh after me] As one baptized of me: before whom I am sent to prepare his way.

for he was before me] More excellent than I: before me, as the Lord is before his servant: incomparably better than I: for when John preached these things, Christ was not much known by great works done, as afterwards: and the people enclined to think that John was Christ, Luke 3. 15.

V. 16. of his fulnesse] Colos. 1. 19. Christ is the Fountain of grace, then fully opened, and flowing out, when he came and shewed himself to the World, Zach. 13. 1. John 4. 14. and 7. 38. 39. Of whose fulnesse all we who believe, have received the gifts of grace and sanctification, every one according to the measure of the gift of Christ, Ephes. 4. 7. Ephes. 2. 8.

grace for grace] Or grace upon grace: abundance of grace, and encreases of graces one by another according to which Christ saith, to him that hath it shall be given, and he shall abound, Mat. 13. 12. A following grace, after a right use of the grace received: so the Gospel is the power of God to salvation to every one that believeth, Rom. 1. 16. God giveth all, both the planting and increase; the talent and the right use thereof: and so in giving more and more grace, he doth but crown his own gifts: as when he giveth knowledge, and an heart to live thereafter; adding thereto, constancy, perseverance, patience, more lively hope of salvation by Christ, &c. here is an accumulation and giving of grace upon grace, and one grace by meditation of another, yet all is but his own gift to us, and work in us, who worketh all according to the good pleasure of his will, Ephes. 1. 5, 9. Phil. 2. 13. On the contrary part also it is very considerable (which the learned Il. Calvadon, Exercit. 15. 3. observeth) that God in his just judgement punisheth wilful ignorance, with neglect, or not knowing his will to salvation (see 2 Thes. 2. 10, 11. Rom. 1. 21. &c.) to which he citeth the saying of a Rabbin, in Pirke Anoth. c. 4 Merces præcepti est præceptum, & merces transgressionis est transgressio; the meaning is, that God rewardeth the keepers of his laws, by giving them grace every day more and more excellently to keep them; and (justly punishing sin by sin) he giveth over the neglecters and transgressors of his law to more and more negligence and therein to final destruction. Fulgentius de præd. ad Monim l. 1. understands by grace for grace, the grace of eternal glorification, for the grace of unlaw justification; so as the grace of justification, by an undeserved benefit pureeth away all evill merit, and confirmeth the good by a continual assistance, &c. And it is therefore not unjustly called grace, because God not onely rewardeth his own gifts with gifts, but also because there tha grace of divine retribution so much aboundeth, that it incomparably and unspeakably exceedeth all merit of mans will and works, though good, and given of God. That all is of free-grace, the same expresseth, de emendat. & grat. &c. saying, a man willingly hath faith, Sed deus, qui idem donat, ipse bonitate sua mentes & dirigit voluntatem: but God who giveth faith (Eph. 2. 8.) his felt changeth and directeth the will of man, so, that he may believe and obey the Gospel.

V. 17. by Moses] By the ministery of Moses, Gal. 3. 19.

but grace and truth] That is, the exhibition of those things which were promised and pretigured in the law: so he opposeth the law, to grace and truth; and because the moral law did but shew the disease, Rom. 7. 7. which Christ onely healeth; and the ceremonial law onely shadowed out that which Christ performed for us: so as Prosper saith; the law was given, that grace might be sought for: grace was given that the law might be fulfilled, &c. so grace and truth are by Christ, for as much as, by the sacrifice of his death-prefigured in the legal sacrifices, he satisfied the justice of God, for the sins of the elect, obtained favour and peace with God for them, and regenerateth them with his Spirit. For grace is it, by which God rendreth, malus bonus, good to evil, (who as Prosper saith, de vocat. Gent. l. 1. c. 8. Opus suum, opere suo reparat, repaireth his own work, with his own work) whereby he freely preventeth the evil to make him just, and followeth the just (with supplies of grace) that he may not (again) become wicked: he preventeth him that is fallen, that he may rise again; and followeth him whom he hath raised, that he may not fall away: prævenit, dando nobis bonam voluntatem: subsequitur bene volentem, operando in illo boni operis facultatem, Fulgentius de prædest. l. 1. he preventeth, by giving man a good will: he followeth him willing well, by working in him ability to do the good work.

V. 18. No man hath seen God] 1 John 4. 12. 1 Tim. 6. 16. That is the effence of God: See hereof Augustine ep. 6. we do not (said Maricus bellue ollavi, answering an Heathen Idolater) shew our God, whom we adore, neither do we see him: yea, hence we believe him to be God, because eum sentire possumus, videre non possumus: we perceive him presente when he thundereth, raiseth storms, restoreth calms, in all his works, but see him with mortal eyes we cannot, who is more pure than any sense can apprehend. The eyes say, if he be not coloured, per not non intravit: he hath not passed in by us: the ears say, if he made no noise, he passed not in by us, &c. Augustine tom. 9. Soliloq. c. 31. Lo he goeth by me, and I see him not, Job 9. 11. Wouldest thou see God with carnal eyes when as yet thou canst not see thine own soul, by which thou livest, speakest, (and feest?) The Winde bloweth, thou heareft the sound, and feeleft the violence thereof, yet canst not see it; how much lesse canst thou in this dark house of clay, see the incomprehensible being of God. When he appeared to Abraham, Moses, or the Prophets, he did comply with their present infirmity, shewing them his presence, by such an appearance as they could apprehend. We see him now in his works, we know and believe in him through Christ: For as Fulgentius saith well, Objecti. Ar. discuss. True faith is not ignorant, of that it believeth, though as yet it cannot see, that which it hopeth and believeth: we shall more clearly see him in the life to come; 1 John 3. 2.

the bosom] Most dear, united in nature, an acquainted with all his secrets, See chap. 13. 22. 23. he is one with the father, John 10. 30. therefore they have one omniscience, one will, which no creature could have known, except he had revealed it by Christ his eternal word: this word, bosom, is accommodated to our capacity, and taken from our common form of speaking, who say a bosom-friend, when we meane one who knoweth, and is acquainted with all our desires, designes, and counsels.

declared him] Gave us the knowledge of God, otherwise unsearchable.

V. 19. who art thou] For they do dred whether he were not the Christ, Luke 3. 15 they not so much enquired of his name, or family, which probably was sufficiently known; he being the son of Zacharie the Priest, as of his office, and authority, so (as he did) to preach, baptise and gather disciples and followers? they were not ignorant that in the time of Messias, the people should be baptized for remission of sin, according as it is written, Ezek. 36. 25. then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean, &c. now this, as the prophesies concerning John Baptist, Isa. 40. 3. Mal. 3. 1. Mal. 4. 5. the admirable things concerning Johns nativity; the enquiry of the wise men for Christ the late born king of the Jews, notoriously troubling Herod and Jerusalem, about thirty years then last past; the immane and barbarous murder of so many infants by Herod, the extraordinary austerity and course of Johns life, and common expectation of the people with all these forecited things, comparing the times for the coming of the Messias; concluded that either John was the Messias, or his forerunner, who would tell them some news of his approach, and manifesting himself to Israel, therefore the governers of the Church sent to him to enquire.

V. 20. he confessed] Plainly and openly as Acts 13 25.

V. 21. art thou Elias? They understood that literally which is spoken, Mal. 4. 5 which Christ interpreteth of John Baptist, Mat. 17. 14. And the Angel plainly told his father Zacharias, Luke 1. 17. that he should go before the face of Christ in the spirit and power of Elias, Non in anima ejus, nec in carne, Tertul. de anim. c. 35. fine. Neither in his soul, nor flesh, but in that excellency of Spirit which the Lord would give him, as he gave of the Spirit of Moses to the seventy elders, Num. 11. 16. 17. 25. John here denyeth that he is Elias in their sense.

are thou that Prophet] Or a Prophet; spoken of Deut. 18. 15. they expected some notable Prophet, verse 25. John 7. 40. 41. & 6. 14. whereas Moses spake of a succession of Prophets, such as God would raise them, until the coming of Christ, the head of all Prophets.

V. 22. That we may give an answer to them] To the Sanhedrin, or great Council; whose authority they tacitly alleage, that they might receive from him some satisfactory answer, to carry back with them.

what sayest thou of thy self?] Seeing thou art not as we suppose thee; declare thy self; whom professest thou thy self to be?

V. 23. I am the voice] Isaiah 40. 3. Matth. 3. 3. Luke 3. 4. one whose office is to lift up his voice, and cry in the ears of deaf sinners.

in the wilderness] See Luke 3. 2.

make strait] εὐθύνατε make plain: Isaiah, in the letter spake of their marvellous deliverance under Cyrus, which was a type of our spiritual deliverance by Christ, as if he had said, though the obstructions and difficulties hindring Israels returne from Babylon to Jerusalem, be such as may make it seem impossible for them ever to passe through them, yet the almighty power and providence of God should so bring it to passe, as if to be the way of it self, rough and impervious, should have been evened by scavengers or harbengers of Princes, to go that way, so that they should safely, quickly and easily overcome their voiage. See Isai. 41. 18. 19. and 43. 19, 20. Ezra 1. 3, 4, 5, 6. and 7. 7. 28. and 8. 21, 23, 31. &c. and so shall it be in the return of Israel to God by Christ, and that was the thing which John was to proclaime. see on Isaiah 40. 3, 4.

V. 24. The Pharisees] A most strict sect of the Jews, Acts 26. 5. See on Luke 14. 1. and men of chief authority among the Jews, by dignity, Priests and Levites, by sect Pharisees; no wonder that they so peremptorily interrogated John concerning his baptizing, which, (out of their opinion of singular knowledge, and authority) seemed to them unlawful, because they commanded it not, who for matters Ecclesiastical had the primacie and chief authority in Israel.

V. 25. why baptizest thou?] By what authority? or, who gave thee authority, to institute a new Sacrament, that indeed belongeth to God alone, of whose covenants the sacraments are seals.

V. 26. I baptize with water] Unto amendment of life, Matth. 3. 11. that you may repent, Acts 19. 4. but Christ giveth the inward effect, who is the authour of baptisme, whereof John was but a Minister.

V. 27. He it is who coming after me] Mat. 3. 11. See Acts 19. 4. this ὁ ὀπίσω μου, after me, relateth to that which Zachary said, Luke 1. 76 Thou shalt go before the face of the Lord, to prepare his way, the meaning is, he that followeth my outward baptism with the inward effect thereof: not baptizing with water onely, as I, who am but a servant; but with the holy Ghost, nor only exhorting men to repent, and leave their sins, but giving repentance, forgiving and washing away all their sins, See verse 15.

V. 28. Bethabara] Judges 7. 24. it was a passage into Canaan, and as well a type, as place of baptisme, the entrance into the Church of Christ, and the eternall rest which remaineth for us, Heb. 4. 9.

V. 29. Behold] John sheweth and pointeth out Christ present; herein he was more than a Prophet, the Prophets foretold of Christs coming after many yeers, but John had the honour to point him out then present, when he proclaimed him.

the Lamb of God] Alluding to the Paschal Lamb: in Christ is the substance of all legall sacrifices to take away sins; which he did, suffering for them as man, and remitting them as God, he was the lamb metaphorically, in respect of his meeknesse and patience, See Isa. 53. 7. and also as he was a sacrifice for our sins, ὁ ἀἱρων τὴν ὑβὶν: sent of God. and accepted of God: the article hath much emphasis, to expresse his dignity and to distinguish him as from the typical lamb, and other legal sacrifices, so also to shew his relation to all that the law prefigured, or the Prophets foretold concerning him, as if he said, this is he, to whom all these point.

which taketh away the sins, &c.] ὁ αἴρων, who taketh away, as Luke 6. 29. 30. or who beareth: the Syriac interpreter giveth it, ille qui tollit, &c. it was not possible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sinnes, Hebr. 10. 4. this onely is he who doth it, he taketh them away continually; for though he suffered but once, yet the vertue thereof floweth as a continuall fountain to cleanse us from our sinnes, though not altogether, ut non sint, (for yet we are partly flesh and partly spirit) yet ut non imputentur, that they shall be no more imputed: he comforted you penitent sinners who can at last repent; no length of time can prejudicate Gods mercy: no repentance (if true and serious) can be too late with God, in whose sight, all things both past and future, are present: if the continuance of sins could have overcome the mercy of God; Christ would not have come in the last age of the world to take away the sins thereof. Fulgent. venant. ep. 7. he taketh them quite away, tu ut non sint, quorum memor non erit. Ambros. l. 5. ep. 28. so that (in effect) they are not, which he will no more remember.

sin of the world] The root (original sin) and the branch, the actual, which is mortified, in them by the spirit, who in baptisme put on Christ, the new man, and put off the old man, crucified dead and buried: See hereof, Rom. 6. & 7. where he mentioneth σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας, the body of sin, τῆς ἁμαρτίας sin; because he treateth not there, of remission of sins, as it is one part of justification, but concerning sanctification in us begun: which remission and sanctification, though they are never divided in the subject (for whosoever God justifieth by faith in Christ, them he doth also certainly sanctifie by his holy spirit living in them) yet may they in reason be distinguished: here then understand, a taking away of all sin, and all the works of the devil: he saith of the world, that we may know that the benefit of redemption appertaineth not unto the Jews only; but to all believers, of any times, place, or age of the world, since the beginning to this present: therefore is he said to be the lamb of God, slain from the foundation of the world, Rev. 13. 8. See 1 John 2. 2. Rom 3. 29. 30. John 17. 20.

V. 30. this is he of whom, &c.] He whom ye now see present: though he appear in the form of a servant, is incomparably more excellent than I.

V. 31. I knew him not] He knew him not by sight, but by revelation, till he came to be baptized, then he began to know him; first by an inward revelation; secondly by an external signe given him, verse 33. it was Gods all-disposing providence that John should live in the desert far from any commerce, or acquaintance with Christ, untill the time that he was to be manifested unto Israel, lest his testimony concerning Christ should fall under any suspition of compact, by reason of kindred, or any former acquaintance.

V. 32. John bare record saying] Mat. 3. 16. Mark 1. 10. Christ was testified to be the Son of God, by the visible descention of the spirit; the fathers voice from heaven; and John witnesse on earth: see also 1 John 5. 7.

I saw the spirit descending] Mark saith he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending, which some think was by a spirituall vision onely; as Ezek. 1. 1. the Prophet saw the heavens open: others take this to have been a visible opening; so that John and the multitude present might perceive that it was no humane, but some divine businesse in agitation; the holy Ghost is God invisible, 1 Tim. 1. 17. Heb. 11. 27. and every where present, Psalm 139. 4. &c. Therefore can never be seen with any mortal eye; nor ascend or descend; he cannot change place, who filleth all places, and is comprehended of none: but the invisible, and incomprehensible God, for the comfort and confirmation of his elect manifested his presence in a visible shape: So, descended he in the form of a dove, not in the forme of an Eagle, vulture, or bird of prey: as, to intimate his goodnesse; so, to teach us of what spirit we ought to be, in harmlesse conversation. See Mat. 10. 16. Jam. 3. 17. See Tertull. de bapt. c. 8.

V. 33. Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit, &c.] Upon what man thou shalt see the Spirit descending in a visible from, &c. he is the Christ: by this signe God revealed him to John, for he was otherwise not distinguishable from other ordinary men, being as we in all things, sin excepted, Hebr. 4. 15. having made himself of no reputation, and taken upon him the forme of a servant, and being found in fashion as a man, &c. Phil. 2. 7. 8.

with the holy ghost] Who giveth the effect of baptisme, sanctification and cleansing from our sinnes, See Matthew 3. 11.

V. 34. That this is the son of God] ὁ ἐκλεκτὸς, That Son of God: Chrysostom and Cyril note the emphasis of this article, that Son of God: the onely Son by nature (not by adoption, as are the Saints, 1 John 3. 1, 2.) the very Messias promised by the Prophets, and expected by the faithful: this is he; look not for any other: there is not salvation in any other name, Acts 4. 12.

V. 35. John stood] In Bethabara where he used to baptize.

two of his disciples] He had many hearers; but some more intimate; whom he also privately instructed and prepared for the school of Christ, he nameth here onely two in whom the effect of Johns present testimony concerning Christ, more evidently appeared and wrought; possibly more might also hear the same.

V. 36. Looking on Jesus] Intentively, and doubtlesse with singular comfort, as knowing him to be the Lord and Saviour of his elect, concerning whom himself was appointed of God, to testifie, and whose way he was to prepare, by his preaching and baptizing.

behold the Lamb of God] This is but a short sermon of John: but the sum of all that he had to say, whose office was to declare Christ now exhibited: and this he repeates to awake the attention of his drowzie hearers, who before did not much heed what he said; so use faithfull faithfull Ministers to repeat fundamentals of Religion until their auditors mark and understand them, and make some good use thereof.

V. 37. Two disciples heard him speak] John gathered not disciples for himself, but Christ: these two are mentioned, who heard and considered what John said: they probably heard the same the day before; but we read of no effect then, now we find how they move towards Christ. God hath his times to call; and his word like seed, (though on good ground) doth not presently spring up in all hearers; in due time it shall in all the faithfull.

V. 38. What seek ye] This he saith, not doubting, but affording them occasion of conference; though indeed it much skilleth what they seek, who pretend to come to Christ. See 1 Cor. 10. 33. 2 Cor. 2. 17. 2 Pet. 1. 3. Phil. 3. 21. some seek honours, some riches, some other things of this life; Mat 8. 19. John 6. 26. Phil. 2. 21. few seek Christ for Christ's sake.

said unto him Rabbi] This was a title which they used to give great and eminent men; but now it was commonly given to all teachers: he was called רבי rabbi, who by imposition of hands was declared a wiseman. Syriac רבן rabban, and John 20. 16. רבוני in some editions for the Greek Ραββονι, See Joh. Drus. prater. lib. 4. in John. 20. 16. and ad v. N. T. Rabbi. Caninius. de locis N. T. Martin. Trostius. Varie lection. in John 20. 16. the Evangelist interpreteth there, as here by διδάσκαλε, master or teacher: it is of the Hebr. root רבב rabab, great, thence רב rab excellent, or peritus in aliquâ arte, Magister, Doctor: here we may conceive that though they yet understood not, that Christ was the only teacher of his Church, yet moved with Johns testimony concerning him, they esteemed him as a prophet and doctour, which was the first step of their hearing him.

where dwellest thou] Or abidest thou? where lodgest thou? dwelling at Nazareth, it seemeth he was a stranger there where John was baptizing, and where he now saw, and pointed at him, if any now enquire the like of him, let him come and see in his word and ordinance: every river, if thou follow it home, will bring thee to finde the sea, whence it came: so every part of the Gospel will lead the (as the Star the wise men, Mat. 2.) to Christ.

V. 39. Come and see] Thus Christ readily entertaineth them who seek him in truth; he putteth none of them off (See chap. 6. 37.) yea, he intimateth all that labour under the heavy burden of their sins, Mat. 11. 28.

about the tenth hour] That was two hours before night: the day they divided into 12. hours, which in the summer, they made proportionably the longer; in the winter, the shorter: but so little before night, they consider not the importunity, but in desire to hear Christ, they presently follow him: formal Gospellers (like Felix, Acts 24. 25.) use to dismisse the word, and preachers thereof, unto their convenient season; which they will seldom finde; but to those who indeed hunger and thirst for righteousnesse, no time is unseasonable to learn.

V. 40. Simon Peters brother] The Evangelist here nameth him Peter, by way of anticipation, for he was not yet so named. See verse 42.

V. 41. The Messias, &c.] The anointed. So the Hebr. משיח Mashiach, of משח Mashach unxit oleo, now because Kings, Priests, and Prophets, were anointed with sacred oyl, the confection whereof might not be imitated to any other use, therefore Christ in whom all these offices met, was by an eminente called the משיח Messiah, Dan. 9. 26. so often in the New Testament Μεσσίας is put for, and interpreted Christ: χριστὸς: the anointed, or Christ, yet was he not anointed as they in the type with material oyl, but with the holy Ghost, Acts 10. 38. and that above his fellows, Psalm 45. 7. See chap. 3. 34 Colos. 2. 9. thus the Chaldee often interprets prophesies concerning him. Genes. 49. 10. untill שילה Shilo come Targ. משיחא.

V. 42. And he brought him to Jesus] You must understand this of Andrew and Peters first coming to Christ, after which they returned to their fishing again; their calling to the Apostleship, when they left their nets and followed Christ as Apostles, was afterwards, and is recorded, Mat. 4. 18. &c. Luke 5. 10, 11.

a stone] Or Peter, Simon of Jonah (Augustin. in Joh. readeth, thou art Simon filius Johannis: so Ierom. de scriptor. eccle. and Fulgent. l. 3. ad Trasimund, whence John. Drusius l. 4 praterit. gathered, that the father of Simon Peter was called יוחנן or יוחנא and contractedly יונא and not יונה Jonah, a dove, thou shalt be called Κηφᾶς which is πέτρος, that is, Peter, a proper name; or πέτρος an appellative, which is a stone; the Syriac hath ܟܐܦܐ cipho, a stone from כיף Job 30. 6. Ier. 4. 29. See Io. Drus. ad voc. N. T. eum. prior. Thou art Peter (said our Saviour, Mat. 16. 18.) and on this rock will I build my Church: not on the person, but on the confession of Peter saying, thou art Christ, the Son of the living God: for (as Isidor de etymol. l. 7. (also) Christ was the rock on which foundation, even Peter also was built. See Ephes. 2. 20. to which sense Gregor. l. 3. ep. 33. saith, vitam vestram in Petram ecclesiæ, hoc est in confessione beati Petri solidate, ground your lives on the rock of the Church, that is, on the confession of blessed Peter: in Christ all the faithful are λίθοι ζῶντες, living rocks or stones. 1 Pet. 2. 5. this name Christ giveth Peter, intimating his firm constancy in the truth.

V. 43. Follow me] Be my disciple: and he presently followed him: so powerfull is his word: he but said at first let us make man, Gen. 1. 26. and he was made, and here, but follow me, and he (as others after) left his former calling, and followed Christ: prophane Porphyry and the apostata Julian scoffed hereat, not knowing the power of Christs calling; nor believing that the dead shall once hear his voice, and come out of their graves, John 5. 28, 29. nor do wicked hearers feel the power of his word calling them to repentance and newnesse of life; because they are dead adders and belong not to Christ, chap. 8. 47. 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4. here is comfort on two firm ground's, first (as chrysostom hom. 17. noteth) God preventeth our wills with his grace: our sanctification and salvation, beginneth not of, or from our selves, when, or how could we ever hope to be saved; if that work must not otherwise be accomplished than by our own ability and goodnesse? Secondly, though this work, in relation to mans strength, be as impossible, as for a mortal man to climbe up into heaven yet saith God our Saviour, how easie is it? why should I despair of his saving me, who can as easily repaire me, as he made me? if he but say follow me, I shall follow him into eternal happinesse: shall I doubt that he who hath suffered the most bitter death for me, will not do so much as speak the word to save me?

V. 44. Philip was of Bethsaida] A town neer unto the lake of Genesareth, to which Philip the Tetrarch, Herods brother, Herodias husband, gave the honour of City, and called it by a new name, Julia. Joseph. orig. Jud. l. 18. 6. 3. to this very place our Saviour denounced so great woes. Mat. 11. 21. that from so impious a place he vouchsafeth to call out some to be chief Apostles, it declareth the admirable mercy of God taking some as brands out of the fire; as jewels out of the dirt.

V. 45. Jesus findeth Nathaniel] He was of Cana in Galilee, John 21. 2. all good is diffusive of it self, specially the truth of the Gospel, which as a living water, or swift stream cannot be dammed up: if we are effectually called to Christ, we shall not rest untill we have called others to the same communion.

Moses in the law] Gen. 49. 10. Deut. 18. 18. See John 5. 46. Moses in his five books; by whose ministery the ceremonial law was given, which by many representations prefigured him. See Heb. 10. 1. Luke 24. 27.

prophets did write] Isa. 4. 2. & 7. 14. Jerem. 23. 5. and 33. 14. Ezek. 34. 23. & 37. 24, 25.) Dan. 9. 24. Mic. 5. 2. Zach. 6. 12. & 13. 1. Mal. 3. 1. &c. hence appears the admirable consent of the Old and New Testament, represented (as Gregor. hom. 25. in Evang. well noteth) by the two Cherubims, Exod. 25. 17, 18, 19, 20. covering the propitiatory with wings stretched out, touching each other, both looking towards Christ our propitiation, 1 John 2. 2. and with contiguous fenses reaching one another.

the Son of Joseph] As men supposed. Luke 3. 23. but indeed he was, as God ἀμήτωρ without Mother; as man ἀπάτωρ without Father. Gr. Nazianzen. orat. 38. as Hebrews 7. 3.

V. 46. Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth] He had a prejudicate opinion of the place, either because he considered the prophesie. Micha 5. 2. which saith that Christ should be born at Bethlehem: so the Pharisees reasoned, John 7. 41, 42. or as they said (John 7. 52.) to Nicodemus, search and look, for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet: The place maketh neither good nor bad: the earth is the Lords; who is no accepter of persons, Acts 10. 34, 35.

Come and see] Be not withheld from Christ by other mens prejudicate opinion; but try. Philip could not, or would not contend with him; but as yealed to his own further experience, as if he had said, doe but come to him and you will see, that some good may come from thence,

V. 47. No guile] A man of sincere and simple integrity, which maketh the difference between the true and feigned Israelites.

V. 48. wast under the fig-tree] Christ seeth us where ere we are, and when we think not of him: ipse timendus est in publico, ipse in secreto, Augustin. de verb Dom. in John. Ser. 46. he is to be feared in publick, he is to be feared in secret.

V. 49. Thou art the Son of God] Christs word begate this faith, which brake out into a confession, of more than he heard of Philip; he called him the Son of Joseph, but Nathaniel, acknowledged him the Son of God.

King of Israel] He knew not yet the extense of Christs kingdom, Psalm 2. 8. Revel. 17. 14. therefore according to his measure he confesseth.

V. 50. Believest thou?] This question is in effect a vehement afferveration, and as it were an admiration at his excellent faith.

thou shalt see greater things] Which shall more evidently manifest me to thee, and cause thee to believe and know that I am the son of God, and Saviour of the world,

V. 51. Verily

V. 51. Verily, verily] This repetition intimateth the certainty of his affection; concerning the word ἀμὴν here used, see the marginall note of the learned Tremelius on this place.

heaven open] The kingdom of heaven opened to men in Christ: which their sin and ignorance shut up.

and the angels of God] He alludeth to Jacobs ladder. Gen. 28.12. See Colos. 1. 20. Ephes. 1. 19. Phal. 34. 7. Heb. 1. 14. and he signifieth his divine power, which should be seen i the ministery of the angels to him the head of the Church, and the elect his body, the sum is; they who were enemies, are reconciled to us in Christ, and we are made fellow Citizens with them Eph. 2. 19. and they our guardians. Psalm 34. 7. Hebr. 1. 14. all this is the advantage of true believers.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. C*Ana*] Cana the lesser, as Jerom saith: of which was Nathaniel, John 21. and Simon, Mat. 10. 4.

Galilee] The lower near the lake of Tiberias, called Galilee of the Gentiles. Isa. 9. 1. Mat 4 13, 15.

the mother of Jesus] It seemeth Joseph was dead before Christ began to preach: See Epiphan. heref. 78.

V. 2. both Jesus was called] Invited as friends: Jesus came not into the world to abolish humane societies, and civil customs; but to sanctifie them with his holy presence: for as in him the right to the creatures (lost in Adam) was restored; so would he shew, and by example teach men the right use of them: sometimes in a more plentiful (but sober) manner, as in feasts and festivities. See Deut. 16. 14.

V. 3. when they wanted wine] Greek ὑστερήσαντος, although the word ὑστέρησε, properly signifie, sum posterior, sum inferior, tardius venio, yet by a metonimie it is used for careo, desisto, desum, Mark 10. 21. It seemeth these married couple were of a slender estate, and some of their guests unexpected: the main thing considerable is, Gods providence, disposing this want (as often he doth with his) to his own glory; as it is of Lazarus death: chap. 11. 4. and the blinde mans want of sight, chap. 9. 3.

his mother said unto him, they have no wine] Why she thus spake is uncertain; Christ having yet done no miracle, to give her confidence that he could supply the want: possibly some other things spoken, not here recorded, gave the occasion: or that the, who long before had laid up in her heart, those things which were spoken of him (Luke 2. 51.) marked also what John Baptist testified of him; as also what the Angel Gabriel told her: and it is more than probable, that in these many years, wherein Christ lived with her, she had often conferred with him, concerning the great work of redemption by him to be accomplished: and if there were here any place for conjecture, why may not we conceive it probable, that he might acquaint her with his gathering disciples, preaching and manyfesting himself to Israel, by signes and mighty works? and that this declaration ha l the force of a petition, as had that of Mary and Martha, John 11. 3. Lord, behold he whom thou loveſt is ſick: and his answer seemeth to make for this; for when he saith, mine hour is not yet come, he seemeth not so much to deny a supply, as to blame the unseasonableness of the motion for it.

V. 4. woman what have I, &c.] Though he were incomparably greater, as being God, yet being the Son of Mary, as man, he spake not any other wise, than became the reverence due to a parent: but because he was not her Son in that nature, by which he would do the miracle he inhibiteth prescribing God; and therein recalleth her from all respects of motherhood, so far as they hindred the consideration of Gods power and glory, in the following miracle. See Luke 2. 49. Mat. 12. 48. Hebr. מה לי ולך mah li velach. 2 Kings 3. 13. what have I to do with thee?

mine hour is not yet come] The set time appointed by God, which is, when it shall best serve for his honour, the time that I should shew my self by signes and miracles unto the world, certis momentis peraguntur res Dei, therefore he here intimateth, that it was neither impotency, nor incogitancy to supply, the present want which caused him to delay, but because he would teach us to expect Gods appointed time, and to know that it is not for us to know the times and seasons which the father hath put in his own power, Acts 1. 7. Christ knew it was not oppertune to supply them with wine, by a divine and extraordinary power manifested, until the want thereof was manifestly known to the whole company, that all might be witnesses of the miracle, and thereby be moved to believe in him, that they might be saved.

V. 5. whatsoever he saith unto you] It is probable that she had an expectation of some extraordinary supply, because she prepared the servants to obey him in order to the same.

V. 6. six waterpots of stone] Wherewith they used often to wash and purifie themselves. See Mark 7. 3. waters were very scarce in Palestine. fountains being there but rare, as Chrysost. noteth, hom. 21. therefore the Jews kept such vessels of water filled by them. The Heretick Hebion would have brought into the Christian Church, this custome of the Jews, before long to be antiquated.

containing two or three firkins a piece] Measures which the Syriac gives בעין רבין rebbin, of the Hebr. רבע rebah a quarter, continet quadrantal octavam partem cadi, five modii. Tremel. Gr. ωσχοεικὰς δύο. Some conjecture that these six contained about half a tunne, each vessel being about half a terse: so that Christ gave a bountiful supply, which set off the excellency of the miracle.

V. 7. fill the water-pots with water] He said not, fill the wine cask, but those water-pots there standing; into which they used not to put any wine: neither doth he bid them fill some other, the like pots (that might have admitted some jealousie of a compact) but those out of which they had now drawn water for their use; all this, for the clear evidence of the miracle. See 1 Kings 18. 44.

filled them up to the brim] Though these waiters knew not what Christ meant to do, yet thus the providence of God directed it, lest any should object, or conceive that some wine might happily be afterward secretly conveighed into the same vessels, and so deceive the guests, with an appearance of a false miracle.

V. 8. governour of the feast] The steward, or ruler of the feast; as, Genes. 43. 16. among them it seems his office was onely to order the feast, not as a master of the family, but as a steward, for that time and occasion, to dispose of the meate, order the dishes set on the tables, see they were supplied with wine and all necessaries which were guests; to appoint the waiters to take away again &c.

V. 9. water that was made wine] Water converted into wine; by which he shewed himself the God and Lord of nature; here doing that in an instant, which he doth every year in the Vine, by turning water and the moisture of the earth, by slow and insensible degrees, into the juice of the mature grape whence the wine is prested: he could here without their ministery, as easily have turned the air in the pots into water as the water into wine; but he would so do this miracle, that all present might be certain witnesses thereof.

V. 10. well drunk] That is, liberally, as Gen. 43. 34. for the word שכר shachar with the Hebrews answering to the Greek word μεθύειν, is not always to expresse intemperance, as Gen 9. 21. 2 Sam. 11. 13, but sometimes to signifie, onely a liberal use of wine without excesse, as here, and in the forecited place, Gen. 43. 34. See on Luke 1. 15.

V. 11. This beginning of miracles] Christ adorned this wedding with his presence and first miracle, among those innumerable miracles which Christ wrought in the dayes of his flesh, whereof many are recorded by the Evangelists, this of his turning water into wine at the wedding in Cana of Galilee, was the first.

and manifested] He wrought this miracle so evidently, that his divine power appeared therein.

disciples believed on him] For the end of miracles, is to bring us by faith to Christ: whereas lying miracles carrying men away from Christ into superstition, are Satans delusions. 2 Thes. 2. 9, 10, 11.

V. 12. Capernaum] A rich city on the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephtali, where Christ dwelt when he left Nazareth, Mat. 4. 13.

and his brethren] That is, his kinsmen, whom the Hebrews called brethren. Gen. 13. 8. & 14. 14. Mat. 13. 55.

V. 13 Jews Passover was at hand] See Exod. 12. 2, & 13. & 23. 14, 15. and the moneth thereof.

V. 14. and found] Christ appointed to purge the temple; Mal. 3. 1. 2. 3. & presently repaireth thereto: this was the first Passeover after Christs baptism; and therefore this is not the same history which is recorded, Mat. 21. 12. Mark 11. 15. Luke 19. 45. that was when his passion drew near.

in the temple] In the outward court of the temple.

sold oxen] Th y that dwelt far from Jerusalem, were by the law, to make their offerings into money, and to furnish themselves there, Deut. 14. 25. 26. but not in the temple, which was the house of God, or the house of prayer.

changers of money sitting] To sit all strangers with exchange of moneys there currant; to buy sacrifices.

V. 15. of small cords] Probably, those which bound the oxen and sheep, brought to the altar to be offered (as it is written, Psalm 118. 27. binde the sacrifice with cords, even unto the hornes of the altar) which done, probably they were cast by; so Christ might take up some of these, of which he made a scourge to drive out the sheep and oxen, that they might not buy and sell in the temple.

V. 16. make not my fathers house an house of, &c.] He blameth not the sale of sheep and oxen and doves (the law allowed that) but that they sold them within the court of the temple; and so made it an house of merchandize: that he condemneth: because, that through it, it was not lawful so much as to bear a burden, Mark 11. 16. If Christ thus purged his temple from elsewhere lawfull merchandize and prophanation, when yet he well knew it should shortely after be utterly demolished; if he would not have them buy and sell there, those things without which they could not them serve him according to his own law; those things which doubtlesse many bought with a sincere purpose for the service of God; with what scorpions will he at last revenge the prophanations of those houses of prayer, which have been so shamefully abused among us?

V. 17. The zeal of thy house] Psal. 69. 9. Zeal is here taken for the heat of indignation conceived at any thing unworthily done or attempted, against those we love: as also 2 Cor. 7. 11. Sometimes it importeth fervent affection; as Col. 4. 13. Sometimes good intention, though without knowledge or right level. Rom. 10. 2. Phil. 3. 6. Sometimes envy, chap. 7. 9. & 13. 45. & 17 5. Sometimes for emulation, Gal. 5. 20 So Clement Romanus ep. ad. Cor. p. 6. 7. saith ζῆλος καὶ φθόνος zeal and envy (that is, anger and envy) were the cause of Cains killing his brother, no such zeal had Christ, who had no sin; but an holy zeal to the service and honour of God his Father.

eaten me up] As it were a secret fire feeding on my thoughts, so that it will not suffer me to be mindful of my self: as Psal. 102. 4. & 119. 139.

V. 18. what shew thou doſt these things] Whereby it may appear, that thou hast divine authority, to do any such extraordinary things.

V. 19. destroy this temple] See Mat. 26. 61. If you destroy, or when you destroy: thus he sheweth his divine prescience, foretelling of his passion: these things he spake, not plainly, because he knew they would not have believed, the disciples could not yet, how much lesse the vulgar?

V. 20. Fourty and six years was this temple in building] This was not the temple built by Solomon. 1 King 6. 37. 2 Chron 3. 1. that was destroyed by the Caldeans. 2 Chron, 36. 19. but the second temple built after their return from Babylon. Ezra 4. So much hindred, that it was fourty six years in hand. See hereof Jos. Casaubon exercit 13. N. 38.

V. 21 of the temple of his body] That is, his humane body, the temple of the Godhead. Colos. 2. 9.

V. 22. his disciples remembred &c.] For then he opened their understanding, that they might know what he had said and done, Luke 24. 45. Thus Gods word (which Christ compared to seed sowed, Matth 13.) sometimes lyeth long (as under frozen clods) not appearing, but as dead and lost; yet in Gods good time it is quickned, and brought to memory again, and the use and fruits thereof shew an admirable life of the holy Ghost working thereon.

V. 23 many believed in his name] With a temporall faith, such as usually is theirs, who depend on miracles: it was no sound or justifying faith; which Christ would not trust.

V. 24. did not commit himself unto them] He trusted them not; neither with the secret mysteries of his doctrine, as Chrysostom, Augustine, and Theophylact conceive; nor with his own sacred person: he did not securely converse with them, nor did he trust himself with them, as he did with his disciples, and well known friends, for he knew from the beginning, how they would at last betray him, and deliver him into the hands of sinners to be crucified; which though he willingly permited in the appointed time, yet having many things, as to his manifestation to Israel, to perform and accomplish, he declined and avoided as importune untill that time was come, and all things in their time and order, duely and really finished.

he knew all men] What they had in the secret of their heart; what they had been, were and would be. chap. 13. 18. & 7. 71.

V. 25. needed not that any] Christ being the searcher of all hearts, hath no need that any should enform him concerning man.

a ruler of the Jews] Either one of their Sanhedrin or great councel; or one of the rulers of their synagogue, the former sense, from chap. 7. 45, 50. appeareth most probable.

V. 2. by night] For fear of the Jews, John 19. 38. See chap. 9. 22.

Rabbi] Master, or teacher. See on chap. 1. 38.

come from God] Divinely, and extraordinarily sent to teach us.

V. 3. born again] Or, from above, regenerated by the holy Ghost, crucifying the old man; mortifying and abolishing the carnall affections, and renewing a man to holinesse of life; that is to say, the whole man, body and soul: for as the whole man from his naturall birth is corrupted, so must the whole man in his regeneration be renewed, 1 Thes. 5. 23. though that renovation, be not so compleated, in this mortal life, but that there are in the best men, some remains of the old Adam. See Gal. 5. 17. Rom. 7. 24. yet, such is the mercy of God toward his, that whatsoever sinners were before their regeneration, yet therein all is cleansed, and so washed away, that, it shall not be imputed to them to condemnation See 1 Cor. 6. 11. this regeneration may be discerned by the fruits and effects thereof. See Gal. 5. 19, 20. — 22. 23. first then here note, that the most noble birth, or of the most holy parents, without new birth, availeth nothing toward salvation; no not for them, who could truely say, we be Abrahams seed, John 8. 33. Mat. 3. 9. See 1 Cor. 1. 26. Secondly, seeing regeneration is of the whole man, content not thy self when thou findest in thee a mortification of some evill affections, which possibly are but changed for others as bad, as lust of youth for malice or avarice of Age; see neither will Agrippa's——half perswaded to be a Christian, Acts 26. 28. do thee any good; God will not accept any parcell---sanctity; every part and faculty of man needeth repaire. Thirdly, it must incite us to pray, and to Gods ordinance for the evidence of our new birth, without which we cannot see, nor enter into Gods kingdom: Gods word is the immortal seed, 1 Pet. 1. 23. 25. the sincere milk, by which if we grow, (1 Pet. 2. 1.) our regeneration will appear; for which, we must lay asi le all malices, and all guile, hypocrisies, envies, and evill speakings.

see the kingdom of God] That is, enter into it, as verse 5. or understand the mysteries of eternall life, and Gods kingdom, of grace here, and glory in the world to come. See 1 Cor. 15. 14. 1 Cor. 15, 50.

V. 4. How can a man] To examine spiritual mysteries by carnal reason, is a main lee to the understanding thereof.

V. 5. of water] Of baptism the sacrament of regeneration, which is the ordinary way into the Church and kingdom of God; though his grace be not tied to external means: and it is the contempt, not the privation of the sacrament which condemneth. See Tit. 3. 5.

Spirit] Which giveth the inward effect of baptism.

kingdom of God] Of grace here, and glory in the life to come. See on verse 6.

V. 6. borne of the flesh] The corrupted nature of man, (opposite to regeneration) concerning which the Apostle saith, it cannot inherit the kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 15. 50. the whole sense is; no man can know the mysteries of the kingdom of grace, without a regenerate minde; and therefore no man can be saved without regeneration and renovation of the whole man: we are born aliants to the kingdom of God, (Ephes. 2. 1. &c, 11. 13.) and mere enemie; (Rom. 5. 10.) untill we are born again of water and the holy Ghost; hence is it, that the Apostle requireth, a new man, a new creature, 1 Cor. 5. 7. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Gal. 6. 15. Ephes. 4. 24. Col. 3. 10. the unregenerate man perceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he, because they are spiritually discerned, 1 Cor. 2. 14. the carnal man saith Theophylatt (in Luke 14.) δύναμιν ἔχειν ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ πιστεύειν, he believeth nothing supernatural: now as the creature can be but once properly created; a man can be but once born; so neither can he be more than once regenerate: quemodo enim uterus non potest repeti, sic nec baptismus iterari, saith Prosper.

is flesh] Is carnal, subject to sin and death: understand herewith, the wildom, will and affection of the natural man. See Rom. 7. 14. &c. & 8. 7. why of holy parents, carnal sons are born. See Angust. To. 7. part. 2. de nuptiis & concup. c. 18. of the necessity of regeneration. See Prosper contra Collator. c. 18.

is Spirit] Is Spiritual: subject to the Spirit, sanctifying man, and filling him Spiritual; notwithstanding the remaines of sin striving against the Spirit, and those works of the flesh, like the wilde fruits growing on the suckers of the stock, on which the adopted branches are engrafted, bearing fruits of regeneration.

V. 7. born again] Or from above.

V. 8. wind bloweth where it listeth] That which the Hebrews call רוח ruach (with them a πολύσημον) the Greeks expresse by the word πνεῦμα, signifying amongst other things winde, or a blaſt of winde: so Aristot. de mundo. Thucid. l. 4. and other authors use it: in Scripture it often signifieth the holy Ghost; the meaning here is; as the power of God is perceived in the winde moving the air, though we cannot see it; so is it in the changing and renewing of us, though the manner he hid from us: where it listeth: signifieth, without any restraint by the power of man: this manner of speaking is taken from creatures, voluntary moving themselves, as they say, libero ac vago impetu.

V. 9. How can these things be] Christ had preached this point unto him, that except a man be regenerate, he cannot see the kingdom of God; and Nicodemus is now an example of the same: being so great an example of the same: being so great and learned a Scholar, yet being not regenerate, he could not understand the very rudiments of that kingdom.

V. 10. and knowest not these things] These words are quick and reprehensory: as if he said, it is a foul shame for a professed teacher of Israel; to be ignorant in the very fundamentals of religion; the more, seeing this point is layed down in many places of Scripture, Jer. 31. 33. Ezek. 11. 19. & 36. 26. Phil. 3. 3. circumcision signified it: it is the end of all the law, purity of heart, and sanctimony of life; it is that which puts difference between sinful worldlings, and the holy sons of God. Now, the otherwise learned Nicodemus knew not these things, because they are no otherwise than spiritually discerned, 1 Cor 2. 14.

V. 11. Verily, verily] אמן אמן, ἀμὴν ἀμὴν, the word is from the Hebrew אמן aman, verax, verus, fidelis. and אמן amen, as much as, so be it; they used it as a ratification of their prayers, Jer. 11 5. and desiring the fulfilling thereof; so Deut. 27. 15. all the people shall say אמן amen. 70. γένοιτο, let it come to passe, or be; sometimes it was doubled to the more vehement confirmation or alleveration, as Numb. 5. 22. the woman shall say אמן אמן amen, amen; hence in the Primitive Church after prayers, and some other re-citions in their assemblies, the people answered, Amen, 1 Cor. 14. 16.

how shall he say, τὸ Ἀμὴν. See Revel. 1. 7. ναὶ ἀμὴν, yea, so be it. And so our Saviour often used it doubled, for a vehement asseveration; as if he said, faithfully, truely, or assuredly it is so.

we speak that we do know] In that Christ saith οἴδαμεν, we know, &c. the cause and sence is, I and all the Prophets (which spake by my spirit, and of me) well know what we speak and teach; thus joyneth he with their ministery; whence appeareth their errour, who would have the authority of scriptures to depend on the Church: that were to subject the truth of Christ to the examination and approbation of men.

that we have seen] This is to express the certainty of the Gospel: because, with us the sense of seeing is most certain; we use to say we have seen a thing, when we will affirm a certainty of knowledge.

ye receive not our witnesse] That is, few of you receive it. So chap. 1. 11. his own received him not; that is, few of them received: it hath been the misery of all times: Lord, who received our report? Isaiah 53. 1. Let us not think the worse of truth, because it hath few sincere followers; mans unbelief cannot make void the truth of God. Rom. 3. 3. Let them take heed, who out of opinion of new light, contemn the old invariable truth of Christ; who will be teachers of the law, and yet understand not what they speak, neither whereof they affirm, 1 Tim. 1. 7. It is but just with God to send them, to their damnation, strong delusions, that they shall believe lies, who receive not the love of the truth, that they might be saved, 2 Thes. 2. 10, 11. read it in Ahabs example, 1 Kings 22. 29. &c.

V. 12. earthly things] Natural things, as concerning the winde: or in a plain and common manner, as he delivered his heavenly doctrine: for it is most true which Chrisostom noteth, hom. 26. in regard of his hearers weaknesse, he attempereateth to them.

V. 13. came down from heaven] By assumption of the humane nature, chap. 1 14.

the Son of man] Christ, God and man: Son of man is often put for man, Psal. 8. 4. Isa. 51. 12.

which is in heaven] Not because the humane substance of Christ was diffused to an ubiquity, but because one and the same Son of God, and Son of man, very God of his father, and truely man by the assumption of our flesh and blood, though according to his true humanity, localiter tunc esset in terra, he was then locally on earth; yet according to his deity, which cannot be contained in place, he filled heaven and earth; and was then in heaven, in respect thereof, whose properties are attributed to the person of Christ, consisting of those two united natures; hereof, See Judgent. de person. Christi ad Thrasimund. l. 2.

V. 14. as Moses lifted up the serpent] Numb. 21. 6. As the brazen serpent lifted up, had the true form of a serpent, but not the venome; so had Christ the true form and nature, but not the sin of man: that serpent was a signe of grace, and a remedy against evill, that all who were stung with fiery serpents, might lee him, and be healed; so was Christ lifted upon the crosse, chap. 12 32. and is now lifted up in the word and sacraments (Isa. 49. 22. Gal. 3. 1.) that the faithful may look into heaven after him, and be healed: this he did not openly speak, but remitted his hearers to the old type, as Chrysostom noted. Hom. 26. to shew the admirable comfort between the Old and New Testament; and to intimate, that he went not unwillingly to his passion: also to help the faith of the weak: if any doubt, how can they who believe in Jesus crucified, be saved? let him consider how he that but looked on the similitude of a Serpent, was healed; how much more shall they, who with true faith look upon Jesus, the life, through the vaile of his crucified flesh? there the Serpent stung, and the serpent healed; here death (whose sting is sinne, 1 Corinth. 15.) in the first Adam, destroyed: here the death of the second Adam Christ saved and gave us life.

V. 15. whosoever believeth on him] Whosoever; without respect of persons (Acts 10. 34. 35.) believeth that Jesus Christ, the true Messias, and Saviour of the elect, died for our sinnes and rose again for our justification Rom 4. 25.) and in affiance of the truth of Gods promises promised in the Gospel, apprehendeth his particular interest and propriety therein, as chap. 20. 28.

V. 16. For God so loved, &c.] In this verse Christ sheweth these four concurrent causes of our redemption and salvation. 1. The principal, first, impulsive; the love of God, which can have no cause but it self. 2. The material, or price of our redemption; his only begotten Son. 3. the instrumental faith in Christ; that whosoever believeth in him. 4. the final; eternal life.

the world] That is, mankind, for Christ speaketh not here of that common love of God, whereby he willeth the good of conservation to the creatures; so he loveth all the creatures; but of his special love, whereby he willeth man should be saved by Christ, and he is truely said to love the world, because they whom he loveth to eternal life are in the world, a part of the world, and gathered by his word; and holy Spirit into the body of the Church, out of all ages and parts of the world, God loved all that he made: he loveth not sinne, which is neither in him, nor of him; he loved a sinning world (for when we were enemies, he reconciled us, Rom. 5. 10.) but not the sins of the world: if we speak of Gods peculiar love which is to eternal life; we must understand the elect onely, as opposed to that part thereof, concerning which it is said; the whole world lieth in wickednesse, 1 John 5. 19. and, I pray not for the world, chap. 17. 9. Christ prayed for those whom he loved to salvation; that is, for the elect onely, I pray for them, I pray not for the world, for the elect are in the world, not of the world (c. 17. 16.) that is, of that party which lieth in sin and unbelief, to two sorts of men are intimated, sub uno mundi nomine; under this one name world (saith Prosper) sicut enim dicitur mundus in impiis, ita dicitur mundus in sanctis: the wicked are called the world, and here the saints are called the world which God loveth, God loveth us, such as we shall be by his gift, non quales sumus nostro merito. Augustin. de C. D. l. 17. c. 4. not such as we are by our deserts; he loved, quod feceram & elegerat in filio, faith the same. tr. 110. in John 17. that which he had made, and chosen in his Son, out of whom he loveth no man to eternal life: a Prince may be truely said to love his subjects, specially then, when he punisheth the perverse, rebellious, and seditious among them; and a Physician his patient, specially when he most endeavoureth to correct the corrupt and malignant humours which disaffect him: so neither can it prejudicate the love of God that he cutteth of and condemneth reprobates, when with severe corrections; he fetcheth in, amendeth, and saveth those whom he loved and elected from eternity; thus then, the creatour, and Lord of lords, loved the world; that is wretched mankinde dispersed, upon the face of the earth, without difference of nation, dignity, sex, or age: all the world with his common love, (of which all have some tast) the elect only, according to the effect thereof, his purpose of saving them in Christ. See more concerning the acceptation of the word (world) Augustin. To. 7. contr. Jul. Pelag. l. 6. c. 1.

V. 17. For God sent not] Ch. 12. 47. God gave, and sent his Son by his incarnation: he confirmeth that which he faid, should not perish, verse 16. by declaring the end of his present coming into the world.

to condemn the world] Christs coming condemneth not, but unbelief and contempt of Christ, chap. 9. 39. & 12. 47. he came not now to judge (that shal be at his second coming) but to propose terms of peace, and mercy; that they might believe and be saved.

that all the world through him, &c.] Not only Jews, but Gentiles also, as many as should believe in him.

V. 18. Is condemned already] By the ancient sentence, Gen. 3. 19. & 2. 17. Gal. 3. 10. which must needs stand, except it be reversed by Christ apprehended by faith; so is the believer absolved and pardoned; but the unbeliever (by nature the child of wrath, dead in trespasses and sinnes, Ephes. 2. 1.) standeth already condemned, as Chrysostom faith, κρίν ων τὸ πραγμα τέτο, ἀλλὰ τῇ ὑπόθεσι if not actually and declaratively, yet in the (universal) sentence, on Adam; and in respect of his own actuall sinnes; for whosoever sinneth, is guilty before God, and so under punishment.

in the name of, &c.] That is, in Christ. See chap. 1. 12. in the name of, &c. here importeth, in Christ, named and being so preached and declared to be the Son of God; he that believeth not in facred Name, cannot but perish, because there is no other name given under heaven, whereby we must be saved, Acts 4. 12. and indeed he that believeth not in Christ, hath made him a lyar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son, 1 John 5. 10. Mat. 3. 17. 2 Pet. 1. 17, 18 Mat. 17. 5.

the only begotten] All the Saints are Gods children by adoption the only begotten] in Christ; but he is the only begotten Son, by nature. See on chap 1. 14.

V. 19. The condemnation] The cause of condemnation.

their deeds were evil] Mans wickednesse is the cause of his rejecting the Gospel of Christ, (which as a light discovereth it, and convinceth sinners) and his neglecting and hating the same: either convinceth sinners) and his neglecting and hating the same: either in the word of truth, or ministery thereof: So Ahab, fold unto sinne, hated Michaiah, 1 Kings 22. and incestuous Herodias John Baptist.

V. 20. Hateth the light] This is a proverbiall speech, which Christ accommodateth to his present purpose which was to shew the immediate cause of the Jews unbelief, rejection of the Gospel, and their not coming to Christ, the light, which was their sinne and incorrigible wickednesse, sin would be concealed in darknesse; it abhorreth nothing more than the light which discovereth its deformity, which is such as cannot hurt, except it be loved, nor pollute by be loved, if clearly seen. Ahab took Eliah for his enemy. 1 Kings 21. 20. because he discovered and reproved his sinne: still truth begets us enemies, the word of God to the wicked, is as a true glasse to the ugly; you offer an odious affront if you shew it them.

reproved] Or discovered, the sinners own conscience reproveth him, and therefore loveth the darknesse, that not only others might not see his sins, (in which he is resolved to live) but that his self might not know them, that he might more securely enjoy the pleasures thereof for a season.

V. 21. Doth the truth] That doth sincerely and holily.

wrought in God] As they do, who set God only before their eyes, and and follow the rule of his word: hoc autem in Deo facimus, quod Deo in nobis faciente, datur nobis ut faciamus. Fulgent. de prad. ad Monim. l. 1. and we do this in God; which, God working in us, giveth us ability to do.

V. 22. The land of Judea] Into the territories of Judea: from Jerusalem into the villages, and places neer.

and baptized] By his disciples Ministry. See chap. 4. 2.

V. 23. baptizing in Enon] A town in the tribe of Manasse, neer Jordan (there was another of this name neer Damascus, Ezek. 47. 17.) and neer Scythopolis on the other side of Jordan (See Is. Casaubon Exercit. 13. N. 43.) and Salim. See Jerom. de loc. Hebr. a fine.

V. 24. John was not yet cast into prison] See Mat. 14. 3. &c. Mark 6. 17. &c. Luke 3. 19.

V. 25. And the Jews] Chrysostom readeth μετὰ Ἰωδαίε——with a Jew: so the Syriac, with a certain Jew, very likely that the controverse began with one, and after grew more generall? so are national quarrels oftimes kindled, by one or some few, which afterward are, from small sparks, fomented and blown up into masterlesse flames.

about purifying] How they might be purified before God, which the washings under the law did, and baptisme now doth represent.

V. 26. was with thee beyond Jordan] They were affected with perverse zeal and emulation, fearing that their masters credit should be impaired by Christ.

to whom thou bearest witnesse] Chap. 1. 7, 34. they come with this complaint, that all the people now ran after him whom their master baptized; as fearing an eclipse of their masters honour, by his interposition, to whom (it seemed to them) their master had lent his light.

V. 27. A man can receive nothing] Or, take unto himself; nothing, no gift: no man ought to usurpe a ministry, which God hath not given him, Heb. 5. 4. as the Syriac interpreter hath it, ex voluntate sui ipsius, of his own will; or at his own pleasure, nor can he fit for it, except God give the ability, 2 Cor. 3. 6.

V. 28. I am not the Christ] Chap. 1. 20. See Luke 3. 15, 16. and John 1. 20. &c.

V. 29. is fulfilled] In that he heard the voice of Christ the bridegroom speaking to his spouse the Church: it is as if he faid, now my work is done; my office fulfilled; whereof I rejoyce. I have done my part and rejoyce in the desired effect.

V. 30. He must encrease] I came to prepare his way, and to manifest himself to Israel: the confluence of people to hear and follow him is the end of my proclaiming him, and testifying concerning him, he must be exalted: and all the people that follow him, I must be obscured; as a star at the rising of the sun.

V. 31. Is earthly] Nothing but man, meer dregges in comparison with Christ.

and speaketh of the earth] Savoureth not the things of God, but of men: as Mat. 16. 23. his doctrine is grounded on earthly or carnal principles: such are we all by nature, and cannot receive, or apprehend the things of the Spirit of God, 1 Cor. 2. 14. untill we are illuminated by the Spirit of adoption and regeneration.

V. 32. No man receiveth his testimony] That is, as Chrysostom, interpreteth ἐδένα, very few believe in Christ, concerning whom John bare witnesse, that he is the Son of God, if he had simply meant, none; why should he have added, he that receiveth his testimony hath sealed, &c. verse 33. and how should we think that the Disciples and others were not herein concerned? but this he saith, to shew his disciples, why they, and the other Jews yet believed not, because Christ was heavenly and they earthly, hath set to his seal] See Rom. 3. 4. Theophylatt interpreteth it by ὑπέρεν, and ὁμολόγησεν he hath demonstrated, and confirmed, that God is true; he hath so professed it, as if he had set to his seal for a more certain confirmation of his writing, or that which is given under his hand.

V. 33. He that hath received his testimony] That is, Μαρτυρίαν αὐτὸ: Theophylatt, the doctrine of the gospel.

V. 34. He whom God hath sent] God herein sent his Son, as the Sun sendeth out his rayes to the earth; in that they are not in their emission divided from their fountain; ita de spiritu spiritus, & de deo deus, faith Tertullian Apol. cap. 21. so is he Spirit of Spirit, and God of God, that there is but one truth, as one God, so that he who believeth him that is sent of God believeth God; as on the contrary, he that believes not in him that is sent, believeth not God who sent him. See Luke 10. 16.

speaketh the words of God] This sheweth a reason why they should believe him, because he speaketh only the words of God; which is the onely ground of faith in which there can be no falsifhood; opinion may be on probabilities; but faith is on certainties, because they are revealed by God, who cannot deceive. See Tit. 1. 2.

not the spirit by measure] But an unmeasurable fulnesse, Colos. 1. 19. & 2. 9. he meaneth by Spirit, the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost: to every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ: Ephes. 4. 7. but his powerful working is, as Chrysostom speaks, ὡρισμένον, unmeasurable: for he hath τὸ πνεῦμα ἀκατάληπτον, and ἀνεκφοίτητον, the whole Spirit, substantially: the Prophets and Apostles had, and the faithful Ministers have a measure, but Christ, the fulnesse whence all receive grace and truth, hath it above all measure, See Rom. 12. 6. Ephes. 4. 7. &c.

V. 35. The father loveth the son] Matth. 11. 27. 10. Matth. 3. 17. Mat. 15. 5. 2. Pet. 1. 17. the father loveth the son, with an incomprehensible love, infinitely; his love not being an accident in him, but the essence of him, 1 John. 4. 8.

all things unto his hand] That is, hath given the rule and power over all things in heaven and earth, to him. See Mat. 28. 18.

V. 36. He that believeth, &c.] Hab. 2. 4. 1 John 5. 10.

hath everlasting life] The Syriac interpreter hath it, est ei vita, quæ est in æternum, it seemeth indeed to expresse a present and indefeasable interest and possession; not onely apprehensible by hope, but even now in being to present sense, for as much as the elect regenerate do now feel the power of the life of Christ in them, and the dayly motions of his spirit working the decay and death of sin, and enabling to some comfortable measure of sanctification. See Gal. 2. 20. they by experience know, how Christ is made of God, their wisdom, righteousnes, sanctification and redemption, 1 Cor. 1. 30 wherein his kingdom is established in them; that is, the kingdom of grace and life eternal, the kingdom of life and glory begun here on earth to be perfected in heaven.

shall not see life] Shall not enjoy; no nor so much as lay an eye on it. See verse 3. & chap. 8. 24. he shall neither be sensible of the life of grace here, nor of the life of glory in the world to come; the Syriac interpreter giveth it, qui non acquiescit filio: he that resteth not, or dependeth not on the Son, in faith for his justification: but seeketh righteousnesse by the works of the law, &c. he shall not be saved.

but the wrath of God abideth on him] For none but those only who are justified by faith in Christ have peace toward God, Rom. 5. 1. out of Christ there can be no reconciliation, by the wrath of God; he means the whole curse of the law, and whatsoever it threatneth impenitent sinners. Salvian expresseth it well, de Gub. Dei. l. 1. ira est autem divinitatis, pana peccati: Gods anger is the punishment of sin, and as Fulgentius. de incarn. & grat. 1. ait igitur ejus, nostra iniquitate est meritum, his anger is the desert of our iniquity, he saith not Gods anger shall come, but it abideth: all are born children of wrath, Eph. 2. 1. because in sin: but this is done away in our regeneration, wherein we are reconciled to God in Christ only. See Acts 4. 12. Rom. 5. 1. but it abideth on the impenitent, and unbelievers, because they are not reconciled to God by faith in Christ.

CHAP. IIII.

Verse 1. When therefore the Lord knew] When Jesus knew; that is, Jesus knowing what the Pharisees heard, and consulted, how they might destroy him, which was the usual result of their consultation concerning him, and his actions which they with an impious deligence observed, that they might have something whereby to calumniate and accuse him.

V. 2. Jesus himself baptized not] he baptized inwardly by the Holy Ghost giving the effect of the outward baptisme here spoken of: and as Optatus l. 5. saith, he baptized indeed; but by the Apostles hands, quibus leges baptismatis dederat, to whom he gave the laws (or rites) of baptisme; so Tertul. de bapt. c. 21. semper dicitur in facere cui præministratur, he is ever said to do a thing, for whose service it is done.

V. 3. he left the Iews] to avoid their rage: that mean must be held in our ministery, neither to be discouraged by causelesse fear, nor rashly to provoke, or expose our selves to enemies.

V. 4. He must needs go] It was his way from Judea to Galilee, and lay between them.

V. 5. A city of Samaria] See on Luke 17. 11. Herod, in honour of Augustus Cæsar, called it Sebaste, according to the Greek, Iero. 70. 1. Epitaph. Paul. Christ thus leaving the proud and malicious Pharisees, opened the treasures of grace and mercy to the despised Samaritans.

Sychar] Sichem, or Shekem. Gen. 33. 18. שכם shechem 70. σικιμων. See Gen. 48. 22. Josh. 24. 32. some think it called since, Neapolis, Naples, or Naploza. See Is. Casaubon exer. 13.

that Iacob gave] Gen. 33. 19. & 48, 22. See Gen. 50. 24. Josh. 24 32.

V. 6. Sate thus on the well] Weary as he was; or, because he was weary, for he travelled with his disciples on foot; & in the form was weary, for his sake he had assumed, would have experience of all our infirmities without sin, therefore he hungred thirsted, was weary, &c.

the sixth hour] About noon: in the heat of the day.

V. 7. give me to drink] Thus he that is rich and Lord of all, became poor for us, that he might make us rich, 2 Cor. 8. 9. we had lost all right and interest in the creatures, so that we could not so much as (in our own right) take a cup of cold water, but as usurpers: untill Christ restored us that interest and right in the creatures: which we forfeited by our attainder in Adam: and thus he asketh, who giveth to all creatures.

so specially to give occasion of discourse for her salvation and many others.

V. 8. Into the city] Sychar, verse 5. that they might there be accommodated with meat, or other necessaries which they wanted.

V. 9. For the Jews have no dealing, &c.] The Samaritans claimed kindred of the Jews in their prosperity, but in their publique afflictions, would never acknowledge them Joseph. Antiq. Iud. l. 11. c. 8. See also l. 9. c. ult. the Jews esteemed them wicked Iud. l. 12. c. 8. See also l. 9. c. ult. the Jews esteemed them wicked and prophane, likewise the Samaritans, thought themselves polluted, if they touched a Jew. See 2 Kings 17. 26. &c. they mutually hated and despised each other; hence was that blasphemous calumny against Christ, whom the Jews called Samaritan, &c. John 8. 48.

V. 10. gift of God] That excellent gift specified, chap. 3. 16. or chap. 7. 38, 39. or himself sent to convert her, or the opportunity of salvation hereby offered her.

living water] The graces of the holy Spirit, which shall never fail. See c. 7. 39. Jer. 2. 13. Joel 3. 18. Zach. 13. 1. Cyril understandeth here, the love of God, and the quickning gift of the Spirit, so Theophylact, τὴν χάριν τὴν ἀγίου πνεύματος, & the grace of the holy Spirit, which faileth not, but bringeth to eternal life,

V. 11. Nothing to draw with] And the Jews and Samaritans held it a pollution, to use the vessels of each other: this it seemeth, she spake, as despising and contradicting that which he said.

V. 12. Art thou greater, &c.] As if she had said; whom makest thou thy self? Jacob that great Patriarch was content with this water, for himself and his family; what better water speak you of?

than our father Jacob?] Thus these mixed and degenerate people bragged. (See 2 Kings 17. 24.) thus hypocrites ever boast of their fathers and ancestors. See c. 8.

V. 13. whosoever drinketh of this, &c.] As if he said; hence you may gather whether I am greater than Jacob or not, if you understand the difference between that mystical and spiritual water which shall nourish to eternity (which Jacob could not give) and this which Jacob gave his sons, which can onely quench a present thirst, but not free you from a future.

V. 14. The water that I shall give him] The grace and spirit of regeneration, of which v. 10. & c. 7. 38, 39.

shall never thirst] It shal so refresh the weary soul, that all desire of good shall be satisfied, in the presence of God: see Psal. 39. 8, 9. Isa. 49. 10.

V. 15. Give me this water] It is likely that she perceived that he spake of spiritual water, but under the notion of a Jew, she was disposed to slight all that he spake: so hard it is to believe their word, of whose authority we are not well perswaded; probably she spake this ironically; this also is a an example of that which Christ said, c. 3. 3, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

V. 16. Go, call thy husband] Christ having a while patiently born with her perverse answers, will now smite her conscience with the sense of her sin, and his Divine Majesty before whom she deported her self so securely and audaciously: so are over-confident sinners to be wounded that they may be healed, the knew that she lived in sinne, yet her conscience could not awake, until a divine hand seemed to touch the wounds thereof: So 2 Sam. 12. 13. here also the tender mercy of Christ is to be observed: he said not, go thou adulteresse, and call thy partner in sin, thy pretended husband, that you may hear your dooms, (as 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10.) but he mildestly stileth him husband, whom he knew to be an adulterer, that she might neither presume any longer to contest with the searcher of hearts, nor despair of his mercy, whose lenity in reproving, spake him merciful to cure and amend, not busie, or malicious to finde fault, or accuse.

V. 17. I have no husband] Thus securely dallieth she in so great an interest as her own salvation; it is hard for sinners (not onely asleep, but) dead in sinnes and transgressions, to awake at the first call of God and to acknowledge his voice therein: the supposing that she talked with meer man, thought with her womanish artificies to elude him, denying her matrimony, and dissembling her adultery; but no captions or fallacies can deceive God.

thou hast said well] Christ collech her plainly of her faults (who could not before understand what he said) in mentioning the fifth man, whom she now had in place of an husband, but truely an adulterer.

V. 19. I perceive that thou art a Prophet] The mentioning of her sin, smiteth her with a greater reverence of Christ, as of a Prophet, who could know those errours of her former life.

V. 20. in this mount ain] Mount Garizim, near Shekem. Jud. 9. 7. in which Sanaballat, by Alexander of Macedon his leave, built them a temple. Joseph antiq. l. 11. c. 8. See Is. Casaubon exer. 13.

Jerusalem is the place, &c.] See Deut. 12. 5, 6. 1 Kings 8. 29. 2 Kings 21. 4. 1 Kings 14. 21. thus would she divert the discourse concerning her sin and shame, by embarking in a national controversie, which had long been handed between the Jews and Samaritans.

V. 21. nor at Jerusalem] The publike worship of God shall be no more restrained to that place, which was appointed thereto for a time, to exercise their faith in expectation of Christ in whom alone we can appear acceptable to God. See Mal. 1. 11. 1 Tim. 2. 8. Ephes. 2. 14, 15.

V. 22. Ye worship ye know not what] See 2 Kings 17. 29 &c. this Christ seemeth to speak that he might check her insolency: as if he had said; you make comparisons with the Israel of God, who worship you know not what: what likelieth it, where they worship, who are ignorant both of the object and manner of the true worship? devotion born of ignorance, and blinde obedience, are strangers in the kingdom of God, the father of lights. James 1. 17. our Saviour saith, John 17. 3. this is life eternall, that they might know thee, the onely true God, and Iesus Christ whom thou hast sent; it is true concerning the heavenly Jerusalem, which was said of the sort of Sion, 2 Sam. 5. 8. the blinde and the lame shall not come into the house; the ignorant, who know not Christ, the true light, John 1. 9. and such as halt between God and Baal, 1 Kings 18. 21. therefore as God began his work of creation Gen. 1. 3. with a, let there be light, so beginneth he the admirable work of our regeneration, by his spirit of illumination, calling us out of darknesse, into his marvelous light, 1 Pet. 2. 9. see Rom. 10. 14. 15. 17.

for salvation is of the Iews] He seemeth to allude to Isa. 2. 3. the meaning is, that the doctrine of saving health, is that which the Prophets have taught.

V. 23. in spirit and in truth] Spirit is here set in opposition to ceremonies, which are called carnal, Hebr. 7. 16 which presigured that which Christ per formed: he requireth now (saith Euthymius) non corporaliter, sed spiritualiter immolantes, those that sacrifice not bodily, but spiritually; remission of sinnes being accomplished in Christs one oblation of himself once offered, there remaineth no more sacrifice for the sins of the living or the dead. See Hebr. 10. 18. there ramaineth still spiritual sacrifice of prayer and praises by us to be offered, 1 Pet. 2. 5. Revel. 8. 4. but no more bodily, proper or external sacrifice: he will be worshipped now, not in the figure (as under the lavv) but in the truth prefigured: and herein he secretly taxeth the Samaritans blinde errour, for that they held no certainty from Gods word, neither was their pretended zeal and devotion according to truth and knowledge, both which are fundamentall to the acts of religion. See Isa. 8. 20. and in this comparison, Christ sheweth the preeminence of the Jewish religion, grounded then on Gods infallible word, and the vanity of the Samaritan superstition and will-worship, built on traditions, and opinions of men, which are ever uncertain: for ignorance of the truth, as Lallantius well noteth, maketh interdum, labentemque sententiam, an uncertain, and slippery affection: will-worship is no religious act; neither are good intentions enough; we must be certain of Gods revealed will, to direct us in his worship, otherwise we cannot do it in faith.

V. 24. God is a spirit] 2 Cor. 3. 17 these words shew the reason of that he last spake concerning spiritual adoration: God requireth adoration in spirit and truth, because his self is a spirit, and truth: God is an incorporeal substance, invisible, incomprehensible, and he is the veritas prima, the light, in whom is no darknesse. 1 John 1. 5. therefore he requireth such adoration as agreeth with his own nature: he commanded bodily worship to Israel in the ceremonial law, which was to be as a schoolmaster, to bring them to Christ, whom the ceremonies thereof prefigured, Gal. 3. 24. — untill the time appointed of the father, Gal. 4. 2. and he confined them to Jerusalem, and the temple there; but now in the fulnesse of time, Christ sheweth that his worship should no longer be confined to Jerusalem, then all things therein prefigured Christ, and the work of mans redemption by him to be wrought, should be accomplished; the Jews therefore, though the peculiar people of God, and in their sacrifices, doing those bodily things, which God for a time commanded them to do, except they, by the spiritual eye of faith, looked to Christ the end of the law, the spiritual eye of faith, looked to Christ the end of the law, neither worshipped God aright, neither were they those legal rights cleansed from their sinnes, for it is not possible that the blood of bulls and goats, should take away sinnes, Hebrews 10. 4. they therefore be accomplished; the Jews therefore, though the peculiar people of God, and in their sacrifices, doing those bodily things, which God for a time commanded them to do, except they, by the spiritual eye of faith, looked to Christ the end of the law, neither worshipped God aright, neither were they those legal rights cleansed from their sinnes, for it is not possible that the blood of bulls and goats, should take away sinnes, Hebrews 10. 4. they therefore and fulfil all things concerning mans redemption therein pretime, and fulfil all things concerning mans redemption therein precime, and fulfil all things concerning mans redemption therein precime, and fulfil all things concerning mans redemption therein predetermination, figured, cleave to a killing letter and misinterpretation of ordinances.

must worship him in spirit] This sheweth wherein Gods service principally consisteth; excluding the Jewish antiquated ceremonies, but not that bodily worship which is requisite, either for our acknowledgement of God before men, order in his publick worship, or the stirring up our own affections in private.

V. 25. which is called Christ] These words (omitted by the Syriac) seem to be the Evangelists interpretation of the name Messias: though the Samaritan religion was very impure, confused, and mingled with sundry errours, yet held they this principle concerning the coming of the Messias: so manifest was this light that it shined to them that sate in darknesse, the very heathens, the Samaritans out of Moses writings. Deut. 18. 18 the impious Balaam. Num. 24. 17. and the devil his self acknowledged some sense thereof: it is probable that this woman understanding by the speech of Christ, that some extraordinary change of the Church, and Ecclesiastical state was was nigh, presently thought of the Messias; the rather, because the marks of his coming, specially the departure of the Scepter from Judah appeared to the world: in her referring the certainty of all things in religious worship to the Magistery of Christ, preferring him before Moses and all the Prophets, the is a good president, where we may learn in him to look for all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, Colos. 2. 3. and to hear him Mat. 17. 5.

V. 26. I am he] When the Jews prefled him, saying, how long doest thou make us doubt (or hold us in suspense?) if thou be the Christ, tell us plainly, chap. 10. 24. He answered not so positively; but here he manifesteth himself: he that saw all hearts, knew that the Jews asked not to believe and be saved, but captiously, and to find some calumny against him; and that this present hearer should convert, and be a means of the conversion of many others, when she should know who it was that talked with her. Christ is never wanting, where he knoweth the revelation of himself will profit to salvation, chap. 6. 64. where his Gospel is hid, it is hid to them that perish, 2 Cor. 4. 4.

V. 27. Upon this] Even as he spake these words:

came his disciples] From Sychar, verse 5, 8. into which they went to buy meat: thus long by Gods providence they were absent, but so soon as he had declared himself to be Christ, they came; left out of zeal, not yet well informed, they might (as sometimes they endeavoured, Mat. 19. 13, 14. Mark 10. 13. &c.) hinder a work of mercy.

V. 28. left her water pot] Having a taste of those waters of life of which Christ spake, the quickly forgat her thirst and fecular necessity, which brought her out to Jacobs Well; and hatted into the city, to draw others to Christ: when our affections are indeed taken up to things above (Col. 3. 1, &c.) our worldly cares in a great measure, fall off like Eliahs mantle when he was taken up to heaven. 2 Kings 2. 13. See Psal. 69. 9 and 10:. 4. Mat. 17. 4. Mat. 4. 20, 22. Mat. 16. 27. Job 23. 12. Psalm 19. 10. and 119. 127.

V. 29. Come see a man] Such is the excellency of heavenly treasures (ever most diffusive of themselves) if one find them, there is no rest until he communicate the same to others: if one find any fecular treasure, he will carefully conceal it; because the more communicate therein, the lesse must every sharer have: but the more by thee are brought to Christ, the more thou hast of that divine riches. She saith not, go out and see a man, &c. but come and see: the seed of this knowledge cannot lie dead in our hearts. See Psalm 116. 10. 2 Cor. 4. 13. It is like the widows oyl. 2 Kings 4. 5, 6. encreased by pouring out: they have but a doubtful hope in Christ, who pretending to send others to him, will not go themselves: nor doth the take upon her to define, or teach; the onely leadeth them to hear Christ, contented to perswade them to see what she had found.

all things that ever I did] My great and many sins: that is, multa quæ erant occulta, Euthymius: many things which were so reserved, that I am confident, he could have told me all; thus she seemeth, not to spare her own reputation, that she might thereby bring others to Christ. See 1 Tim. 1. 15. Acts 22. 3. 1 Cor. 15. 9. Gal. 1. 13.

V. 30. went out of the city] Out of Sychar, verse 5. It was by the instinct of Gods Spirit, that they came, therefore the vility of the reporter hindred them not: we ought not to have the Gospel in respect of persons, nor so much to regard, who speaketh, as what is spoken: they have little affection to believe in Christ, who are so intent to the messengers personal failings, that they thereby chiefly value their message: these do not object her former sins, or infamy, because they were willing by any means to be led to Christ: a contrary mind was in those who said to the man that had been blind, John 9. 34. thou art altogether born in sin, and dost thou teach us?

V. 31. Master eat] Of these things which we have bought. This they said because Christ (subject to human infirmities and necessities for the time assumed) was weary with his journey ver. 6. and it was now about noone: therefore they out of their care for their Master, pray him to refresh himself with such viands as they had bought for him and themselves.

V. 32. I have meat to eat that ye know not of] That which I most desire; or more hunger for than meat; to wit, that I may do the will of God, in saving sinners. See Job 23. 12. because he would make his disciples teachers of the word; he thus teacheth them by his own example, to have a greater care of others salvation, than of their own bodily necessities; and of the kingdom of God, than of all worldly emoluments: he saith not, I do not hunger; but I have meat, &c. thus would he erect their thoughts, and make them attentive to that great work, which they were presently to see in the conversion of the Samaritans: thus would he teach all, rightly to order their desires: first for Gods Kingdom, and then for things necessary to this present life: this one thing duely observed; would both open the windows of heaven to powr us out blessings, and supplies of all necessaries, and make our store a blessing, which without this one method so often proveth a meer curse and occasion of damnation to many.

V. 33. hath any man brought him ought, &c.] They could understand nothing but concerning bodily food: so hard is it to raise the thoughts above carnal reason. See also Mat. 16. 7. Johh 11. 11.

V. 34. to do the will of him] That is, to prosecute the calling of the Samaritans to the knowledge of the Gospel, and to salvation. See c. 6. 40. which he desired more than bodily food: a document is here to the Ministers, of diligence, and fervency, in the execution of their charge; and also of consolation to us all; Christ who then so much zealed the salvation of Samaritans then to be called, hath not lesse care for us whom he hath called.

V. 35. Yet four moneths] יֵשׁ אַרְבָּעָה חֳדָשִׁים עֹד, The Syriac interpreteth, post quatuor menses; after four monthes: it is an Hebrew manner of expression; as Jonah 3. 4. עוֹד אַרְבָּעִים יוֹם had arbahim jom; yet fourty dayes, Aquila. Symmachus, &c. τεσσαράκοντα, fourty dayes. See Augustin. de C. D. l. 18. c. 44.

white already to harvest] Mat. 9. 37. The spiritual harvest is now ripe, as Luke 10. 2. therefore as the ripe corn cannot bear delay (without the owners great losse) but must be gathered in, so must the Jews and Gentiles now ready for Gods kingdom: by regions white to the harvest, he meaneth, (as Chrysostom, Theophylact, Euthymius, &c. interpret) τὸ πλῆθος τῶν σαμαρειτῶν τὸ συρρέον πρὸς αὐτόν, the multitude of the Samaritans coming to him; and their cheerful minds, ready to believe: Cyril more generally and better understandeth, those who being prepared by the voice of the Prophets, were to be instructed in the faith of Christ: we may not unaptly fay of them as Ambrof. l. 10. ep. 8. faith of Eliah; Propheram Domini agnoscebant corvi, quem non agnoscebant Judæi, pascebant corvi, quem genus illud persequebatur: the ravens acknowledged the Prophet of the Lord, whom the Iews acknowledged not: the ravens fed him whom this generation persecuted.

V. 36. that reapeth, receiveth wages] The doctrine of the Prophets, is compared to sowing, and the Ministry of the Gospel, to gathering of ripe fruits; in either, the faithful servant shall have his reward.

V. 38. other men laboured] Meaning the Prophets, and John Baptist. See on verse 36. Moses, the Fathers, Prophets, and Teachers, have laboured very much in teaching and instructing this stiff-necked and obstinate people, drawing them from Idolatry unto the true service of the Lord, expounding the law declaring the promises of God, concerning their expected Messias and Saviour, &c. now the Iews being hereby prepared toward salvation, the Apostles were sent to perfect the work, by gathering believers to Christ, which by the power of the Holy Spirit, they admirably performed after Christs ascension, as Acts 2. 41. when there were added to the Church of Christ in one day, about 3000. souls. Here Christ seemeth to propose two arguments, or motives to their ministration. First, the examples of the foregoing Prophets who sowed the seed of the Gospel. Secondly, the utility and greater facility of the work: all know that it is more easie to reape, than to prepare the earth and sow, and that the profit accrewing to the husbandman is in the harvest.

V. 39. many of the Samaritans, &c.] This was a praludium to the calling of the Gentiles; as were, the coming of the Wise men to seek Christ, and the centurion, &c. Mat. 8. 5. howbeit the fulnesse of the time for their general calling, being not yet come, he gave in charge to his disciples, not to go into the cities of the Samaritans, &c. Mat. 10. 5. for he was a Minister of the circumcision, Rom. 15. 8. sent specially to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Mat. 15. 24. therefore he would not yet give the Jews matter of offence.

V. 40. besought him that he would tarry] They who have any true and real sense of their interest in that which the Gospel proposeth to them cannot but love and desire their company and presence who preach the same: therefore the Samaritans, hearing the gracious words of Christ himself, desired to entertain him: Paul desired to die, that he might be with him, Phil. 1. 23.

V. 41. more believed] For faith is by hearing Rom 10. 17. which, whoever planteth and watereth, God giveth, 1 Cor. 3. 7. For Christ spent those two dayes, (verse 40.) teaching them the mysteries of salvation by Christ to be now shortly after to be divulged not to the Jews onely, but also to the Samaritans and all other nations of the world for the remission of their sins, comfort, and salvation: and it is very probable, which some conjecture, that in that time he resolved them concerning their national question, about the place of true worship; and on that occasion he might teach them many things concerning the Law, Temple, Worship of God, and the Messias; opening the Ceremonies of the Law typifying him, and the Oracles of the Prophets, foretelling those things which were to be accomplished by him: and no wonder if many beleeved on him who preached with that divine evidence and fulnesse of the Holy Spirit, which not onely founded in their cares; but converted their hearts, and begat faith and obedience in them.

V. 42. not because of thy saying] λαλιάν; Commonly importing talkativeneſſe: Suidas interpereth it by ῥᾳδιουργίαν; which Budæus expresseth by the oratorical fluentneſſe of tongue in those who are more studious to please than to profit: as Sedias inſtanceth in Arceſſilaus, ſatis in loquendo liber; as the Hebrews aptly expreſſed it by אִישׁ דְּבָרִים iſh debarim, a man of words; that is, eloquent, as Exod. 4. 10. S. Cant. 4. 3. מִדְבָּרֵךְ midbarech thy ſpeech is pleasant: where the 70. give it by the word here used, ἡ ἀκαλα-σία thy speech, &c. God, complying with our infirmities, hath many wayes and means to bring us to beleeve: he will provoke the Jews by emulation of the Gentiles. Rom. 11, 11. others, by the honest and harmlesse conversation of professours. 1 Pet. 3. 1. Some by the ordinary means, preaching of the word and administration of the Sacraments: some by the authority and credit of the Church; whereas, who, or whatsoever the occasion be, the word of God is the ground on whose certain authority we rest, and for which we beleeve: as here, at the womans report, they believed, and came forth: but all that served onely to bring them to Christ: so saith Augustin. Tract. 15. in Joh. Christ is prea hed to those who are without, and yet not Christians; by Christian friends, tanquam illa mulier, hic est, Ecclesiâ, nunciante, as it were that woman, that is, the Church, declaring, one might well say of himself, I had not believed the Gospel, except I had believed the Church: because the voice of the Church (as this woman the Samaritan.) first moved him to come to Christ: not that he finally built his faith on the authority of men, much lesse preferred it before the authority of Gods Word; but because he acknowledgeth the means (the Ministry of man) by which God brought him to beleeve his divine Word, which onely is infallible: as a man shut up in some dark Labyrinth; being thence led out by some obscure lamp carried before him, to the clear and open sun, might truly say, I had not come to the light of the sun, except I had followed this lamp; yet could it not be thence concluded, that now in the sun-shine, he must still trust to the light of the lamp, or that the suns light should depend on the dimme light thereof; human reason looketh on immediate means and occasions as a cause sine quâ non; between which, and the supreme cause, in a clear view, it discerneth a vast distance; we honour the authority of the Church, and the Ministry of men, but put much difference between the authority of these, and God, on whose infallible truth our faith is grounded.

Saviour of the world] Christ having preached to them, that the salvation which he brought, was Universal without respect of persons; they apprehended their right and interest therein, and so conclude, that he brought conditions of peace to them, who were indeed far off from the covenants of grace, Ephes. 2. 17. their admirable improvement of two dayes hearing; to the apprehension of this sum of the Gospel, must needs rife in judgement and condemn, not only the two years fruitlesse hearing Christ, but also our many years hearing the same word without fruits of faith and repentance.

V. 43. departed thence] From Sychar in Samaria; he would not now stay long there, for the insirm Jews sakes, his course being not finished in Judea.

V. 44. Jesus himself testified] The Evangelist rendreth the reason why Jesus went not into his own countrey Nazareth; they honoured him not as they ought. See Luke 4. 24. Mark 6. 4.

V. 45. the Galileans received him] The proud Jews despised this people, chap. 7. 52. so did they the Samaritans, yet both Samaritans and Galileans received Christ, when the Jews rejected him and his doctrine; many times they, whom arrogant hypocrites despise, as impious and unpolished, more happily receive Christ, and the Gospel than proud boasters.

V. 46. made the water wine] Chap. 2. 1. &c.

a certain noble man] A courtier, or ruler of Herods house, or some principal officer, counsellour or chieftain; the Syriac stileth him עבד טלכא habed malca, a servant of the king, a President or Viceroy; so the Interpreter of the Syriac hath it, gerens vices regis. (See Is. Casaubon. Exer. c. 13. N. 55.) for though Herod Antipas was but a Tetrarch and no King, yet doubtlesse he was by his friends and followers vulgarly stiled King, and so the Evangelists themselves accordingly call him, Mark 6. 14. &c.

V. 47. when he heard] Having heard of the fame of Jesus healing all diseases; and hearing also where he now was; he addresseth himself to him for help for his son.

V. 48. ye will not believe] Yet he beleeved, otherwise he would not have come to him for help; but he beleeved not aright in him, who thought he could not help, except he were bodily present; had he been well informed, he would have beleeved him to be God every where present. Greg. hom. 28, in Evang.

V. 49. come down ere my child die] This sheweth the weakneste of his faith relying so much on the bodily presence of Christ, as if his son could no otherwise be cured: here were two infirmities of his faith discovered. First, in that he thought that Jesus could not heal his son except he were bodily present: He came not to the excellency of the centurions faith, Mat. 8. 8. -- speak the word onely, and my servant shall be healed. -- The second infirmity appeared in that he thought Jesus would come too late, if he came not before the child died; he believed not so much as Martha professed -- I know that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee, Joh 11. 22. yet Christ shewed mercy to the weak.

V. 50 the man believed] The man specified, verse 46, so that here Christ at once cured two; the child of the fever, and the father of unbelief; the man departed, relying on Christs power and mercy.

V. 51. as he was now going down] In the way between Cana and Capernaum: which stood upon the lake or sea of Galilee, on the banck of the river Jordan, in the borders of Zabulon and Neptalim.

his servants met him] Being ambitious to comfort their Master with speed, by bringing him the welcome news of his sons recovery, it is probable, that contending among themselves who should be the messenger, more came to meet him, where one could as easily have brought the tidings.

V. 52. then enquired he of them the hour] Desiring further confirmation of that which he so much wished; and comparing the time and hour in which Christ said, thy son liveth, verse 50. with the servants report of the childes recovery, he found that Jesus not onely declared that which was then done in his bodily absence, (which a Prophet might possibly have done) but that Jesus had cured his son.

seventh hour the fever left him] At one of the clock in the afternoon; for their day was divided into twelve hours, John 11. 9. and began at sun-rising; whence they computed their first hour of the artificial day, so that their seventh hour must fall with our one of the after-noon.

V. 53. and his whole house] The Master finding his sonne recovered, by the word of Christ, bodily absent, beleeved the divine power of Christ; and relating the whole passage of the businesse to all that were in his family, they also beleeved with him.

V. 54. This is again the second miracle] The second which he did in Galilee, in Judea he had done many. Thus will Christ confirm that which he hath begun; and so precious are the souls of a few beleevers in his sight; we read here but of one house gained to the faith; yet he (who foresaw all events to come) for that ones sake, came again to visit what he had planted; he hath regard and care to save one Noah in a perishing world, one Lot in five cities, Gen. 18. 32. he expresseth it in two parables, Luke 15.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. After this] Levit. 23. 2. Deut. 16. After that he had cured the noble mans son, chap 4. 50. But it seemeth that this was not immediately after that. there having been other intervenient things which the other Evangelists relate, and this omitteth.

was a feast of the Jews] Chrysost. Cyril. Euthym. Theophylatt, Lyranus, Bonaventure Fab. Stapulensis. M. Calvin, W. Musculus, and others think it was Pentecost. Irenæus l. 2. c. 39. Ruperius, Oecolampadius, Beza, Rolloc. Iringensis, Scaliger, de emendat. temp. Petavius, Chemnitius hom. Evang. &c. Understand it was the Feast of Passeover; one thing is most probable, that he came up to the feast, as to satisfie the Law on that behalf, so also that in that usual confluence of people, he might find the better opportunity, to divulge the Gospel, concerning their several feasts, See Levit. 22. Numb. 29. Deut. 16.

V. 2. by the sheep market] Or gate, ἐπὶ τῇ προβατικῇ, the first translation understandeth ἐπ' ἀγορᾷ, in the market, because there was neare, a sheep-marked, or beast-market, as Mat. 20. 3. to accommodate sacrifices, who might there buy; the second translation understand πύλῃ, gate: for, saith an Author, by it the beasts to be offered in sacrifice, were brought in, Nehem. 3. 1. and 12. 39. we read שער הצאן shaar hatzon. 70. τῆν πυλὴν τῆν προβατικὴν: the sheep-gate. So Junius and Tremelius give it, portam gregis: this gate was to the southward of the city, in that part of the valley which looketh toward the front of the Temple, and city of David. Adricomius Jerusalem. n. 70. calleth it, forum pecuarium.

Bethesda] Syr. בית חסדא beth chesda, the house of beneficence, or bounty: for, God there bountifully exercised his power in curing all diseases of his people.

having five porches] The word στοὰ here used, hath divers significations; Suidas expresseth it by ταμεῖον (a barn or granary where corn or fruits were laid up) ἢ τὸ περίμηκες εἶναι -- because it was a long room (So Clem. Alexandr. Paed. l. 2. saith ὅτι ἐν ἑαυτῷ ἑστῶσι ἀνεπόδιστοι) the Latines commonly give it, porticus, which we call porches, gallaries, or walkes, to shelter from violent heat or rain: it seemed they had made such about this pool, to shelter sick and lame men, repairing to that place, and watching for the moving of the water, which being sudden, and at no fixed time, they could not have been able to attend, had they had no cover to defend them from the weather, and place to rest in.

V. 3. blind, halt, withered] The Evangelist mentioneth some, to declare that they were no easie or common cures there wrought, but even of the greatest and most desperate maladies.

V. 4. an Angel went down at a certain season] Not in any visible shape, but by the sudden moving of the water, and the admirable effect following in the present cure of him that first went into the water after that motion, it appeared to be the extraordinary work of God, who as he hath made his Angels ministring spirits for the good of his, so doth he powerfully work by them, in extraordinary dispensations.

at a certain season] There are divers conjectures concerning this this season; but when, and how often he descended, we have no certainty.

whosoever then first, &c.] God could have cured all at once in a moment, but in his wisdom he instanceth his presence, power, and mercy, in a few, and at certain times, that all may depend on his providence, and patiently expect him, in respect both of the time and manner of their relief, here are sundry things considerable in these cures. 1. That all diseases, how old, great, or desperate soever, were here cured. 2. That, in a moment, or very quickly. 3. That but on: at once was healed, of so many who expected Gods mercy therein, one onely attained health, and all the rest, to their no small grief were unhelped. 4. That he onely was helped who first stepped in, or was put in; after the moving of the water, as if that one, took up all the healing vertue. 5. That the same water could not alwayes heal, but at certain times, when it had been troubled, as a wrought sea, or from the bottom to the top: for so the word, ἀνάπαυσις, importeth, as ἀνάπαυε δὲ πόντον. Hom. Od. ε. 6. that no other moving, but that of an Angel descending from heaven, made those waters healing: all was to teach us to cast our cares on the Lord, to depend on his providence, who can help with ordinary means, without them, and contrary to them. See 2 Kings 5. 10 and 2. 20. Exodus 14. 22. and 16. 15, 35. Judg. 3. 11. and 15. 15, 19. 2 Kings 4. Mark 8. 23. Joh 9. 6.

V. 5. had an infirmity thirty and eight years] Christ chose out this man, whose condition and disease might seem most incurable, by reason of the long continuance thereof, and he most unlikely to have benefit of the water, who neither was able to move himself, neither had any man to carry him into the pool in due season, this was, as to set off Gods goodnesse in the eminency of the miracle; so in this pattern of patience, to teach us the Prophets rule, though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come, &c. Hab. 2. 3. (God often delayeth that which he will certainly give at last) also to make the afflicted seriously consider their faults for which God punisheth them; see Lam. 3. 39, 40, 41. by a divine disposal it cometh to passe, that, prolixiora vitia agritudo prolixior exurat. Greg. hom. 19. in Evang. long sicknesse burneth out long vices, God delayeth to help, to exercise the faith and patience of the afflicted, to kindle their zeal to prayer, to render his mercies more dear and remarkable; see John 9. 1, 2. 1. John 11. 39. Mat. 9. 20. Luke 13. 11.

V. 6. wilt thou be healed?] There seemeth no doubt but that he (who had with thirty eight years patience endured) would gladly be healed: but this Christ said, to make both him and the spectators the more attentive to that which he was now about to do: thus he preventeth us with his mercy, see Isa. 65. 24. this indeed is proper to the Almighty and true God, inexorata beneficia prabere festis, &c. Arnob. adv. Gent. l 3. to give unbegged benefits, to the weary and infirm: which when he doth in matters spiritual, he maketh us willing to receive who freely giveth of his own good will, so that there, as Synesius de insomn. saith καθαιρῶν τὸ μέτριον μᾶλλον ἢ ἐλαύνων, the greatest part of the cleansing, is the will, to be clean which God worketh in us: of his good pleasure (Phil. 2. 13.) by his preventing grace.

V. 7. I have no man, &c.] So uncharitable was that Jewish Nation become; they thought all Religion consisted in sacrificing, but held not charity, the ground and sum of the Law: in so great a city, so much pretending to Religion, no man, in so long time, shewed so much mercy to this poor man, as to help him into the water: no wonder that Christ sent the learned Doctors to learn that necessary lesson, I will have mercy, not sacrifice (Mat. 9. 13. 1 Sam. 15. 22.) that is, mercy rather than sacrifice.

V. 8. take up thy bed] For the evidence and manifestation of the cure: So Mark 2. 11. Mat. 9. 6. This he saith, that passing through the multitude with his bed on his back, whom many of them probably might know so many years to have there lien helplesse, lame, and not able to move himself for help, the evidence of the miracle might appear.

V. 9. immediately the man was made whole] Though he had been so many years lame, Christ presently healed him, in the same hour, as the interpreter of the Syriac giveth it: and this also cleareth the miracle from all ground of calumny, and suspition of compact, that this man now cured was lame some years before Christ was born: compare verse 5. with Luke 3. 23.

was the sabbath] This also made the miracle more notorious; because all that saw him carrying his bed on the Sabbath, on which none among the Jewes used to bear any burden, would take special notice of the person and fact; had it been on any other day, few would have noted it, or said any thing to it: but now every one that saw him carrying, blaming him for doing that which they judged unlawful, and he excusing it by the command of him that cured him, the fame of the cure grew more publick.

V. 10. the Jewes therefore said] They pretend religion, to overthrow the ground and fundamentals thereof, faith in Christ, and charity to men. (See 1 Tim. 1. 5. 1 Cor. 13. 2, 3.) because Christ healed on the Sabbath, whereas indeed that shewes, that works of mercy are works of the Sabbath made for man. The Jewes of whom he speaketh here, it seemeth were those by whom he passed carrying his bed to his house.

it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed] Jer. 17. 22. it was not lawful to carry, except that carrying had been within the compass of sanctifying the Sabbath, as was the advancement of Gods glory, a work of mercy and necessity, in which Christ shewed it lawful.

V. 11. He that made me whole] He replyeth not concerning works of the Sabbath, but citeth the authority of him, who had divine power to cure him: take heed of rash censure; and consider not onely the letter, but also the intent of the law; which is faith and charity. See on verse 10. 1 Tim. 1. 5.

V. 12. What man is that] They would not acknowledge Gods hand in this work, but enquire after a man by them pretended to oppose the expresse commandment of God concerning the Sabbath; as if they said, do but name that man and what ever he be, he shall not go unpunished, thus were they preposterously zealous, and superstitiously religious, not considering the sense, but the letter of the Law.

V. 13. Conveyed himself away] This sheweth the reason why the man that was healed was ignorant who had healed him and had not enquired concerning the Author of so admirable a blessing on him bestowed: the unexpected sense of perfect health, and strength suddenly recovered, might possibly take up all his thoughts in admiration; and while he was rising and taking up his bed as he was commanded, Jesus went away through the present multitude.

a multitude being] Or from the multitude that was] The Syriac giveth it, he hid himself in the multitude: Which might easily be, seeing there were many of sundry statures there; and in multitudes it is not easie to discern one from another: the word here used is ἐξένευσεν which properly signifieth, to swim out; the multitude is often compared to fluctuant waters Revelations 17. 2. 15.

V. 14. Sin no more] He thus warneth to shew him the cause of his infirmity, and the right use of health, which is, admonishment of the former sinful life: thus good Physitians not only cure, but prescribe for the avoidance of a more dangerous relapse: God delighteth not in our sorrows but therefore smiteth us with infirmity, that he might not condemn us with the perishing world; and certainly sorie must needs befal them, who will not be warned by lighter corrections, either in this life, or that to come. That which Christ saith here, Sin no more lest a worse thing come unto thee, must not be underflood of a simple and absolute intermination of a more greivous affliction to come upon him if he sinned any more at all; for there is no man that sinneth not, 1 Kings 8. 46. but in the Apostles sense, Rom. 6. 12. Let not sin reign therefore in your mortal bodies, that you should obey it in the lust thereof. See also c. 8. 11. 2 Pet. 2. 20, 21.

V. 15. told the Jewes, that it was Jesus] They asked him, who it was, verse 12. now being enformed (probably by enquiring of his Disciples) he telleth them: shewing them that divine and admirable Physician, if possibly they also might want him for themselves or friends.

V. 16. therefore did the Jewes persecute Jesus] For it is the property of hypocrites, under pretence of zeal for Religion, to execute their private malice, which was the true cause why they persecuted Christ; truth ever stimulates it to envy and revenge, but their pretence was zeal to the Law of God, which they would have the people believe that he violated, who healed on the Sabbath day: they persecuted him in calumnies, blasphemous speeches, destractions, and also designing his death; as appeareth verse 18. See Gal. 4. 29. Gen. 21. 9.

V. 17. my Father worketh hitherto] My Father is beneficent in preserving you all on this very Sabbath: and my works are his, and so, no violation of the Sabbath: I work by the same power, which not onely at the beginning created, and still preserveth all the creatures (Heb. 1. 2, 3.) but also healed this man, and so, as Hil. de trin. l. 7. saith well, in eo ergo quod operatur filius, opus patris est: therefore the work of the Father is in that which the Son worketh; they have one power and work. God in the beginning rested the seventh day, which he sanctified: he ceased then (saith Aug. Consent. ep. 146. 9. 2. ab initio naturæ condendæ -- non ab earum administratione) from creating natures or new species but not from his administration, and preservation of those kindes which he then created, for as the same faith, l. 12 de C. D. c. 17. novit quiescens agere, & agens quiescere, he knoweth how to work resting, and to rest working; who doth all things without labour, and lassitude, onely by his word.

V. 18. Because he had broken the Sabbath] This relateth to the Jewes sense: he had not broken the Sabbath, for he came not to destroy, but to fulfil the Law, Mat. 5. 17. but they thought he had broken it.

that God was his Father] This was proper and peculiar to him, as a father by nature, not adoption.

making himself equal with God] They understood not that he was God of God, coequal, consubstantial and coeternal with the Father.

V. 19. Nothing of himself] Or, as distinct from the Fathers work: seeing, as they are one God, so have they one will and one working: for, saith Fulgentius de fide ortbod. in that nature of the Trinity,

Trinity sic totum unum est, ut nihil ibi possit separari vel dividi - - so is all one, that there nothing can be separated or divided: so is all equall, that nothing greater or lesse can there be found.

what things soever he doth, these also doth the son likewise] Whatsoever the Father doth, the Son doth; because they are on God, have one will, power, and working. So Nazianzen. orat. 36 well interpreteth, this ὅτι ἃ ἂν ποιεῖ ὁ πατὴρ ταῦτα καὶ ὁ υἱὸς ὁμοίως, οὐ κατὰ τὴν τῶν γενομένων ὁμοίωσιν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὴν τῆς ἐξουσίας ὁμοτιμίαν --- not for the similitude of those things they do but in respect of the same power and authority of both, the son doth not imitate, but co-operate; he worketh not the like, but the same work which the Father doth.

V. 20. Sheweth him all things] By a divine and unspeakable communication. The Father worketh so, as that the Son who is one with him, c. 10. 30. 1 John 5. 7. not onely seeth or knoweth what the Father doth; but also co-operateth in all that he doth: and the Father worketh by him.

greater works than these] That is, he will yet do more admirable works than these which ye have already seen; works which shall more evidently set forth his glory, and declare his divine power working by me.

V. 21. Quickneth whom he will] ζωοποιεῖ, maketh alive, or giveth life; understand here by life, righteousnesse, all the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and all things belonging to our salvation, with all the parts and degrees thereof; he findeth us all dead in sins, Ephes 2. 1. therefore in the work of our Salvation he must needs begin from our first resurrection to the life of grace: and these words, raiseth up, and quickneth; shew that he both raised up, and delivereth from sin and also sanctifieth us by the same spirit (See Rom. 8. 10, 11.) which he doth, (as all other acts of mercy, or, ad extra) with the Father: therefore also when he would raise Lazarus he prayed, and gave thanks to his Father c. 11. 41. that we might know, they they joyntly wrought in the same work.

V. 22. The Father judgeth no man] Chap. 8. 15. He saith, I judge no man: that is, in point of civel judicature: or, I alone judge no man: and indeed he came not then into the World to judge, but to preach the gladsome tidings of salvation: so the Father judgeth not alone, because he judgeth by the Son, Acts 17. 31. Rom. 2. 16. the word (judgeth) here, as verse 27, 30, signifying full power to rule in Heaven and Earth: as Mat. 11. 27. and 28. 18. He saith the Father judgeth no man, as they imagined, who separated him from the Son; by whom as he created all, so ruleth he, and judgeth he all: so he saith he came not to do his own will, but the will of his Father. See verse 30. and c. 6. 38. c 7. 16. not simply, but in their sense who would divide the Father and the Son, so he often times speaketh. See chap. 9. 3.

V. 23. Honour the Son] In the unity of the Godhead; neither of them can be truly worshipped without the other, as the following words expressely shew.

V. 24. but is passed from death unto life] That is, shall as certainly, as if it were actually alreadie.

V. 25. the dead shall hear the voice] In the first, or spiritual resurrection. See Rev. 20. 6. and compare therewith, Ephes. 2. 1. 1 Tim. 5. 6.

and they that hear shall live] They that believe, and obey the voice of Christ, shall live eternally.

V. 26. So hath he given to the Son] He rendreth a reason of that he said the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and live: because God the Father, who is the eternal Fountain of Life, communicateth his whole Essence to the Son: so that, as he is the eternal Word and Wisdom of God, He hath all things of himself: but as he is the Son of man, He hath received all things of the Father, as, authority and power to execute judgement; which understand principally of the last general Judgement, as that. c. 3. 17. God sent not his Son into the World, to condemn the World, &c. that is, not now in his state of humility.

V. 27. To executue judgement] Supream power, to govern and administer all things because he is the Son of man] Not onely as he is God, but also as he is man; that all men may see their Judge, Rev. 1. 7.

V. 28. All that are in the graves] That is, all the dead, in Sea and Land: This he saith to shew that he will not onely raise the believers to the life of grace here, but also to the life of glory in the world to come: and though the obstinate sinners would not hear his voice, preaching conditions of mercy and salvation to them now; yet shall they against their wills, hear his voice and feel his power raising them from the dead, and summoning them to judgement.

V. 29. They that have done good] See Mat. 25. 46. wherein they shall be rewarded according to, not for their works; life eternal is Gods free gift, not mans merit. See Rom. 6. 23.

V. 30. as I hear, I judge] As I know my Fathers judgement; as before verse 19. he useth the word, Seeing. so now he useth this of hearing; which signifieth his receiving wisdom, ability to judge, and his whole nature (as God) of the Father; as man he receiveth it of the Deity, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

because I seek not mine own will] Either in judging, or doing; I do my Fathers will in all, and therefore I my judgement just, because according to the will of my Father: men in judging too often do their own wills, not Gods; and therefore erre: but he that judgeth according to the most holy and just will of God, is just.

V. 31. if I bear witnesse of my self] Chap. 8. 14. If I only testified, ye might distraut; but now, God, the onely sufficient witnesse of himself, testifieth of me.

V. 32. There is another] That is, God the Father, as c. 7. 18. he acknowledgeth me his onely Son in whom he is well pleased, Mat. 3. 17. & 17. 5. for that I arrogate nothing to my self, which God my Father doth not avow.

V. 33. ye sent unto John] He presseth them with Johns testimony, which they durst not deny: and with their own judgement, who sent unto him to be resolved concerning Christ; why should you send to him except you would stand to his testimony? he gave witnesse to the truth, which ye condemn as falshood.

V. 34. receive not testimony from man] I ground not on mans witnesse: man can no more prove Gods truth, than a lamp can shew us the sun.

V. 35. he was a burning and a shining lamp] He was not that light of lights mentioned, c. 1. 8. but one bearing witnesse of him: he was an eminent light, ardent in the zeal of faith and piety: so that the unbelieving Jews were wilfully darkened, and voluntarily erred in their inconstancy, wherein they never liked any long, were they never so admirable lights, in sincerity of zeal, and truth of doctrine.

for a season to rejoyce] Until you distasted his testimony concerning me.

V. 36. I have greater witnesse] See Mat. 3. 17. Mat. 17. 5. 1 John 5. 7. He saith, greater, not truer, both were true; but the works which Christ did, more evidently concluded that he was the Son of God, and are so said to testifie of him, as the Heavens are said to declare the glory of God, Psalm 19. 1. See John 10. 25.

V. 37. Hath born witnesse of me] Mat. 3. 17. 2 Pet. 1. 17.

nor seen his shape] See on c. 1. 18. Deut. 4. 12.

V. 38. ye have not his word abiding in you] They had the true word of God (as many now have) in their Closets, but not in their hearts: they neither understood the meaning thereof, nor did they see their hearts to obey it, see c. 8. 19, 37. they who receive not Christ, are no true disciples of Moses and the Prophets.

V. 39. search the Scriptures] Or, ye do search, as Acts 17. 11. he proveth himself to be the Messias. 1. By the Pathers testimony. 2. By John Baptists witnesse. 3. By his works 4. Now by the Scriptures, the word ἐρευνᾶτε, may be either the indicative, and so translated, ye do search, or the imparative, and so it is to be given, search ye, the first sense impleath a just reproof of their preposterous diligence; as if he said, you do indeed read and search the Scriptures, rightly thinking that the doctrine of Salvation is thence to be drawn: yet you obstinately dis-believe him of whom the Scripture witnesseth, that there is salvation in none other: and here, that which Hil. l. 7. de trin. faith is very comfiderable: it cannot (faith he) be denied, that from misunderstanding, the controversie concerning faith arose, dum quod legitur sensui potius coaptatur, quàm lectioni sensus obtemperat: while that which is read is rather fitted to the sense (of the reader) than (his) sense subjected to that he readeth: and again (contr. Constant.) he faith there is none of the Hereticks which doth not feigne, or falsly pretend that he preacheth according to Scriptures; even those things in which he blasphemeth: they all speak Scriptures, without their sense, and pretend faith, without faith; Scripturæ enim non in legendo sunt, sed in intelligendo: for the Scriptures are not in reading (or the letter) but in understanding (that is, inward sense and true meaning) and again; optimus enim lector est, qui dilorum intelligentiam expellet ex dictis potius quàm imponat, & retulerit magis quem attulerit; neque cogat id videri dictis contineri, quod ante lectionem præsumpserit intelligendum, &c. for he is the best reader, who rather expecteth the meaning of the sayings from the words, than imposeth it (on them) and rather varieth away from, than bringeth sense (so that he readeth) and who foreeth not the words to seem to carry that sense, which before his reading, he presumed must be understood; therefore when the speech shall be concerning God, let us yeild God the knowledge of himself, and attend his words with holy reverence: for he is a competent witnesse of himself, who is not (cannot be) known, exeept he reveal himself. The second sense importeth an exhortation to search the Scripture, not superficially, but as Euthymius after Chrysost. saith, he commandeth them to dig deep that they may find: ὡς τῶ Θεῶν κείμενα, τοὺς τύπους which are in the depth; for it is not in the superficies, ἀλλ' ἀσαφὴς τῆς ὑποκρυφῆς ἐν πολλῷ τῷ βάθει κατέκειτο: but as a treasure hid in great depth ye think ye have eternal life] He saith not, ye have, but ye think ye have: teaching that they (as now too many) deceived themselves, think salvation in their learning, or reading the word was sufficient without faith and obedience thereto: See Rom. 2. 13. Hebr. 4. 2.

V. 40. he

V. 40. he will not come to me] The meaning is, that they labour in vain in reading the Scriptures, who make it not their principal aym, to finde Christ therein: and that it was their malice which hindred them from receiving the benefit of eternal life offered them in the Gospel; in saying ye will not come, he taxeth their contumacy as the chief cause of their ignorance and blindnesse; opinion of having in themselves sufficient sanctity to save them, is a dangerous obstruction; they who think themselves healthy, seek not to the Physician.

V. 41. I receive not honour from men] That is, not humane applause, (had I been ambitious thereof, I would never have taken on me the form of a servant) Christ is greater, than that opinion or judgement of men can either take from, or adde to his glory: to an infinite, nothing can be added, nothing can be taken from it.

V. 42. ye have not the love of God in you] As if he faid, I well know why ye come not to me, because ye have no true love of God in you: you may blasphemously pretend other causes of your not believing in me, you may impose upon an ignorant vulgar; but I know you: he taketh the love of God here, for the ground of all true religion and sanctity, the summe of the law. Deut. 6. 5. God feeth the hypocrisie of those, who have God, truth, and godlinelle in their tongues, but devilish malice, pride and vain glory in their hearts.

V. 43. If another shall come] If a false Prophet should come, you would be too apt to receive him: so did they in Trajans time follow their Barchochebas, whom almoft all the Jewes took for their Mesias: this impostor caused great effusion of blood between the Jewes and Romans: but when they perceived the mischief he had led them into, the Jewes called their Barchochebas (which fignifieth, the son of a star) barchezhiba, that is, the son of a lie. See Pet. Galatin. de arcan. Cathol. verit. Jo. Druf. præterit. l. 4. in Jth. 5. 43. and ib. ad. v. N. T. par. ult. Sph. 5. 43.

V. 44. how can ye beleeve] That is, ye cannot beleeve, because of your ambition, which is contrary to the love and honour of God. It is impofsible that you fhould beleeve in me the son of God and only Saviour of the cleft now under the form of a fervant, fo long as the height of your ambition is only to externall pomp, fecular glory, and applauſe of men, which ye mutually give each other, whereof you find nothing in me, nor defired of me.

which receive honour one of another] Which love the praife of men more than the praife of God. c. 12. 43. one flattering another with the characters of juſt, wiſe, and godly: defirous onely to pleaſe men, and to ſeem holy to them, that they may ſpeak well of them, not valuing the judgment or praiſe of God. See Rom. 2. 29. 1 Cor. 4. 5.

V. 45. there is one that accuseth you] Moſes, or the law (in the works whereof ye truſt to be juſtified) ſhall condemn you, who continue not in every thing written therein, neither beleeve in Chriſt of whom he teſtified.

Moſes in whom ye truſt] They boaſted that they were Moſes diſciples, and oppoſed him to Chriſt (chap. 9. 28. 29.) he telleth them that the law given them by the Miniſtery of Moſes, will accuſe and condemn them.

V. 46. If ye had believed Moſes] He ſheweth why Moſes ſhould accuſe and condemn them; becauſe they beleeved him not; ſo dangerous is it to pretend to that which we will not obey, nor believe.

he wrote of me] Gen. 3. 15. Deut. 18. 15. Gen. 49. 10. Num. 24. 17. &c. indeed the whole ſcope of the ceremoniall law was to prefigure Chriſt to come, ſuffer for our redemption, and cleanſe us from all our ſins: for he is the end of the law to every beleever: ſee the whole ayme of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, and Acts 7. 2. &c. Luke 24. 27.

V. 47. how ſhall ye beleeve in me?] That is, ſeeing you pretend highly to reverence Moſes, and yet beleeve him not any further than you finde in his writing compliance with your own opinions; how ſhould you beleeve in my words of which you have no luſt eſteem? This veil yet laid over their heart; in reading the Scriptures, ſhall be taken away, when the ſulneſſe of the Gentiles is come in. See 2 Cor. 3. 16. Rom. 11. 25.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1. THe ſea of Tiberas] The lake of Genezareth: Tiberias, Bethſaida and Capernaum, were on this ſide the lake, in reſpect of Galilee: but it is here ſaid, that he paſſe over, becauſe he croſſed ſome creeks running up into the the land, or ſome bayes, that he might go the nearer way: See on Luke 5. 1. and on John 21. 1.

V. 2. becauſe they ſaw his miracles] This was the cauſe why they followed him into the defarts: ſeeing his admirable power; healing all diſeaſes, they conceived that he was ſome great Prophet ſent of God: hence was that zeal to attend him ſo, as that they neither minded their want of meat, or lodging in the defart: which muſt riſe in judgement and condemn our careleſſeneſſe towards Gods word, from which the leaſt let uſeth to detain or diſtract us, though we are not to follow Chriſt now into the deſart mountains; his word is near us. Rom. 10. 8.

V. 3. went up into a mountain] Probably for the ſame reaſon which is expreſſed, Mark 6. 31. that they might reſt a while. A mountain in the deſart of Bethſaida. Luke 9. 10.

V. 4. and the Paſſover] Levit. 23. 5. Deut. 16. 1. See chap. 2. 13. this muſt be the third Paſſover after Chriſts baptiſm, if that feaſt mentioned, chap. 5. 1. was the Paſſover.

V. 5 lift up his eyes and ſaw a great multitude] Thus he underſtaketh the care for them, who for his ſake neglect themſelves. See Mat. 14 15, 16, 18, 19, &c.

ſaith unto Philip] He ſpake to Philip, becauſe it ſeemeth he ſpake the ſence of his fellow diſciples: we may not conceive that Chriſt thus ſpake, as ſoon as he ſaw this multitude: for the other Evangeliſts ſhew that he firſt taught them many things concerning the kingdom of God, and healed thoſe who were infirm, by which time it was almoſt night; then took he care to feed and diſmiſſe them. See Mark 6. 37. Luke 9. 13.

V. 6. This he ſaid to prove him] Not that Jeſus knew not before hand, what Philip would anſwer, but, ſee Gen. 22. 1. God tempted; or tryed Abraham, to make Abraham know his own faith and obedience; ſo here to make Philip know his faith, whether (ſeeing in the ordinary way of nature there were no means) he would have recourſe to Chriſts omnipotency; of which he had ſeen ſo much experience? and to ſhew him the defects thereof in the following miracle.

V. 7. two hundred peny worth] As if he ſaid, neither know we where timely to buy ſo much for them before night, neither is that a little money in our caſh.

V. 9. there is a lad here which, &c.] He had ſaid firſt unto them, how many loaves have ye? go and ſee, Mark 6. 38. which when Andrew had conformed himſelf of, in the name of the reſt, he ſaith, there is a lad, &c. five loaves, that is, to ſell: for it is probable that their own ſtore, after their repaſt in the mountain, was very ſlender: this ſetteth off the truth of the miracle of feeding ſo many, ſo fully, when there was neither in the diſciples keeping, nor among the multitude, any more, than ſo incompetent a ſtore for them all.

what are they among ſo many] Neither did he yet think of any more than humane and ordinary ſupplyes. He knew not that Chriſt would by his divine power encreaſe this ſmall ſtore to a ſufficiency to feed this great multitude, and therefore anſwereth; as relating to ſecond cauſes, by whoſe proportions, it was no competent food for 5000. men. We here very much live and are guided by ſenſe, and therefore uſually determine and judge, according to the principles thereof, and ſo, not ſo conſtantly rely on the omnipotent providence of God, as indeed we ought; when Elijah, 1 King. 17. 10, &c. ſaid to the widow at Zarephath, bring me I pray thee a morſell of bread in thy hand; ſhe had ready to ſay, as the Lord thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but an handfull of meal in a barrell, and a little in a cruce: and behold I am gathering two ſtickes, that ——— we may eat it and dye. —— Experience made her better underſtand the power of Gods providence.

V. 10. make the men ſit down] When theſe loaves and ſiſhes were brought him; he doth not here reprove their unbelief, but confirm their faith by the miracle done. He would have them thus ſit down on rowes, as Mark 6. 39. 40, that the diſciples might the more readily diſtribute to every one a portion; and that the number appearing, the miracle might be more evident unto them all then preſent; See Luke 9. 14.

So the men ſate down] ἀνέπεσον, they fell or lay down; as their manner was to eat: they were uncertain of the event; but yet readily obeyed his word: ſuch readineſſe was alſo in the waiters at the Canaa wedding, to fill the water-pots with water when they vvanted wine. Chap. 2. 7. this is a triall of faith, when God commandeth men to do that, whereof for preſent they apprehend neither event, nor reaſon: mans reaſon vvould have ſaid to this multitude, high you way leſt you be famiſhed here, by a little more delay; but ſitting dovvn here as he commanded, vvhere there appeared no probability of ſupply, they found abundance to ſuffice them all: thus vvill he teach us not to rely on our ovvn vviſdomes, but to depend on his providence and vvord, vvho never fruſtrateth the hopes of his. See Mat. 14. 21.

V. 11. when Jeſus had given thanks] That is, as the Syriack hath it, ברך bharec, and bleſſed it: So alſo Mat. 26. 26. Luke 9. 16.

he diſtributed] By the Miniſtery of the diſciples, to every one as much as fully ſatisfied them to a perfect refection: vvhich is added to ſet out the truth and excellence of the miracle, thoſe victualls being not ſparingly, but fully and freely given to every one preſent.

V. 12. gather up the fragments] This he commanded, as for the evidence of the miracle; ſo alſo that none of Gods bleſſings might be loſt vvherein vvould have appeared a contempt or undervaluing of them: to teach us an holy frugality in the uſe of Gods creatures: of vvhich vve are but ſtevvards, and muſt once give account; and that vve muſt rely on Gods providence, vvho can make the leaſt meaſure ſufficient.

V. 13. filled twelve baskets] So vvonderfully had he encreaſed the ſmall ſtore. See alſo 1 King. 17. 15, 16. and 2 King. 4. Mat. 14. 20.

V. 14. this is of a truth that Prophet] ὁ ἐρχόμενος, the Prophet which was to come; that is, whose coming we have hitherto expected: or as the Syriack interpreter hath it, qui venit in mundum, who is now come into the world: this is the Messias promised by God, Deut. 18. 15. such is the vulgar, more sensible of bodily and temporal benefits (which they expected in Christ) than spiritual and eternal: we read not that they thus acknowledge him in his most divine and unparaleld preaching to them the mystery of eternal life: but when he feeds their bellies, then they cry, this is that Prophet.

V. 15. to make him a king] This also shewes how much they regarded their bellies, more than their soules: when he gave them the best spiritual food they offered him no such honour, but because he thus fed them, they would proclaim him the king Messias; under whom they dreamed of health, wealth, fullnesse, victory, protection and all secular blessings. So much lived they to carnal sense; to few understood the true end of Christs coming into the world, which was that he might suffer for us, and redeem us from the power of Satan, death and hell.

into a mountain himself alone] Where he used to pray: his kingdom is Spiritual, not of this world; therefore offended at their perverse service, who would thus honour him, he withdrew himselfe from them.

V. 16. when even was now come] Mat. 14. 23. and that now having sent his disciples aboard before him, he might the more conveniently dismisse the multitude, and withdravv himself into the mountain.

V. 17. went over the sea] That is, some creek or arm thereof, as verse 5. Mark 6. 45. he bade them go before to Bethsaida, while he sent the people away (because Bethsaida was in their way as they went toward Capernaum) while he was dismissing them, it seemeth they were conspiring to make him king, and therefore he went from them into the mountain alone

V. 18. and the sea arose] Swelled, as the Syriack hath it; was rough and high running.

V. 19. about five and twenty or thirty furlongs] Above three miles from shore; so little way had they made from the evening to the fourth watch of the night. See Mat. 14. 25.

V. 20. It is I, be not afraid.] They were troubled for his absence, and terrified with his presence, when they thought they had seen some ghost walking on the water; therefore he discovereth himself to them: thus are the faithful secure and full of comfort in the presence and protection of Christ; at whose voyce the wicked tremble, and are cast down: Chap. 18. 6.

V. 21. they willingly received him] Though they were afraid of him at first, when they knew him not, yet hearing his voyce, they were glad of his saving presence, and received him into the ship, Mat. 14. 32. Mark 6. 51. John sheweth another part of the miracle by them omitted, that is, the sudden arrival of the ship, which before Christ came aboard, with all their art and labour, rowing, and what ever they could do made so little way. See verse 19. So Christ not only comforteth in word, but also in reall deliverance of his.

V. 22. which stood on the other side] Which lodged thereabouts, and supposed that Jesus had been there still, where the miracle was done.

but that his disciples were gone away alone] That is, by themselves without Jesus with them: it is doubtful with which of the two, the disciples (as in this our translation) or with the noun collective, the multitude. this verb ἀνῆλθον, went away, is to be construed: the latter seemeth probable, and the sence may be, when the multitude saw that the disciples onely took shipping, and that Jesus went not with them, they, that is, the multitude, went away or departed,

V. 23. they also took shipping] That is, in some of those which came from Tiberias, to the Syriack hath it, they went into these ships: we read of no storm in their passage, but onely upon the tryals. It bare a type of the world sailing before the winde with a fair gale, while they that are Christs feel the storms and wrestling winds of afflictions, the more to confirm them in their deliverance.

V. 25. when camest thou hither?] Seeing we have waited on thee, and marked that there was none other ship here, save that in which thy disciples went over before thee; when, and how couldst thou come over sea? Theophylatts conjecture is probable; they might possibly suspect, that he went on foot to the other side miraculously.

V. 26. but because ye did eat] He answereth not to their question, but knowing their thoughts, reproveth them, for that they valued not his doctrine, or confirmation thereof by miracles, so that they might beleeve and be saved, but cared principally for their bellies; the fault that our carnal gospellers are commonly guilty of: they think they do excellently seek Christ, when yet their chief aym and care is to finde ease, peace, wvealth, credit, or some temporal blessings in their practise, or profession of the gospel: thus would the covetous Jewes have impropriated Christ himself into secular uses; so unworthy a value set they upon that inestimable mercy of God in giving them his onely begotten Son, as if he had onely given them some secular, and soon-perishing blessing in him, and not eternal life and salvation: so hard a matter is it to cast off the importunate cares and desires of flesh and blood, that yve may affect, and receive the unvaluable mercy of God for our salvation in Christ, Vix quæritur Jesus propter Jesum, said Augustine on this place; rarely is Jesus sought for his own sake: but indeed, then the heart is right to God, quando propter Deum quæritur Deus, Prosper sent. vvhen God is sought for his own sake: and hovv great should our happinesse be in heaven, if vve did not vvith profane Esau, undervalue it for temporal supplies? See on Mat. 6.2.and Mat. 5.12. Seek in Christ first the kingdom of God and his righteousnesse, and be confident, he that for thy salvation assumed a reasonable soul and humane body, that he might suffer such things therein for thy redemption, will not lose thee again by leaving thee destitute of temporal necessaries. See Rom. 8. 32. by this examine whether thou seek God for love of God, or out of self-love: doest thou patiently bear afflictions, in regard that God thereby trieth thee? doest thou love and depend on God as well smiting thee, as giving temporal blessings unto thee? but if thou be impatient, or desperate in thy sufferings, as 2 Kings 6.33. Job 2. 9. thy seeking God hath been for thine own sake.

V. 27. Labour not for the meat which perisheth] Or work not, and not forbidding labour for things necessary to this life. See Gen 2. 15. Gen. 3. 19. Gen. 9. 20. 2 Thes. 3. 10. Ephes. 4. 28. but preferring the care for things eternal, as Mat. 6. 33. So Mat. 9. 13. he excludeth not sacrifice, but preferreth mercy.

that meat which endureth unto life everlasting] That is, those things which are appointed by God to refresh and sustain their souls to eternity.

for him hath] Mat. 3. 17. He sheweth why we must seek that food which perisheth not but endureth to everlasting life, in Christ only, there's no other name given under heaven, the Father hath assigned him only unto this office, him only hath he commissionated hereto, by many signes and wonders, as it were under his own signet deputing him to that great office.

God the Father sealed.] Or allowed and confirmed to the office of our redemption: a simile derived from them who give commissions under hand and seal.

V. 28. the works of God] 'pleasing to God, or which he requireth, that we may thereby find that meat thou speakest of, remaining to eternity. Some new works they dreamed of, that they might find that Lord of eternal life: Christ spoke not of any works more than in the general; but they thought of something which they had not yet learned in the law, which must be done by them, that they might gain it, therefore they speak to this sense; we are ready and most willing to learn, if thou pleasest to teach us herein.

V. 29. This is the work of God] 1 John 3. 23. his commandment and will: as also his work and gift, Ephes. 2. 8. that which God requireth of you, that ye should beleeve in me: having spoken of works and life eternal; lest they should imagine it could be merited or gained by the works of the Law without Christ (for if so, Christ had died without cause or in vain, Galat. 2. 21.) he recalleth them to faith in him, wherein only is eternal life.

V. 30. What signe shewest thou] This one thing manifested how little they profited by the miracles they saw: admiring his works, and thence being perswaded that he was the Messias, insomuch as they would have made him their King; yet now they require a signe, as if he had done nothing among them: Chrysostome here noteth their stupidity, who having present signes, yet aske a signe: inconsistent are the desires and votes of the giddy vulgar: because Christ would not comply with their fancies, and become such as they dreamed their Messias should be (but on the contrary reproved their sensuality and spiritual blindnesse) they contest as with one no further to be heard or followed: as if they had said, What shewest thou, that we should thereby be perswaded to forsake Moses Law, in vvhich vve and our fathers have been brought up; to sollovv thee, and cast our selves and the hope of our salvation on thee? if Christ vvill not answver their desires, he shall no longer be a Master for them.

V. 31. Our fathers did eat Manna] Exodus 16. 15. Numbers 11. 7. As if they said, under Moses conduct vvhom vve yet sollovv, our fathers were fed fourty yeares in the vvilderness: what greater work doest thou, that vve may cleave to thee? he gave them bread from heaven] Wisdome 16. 20. So is the Manna called, Psalm. 78. 24. דגן שמים dagan shamaim, the corne of heaven. So Jerome after the Hebrew, triticum cæli: the 70. give it ἄρτον οὐρανοῦ, the bread of heaven; so it is called לחם אבירים lechem abbirim, 70. ἄρτον ἀγγέλων, the bread of Angels. Hebr. the bread of the mighty or the strong, So Jerom after the Hebrew, panem fortium, not that the Angels do eat, but because (say some) God by their ministery fed Israel therewith. Some understand אלהים elohim, as if it were the bread of the mighty God; or as others, the bread of Princes and Potentates, the most excellent bread. See V. Sbindler. in אלה Jerom understandeth Christ

Christ (of whom the Manna was a type) ex hoc enim pane cœli (saith he) sancti reficiuntur & angeli; with this bread of heaven saints and angels are refreshed and fed; this ἄρτον ἐκ τῆς ὕφης, understand as ferax & fylvis (i.e.) fylvestris. So Joh. Drus. prater. lib.4. because it distilled from the clouds, not that it was heavenly bread nourishing to eternal life; that Christ denieth, affirming himself onely to be that bread. So 1 Cor. 10.

V. 32. Moses gave you not that bread] Moses gave not your fathers, so much as that perishing bread the Manna, which was for a temporal use, but God gave it; and he now giveth you in me the bread of life.

the true bread from heaven] That which being apprehended by faith shall nourish you to eternal life; here this ἀληθινὸν, is put in opposition to the type which their fathers did eat in the wilderness, in the tipe true; to typifie, as the thing figured, to the figure; for that Manna was a figure of Christ, that same ἄρτος ζωωδὸς, life-giving bread (Nazianzen orat. 35.) truely but spiritually and mystically to feed our soules to eternal life,

V. 33. He which cometh down from Heaven] That is Christ v. 35.

V. 34. evermore give us this bread] Either they spake ironically, and scoffingly, as the Samaritan, chap. 4. 15. So Mat. 27. 42. or they herein discover, that their minds were all on their bellies.

V. 35. cometh unto me] By true faith. See verse 36. this same ὁ ἐρχόμενος πρὸς ἐμὲ, cometh unto me, importeth an accession to (as of them that give their names to Christ by Baptisme) and a communion with, and participation of Christ, as they have who truly believe in him, shall never hunger.] See chap. 4. 24. in these termes, shall never hunger ---- shall never thirst, he sheweth them the vast difference between the manna and Christ: that satisfied the eaters for a little time, but this, for ever; that nourished, and sustained the mortall body for a short season, as verse 49. but this, shall sustein to all eternity.

V. 36. ye also have seen me and beleeve not] He noteth their voluntary blindnesse (as Mat. 13. 13, 14, 15.) who sufficiently seeing the admirable effects of his divine power, yet would not beleeve in him: the curse was upon them which was threatned, Isaiah 6. 9. So, auribus audivit, surdi erant, Augustin. they were deaf with open ears.

V. 37. all that the Father giveth me] All whom he elected, shall believe in Christ, and obey the Gospel, and so not perish. He prepossesseth an objection which some might have made: behold we here present have heard and followed thee; why appeareth not this effect, of beleeving in thee in all of us? he first intimated that some of the multitude already did, and others afterward should beleeve, and therein have a blessed refreshing rest, and peace of conscience in Christ (Rom 5.1, &c.) Secondly, he derived the matter unto the fountain, Gods free election to faith in, and salvation by Christ. See Rom. 8. 29, 30

V. 38. I came down from heaven] The deity could not descend by changing place, because he comprehendeth all, and can be comprehended of none; neither came his humane body from heaven, but was truly of the seed of Abraham, (See Heb 2. 16.) but he is said to come down from heaven, in respect of his incarnation, wherein the deity united to the humanity, makes one person of Christ, God and man.

V. 39. This is the Fathers will, &c.] Because they understood not, what he meant by that will of God, for wh ch he came from heaven, he expresseth it here, to be, that he should save all th. Elect.

V. 40. and beleeveth on him] He here sheweth the meanes of salvation, faith; as Ephes. 8. and who are they to whom the Father hath given him; those only that beleeve in him: here look for thy calling and election. See Rom. 8. 30. 2 Pet. 1. 10. 2 Cor. 1. 22. Ephes. 1. 13.

V. 41. murmured at him] Because they understood the words of Christ carnally; when he killed their bellies, they had him in the opinion of their long expected Messias, they would have then made him their king: but when he telleth them the truth, and teacheth them divine and heavenly things, they murmur and start back: observe here the seed and beginning of their fearful apostacie and falling from Christ; it was murmuring at the truth through unbelief: it is commonly so still.

V. 42. Is not this Jesus the son of Joseph?] See Mat. 13. 55. Luke 4. 22. because they expected a magnificent and externally glorious Messias: they were offended at Christ in the forme of a servant, and in many of sorrows, though so coming to save them: and probably they understood him, as if he had said, that he was not born in this world among men, but came down as an Angel from heaven; they knew not that he was truly God, as truly man: so perverse is carnal reason; that which should have been an argument of gratitude, (that he vouchsafed to make himself of no reputation, to honour them with the the title of the sons of God) they make the ground of their impious contempt of him.

V. 43. murmur not among your selves] As if he had said, my words contain no matter of scandall; the fault is in your selves, who can neither beleeve nor understand them; because God hath justly given you up to spiritual blindnesse and undbeleef, for your pride and obstinacie.

V. 44. No man can come to me] No man can understand and beleeve these things, except God teach, enlighten, and give him faith; no man can know God, nisi Deo docente; that is, sine Deo non cognosci Deum. Irenæus l. 4. c. 14.

except the Father, &c] As if he said, no marvell that ye beleeve not; your bellies, not my Father, drew you hither; to come to Christ, is here, to believe on him, and to depend on him; as verse 35. by drawing, he meaneth illuminating; and framing mens hearts to faith and obedience; which God doth by the holy spirit inwardly, working in his word and ordinance, as verse 45. so true is that of Prosper, quod ducc Deo, veniatur ad Deum, de vocat. Gent. l. 1. c. 24. God leading us, we come to God: here then is left no place for pride or contempt of others; for as the same well saith q. 57. 25. tales fuerunt, qui sint attracti, quales hi, qui in sua duritie sunt relicti; they who are drawn (to Christ by the Father,) were such as these who are left in their hardnesse of heart.

V. 45. it is written] Isaiah 54. 13. Jer. 31. 34. lest they should think (as perverse men are ever apt to do) that all must needs be new doctrine which they understood not, he sheweth what he had affirmed out of the Prophets; and withall, the reason why the perverse hearers came not to him; because the spirit of God taught them not, neither moved their hearts to faith and obedience.

V. 46. not that any man hath seen the Father] Meaning, you may not look for a call from heaven, or vition of God, by whom you should be admonished to beleeve in me; he calleth by me, & by his spirit: thus speaketh he to a carnal people, left they should mistake him, as in the reft they did. See 1 Cor. 2. 10 Mat. 11. 27. John 1. 18.

V. 47. hath everlasting life] He thus speaketh in respect of the certainty of Gods election, and the seals thereof in our regeneration: they have eternal life here begun, to be accomplished in the world to come.

V. 48. I am the bread of life] In the participation whereof onely, is eternal life, and salvation.

V. 49. and are dead] Because it is the shadow, or figure, but Christ the substance, which can nourish to eternal life.

V. 50 this is the bread] Meaning himself, of whom he speaketh here in the third person comparing himself with the Manna; the Manna could not save any of the eaters thereof from death: but Christ only saveth us from death eternal, the second death damnation.

V. 51. the living bread] Which lives and gives life to the world. That is, all the elect; see for the better understanding hereof, and of that which followeth Augustin. To. 3 de doctr Christiana. l. 3. c. 5, 10, 16 ---where he saith, Sic--- flagitium aut facinus videtur jubere, if (the Scripture) seemeth to command some impious or wicked act, ---it is the e a figurative speech, Except, saith he, ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood ye have no life in you: it seemeth to command an impious and wicked act, therefore it is a figure, commanding, or teaching us to communicate of the passion of the Lord, and sweetly and profitably to lay up in memory, that his flesh was crucified and wounded for us.

If any man eat of this bread] If any man beleeve in Christ: for as Augustin saith tract. 26 in Joh. credere enim in eum, est manducare panem vivum: for to beleeve, is to eat the living bread; and again saith the same qui manducat intus, non foris, qui manducat in corde, non qui premit dentes: he that eateth within, not without, he that eateth with (or in) his heart, not he that crusheth it with his teeth.

V. 52. how can this man give us, &c.] They understood that carnally, which he spake in a spiritual sense.

V. 53, except ye eat the flesh] Except ye spiritually apprehend Christ by faith. See on verse 51.

V. 54. whoso eateth my flesh] By faith: for properly, and carnally, we cannot eat living bread, and such is Christ, verse 51. nor could that bread which came down from heaven, be that flesh of Christ carnally to be eaten; but whole Christ, God and man (See on verse 38.) the bread of life spiritually to be received.

V. 55. is meat indeed] Or truly, but spiritually: for that which is spiritually so, is truly so.

V. 56, dwelleth in me] This sheweth it to be meant of a mystical and spiritual eating; because to eat his flesh, is to dwell in him; and that as bodies are sustained with meat and drink, so are our souls nourished with the body and blood of Christ.

V. 57. he that eateth me] That beleeveth in me. See on verse 51. and 56 and on verse 54.

even he shall live by me] For though faith (by which the just shall live) looketh strait on the flesh of Christ crucified, yet it well knoweth that the power of the merit saving us, dependeth on the dignity of the person crucified, who is truly God and man; therefore Acts 20. 28 the Apostle faith concerning the Church, that God had purchased it with his own blood: so 1 John 1. 7. the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. So 1 Cor. 2. 8. they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

V. 58. which came down from heaven] As verse 50. See on verse 38.

not as your Fathers did eat Manna] It shall not be with him that feedeth on me by faith, as with your fathers in the wilderneffe, when they had eaten Manna, they yet died; but he that beleeveth in me shall be saved, to eternal life,

V. 59. in the synagogue] Openly in the Church or place where the Jewes weekly assembled for the publick worship of God.

V. 60. This is a hard saying] σκληρὸς, troublesome, or irksome to be heard; because they took Christs words in a literal sense, hard to be understood, saith Chrysostom. hom. 46.

who can hear it] Who can endure to hear it? who would not be offended at it? to eat the flesh and drink the blood of man, is unnaturall and therefore the more stupid they to take those words litterally; mark here the wretched effects of carelesse hearing and misunderstanding the word of God.

V. 61. doth this offend you] Probably he spake this to them after he came out of the Synagogue, and heard their murmurings, and censuring his Sermon.

V. 62. What and if] Chap. 3. 13.

ascend up where he was before] Are you troubled that I attribute such vertue to the eating my flesh? that I affirm it to be the bread of life which came from heaven? you shall see me shortly put off this assumed state of humiliation, and be exalted above the heavens. See Rom. 1. 4. chap. 3. 13. Ephes. 4. 9. they thought he would give them his body, carnally to eat, but he affirmed (saith Augustin) se ascensurum in cœlum, utique integrum: that he would ascend into heaven, and that entire: then should they know how he giveth his body, quia gratia ejus non consumitur morsibus: and that his grace is not eaten by bits: that they should see the Son of man ascend: understand it of the witnesses thereto appointed: possibly some of them who now murmured might be present: those words, where he was before: understand according to his deity: that the Son of man should be seen ascending where he was before: understand by confidering the usuall communication of properties, whereby that which is proper to either nature, is attributed to the whole person of Christ: so it is true: Christ suffered, his humanity did: his deity could not: So the Son of man ascended where he was before: his deity was in heaven before, but his humanity then first arrived in heaven, when after his resurrection he ascended up into glory.

V. 63. it is the spirit that quickneth] You must understand these things spiritually, not carnally, for they are spirituall, (as Chrysostom interpreteth) and the spirit united to the humane nature, giveth life.

the flesh profiteth nothing] That is (saith Augustine) sola caro: the flesh only, as the Apostle saith, knowledge puffeth up, that is, sola, sine charitate, if it be alone without charity.

V. 64. some of you that believe not] he saith not, who understand not these things; but he telleth them the cause of their misunderstanding, which was unbelief: he taxeth not all; lest if any present were curable; they might otherwise have been cast down to despair.

for Jesus knew] This Evangelist inftereth, lest any should shink that Christ rashly censured them of unbelief: many hypocritically followed him, which though men knew not, Christ well knew.

and who should betray him] Who would betray him, as if he faid, he did not only know all things past and present, but also all things to come.

V. 65. therefore I said unto you] He repeateth what he faid; (verse 44.) with application to the unbelievers: as if he faid: therefore are you offended through unbelief: because my Father hath not given you faith to believe in me to your salvation: you are joyned in bodily presence, but not in spirit, not in faith.

V. 66. from that time] ἀπ᾽ τότε, the Syriack hath it; from that word; for those things which they could not understand concerning eating his flesh, and drinking his blood; many who had giving eating his flesh, and drinking his blood; many who had given their names to him deserted him: thus was the Propheeie fulfilled, which foretold that he should be a rock of offence, Isaiah 8. 14. See 2 Tim. 2. 15. 1 John 2. 19. 1 Cor 11. 19. no wonder If many are scandaled at our doctrine, and feparate from our miniftery; they that were not elected, were offended and feparated from Christ.

V. 67. Will ye also go away] Which he faid not that he was ignorant of the future (for he knew all from the beginning, ver. 64.) but to occasion a clearer confession of Peter in the name of the reft, and to propose his, as an example of constancy; also to admonish them not to joyn themselves with Apostates and Separatists, which none shall do that are grounded in Christ: and not to follow multitudes to evill and forsaking of Christ. It may teach before very zealous followers of Christ, and professours of truth: as multitudes can give no patronage to sinners; so neither shall the paucity of believers hurt the faithful: they only who continue to the end shall be saved; that is, they only to whom God giveth perseverance; for (as Augustine saith, Tom. 7. responsi. ad art. fal. 8.) It is the will of God, that one should continue in a good will, who also before he be forsaken. forsaketh no man, and converteth many to him, who had forsaken him: he saith, will ye also? it is in our power to fall, but not to rise again: that we do not fall away, it is only Gods mercy preserving us; and prosper saith well, de uocat. Gent. lib 2. cap. 12. Ideo liberum esse discedere, ut non discessisse sit præmium, therefore it is free to depart, that it may be a reward not to have departed.

V. 68. the words of eternall life] The Gospel teaching us all the mysteries of eternal life and salvation, which if we believe and obey, we shall have eternal life through the merits of Jesus Christ, whom the gospel declareth unto us. See c. 3. 16. Rom. 1. 16. &c.

V. 69. and believe] See Mat. 16. 16. See c. 1. 14. 1 John 1. 1.

V. 70. Have not I chosen you, &c.] We must understand the one party to be chosen per misericordiam, and the other per judicium, as Augustine saith, de cor. & gra. cap. 7. 16, 7. those he chose to preach, and obtain his kingdome; but this to shed his blood.

is a devill] A malicious wicked man, an informer, a traitour, possessed and put on by the evill spirit: this he foretelleth, that they might not be scandalized, when they should see his end.

V. 71. Judas Iscariot] Ἰσκαριώτης. Hebr. אִישׁ קְרִיוֹת ish Kiriioth; Jeromes first conjecture is probable, Iscariotes, vel à vico, aut urbe in quâ ortus est, &c. (wherein Chrysostome hom. 33. in Mat. agreeth with him) Cairioth is a town in the tribe of Judah, Josh. 15. 25. some therefore will have him so called, as if it were said, Judas a man of Cairioth. Some derive the name from that which signifieth defection, for a reward.

CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. WAlked in Galilee] Went about from place to place, to preach the gospel, and to heal the sick for confirmation thereof.

V. 2. feast of tabernacles] Levit. 23. 34, 42, 43. in this feast, they were to dwell seven dayes in Booths and tents, in remembrance of their dwelling in tents in the wildernesse, Exod. 23. 16. it is called חַג הָאָסִף chag haasiph, the feast of gathering fruits, and חַג הַסֻּכּוֹת chag hassuccoth, the feast of coverings or tabernacles, 70. ἡ ἑορτὴ σκηνῶν; σκηνοπηγία: Chrysostome reckoneth it five moneths after the Passover; but Levit. 23. 34. ib. verse 5. it appeareth six.

V. 3. that thy disciples] That is, those whom thou wouldest have to follow thee: for his disciples who novv did follow him, had seen his miracles: this they layed probably in deriſion: for in the fifth verse it appeareth that they believed not in him: faith is not by any carnall prerogative, but a special gift of God, chapter 1. 13

V. 4. shew thy self to the world] Go up to the feast, and do thy miracles in such great confluences of people, that thereby thy fame may be spread abroad to all other nations also.

V. 5. Neither did his brethren believe] His kindred. See on verse 3.

V. 6. My time is not yet come] My opportunity is not yet. So verse 8. for the word here used is, καιρὸς, that is, opportunitas temporis, or tempus constitutum (as Luke 20. 10. Rom. 5. 6.) that is, as Theophylact interpreteth, ὁ τῆς σωτηρίας ὡραῖος, of my death and passion, before which he carefully avoyded the malicious violence of the Jewes, that he might perform all those things which concerned our redemption, confirmation of our faith, and salvation: but when the appointed time was come, he went before his disciples toward Jerusalem, where he well saw, and foretold that he must suffer, as willingly offering himself to death, in order to his fathers will, and our salvation.

V. 7. The world cannot hate you] That is, the unregenerate do not hate you, because you are of them; the world loveth her own: the Priests and Pharisees do not persecute you, because you communicate with them in their unbelief, they embrace you as their obedient children: me they hate, because I reprove their sins. So dangerous a vice is pride, it can abide no reproof: so impossible is it to have peace with the world, except we will share with them in it to have peace with the world, except we will share with them in their wickednesse; and impossible it is to preach the truth sincerely, without the malice of impious men, whose sins we must reprove. The Jewes pretended that they were angry with Christ, only because he profaned the Sabbath, &c. but the truth was, it was because he discovered, and spake against their sin and hypocrisie for he profaned not the Sabbath.

V. 8. Go ye up unto this feast] This saith he, justly leaving them to themselves, who would not believe in him. See Psalm 81. 12.

I go not up yet] Ἐγὼ οὔπω ἀναβαίνω, I do not yet go up: See the reason verse 6. my opportunity is not yet come, I do not go up with you, who believe not in me.

for my time, &c.] Chap. 8. 20. and verse 6.

V. 9. He abode still in Galilee] He stayed awhile after they were gone up to the feast, untill he knevv it for time.

V. 10. but when his brethren were gone up] The Galileans vvere vvont to go up to those solemnities, by kindreds, and companies of neighbours, Luke 2. 44. Christ vvould not novv go up so publickly; but when he knevv that the malice of the Jews was something more allayed, then he went up privately with his Disciples, and some few followers.

V. 11. the Jews sought him] That is, the people who had formerly heard him, seen his miracles, or heard of him; and possibly the high Priests and Rulers of the Jewes, who were the main stickers against Christ, these studying by all means to destroy him, layed out, and enquired for him, being confident they should have him at the feast: God appointed these solemn festivities, as for thankfull remembrance of his mercies shewed them; so also for occasions occasions of their publick rejoycing therein, and the maintenance of love, charity and unity among them; but they herein took occasion to lay wait for blood, and to perfecute their Saviour: such is the impious perverseneſſe of men; the devil is never more constantly served, than on the Lords day.

V. 12. much murmuring] γογγυσμὸς, whispering, or seer talking concerning him, muttering, some maliciously blaſpheming him; some praysing and defending his parts, but secretly, for fear of their malicious Rulers and high Priests.

V. 13. for fear of the Jews] No man spake well openly, for fear of the Rulers and Priest. See Chap. 9. 22. nor possibly durst they speak evil freely and publickly, for fear of the people.

V. 14. about the midst of the feast] About the fourth day of this feast, verse 2. now was his time to preach the Gospel: what he now preached the Evangelist recordeth not: it was some divine learning, and to the admiration of the Auditours, as appeareth, verse 15.

V. 15. How knoweth this man letters] That is, πῶς οἶδε γράμματα, the Holy Scriptures, as 2 Tim. 3. 15. they would not in their unbelief acknowledge him to be the Messias of whom the Prophet Isaiah 11. 2, 3. said, the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisedome and understanding, the spirit of knowledge, &c. and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord. Which the Apostle also teacheth, Colos. 2. 3. They admiring the Doctrine, and knowing that he had it not by ordinary and usual means, should have concluded that it was divine, and immediately from God, and so have acknowledged the evidence of the Spirit therein: but so miserable a blindneſſe doth unbelief bring with it, that all (the most indifputable) Arguments, are there retorted and perverted: the destruction of the wicked. See Acts 2. 17. Mark 6. 3. Mat. 13. 55 neither is here any patronage for those who neglect or deſpiſe learning. See 1 Tim. 4. 13. 15, 16. Titus 1. 5, 9.

V. 16. My doctrine is not mine] He speaketh, as he is man: I learned it not of man, but of God: and here accommodateth his answer to the Iewes opinion of him, who thought him to be mere man; but it was the truth and doctrine of of God; for there is but one truth of God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, which Christ God and man preached: this ἡ ἐμὴ, ἡμὴ is not in me, is thus to be underſtood: I invent no new thing, I speak the eternall truth of God whose meſſenger I am, the onely mediatour between God and man, (1 Tim. 1. 5.) I speak the Doctrine and word of him, who sent me so to speak.

V. 17. If any man will do his Will] He secretly toucheth the cause of their misunderstanding his doctrine, that is their want of the true fear of God, and obedience to him. (See c. 14. 15, 16, 17, 21. 23.) take away your doubting anger, envy and vain hatred towards me, καὶ ἐκεῖνο ὁ κωλύον ὑμᾶς nothing shall let you to know this, that my words are the words of God. Chrysostom.

whether I speak of my self] See Chap. 14. 24. the meaning is, If any man truely fear God, and will indeed set his heart to believe and obey him, he shall be satisfied; and clearly resolved, of the Divine truth of the Gospel: it must be a found and well affected palate which must judge of tasts, the sick and disaffected cannot: the precepts of righteouſneſſe are bitter to evil lives. Lactantius, l. 1. So also Jerome l. 1. ep. 16. in malitiosa habet os amara sit veritas: it cometh naturally to paſſe that truth is bitter, that is, to the wicked. See 1 Cor. 2. here Christ intimat eth that the Iews were incompetent Iudges of his Doctrine, because their malice and wickednesse had blinded them

V. 18. he speaketh of himself] He who teacheth his own inventions, affecteth praiſe of men.

V. 19. did not Moses] Exod. 24. 3 he answereth their objection concerning healing on the Sabbath, by their own practice in that they circumciſed on the Sabbath, v. 22. 23.

why go ye about to kill me?] c. 5. 18. this speech he addreſſed to the Priests and governours, watching their opportunity, and taking counsel how to destroy him, as a profaner of the Sabbath; this interrogation is very emphatical, as if he had faid, how unjuſt are you who would kill me as a violater of Gods Law, profaner of the Sabbath? Supposſe that were so, that all work on the Sabbath, were profanation of the Sabbath: how unjuſtly do you condemne that in me which your selves both doe, and allow for good? you circumciſe on the Sabbath, when the eighth day, on which circumciſion was to be administred, fell on the Sabbath day: is not circumciſion more near to the nature of a servile work, than without any more labour to cure by speaking the word? must (in your ſenſe) a precept of the moral law give place to a ceremonial? must Gods Law give place that Moses law may be fulfilled by your circumciſing an infant, and may not the ground and surnme of the law, charity and shewing mercy, be practiſed on the Sabbath?

V. 20. thou hast a Devil] This seemeth a common manner of speaking among the Jewes, when they would expreſſe a man furiously diſtracted, or dangerously erring, which they blaſphemouſly apply to Christ.

V. 21. and ye all marvel] Because I did it on the Sabbath day, θαυμάζετε, τεθαυμάκατε, chrysostome, ye clamour and are troubled.

22. Moses therefore, &c.] Levit. 12. 3. but indeed Moses did not first preſcribe the Law of circumciſion, he received and preſcribed therein onely that which God commanded Abraham and his posterity to do in their generations, untill Christ the end of the law to every believer, ſhould come. See Gal. 5. 2, &c.

but of the fathers] Gen. 17 10. Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and the fathers before Moses.

V. 23. that the law of Moses should not be broken] or without breaking the Law of Moses. The Law given by the Miniſtery of Moses.

V. 24. judge not, &c.] Deut. 1. 16. Judge me not according to any onward appearance to be meer man; but conſider the Divine Power in my works, which ye calumniate: he calleth that righteous judgement which is without reſpect of perſons, according to truth and equity, in which the Iews in theſe their rash and blaſphemous censures, vehemently erred; ſuppoſing that all was right which they did, however erroneous; and all evil and censurable, which Christ did, who neither did nor could erre any thing: their ground being, because they, the high Priests, Scribes and Phariſees were in prime authority and honour among men, and Christ in his ſtate of humiliation and form of a servant, ſeemed to them but a mere, deſpicable, poor man: so they valued not the truth, and equity of things, and how agreeable they were to Gods law, but of what authority and dignity the speakers or acters were, with men.

V. 25. then said some] They wondered that the authority of the Rulers could not yet prevail against him, but yet acknowledged the power of God therein, that they could not with all their power silence him.

V. 26. do the Rulers know indeed, &c.] Doe our High Priests and Elders certainly know that he is the promiſed Meſſias, and therefore ſuffer him thus publickly and freely to control and reprove them? if not how eaſily might they take him; ſo might it ſeem to men, who conſidered not herewith the coercive power of God limiting their fury, untill the appointed time, that Jeſus was to ſuffer for our redemption.

V. 27. no man knoweth] This tradition ſeemed to have beginning from ſome miſ-underſtood Prophecies, as Iſaiah 53. 8.

V. 28. whom ye know not] He upbraideth their confidence of knowing him, ſeeing they know not his father, nor his unſpeakable generation: you know of what humane Parents, of what family as man, I am: but you know not him that ſent me to be a Miniſter of the Circumciſion for the truth of God, to confirm the promiſes made unto the fathers. Rom. 15. 8.

he is true] As if he ſaid, you think you know me and my Father, but you are deceived, not knowing that I am coequal and coeternal with God the Father; and that I took not this honor of being a Mediator and Saviour; but that in the fulneſſe of time, by my incarnation, came I into this world, appointed thereto by God. See Heb. 5. 4. 5. and c. 1. 18. Mat. 11. 17.

V. 30. but no man laid hand on him] Because the iſſues of life and death, with the time and manner, are onely in Gods hand: ſee how their malicious fury is bridled, as Chrysostome ſaid, ἀοράτως invisibly, by a ſecret and unſeen hand of Divine providence: ſo God ſtill protecteth his, reſtraining the precipitate malice of the enemy.

V. 31. many of the people believed] Though many were hardned in their obſtinate unbelief, yet the Word of God was not without good effect with others, whoſe hearts he had opened. It is one and the ſame Sunne, which giveth light to found eyes, but blindeth the infirme; one and the ſame truth preached, hardneth and more blindeth ſome hearers, and cauſeth others to believe and obey to ſalvation, Nazianzen, Orat. 17. It ſeemeth by their ſpeech, that Christ wrought many miracles among the people, which the Evangeliſt mentioneth not, more mi-acles] This Evangeliſt ſpeaketh not of many beſides, (the turning of Water into Wine, chap. 2. the diſcovery of the Samaritans ſins, chap. 4. and the healing the Rulers Son: curing the paralytical, chap. 5, feeding 5000. with five loaves; &c. Johns, his walking on the Sea) therefore probably many more are omitted. See chap. 20

V. 32. Pharisees and chief priests sent officers] Theſe deſiring to appear the chief zelots, moſt oppoſed Christ, envying the peoples good opinion of him, and conceiving their own honour eclipſed thereby; this vexing them, they break out into open violence, the uſual armour of Hypocrites, where they cannot prevail with arguments: thus is authority (appointed to defend truth) abuſed to impious tyranny. See Acts 22, 24.

V. 33 yet a little while] Till the appointed time, I ſhall preach and do my fathers will, whether ye will or no.

V. 34. ye shall seek me] chap. 13 33. In your extream calamities ſhortly to come upon you, ye ſhall with me with you again; but I ſhall return to him that ſent me, and be ſecure from your malicious inquiſition.

V. 35. among the Gentiles] Or Greeks. Will he go teach the Jewes who are ſcattered here and there, among the Gentiles? or poſſibly they might here mean the Gentiles in general; for ſo they ſometimes called all nations, which were not of the race of the Jewes. See Rom. 1. 16. Rom. 2. 9, 10. & 3. 9. & 10. 12. &c.

V. 36. what manner of saying is this] What meaneth he here by? ſuch a quare was among the Diſciples, c. 16, 17, 18. only that there was a deſire to be entormed of the truth, wherein Christ ſatisfied, satisfied them: but here is a captious agitation of Christs words, without any serious care to understand their scope and meaning, therefore Christ here leaveth them in suspence.

V. 37. In the last day, that great day, &c.] Wherein they were to have a solemn assembly, and to abstain from all servile works, Se Levit. 23.36. the choice of this time imported, the end of those Ceremonies was to bring men to Christ; and now being to depart home, he thus gave them to carry with them ἐφόδια πρὸς σωτηρίαν viands to salvation, as chrysostome notech.

Jesus stood and cried] ιησους ἔκραξε: He spake with a loud voice, that the multitude might hear him, and to shew his authority and liberty of speaking to the people. The occasion of this speech concerning water, might possibly be that which some write; that the Jews went on this day with great solemnity, to draw water out of the Fountain of Siloam, at the foot of Mount Sion, and to bring it to the Altar, singing out that of Isaiah, 12.3. With joy shall ye draw water out of the Wells of Salvation, &c. By this and many other traditions, they having perverted the Law (which commanded a spiritual rejoycing) into superstitious clamours, Christ cried out, to recal them from earthly to Heavenly waters.

V. 38. he that believeth] He citeth not here any particular place of Scripture; but this may be gathered out of Scriptures, where mention is made of the effusion of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, as Joel 2.28 Isaiah 44.3. and 55.1. 11. So acts 2. 18. is interpreted: therefore the Syriac Interpreter giveth it, as the Scripture have said.

V. 39. this spake he of the Spirit] The Evangelist interpreteth the words of Jesus, taken out of —— Joel 2. 28. Isaiah 44.3.

the holy Ghost] The visible graces of Gods Spirit, spoken of by the fore-cited Prophets, which did accordingly flourith in the Church after the ascension of Christ. These several gifts were all the effects of one and the same spirit (Eph. 4.4,7. &c.) and therefore were usually called the holy Ghost, Acts 2.4 and 4.8.31. and 6. 3.5. and 7.55. and 8.15.18 and 10. 44,47 and 11. 15, and 19.2, &c. as there is but one kind of water distilling on the herbs in rain, which in the effects thereof admirably varieth in the production of fruits, plants and flowers, it shewing it self (as Cyril. cat. 16. expresseth it) κεκκε δὲ ἐν ῥόδῳ, ἐν ὑδρὶ δὲ ἐν ῥόδῳ, white in Lily, but red in the Rose: so is there but one Holy Ghost working varieties of gifts in men, for the edification of the Church.

V. 40. This is the Prophet, Deuteronomie, 18.15, &c. See Cap 1.21.

V. 41. but some said, shall Christ come out of Galilee] Such is the condition of truth, it ever meeteth with some oppofers: had not their envy blinded them, they might have found that Christ was born at Bethlehem, and of the linage of David: the wicked are quick-sighted to finde out Arguments from perverted and misunderstood Scriptures to strengthen their unbelief; but slow and dull to learn the truth, this is Satans malice, and mens unhappy weakness to turn that to destruction which God in mercy gave for comfort and salvation.

V. 42 hath not the Scripture said] Mat. 2. 5. Mic. 5. 2. See also Psalm 132.11. had not malice and envy blinded them, they might easily have been satisfied in this scruple: had they but enquired with a minde to believe; doubtless Jesus would not have concealed it from them: had they but called to mind, the wise men from the East, their enquiry, Herods rage against the poore infants; John Baptists testimony, &c. these or any of these might have satisfied them; but how little a thing will make them stumble, who are ready and willing to fall?

V. 43 so there was a division] Σχίσμα, a schism, or division, or rent, Augustine tom. 7. contr. Cresc. on. Gram. l. v. c. 6 intimateth that a Schism is, Recens congregationis, ex aliqua sententiarum dissertate dissentio, a new or late sprung-up diffention of the Congregation or Church, out of some diversity of opinions. An Hereste he saith is, S. hisma inveteratum, an old Schism because of him] No wonder if there be Schisms now among us, seeing, in the sacred presence of Christ, and when his selfe preached the most infallible Truth of the Gospel, there were Schismes, and Divisions. See Matthew, 10. 5. the Cause is in the secret corruption of mens Hearts, not in the Gospell of Peace.

V. 44. but no man laid hands on him] See v 30. Superstition is ever cruel, but Gods providence over-ruleth all.

V. 45. why have ye not brought him] These greedy Wolves were so impatient, that they are angry with their Messengers, returning without him, not hearing or regarding why they tooke him not.

V. 46. never man spake, &c.] They admired the grace in his lips, Psal 45.2. So Matt. 7.28,29. but malice makes men so blinde and stupid, that they cannot be sensible of any the most excellent graces in those they hate. See 1 Kings 22.8. 1 John 3. 12. It is natural to judge them evil whom we hate: but such is the power of God, they who went with purpose to take him, were taken with his excellency, their malice being turned to love and admiration, and they made proclaymers of his Divine Excellency. See 1. Sam. 19 :20.

V. 47. are ye also deceived] Blinded with envy, they would not admit that Jesus could preach any thing worthy of admiration, therefore they conclude that they were beguild by his fair speeches: pride ever thinks it cannot erre, and that rather all the world is dark, than it self blind.

V. 48. have any of, &c.] Thus they alledge mans authority against Gods: supposing that the chair of Rulers and Pharisees had infallibility entailed on it,

V. 49. are cursed] It was their high ambition which made them conceive all men bound to follow them, though to destruction, and a proud opinion of themselves and their authority, caused them to despise and curse all others dissenting from their impiety and unbelief, it is a dangerous Paradox which Card. Bellarmine holdeth de Roman. pontif. lib. 4. cap. 5. Si autem Papa erraret praecipiendo vitia, vel prohibendo virtutes, teneretur Ecclesia credere vitia esse bona, & virtutes malas —— but if the Pope should erre by commanding vices, or forbidding vertues, the Church were bound to believe that vices were good, and vertues evil: and an ——uncharitable presumption of the Council of Trent, to seal up their many Canons with so many Anathemas to them who dissent from their errours. See Concil. Tridentin. concil. tom. 9. Severin. Bin. See more on v. 51.

V. 50. he that came to Jesus by night] c. 3.2.

one of them] A Pharisee, and probably one of their Sanhedrin, or great Council.

V. 51. doth our Law judge any man before. &c.] Doth our Law condemn? See Deut. 17.8, 10. and 19.15. their part it was to have instructed the people, not to upbraid their ignorance; and to pray for them and bleste them, not to judge, damn and curse them: Quid temerarius Dei tribunal ascendis? saith Optatus, l.2. Who art thou that judgest another mans servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth, Rom. 14.4. It was Constantines answer to the Donatists; Petitis à me in seculi judicium, cum ego ipse Christi judicium expectem: you desire judgement of me in this world, whereas I my self expect the judgement of Christ: 2 Cor. 10, 12. 18. We shall all stand before the judgement seat of Christ. Those whom God hath set in authority may and ought to judge of secular businesses; but of mans finall estate, Christ onely is to judge. That Judge which pronounceth before he hath heard both parties, is unjust, even where he giveth a just sentence; but to condemne any man unheard, is an injustice against which, the Lawes of God and Nature caution; as also to execute any man uncondemned. See Salvian. de gub. D. lib. 8 fine. Tertul. Apol. cap. 1. Lactant. divin. Instit. l. 5. cap. 1. see also Acts 25.16. Possibly Nicodemus laid this, not onely to dissuade them from such injustice, but also in hope, that if they would but hear Jesus, they should either be converted or convicted. Indeed, as even Julian could say in the cause of Numerius; who can be innocent if it be enough to accuse. Ammnian. Martellin. lib. 18.

V. 52. art thou also of Galilee] By way of reproach and contempt they named Galilee, though possibly they knew him to be no Galilean.

search and looke] They bid Nicodemus go learn, as intimating his ignorance, or reproving his incogitancy.

ariseth no Prophet] They would have no man think Jesus so much as a Prophet; therefore would they prescribe Gods Power by custome. So slender a ground had they, as commonly all Schismaticks and Hereticks have, which is, at least to beg one principle, and to take some falsehood for granted, on which they would build the reft. As here: First, they make no question but that Jesus is a Galilean, Secondly, they conclude, that because God never had raised any Prophet thence, therefore, he never would. The first was false, for Jesus was of Bethlehem, and the second in their sence not true: for God called thence divers eminent Apostles; and so their superstructions were all false and impious; as that they ought not to follow Christ: that they who did, were ignorant of the Law, and cursed: that they who were in authority, ought to restrain them by Excommunication, or other punishments due to Hereticks, and to persecute Christ, and those that beleeved in him. Thus one absurdity or falsehood granted, many more will follow.

V. 53. every man went, &c.] Divided in opinion, and confounded in Counsel, they could effect nothing untill the time by God appointed. See Acts, 28. 29. being at present frustrate of their Hope to apprehend and destroy Christ; in great indignation they dissolved their malignant councell, laying aside, not leaving their blasphemous malice.

CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. The mount of Olives] An hill near Jerusalem, on the East; so called, for the abundance of Olives there growing: It was there Christ used to be in the night, Luke 21. 37.

V. 2. early in the morning] Here is described the peoples diligence to hear the Word, as Luke 21. 38. as also Christs zeale to preach the same, that he might instruct and save them, and herein appeareth how little he was discouraged in his preaching the truth, by the blasphemous cavils of Scribes and Pharisees: leaving his his faithful Ministers an example of diligence and constancy in their charge and Ministration: if thou wilt indeed be a servant of Christ, and preach the truth, look for contradiction; but let it not move thee, be thou constant, who knoweth the reward.

all the people] πᾶς, All, that is, many who had formerly heard him teaching in the feast of Tabernacles, c. 7.14.37. Some of these came to be edified, and some to cavil.

V. 3. and the Scribes, &c.] See on Luke 20.1. they had power to have censured her in their consistory, unto stripes, though the Romans permitted them not power of judicature in matters capitall, but they brought her to Jesus that they might have whereof to accuse him: See v. 6.

brought unto him a woman taken, &c.] Possibly the man (equally faulty, and lyable to the same punishment, Levit. 20.10. Deut. 22.22.) had escaped from them.

V. 4. this woman, &c.] They call him Master; now they meant to entangle him, as Matt. 22. 16. whom they used to stile a Seducer of the people; and they who were Judges, here act the part of accusers, which is against the course of equity.

V. 5. now Moses in the Law] Levit. 20.10, &c. They could remember and urge the Law against others sin, but could not apply that to themselves which is faith against injustice; to wit, condemning without cause, lawful witness, or hearing the parties accused. Concerning the Law by them here mentioned; we must know, that it was so severe, that evil might be taken away from the Land. and to terrifie the sinners, by making offenders exemplary: See Numbers 25. 11. Sin is not known in impunity: that which they here did, was with purpose to ensnare Christ; they thinking, if he absolved her, he should appear to the people as an adversary to the Law of God, and so not the Messias, but an impostor liable to a severe censure: but if he condemned her, he should seem to annul the very purpose of his coming, who professed to save them, and to propose grace and mercy, Ambrof. ep. 76.

V. 6. that they might have to accuse him] As a breaker of Moses Law. if he acquitted her, as they conceived he would, because he shewed mercy to sinners; and, as they pretended, taught concerning the Sabbath, contrary to Moses, they presumed by their conceive I Dilemma to have taken him; but how vain is the wisedome of man, against the truth and wisedome of God, may appear in this example, See 1 Cor. 1.19. 20.

wrote on the ground] Some think he wrote that which he answered, or some more secret thing concerning the consciences of the Informers: but seeing the Scripture speaketh not what he wrote, we must not curiously enquire. Saint Ambrose lib 9. epist. 76. saith, he wrote on the ground with his finger, who wrote the Law on the Tables of stone. For the rest we may say with Augustine, epist. 121. cap. 15. Init. Est ergo in nobis, quadam, ut ita dicam, docta ignorantia: There is therefore in us, that I may so speak, a kinde of learned ignorance: and as Jerome, Melius est aliquid nescire securè, quam cum periculo discere: tis better to be securely ignorant of some thing, than to learn it with danger.

V. 7. he that is without sin] See Deut. 17. 7. As if he had said, he is justly to be condemned, but you who accuse others looke home, examine your own consciences whether you are not guilty of the like, or as great sins. Quomodo enim feras alieni ultorem, qui proprii criminis defensorem? —— Nonne si magis ipse condemnat, qui in alio damnat, quod ipse committit? Ambrose qu.5. How could you endure a revenger of anothers faults, and a defender of his own? ——Doth not he more condemn himself, who condemneth that in another, which he committeth himself? The Jewes urged him again and again (while he seemed to slight their information) confident in his forbearance to answer, that they had now caught him in an unavoydable difficulty what ever he answered: Christ therefore replyed with due respect to the Law, maintaining the equity thereof: so answering, that they could not calumniate him for absolving the sinner, nor object against his Doctrine of Grace and Mercy, freely justifying sinners; thus retorting the calumny, and striking the sleepy consciences of the malepert accusers, who vainly insulted, as if others vices were their vertues: teaching all who will be accusers of their brethren to begin at home; for a Gregory Nazianzen. said, epist. 16. Cæsario fratri? how shall they reprove others sin, who have not αἰφ' ἑαυτοῦ τὴν ἀφορμὴν, that is, confidence in their own innocency: but as the most ravenous and hurtfull birds, are commonly most quick-sighted; so are the most wicked most ready and skilfull to finde out others faults: the eye seeth not it self, nor any thing which is too near it; so neither see we our own faults, except set at some distance and in another person: so David saw his fault in the person of the rich oppressour; till then he could not in himself, 2 Sam. 12. See on Matt. 7. 5.

V. 8. again he stooped down] Thereby giving them with their convicted consciences, opportunity to bethink themselves, and to steal away, that they might not at present be further detected and shamed: possibly, they might, in that he wrote in the dust, reade some discovery of their sinne and shame, which they would not for the World should come to light, and knowledge of the people, of whose applause and good opinion they were extreamly ambitious: sure it is, Christ knew all that they had done, could in a few Characters write enough to shame them, and that they were so fowly guilty that they were glad to be gone, for fear of further discovery as may be gathered, from v. 9.

V. 9. being convicted by their own conscience] Hearing such an unexpected answer, and out of Hope to accomplish their designe upon him, their consciences accusing them, and fearing to confess themselves sinners (lest their reputation with the people should thereby be impaired) or to bring their pretended innocency to the test before him, who as they might well suspect, might know and detect their secret failings: they chose rather to take the opportunity of his stooping down, to go away; though in that recesse, indeed confessing his impregnable wisedome, and their owne guiltinesse.

beginning at the eldest] Either (saith Ambrose lib. 7. ep. 58.) because they who had lived longest, had more sins; or because they being more prudent, first apprehended the force of the sentence. That which theodoret. saith (in Jer. 17.1.) is true: there is nothing more powerfull than the conscience.

Jesus was left alone] That is, in respect of all those accusers; not simply alone; for these things were acted before his Disciples, and a great multitude of People: Therefore, it is said, and the woman standing in the midst, ἐν μέσῳ, must relate to a company.

V. 10. and saw none but the woman] None belonging to that cause: no accuser, nor officer attending her.

where are those thine accusers] Not being ignorant of their departure, but making manifest to all present, that he absolved her not contrary to the law, seeing the informers and witnesses deserted the cause.

V. 11. She said, no man, Lord] She answereth to the second quere, not weighing the first, seeing her accusers were gone: she knew, that condemnation ought not to goe before conviction.

neither do I condemne thee] Neither will I condemne thee, Ambrose readeth, lib. 7. ep. 58. others read with us, κατακρίνω, neither doe I condemne. I will not use lesse clemency than they: See Chapter, 3. 17. this he said, not to dissolve the Law, but to shew mercy, and to call to repentance: and for that he would not take upon him to be a Temporall Iudge, as Luke 12. 14. as if he said, I leave the Magistrate his right of judicature? and seeing they condemne thee not, neither do I, who came to pardon sinnes, and save sinners: he saith not, no man ought to condemne thee (that had been to pervert Justice, to condemne the Law, and to justifie the wicked, for certainly there are many sins in adultery,) but he saith, hath no man condemned thee? He so sheweth mercy, as not thereby to abolish political order: and here is a sweet motive to repentance, that we may fly to his Mercy, from whose Justice we cannot fly. Fulgent. ad Venan. ep. 7.

go and sinne no more] This said he, that he might shew them, se hominipeperciffe, &c. (Augustin. Macedon. ep. 54.) that he spared man, but was not pleased with mans sinne: this is true repentance, not onely to lament, but to forsake our sinne: the end why God sheweth Mercy, is that we may serve him more Holily. See Rom. 6.4. Luke 1. 75. and this was here the greatest and most absolute condemnation of this womans sin: For where the guilty is put to death, rather the person is executed: but where the sinner leaveth his sin, there is a disclaige of the person whom Christ came to save, and a killing of sins which he came to condemne in the flesh. Rom. 8.3.

V. 12. I am the light of the world] Chapter, 1. 4, 5. and 9. 5.

V. 13, thy record is not true] ἀληθὴς is here taken for authentick or worthy to be credited; that which the Hebrewes call נאמן neeman, the Syriack שריורא sharirо, (that is, firmum, vallidum) of שרר sharar.

V. 14. though I bear record] Chap. 5. 31. he admitteth the antecedent, but rejecteth the consequent: the sense being: I do indeed for their sakes who shall believe in me and be saved, declare and manifest my self unto them, which is to testifie of my self; but it thence followes not that my testimony is not true, or ought not, (as in cases betwixt man and man, and humane interests) be taken for such. Gods word. which ye hear of me is infallibly true, and to be taken, if all men in the world should depose to the contrary, yet my record is true] Because God is the only sufficient witnesse concerning himself. See 1 John 5.6,7,9.

V. 15. ye judge after the flesh] According to outward appearance, Chap. 7.24.

I judge no man] That is, I do not now judge; I now am come to teach and propose conditions of mercy and salvation to penitent sinners: or I judge not rashly, as you do.

V. 16. for I am not alone] He doth not plainly and expressly affirm his Godhead (that was yet vayled under the infirmity of the flesh) but mentioneth his Father, whose Deity they acknowledged, to intimate the power he had to judge, who yet spared them, and instructed them how to avoid the judgement to come: he was not alone, the Father and the Holy Ghost were with him, nunquam enim potest à se Trinitas separari. Ambrof. in Luc. lib. 2. cap. 3. for the Holy Trinity can never be divided from it self. See Fulgent. de fide orth. ad Donat. See 1 John 5. 7.

V. 17. it

V. 17. it is also written in your Law] Deut. 17. 6. See Matt 18. 16. ἐν τῷ νόμῳ τῷ ὑμετέρῳ, in your Law; understand, as if he said, that very Law which God gave your fathers, and which you have received from their hands, in which you glory.

the testimony of two men is true] That is, so taken in Law, not that it is always so. See 1 Kings 21. 13. Matt. 26. 60. Act. 6. 11. but this he saith by way of concession: and by this secret antithesis he sheweth, how unjust they were who professed the Law, according to which they took that for granted, which two men witnessed, but would not believe what God the Father and himself testified.

V. 18. I am one that bear witness, &c.]He declareth that which he before said, I am not alone, verse 16. as God he testifieth of himself, (the Messias, God and Man) and in the same act, the Father testifieth with him, for they are one God, and their works are undivided. See on verse 16. Christ augueth (as Lyranus noteth) from the lesser to the greater: the witnesse of two men, according to Moses Law, is sufficient to confirm a truth, therefore much more sufficient is the witness of two persons of the Holy Trinity; men may deceive and lye, but God cannot: he might here also have cited the same testimony of the Holy Ghost; but that doctrine was not yet opportune, and seasonable for them.

V. 19. ye should have known my Father also] For they are one God. See cap. 10. 30.

V. 20. These words spake Jesus] See on Luke 21. 4. in their treasury their offerings were kept, Mark 12. 41. this shews his undaunted constancy in the presence of his enemies, and heat of their malice: no man yet meddled with him, because the providence of God limited all things to the appointed times, therefore they were yet restrained to teach us constancy and confidence in the truth. The Devil himself cannot reach beyond the length of his chain, (Rev. 20. 1, &c.) or hurt the least of Gods children, more than, or before he permitteth) who will make all things work for good to them that love him. Rom. 8. 28.

V. 21. Ye shall seek me] See Chap. 7. 34.

V. 22. Whither I go] See Chap. 7. 35.

V. 23. ye are from beneath] He sheweth here the cause of their blindnesse and unbelief: ye are earthly and carnall, therefore apprehend you not the Heavenly things which I teach you, no man is an apt Disciple of Christ, whom Gods Spirit doth not make so: hence is the rarity of faith in the world.

I am not of this world] He denieth not his humane nativity, of the seed of Abraham; but he denieth that he hath any communion with sin, and the corruptions of flesh and blood: in which sence he saith, the Apostles were not of this world, Chap. 15. 9. and 17. 16. though not free from sin by nature (Ephes. 2. 3.) but by grace and regeneration; not absolutely (as Christ) but comparatively, and in respect of their justification by the merit of Christ. See Galat. 1. 4 Phil. 3. 20.

V. 24 I said therefore unto you, &c.] These words relate to the precedent declaration; the meaning is, the world perisheth in sin and unbelief (1 Cor. 11. 32.) if you are of this world, and come not to me by faith for your justification, you must needs perish in your sins.

that I am he, &c.] That I am the Messias and sole Saviour of the World: this sheweth that there is salvation to none, but those who constantly hope for, and expect in Christ, whatsoever the Prophets have foretold concerning the Messias.

ye shall die in your sins] For there is salvation in none other, Acts 4 12. He onely taketh away the sins of the World, Chap. 1. 29. He onely justifieth sinners by suffering for them, paying the full price of their redemption, and making their peace with God. (See Romanes 3. 24. and 5. 24. and 5. 3. and 8. 1, 2.) therefore, if your sinnes be not done away in Christ, you shall in them dy eternally.

V. 25. even the same that I said] The Sonne of God, and Saviour of the World, as I taught you from the beginning.

V. 26, I have many things to to say, and to judge of you]As if he had said, I could detect, and object against you many things, but because I see my word is to you, but as the Sun-beams to the clay, more hardning you, I forbear now; yet my Father, who sent me to testifie the truth to you, will once appear true in all that he hath threatned unbelievers, and will vindicate his Word against all impious detorters of the same. See 2 Tim. 2. 13. It may be a comfort to all that constantly adhere to the truth of Gods Word; though the world and generality of men oppose or contemn it, God will be true: as the ascending fumes and vapours may for a time obscure the light of the Sun toward us, they cannot extinguish it, so may emergent Heresies, and oppositions of men veil the truth a while, they shall never finally prevail against it.

V. 27 they understood not] He noteth the stupidity of some of the hearers, who could neither understand promises, nor threatnings.

V. 28. When ye have lift up] That is, when you have crucified me, your own consciences shall be convicted, that I am the Sonne of God See Matt. 27. 54. Acts 2. 37. Luke 23. 47, 48. which he speaketh concerning those who should afterward repent and believe, for the rest did not, nor to this day doe acknowledge him such, and therefore perish in their sinnes.

V. 29. The Father hath not left me alone] That is, the power of the Spirit of God ever assisteth me in my ministery; it is your own fault, if you feel it not in your hearts, active to faith and obedience. 2 Cor. 4 3,4.

V. 30. many believed] The Bee sucketh Honey where the Spider gathereth venome: the Word of Christ falleth like the snow and rain, (Deut. 32. 1, &c. Isaiah 55. 10. Hebrewes, 4. 12, and 6, 7.) which maketh the venemous weeds grow up more rank to the fire, and the wholsom herbs more fruitfull for the owners blessing.

V. 31. If ye continue in my Word] It is the end which crowneth all good actions, See Matt. 24. 13. Revel. 2. 10. Colos. 1. 23. it is not enough to begin well, Non quaerunter in Christianis initia, sed finis: Paulus male cepit, sed bene finivit: Judas laudantur exordia, sed finis proditione damnatur. Jerom. Furia ep. 21. in Christians, not so much the beginning, as the end is considerable: Paul began ill, but ended well: Judas beginnings are commended, but his end was damnable for his treason.

V. 32. the truth shall make you free] For otherwise, they were slaves to sin and errour: the good man even in servitude is free, but the wicked, esti regnet, servus est, though he reigne is but a slave, and that not unto one man, but that which is more grievous to so many masters, as he hath sins. Prosper. out of Augustine de C. lib. 1. cap. 18. and then is the will free, when it serveth not vice and sinne: that is the gift of God, which being lost, nisi à quo potuit dari, non potest reddi, can be restored by none, but him, who could first give it. Prosper. ex Aug. de C. D. lib. 14. cap. 11.

V. 33. they answered him] They who were heard to calumniate, who believed not, though they had often been made vassals, and now were by the Romanes, yet they conceived that by right they ought to have been free; and that (however degenerate they were) yet that they had the priviledge of Abrahams sonnes: not understanding, that onely regeneration by the Spirit of God could make them free, and the true children of Abraham, Romans 2. 29. Luke 19. 9. Matt. 3. 9. Romans 9. 7, 8. Gal. 3 9. 29.

ye shall be made free] That is, as if we were not so already? thus are we generally secure under the Title of Christians, whereas that sacred Name shall more grievously condemne the wicked: and we may too truly say with Salvian de gub. D. lib. 6. O deplorable misery, quam dissimilis est nunc à seipso populus Christianus, id est, ab eo qui fuit quondam, How unlike is the Christian people to it self, that is, to such as it was wont to be.

V. 34. whosoever committeth sinne] You boast of your freedome: but sin is the greatest servitude (Rom. 6. 16. 20. 2 Pet. 2. 19.) and the custome thereof, the most unhappy tyranny, and the bonds thereof most hard to shake off. Sin reigning, a man hath a free will (saith Fulgent. de incarn. & gra. cap. 19.) but free without God, not free under God, and therefore pessime atque servilitèr liberum, wickedly and servilely free, because not freed by the free gift of God shewing mercy.

V. 35. the servant abideth not in the house. &c.] This is the punishment and misery of the servants of sin: though they seem for a time to enjoy the priviledge of Gods House, and to insult over, and persecute his children, yet are they not Heirs, but must at last be cast out, as Ismael was from Abrahams family, Gen. 21. 9. Gal. 4. 30.

V. 36. if the Son therefore shall make you free] This he saith, to shew that whereas all men are born servants of sinne, they are freed by grace onely, and the spirit of Adoption, by faith in Christ: and that all other prerogatives are vain: what could the Empire of the world advantage a servant to sin? The most happy freedome, is to be a servant of God, that sinne may not reign in thee. But from this servitude of sin, no man is freed but by the Son of God, Fulgent. de incarn. &c. cap. 19. for by him spiritualiter renascimur. See Augustine ep. 157. See also the Epistle of the Council of Carthage, Innocent. ib. ep. 90.

V. 37. ye are Abrahams seed] That is, according to the flesh.

V. 38. seen with your father] What your father the Devil teacheth you. See verse 44.

V. 39. works of Abraham] You would be Heir to him in faith, and obedience, the works of Abraham were Faith and Obedience, and the fruit of the Spirit described, Gal. 5. 22. 23. See Rom. 4. 9. &c. Gal. 3. 6. you that glory of your being sons of Abraham, believe as he did, for the carnal priviledge will nothing advantage you. See Rom 2. 28. 29.

V. 40. this did not Abraham] Your workes are contrary to Abrahams; He loved and believed God, you through unbelief persecute the Sonne of God: He obeyed God, you serve the spirit of malice.

V. 41. the deeds of your Father] Your works speak you the sons of another father, whom you imitate.

we have one Father, even God] We worship one God, who chose us to be his people, who often acknowledged us for his children, Exodus, 4. 22.

V. 42. if

V. 42. if God were your Father] If ye were indeed the sons of God by adoption, you would imitate him in love.

V. 43. Cannot hear my word] That is, you will not hear and obey, being filled with malice and prejudicate opinion. See Mat. 13. 14. 15.

V. 44. ye are of your father the devil] Not by nature, but by imitation of his malice. See 1 John 3. 8. So Cyril. Catech. 7. Satan is the lyars father, οὐ φύσει, ἀλλὰ κατὰ προαίρεσιν, not by nature, but by fraud and deceit.

from the beginning] From the beginning of the beginning of the world he led men into sin and death, by his lying, Gen. 3. 4, 5.

abode not in the truth] He kept not his first estate, Jude verse 6.

he speaketh of his own] According to his custom and disposition; if ever he speak truth, he borroweth that, to the end that he may deceive the more.

he is a lyar, and the father of it] Lyars are the devils children by imitation: herein they meerly resemble him: none would believe him whom they knew to be the devil; neither will they believe a notorious known lyar: it is madnesse not to know, quod mendacia non diu fallunt, Cyprian lib. 1. ep. 3. that lies cannot long deceive; because ere long, none will beleeve him, no not when he telleth the truth.

V. 45. because I tell you the truth] Thus he proveth them Satans sons, not Gods, because they hated the truth, nor is there any more evident mark of a reprobate mind, than hatred of truth, and love of lies. See 2 Thess. 2. 10, 11.

V. 46. Which of you convinceth me of sin?] This is a secret prepossession of an objection: if they should say, we dis-beleeve not because thou speakest truth, but because thou violatest the Law; He challengeth the accusers to shew wherein: they could accuse, and did malitiously, but who can convince, or prove him to be a transgressour of the Law? This word could fit the mouth of holy Jesus onely, it is too high a challenge for any of the meer sons of men: In Christ onely there was no sin. See Hebr. 7. 26. Such the law of Sacrifices prefigured him. See 1 Pet. 1. 19

V. 47. He that is of God] This is a peculiar of those who are of God; who are led by the Spirit of God, and sincerely endeavour to do his will, they will hearken to his word; they will love to hear. See 1 John 4. 6. you beleeve not, because you are not Gods sons, but Satans, who hates and resists the truth. See Act. 13. 48.

V. 48. Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, &c.] Thus groweth unbelief and contempt of Gods word into open blasphemy: thus convicted impiety breaks out into railing: they accounted the Samaritanes Apostates, and impious; therefore when they would describe a wicked man, they called him Samaritan.

V. 50 and judgeth] And will avenge this blasphemy, wherewith ye dishonour me.

V. 51. He shall never see death] Shall not die eternally: It is an Hebrew manner of expression, as also, to taste of death, verse 52. Hebr. 11. 5. See Mat. 16. 28. Mark 9. 1. Luke 9. 27.

V. 52. we know thou hast a devil] Thus obstinate were they in their malitious blasphemy; and so high an opinion had they of themselves, that they concluded all must be true which they thought, who thought themselves infallible.

V. 53. Art thou greater than our father Abraham?] So injurious are they to God and to the Saints, who use their name and memory to Christs dishonour: we can never make more honourable mention of them, than when we strive them the servants of Christ.

V. 54. if I honour my self] If I onely speak glorious and great things of my self, as you suppose; but my Father testifieth of me, and honoureth me, by the Prophets, by his voice from Heaven, by many miracles by me done.

Ye say that he is your God] They professed so, (as also many now) but they denied God in their actions; as the Apostle saith, Tit. 1. 16. they professe that they know God, but in works they deny him, &c. No complements can take the omniscient God, no disguises deceive him. See Jer. 7. 24, 5. Mat. 7. 21. &c.

V. 55. ye have not known him] Therefore is he not your God: ye know him not, who dare so wilfully disobey him: he that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a lyar, and the truth is not in him, 1 John 2. 4.

V. 56. Abraham rejoyced to see my day] That is, my coming in the flesh, which he saw far off by faith, Heb. 11. 13. (Prosper referreth it to the day of his passion, figured in his son. de promis. & praedict, part 1. cap. 37.)

V. 57. Thou art not yet fifty years old] He was about thirty and three years old. See Luke 3. 23.

V. 58. Before Abraham was, I am] I who according to my humanity am not fifty years old; according to my divine nature am eternal, and so before Abraham, and all the creatures: the Deity hath neither past, nor future, sed semper esse habet, Greg. hom. 18. in Evang. He saith not to Moses, I was, but I am hath sent thee, Exod. 3. 14.

V. 59. Then took they up stones, &c.] Such is the fury of blind zeal, and impatient errour, they have no ober ears for truth, but hands quickly armed for slaughter. See Acts 7. 57.

but Jesus hid himself] How, we read not, but certainly Gods power so protected him; because the time of his passion was not yet come. See Luke 4. 30. he could easily have destroyed all his enemies, but qui pati veneratur, exercere judicium nolebat. Greg. in Evang. hom. 18. He that came to suffer would not now exercise judgement: It may teach us, to decline the fury of our enemies by withdrawing our selves from their presence, if it may be, to reserve our selves to better times and auditors. Certainly Christ stayeth not with the bloody and cruel; though in his absence they have the possession of the external; material Churches.

CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. Blind from his birth] Born blind: this setteth out the greatnesse of the miracle: they who are blind by some disease growing in the eye, (any part of that curious fabrick being hurt or disaffected) may possibly find some help by the art and industry of the Physician: but those who are born blind, without eyes, or without the natural frame and disposition thereof, can be cured by none but the Lord of nature: therefore the Evangelist mentioneth this, that we may know that this cure was non artis, sed potestatis, Ambrof. ad Bellit. ep. 75. l. 9. not of art but power.

V. 2. or his parents] This they asked, being confident of his omnsicence, otherwise they had in vain moved this question; and also knowing that all misery is the effect of sin, (c 5. 14.) and that God often visiteth the Parents sin upon their dear children, see 2 Sam. 12. 14. &c.

V. 3. Neither hath this man sinned, nor, &c.] Which he saith not ἀπλῶς, simply, for so, both he and his parents had sinned (as Chrysostom noteth) but neither this mans sins, nor his parents were a cause why he, rather than all other sinners, was born blind, but that Gods glory might appear in his cure.

V. 4. While it is day] While I live here, or while I have opportunity. This is a similitude taken from the common custom and condition of men unto whom God hath appointed the day-time for labour and doing פעל יהוה Exod. 20. 9. omne opus tuum. 70. πᾶσαν τὴν ἐργασίαν σου, all thy works. See Psal. 104. 23. the present sense is, which Theophylatt giveth, ἕως ὁ καιρὸς ἐδὸ ἀνίησιν, while my present life lasteth; which the Apostle, Hebr. 5. 7. calleth ἡμέρας τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ, the dayes of his flesh; that is, while yet he was in this world bearing the assumed frailties of human flesh and blood (for we may not think that being glorified, he hath put off our flesh, and human nature) while he here lived to preach, do miracles to call men to, and confirm them in the faith, and perform all those things, which according to the determinate counsel and will of God, were to be done for the accomplishment of mans salvation; all which because it was limited to certain times and moments thereof; he compareth the season and opportunity of working and doing the same, to a day consisting of certain definite hours.

when no man can work] He calleth the hour of the wicked, and power of darknesse (to which he was in his passion shortly to be subjected) the night, wherein he should not have opportunity of healing, and doing miracles for the confirmation of the Gospel, by his own visible and bodily presence: he did that after his death and resurrection by his disciples and their successours in the Primitive Church for a time: the words therefore expresse not an impossibility, but an improbability: when no man can work; that is, when it is unseasonable to work: it must needs be, while we have time, to improve it to Gods service; the time is coming on, wherein there shall be no faith, labour, prophesying, nor place for repentance. See Isa. 55. 6. John 12. 35, 36. 1 Cor. 13. 8.

V. 5. I am the light] Chap. 8. 9. He is always in the world, and still illuminateth every one that comes into the world: but not now by a visible presence, and external operation, but by his divine and secret power. See c. 8. 12.

V. 6. Spat on the ground] Christ useth means, to mans reason improbable, that his power might be the better seen in the cure.

anointed the eyes of the blind] Or spread the clay upon the eyes, &c. That is, the place where the eyes should naturally have been, or upon those his lightlesse, and disaffected organs of sight: So God according to his omipotent will worketh either by, without, or contrary, to ordinary meanes, and second causes; plaistering whole and found eyes with clay, might, to mans reason, have seemed a meanes rather to blinde, than to give a better sight.

V. 7. go wash in the pool of Siloam] Siloam was a fountain at the foot of mount Sion. See on Luke 13. 4.

Alexand. Paed. l.* 1. Nazianz. orat. 40. Cyril. Cat. 1. 2 Chrysost. on Heb 6. 4. where the Apostle calleth the baptized φωτισθεντας, enlightened, as Ambrof. faith, refusa lumine, as if Christ the light touching the blind, infused illumination.

V. 8. be that sate and begged] Their law concerning beggars, and provision for the poor, Deuteronomy 15 4. (as in other disordered governments) it seemeth was now not carefully executed. See Act. 3. 2.

V. 9. I am he] As impiety is ingenious to conceal and obscure the works of God, so is faith and holy gratitude ingenuous and free to confesse the fame to Gods glory: their doubting occasioned this recovered man to proclaim, the work of Christ on him; wherein as Chrysostom noteth. ὐκ ἠσχυνθη τὴν ἀφηρημενην πηρωσιν --- he was not ashamed of his former blindnesse (no nor of his beggery) nor feared he the peoples fury, neither dissembled he the benefit received.

V. 10. thine eyes opened] ἀνεῳχθησαν, after the Hebrew manner of speaking, the eyes of the blind are said to be shut: and to their eyes are said to be opened, who of blind, are restored to sight: sometimes we read of eyes, held, or opened in another sense, as Gen. 21. 19. Luke 24. 16. so Hagars were opened, that she might see that, which before, though present, and seeing, she could not see: and the Disciples eyes were held; not that they might not see, but that they might not at present know Christ.

V. 11. I went and washed] He relateth the truth simply and as it was acted; shewing the effect of his faith and obedience, the receiving his sight.

V. 12. I know not] Whether they asked, as admiring the cure, or to accuse him who had wrought it on the Sabbath, it is not evident though this seemeth most probable: it appeareth that though the cured man had learned his name who cured him, of others (as Mark 10. 47. Matth. 20. 30.) possibly of those who led him away to Siloam, yet had he not yet seen Jesus, who likely went away from the place where he cured him, so that he found him not after he returned from the water, seeing.

V. 13. they brought him to the Pharisees] Whether to ingratiate with them, or to enform them what admirable things Jesus (whom they persecuted) did, it is not manifest.

V. 14. It was the Sabbath day] See on Mat. 12. 2, 5, 8. See chap. 5. 9. &c.

V. 15. again the Pharisees] These busie enemies of Christ, intended by this re-examination of the man, to have found some advantage against Christ; but they did but condemn themselves the more, by how much more apparent their malice made this admirable work of Christ.

V. 16. because he keepeth not the Sabbath] See on chap. 5. 9, 10.

V. 17. A Prophet] A man of God, of whom he must have such power. Surely he must needs be acknowledged an holy Prophet for sent of God. which he hath abundantly proved by this his power shewed on me, in doing this divine miracle of restoring sight to me who was born blind; this none but God ever did, or could do.

V. 18. Until they called his parents] Hoping that they being over-awed with fear of their power and authority, would rather deny that their son was born blind, than by confessing a known truth, incur their displeasure: but the more they strive to obscure the truth, the more evident they made it: so God turneth the counsels of the wicked against themselves, and taketh the wise in their own craft. See 1 Cor. 1. 19.

V. 19. who ye say was, &c.] They will not acknowledge that he was so born, but interrogate the parents in a threatning manner, which in effect was to bid them deny it, as they tendred their favour.

V. 20. we know this is our son] We cannot but know and confesse this; they would not for fear deny their son: how wretched is it for fear or favour to to deny our Saviour.

V. 21. he is of age ask him] Of age to be a competent witnesse; and he can best enform you hereof, who hath many years endured the misery of blindnesse, and now enjoyeth his sight: it may be the cure was not wrought in their sight, and therefore they more willingly put off the fuller answer to their son.

V. 22. because they feared the Jews] That is, the Pharisees and these who were of their consistory, or Sanhedrin, because they had already determined to excommunicate, or put any man out of the Synagogue that confessed him to be Christ; and it appeareth that this was published among the common people with severe threatnings, therefore these parents were afraid.

put out of the Synagogue] That is, cast out of the Church as a notorious and contumatious malefactour, profane, and wicked Heretick; which casting out, we call excommunication. See Matth. 18. 17. 1 Cor. 5. 2, 5. 1 Tim. 1. 20. this sheweth, as the abuse of excommunication among them, so the use thereof in all ages.

V. 24. give God praise] Tell truth, that God may be glorified. See Josh. 7. 19. as if they had said, remember, that thou speakest in Gods presence: thus (as hypocrites use) they pretended the honour of God, to colour their own implacable malice against Christ.

we know] They would have them in blind obedience to their authority, rest on their judgement (though it were against Christ himself) and beleeve that they could not erre.

this man is a sinner] By this they blasphemously meant, a notoriously impious man.

V. 25. I know that whereas I was blind, I now see] He said before he is a Prophet, but perceiving the Pharisees so eager against Christ, refusing to speak of the person, he affirmeth the admirable work done.

V. 26. They said to him again] In these many re-examinations, they would have found him forgetful of what he had said, that by crossing his own testimony, he might have made it void: so extream diligent is Satan, to overthrow, or obscure the it void: so extream diligent is Satan, to overthrow, or obscure the it void: so extream diligent is Satan, to overthrow, or obscure the truth.

V. 27. ye did not hear] Ye believed it not. Gre, ὐκ ἠκουσατε, ye heard not, ye regarded not, you gave no credit to my testimony; why do you desire often to hear that which ye will not beleeve, be it never so evident.

will ye also be his disciples ?] As if he had said; do you by these re-examinations desire to know more of him that you may beleeve in him and follow him as his disciples, as I, and all that are enlightened by God, find just cause to do? if so, I shall willingly answer again and again; if not, let it suffice that I have already clearly related the whole truth of this matter unto you.

V. 28. we are Moses Disciples] Thus they boasted, but were indeed wicked hypocrites: on false principles they set their false superstitions: they took it for granted, that he could not be a disciple of Moses; that is, obey the Law of God given by the ministry of Moses, who beleeved in, or was a disciple of Christ: whereas the truth is, that they which were the true disciples of Moses, did come to, and beleeve in Christ, the end of the Law, which was a Schoolmaster to bring them to him, Gal. 3. 24. therefore he told them, c. 5. 46. had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me.

V. 29. whence he is] They knew his parents, but doubted of his authority, whether God sent him to us or not: we know not what commission, power, or authority he hath to preach and do these things We are certain that God spake to, and wrought by Moses, whom we follow, this man we know not whence he is: much differently said Nicodemus, c. 3. 2. Rabbi. we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doft, except God be with him.

V. 30. herein is a marvellous thing] He might well admire their ignorance, seeing opening the eyes of the blind, was a foretold sign and mark of the Messias, Isa. 35. 4, 5. so Mat. 11. 5. Luke 7. 20. &c. which they knowing that he now had done, and never man before had or could do, yet they could not (by reason of their malice which blinded them) understand and beleeve that he was the promised Messias, so many ages before described and marked out by God, by his opening the eyes of the blind, &c. See Mat. 11. 5.

V. 31. God heareth not sinners] Psal. 66. 18 Which may not be understood simply and universally: for God sometimes heareth in judgement, as he sometimes denyeth in mercy, by this argument he would overthrow their blasphemous censures of Christ: God will not hear the prayers of such wicked men as you mentioned, see Isa. 1. 11. Rom. 8. 15. Psal. 50. 16. Jam. 5. 16. therefore he cannot be wicked who obtaineth power of God to do such things. See c. 3. 2.

but if any man, &c.] 1 John 3. 22.

V. 32. since the world began] As if he said, that which cometh to passe by nature, is commonly, or usually so, that which by art, often; but that which is done against the course of nature, above the power of art, and so rarely, must needs be by the immediate hand of God: and so consequently Christ is of God.

V. 33. he could do nothing] None of these extraordinary good things.

V. 34. altogether born in sins] They meant, a wicked rude idiot, as if he had by his affliction been marked for a notorious sinner; or a curfed man, as c. 7. 39.

Cast him out] Or excommunicated him. See v. 22.

V. 35. when he had found him] They that are excommunicate for confessing Christ aright, are thereby brought nearer to Christ: but they who are justly excommunicate, are thereby delivered to Satan, 1 Cor. 5. 5. 1 Tim. 1. 20. which is a terrible punishment.

doft thou believe ?] This he saith, ὐκ ἀγνοῶν, saith Chrysostom hom. 58. not being ignorant, but being willing to manifest himself unto him, that he might believe and be saved.

V. 36. who is he Lord, &c.] Nor yet knowing Jesus by sight, yet affectionately desiring to know him who had done him so great a favour:

a favour: not ashamed of his ignorance, he prayeth to be enformed that he might beleeve.

V. 37. Is it he that talketh with thee] He faith not, I am he; but it is he, as in a third person, intimating that the Deity of the Son of God was vailed in that form of infirm man which he saw: happy man who had his bodily eyes opened to see the Son of God in the flesh, but incomparably more happy in that his fouls eyes were enlightened to apprehend and know him by faith to salvation; Christ who gave the first, now followeth him with this new and greater beneficence. So do Gods mercies increase upon the elect.

V. 38. worshipped him] Fell down and worshipped him: so the Syriac Interpreter hath it.

V. 39 for judgement I am come] Meaning, the Pharisees arrogate all jurisdiction to themselves, as if they onely saw all things; but I shall judge, or execute authority far otherwise: for I will enlighten those whom they account blind, and deliver them to darknesse of mind, who think themselves the onely knowing men.

they which see not] That is, wretched sinners, who acknowledge and bewail their innate ignorance, shall be enligened by the Gospel.

and that they which see] They who think they are wise (See Isa. 5. 21.) as did the Pharisees, who arrogated to themselves the name of wise; anciently the Prophets were called רואים roim seers. 1 Sam. 9. 9. let us go חזה. 70. ἀφες τον Καλουμενον: to the seer. so was a Prophet called, ὁ Καλουμενος: so here ὁι Καλουμενοι; so Syr. חזיון which see of the Hebr. חזה vidit, whence also חזיון a seer, or a Prophet, Isa. 30. 10. the Scribes and Pharisees vainly affecting such high titles (as Mat. 23. 7, 24.) are threatned, as Isa. 6. 9. See Mat. 13. 15.

V. 40. are we blind also ?] What ? will you say that we also are ignorant ?

V. 41. ye should have no sin] That is, you should not be so much in fault, as now you are. if you erred ignorantly, but it is a greater sin to condemn the known Law of God, than to be ignorant thereof (See chap. 15. 22. Mat. 15. 14.) or, you were nearer the cure, but for your opinion of knowledge and sanctity; many had long since been wise, and good, but that they too soon thought themselves so. See Revel. 3. 17. 1 John 1. 8. 1 Cor. 3. 18. Jam. 4. 17.

CHAP. X.

Verse 1. ΕΝ*truth not by the door*] Christ compareth the Church to a sheep-fold, (as Mich. 2. 12.) into which God gathers his sheep; that is, the Elect: and himself to the door: because there may be no entrance into the Church, but through him: they who lead not this way, are no true pastours.

V. 2. he that entreth by the door] That is, by Christ: the Priests, Scribes, and Pharisees, as false Prophets, came in sheeps clothing, who within were ravening wolves, Mat. 7. 15.

V. 3. to him the porter openeth] The meaning is; God alloweth none for pastours, but those who lead their hearers to him through Christ.

the sheep hear his voice] The Elect know and follow the voice of Christ in his word.

he calleth his own sheep by name] He knoweth who are his, 2 Tim. 2. 19. and their names are written in the Book of Life, Phil. 4. 3.

V. 4. when he putteth forth his own sheep] See Psal. 23. 1. &c. Jer. 17. 16. 2 Sam. 7. 8. He leadeth them out to green pastures, that is to refection and comfort; he goeth before them in doctrine and example: his sheep know his voice, by that discerning spirit, by which we are commanded to try the spirits, 1 John 4. 1. So did the Bereans, Act. 17.

V. 5. know not the voice of strangers] They approve not, or hearken not to the voice of those who bring any other doctrine. Gal. 1, 8. 2 John v. 10.

V. 6. This parable] See Mat. 13. 3. Gre. παϊμίαν τὰυ παροιμίαν, this proverb, or adagie, 2 Pet. 2. 22. a short, and common sentence, or saying: that which the other Evangelists call a parable, Mat. 13. 3. &c.

V. 7. Then said Jesus again] Or therefore, because they understood not what he said, he repeateth it again, further expressing it to them.

I am the door of the sheep] The meaning is, that in Christ is the sum of all doctrine wherewith the souls of the Elect are nourished: therefore the Apostle cared for nothing else, Phil. 3. 1 Cor. 2. 2. and that no man can come into the kingdom of God, but through him: so as Gr Nazianzen said orat. 36. δἰθὸς δὲ ὡς ὃν' ἑαυτὸν ἡγουμαι: He is the way leading us (to eternal life) through himself: his Saints and Elect per eum, intrant ad eum, through his truth and merit to life eternal in him.

V. 8. All that ever came before me] Meaning the false prophets, who came not in by him, but satan and their own ambition: whosoever called himself the door or way to life; or all that went into the ministry and he sent them not; for he saith not, all that were sent: for as Augustin saith, To 6. contr. adv. leg. Gre. l. 2. c. 4. He meaneth here, all those qui missi non fuissent: who were not sent; whom the Prophet Jeremy reproveth, chap. 23. 21. so Isaia faith, Cum illo venerunt, qui cum verba dei venerunt, qui non per se venerunt; they came with him who came with the word of God, who came not by themselves. So Clem. Alexandrinus l. 1. strom. καὶ δι ἡ ἀφορμὴν ἀγε, &c. The Prophets truly, for as much as they were sent and inspired of God -- ὐ κλεπται εἰσι ἡ λῃσται ἀλλὰ δἰακονοι -- were not theeves and robbers, but Ministers: by theeves and robbers are here meant, those who seek their own ease and profit, not caring for the flock of God.

V. 9. I am the door] As men come by the door into the house, so come we to heaven through Christ onely: and therefore he faith I am the door; that is, as a door by which onely you may enter into life eternal. So c. 15. 1, 5. I am the true vine: in figurative enunciations it is necessary to know that the analogical and representing sign, is put for the thing represented, and contrariwise sometimes: I am the door, I am the true vine; that is, these thin s have a kind of proportion or resemblance of me the onely Mediatour, and Saviour: this is my body, this is my blood; that is, signes, and resemblances appointed of God to shew the Lords death till he come, 1 Cor. 11. 26.

and shall go in and out] Not meaning going out of the Church, by separation from the body of Christ; (for as Lactantius saith well, l. 4. c. ult.) if any go out of Christs Church, a fpe vitæ ac falutis æternæ alienus eft; He is an aliant from hope of eternal life and salvation but alluding to the use of a door: it is an Hebraisme importing fecurity of life and conversation, and actions: as Psalm 121. 8.

V. 10. have it more abundantly] Which is in respect of the encreases of Gods grace through Christ here; and the fulnesse of happinesse in the life to come.

V. 11. I am the good shepherd] Isa. 40. 11. Ezek. 34. 23 Thus faith, Cyril. Hieros. cat. 10. He is sometimes called a Sheep or Lambe; ἀπὸ τῆν ἀνθρωπότητα: in respect of his incarnation; and also a shepherd: ἀπὸ τῆν φιλανθρωπίαν τῆς θεότητος; for the benignity of his Deity.

V. 12. Seeth the wolf coming] By wolf he meaneth false prophets and seducers, as Mat. 7. 15, 60 Act. 20. 29. or persecutors: some adde hereto. Satan; qui caulas fidelium, infidians circuit. Gregor. hom. 14. in Evang. who laying wait, goeth round about the folds of the faithful.

V. 13. the hireling fleeth] That is, he that administreth for his own profits sake. leaveth the people to seducers, and destruction, See Rom. 16. 18. Phil. 3. 19 Ezek. 13. 4 5. & 34. 2. here are described three properties of false prophets, or hirelings. 1. They have no proper charge; they are but intruders and ussurpers, whatever right they pretend to, or seem to have. 2. When the wolf any danger or trouble cometh; they fly and desert the cause; if not leaving the place, yet in connivance and silence; as Augustin saith hereon, fugiffi, quia tacuiffi: thou fleddt for as much as thou heldst thy peace: they betray fouls for fear of men; non mutando locum fed fubtrahendo folacium, fugit: quia injuftitiam vidit, &c. tacuit: fugit, quod fe fub filentio abfcondit, Gregor. hom. 14. he flyeth, not by changing place, but by withdrawing (or withholding) comfort; because he saw wickednesse and held his peace: he flyeth, in that he hideth himself in silence. 3. They leave their people to the seducements of false prophets and impostors.

V. 14. The good shepherd] As verse 11. He knoweth his, 2 Tim. 2. 19. John 13. 18. but here is an Hebraisme, γινωσκει he knoweth, that is, he loveth, approveth, or holdeth dear, so Gregor. q. 5. interpreteth cognofco, hoc eft, diligo, I know, that is, I love. So the Hebr. ידע jadah, is used, Psal. 1. 6. and 37. 18. See also Mat. 7 23.

V. 15. I lay down my life for the sheep] Hirelings betray the sheep to the wolf, but Christ εἰς ἀντρον for a ransome and so the faithful Pastours, εἰς μαρτύριον, for a witnesse to the truth, lay down their lives for the sheep. See 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. Isa. 53. 6, 8, 12. Acts 20. 28. John 6. 51. 1 John 3. 16.

V. 16. other sheep have I] He meaneth among the Gentiles, which then were but strangers to the Church of God. See Exek. 37. 22. So Hof. 2. 23. I will call them my people which were not my people, and her beloved, which was not beloved. Rom. 9. 25, 26. Sic autem Moses Ethiopiffam accipiebat uxorem, Irane. l. 4. c. 37. So Moses took the Ethiopian to wife, Numb. 12. 1. in a representation of that which was to come, making her an Israelite, who was an aliant: So was the wild Olive implanted, Rom. 11. 17 &c.

and there fhall be one fold] One Church of Jews and Gentiles; the partition-wall being broken down, Ephes. 2. 14. & 3. 6. & 4 4. If but one Church, quomodo poteft gregi annumerari, qui in numero gregis non eft ? How can he be reckoned to the flock, which is not in the number of the flock? Cyprian. l. 1 ep. 5. See more there concerning the unity of the Church.

V. 17. because I lay d wn my life] Isa. 53. 12. Because I willingly perform his will. for mans redemption becoming obedient unto the death, even the death of the crosse. Phil. 2. 8.

V. 18. power to take it up again] To raise my human nature from the dead, as being very God, the resurrection and the life, chap 11. 25.

V. 19. there was a division] As chap. 9. 16. the Gospel reproveth sin, and detecteth hypocrisie, therefore the impious world is troubled at the preaching thereof; and so men are divided into several factions, according to their different opinions.

V. 20. he hath a devil, &c.] So said they, chap. 7. 20. and 8. 48. μαίνεται: Syr. insaniendo insanit, or omnino insanit, an usual Hebraical manner of speech: that which we say, he is stark mad; and lunatick: thus impudently blaspheme they the wisdom and mercy of God. See 1 Kings 9. 11 Acts 2. 13, 17. & 26. 24.

V. 21. not the words of him that hath a devil] They that had received some tastes of Gods Spirit, relished a divine grace in his lips, in the words of sobriety and truth, and therefore loved and admired him, as chap. 7. 46. Mat. 7. 28, 29. affirming secretly that which they were sensible of, by denying an improbable collection of the malicious adversaries: as if they said, wicked, possessed, or mad men, do not use to speak thus.

can a devil open the eyes, &c.] Δαιμόνιον, a devil, or Δαιμόνιον ἔχειν, he that hath a devil: by this reason they refell the others blasphemous assertion, they intimate that the devil hath no such power, as to be able to create eyes to him that was born blind; they might also say, neither any such goodnesse, as to be willing to do any good for man, except in order to some greater mischief: if then this work done exceeded all power of the creature, it remaineth that it was possible only to God the Creatour: and then if God wrought in him, without controversie the same spake in him; if his work could not be ascribed to the devil, neither ought his words: if the work was of a good God, how blaspheмously do any say that the words proceeded from a malitious devil, who would gladly destroy and afflict all mankind?

V. 22. the feast of the dedication] Or instauration; which feast was not that we read of, 2 Chron. 7. &c. this was instituted by Judas Maccabeus, to be held eight dayes, in remembrance of their deliverance, and restitution of their Temple and Religion, which Antiochus had corrupted, 1 Maccab. 4. 59. See Beza not. major. ad loc. and Tremellius on the same.

V. 23. in Salomons porch] That is, that part of the Temple which was built again after the pattern of that porch which Solomon builded.

V. 24. make us in doubt] Or hold us in suspence: indeed their malice and unbelief made them fluctuant and doubtful, his words and works evidently enough declared him to be the Messias, to beleevers; unto the malitious unbeleevers, it no more appeared, than light to the blind: the fault was in themselves, who neither did, could or would see: for their eyes have they closed, lest at any time they should see with their eyes -- and should be converted, &c. Mat. 13. 15.

tell us plainly] Not that they were willing to know and beleeve, but that they might have occasion to calumniate and destroy him, by accusing him of conspiracy against Cæsar; forasmuch as they held this principle, that their expected Messias, Christ, must be an absolute Monarch and glorious King. See c. 19. 12. therefore did he prohibit his disciples from divulging that which he had declared to them in private concerning this (see Mat. 16. 20.) and forbad others to speak of those great things which he had done for them, which otherwise would have testified as much; for his hour was not yet come. Note here how hypocrites flatter their eyes, and require more light: they seem to cast an aspersion on Christ, as if he were in fault, as the cause of their unbelief because he had not dealt sincerely enough with them, in a clear revelation of himself to them, who desired nothing more than to know and acknowledge the Messias; whereas his works which they often saw, so evidently speaking him the Christ, they had yet decreed to excommunicate any that should confesse him to be so, chap. 9. 22. thus some Hypocrites accuse the Gospel of obscurity; and others the Ministers teaching: of ambiguity, or some other defect; when, God knows, the fault is apparently in themselves.

V. 25. the works, &c.] As if he had said, what need more words, where works evidently testifying, are dis-beleeved? As suppose there had been, as you calumniate me, any obscurity in my words; yet the miracles which you have seen with your eyes, done by divine power, and exceeding all ability of men or Angels, evidently convince your contumacy against God, who will not beleieve his messengers whom he hath furnished with such divine vertue: these sufficiently witnesse that I am the Christ, and expected Messias, these things which I have done in your sight.

V. 26. because ye are not of my sheep] For faith is the gift of God, which he gives onely to his. See Ephes 2. 8. spiritual deafnesse toward the word of God, is a certain effect of unbelief. See chap. 8 47. and 1 John 4. 6.

V. 27. my sheep hear my voice] Those that are ordained to life eternal, hear, beleeve, and obey the Gospel which is the voice of Christ their shepherd.

I know them] I own and acknowledge them for mine. See 2 Tim. 2. 19. Phil. 3 1. 7. and 1. 6. &c. As they acknowledge, own, and follow, the voice of their Pastour, loving, reverencing, beleeving, and obeying him: so I acknowledge them for mine, loving, preserving, and giving them the grace of perseverance in the faith, that I may save them.

they follow me] They obey my precepts, and imitate my example.

V. 28. neither shall any] Neither men, nor devils, nor any creature (See Mat. 16. 18 Rom. 8. 38, 39) neither by fraud nor violence, ἐκ ἁπάσης τῆς, none shall be able to pluck them out of my hand: for as Augustin, faith, To. 7. de corrup. & gra. c. 7. bonum si quis quam potest, vitio humano vincitur Deus: sed nemo eorum potest, quia nulla re vincitur Deus: If any one of these perish, then God is overcome by mans sin; but God is not overcome by any thing. See also the Author of that book, de fide ad Petrum Diac, cap. 35.

V. 29. greater than all] More powerful than all the creatures; for in his Almighty power they move, and have their being, Act. 17. 28.

V. 30. I and my Father are one] Two persons, but one God. He speaketh this as he is God; one in substance, being, and deity, nature, glory, and power, &c. as God he saith, I and my Father are one; but secundum formam servi, in respect of the form of a servant (his assumed humanity) he saith, chap. 14. my Father is greater than I, Augustin. ep. Pascent. ep. 174. theop. 177. See also Fulgent. de fide orthod. c 1. Donat. post med. Cyril. cat. 11. Hilar. de Trin. lib. 7. Essi persona duo, potestate unum sunt, Ambrof. in Luc. lib. 2. cap. 2. though they are two persons, they are one in power.

V. 31. took up stones again] As chap. 8 59. this shews with what mind they spake verse 24. they would have him tell them plainly whether he were Christ, with purpose to stone him as a false prophet, Deut. 13. 5. Levit. 20. 16. unbelief is the mother of fury: the spirit of Satan never discovers it self more evidently in men, than by stirring them up to persecute Christ, and the Preachers of the Gospel.

V. 32. for which of them, &c.] Seeing you can object no evil by me done, and yet stone me, it appears that you persecute me for the good I have done you: the implacable enemy hath in all ages stirred up persecution against the Prophets for the good they did: no wonder that Christ bids us rejoyce herein. See Luke 6. 23. James 1. 2. nothing more evidently markeeth them for dear to God, than the devils malice to them: as (Tertullian adv. Gent. cap. 5.) said of their persecution under Nero, We may, we also glory in such an avoucher of our condemnation; Qui enim scit illum intelligere potesse, non nisi grande aliquod bonum a Nerone damnatum; for he that knoweth him may understand, that nothing but some great good is condemned by Nero.

V. 33. for a good work we stone thee not] The wicked would fain seem, but not be just: they will never acknowledge any persecution of Christ or his, by themselves acted; their practice is to load them with pretended crimes, supposing thereby to justifie themselves in their outrages; whereas they do by so much more make themselves guilty, by how much greater injury they do the just, by slandering them, and by hurting not onely their persons, but also their good names: it was more injurious cruelty to put the skins of beasts on perfected Christians; that they might thereby make their dogs worry them to death, than if they had slain them in their own habits: it is an undeniable curtesie in cruelty, to have ones throat cut with a clean knife; to be condemned without foul and defamatory language, or under pretended and false crimes.

V. 34. is not written] Psal. 82. 6. That is, in the holy Scriptures (So chap. 15. 25.) which your selves hold and professe, Hebr. בתורתיהם in your law תורה torah, sometimes imports onely the five Books of Moses; sometimes, the whole Scriptures, and the doctrine thereof, as here: sometimes, Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms are distinguished.

ye are gods] אלהים elohim in Scripture signifieth either the true God, or something excellent: as Angels, great and honourable men, princes, &c. Exod. 21. 6. 1 Sam. 2. 25. Exod. 4. 16. 1 Sam. 28. 13. because in government and judging the people (as Jehosaphat told his Judges, 2 Chron. 19. 6.) they judge not for man, but God.

V. 35. unto whom the word of God came] To whom God spake in that Scripture; that is, to Kings, his Vice-gerents, whom he calleth gods, because they rule on earth for him.

cannot be broken] Λυθῆναι, violated, or made void, as Mat. 5. 17. or destroyed, as chap. 7. 23. or denyed, as false and erroneous.

V. 36. say ye of him] Who is indeed, King of kings, and Lord of lords, Rev. 17. 14. How injuriously, and blaspheмously, do you say that I blaspheme, because I speak the truth in affirming that I am the Son of God? You allow mortal men, Kings, Princes, and Judges, to be called gods; because the Scripture stileth them so, though they are in their own persons, wicked men; and why will ye not acknowledge me to be the Son of God, concerning whom the same God of truth who endited the holy Scripture (1 Pet. 1. 26.) testified from heaven, that I am his beloved Son in whom he is well pleased, Mat. 17. 5. & 3. 17. 2 Pet. 1. 17.

whom the Father hath sanctified] If ye grant this title (according to Scriptures) to Princes who are but men, and too often the work of men (the corruption of the best being in the effects thereof, ever worst and most dangerous) will ye not permit it me, who am by nature divinâ origine, by an incomprehensible generation, the holy one of God; God of God, very God, as also very man?

V. 37. if I do not the works of my Father] That is, such works as none but God onely can do; which indeed Christ did with the Father, by the same power and Deity: thus proveth he himself the Son of God by nature; the substance, and essence of the Deity none can apprehend, the works and effects thereof, all ought to consider and understand; therefore Christ here, as it were, appealeth to his own works done among them, that they might testifie of him.

V. 38. and

V. 38. and I in him] See chap. 14. 10. See Hilar. de trin. l. 7. he proveth by his divine works done, that the father is in him, and he in the father; because they have one will, work and nature; though they are distinct persons, yet are they but one and the same God.

V. 39. sought again to take him] See chap. 7. 32. Malice is restlesse and deaf; the voice of the most prudent cannot charm it: the more Christ laboureth to enform and convert them that they might be saved; the higher riseth their ambition to destroy him such is the invincible perverseness of unbelieving hearers, never satisfied with any teaching: when they hear high mysteries, they cry, durus est hic sermo, chap. 6. 60. when mysterious things, they say, as verse 24. tell us plainly. and when he doth tell them plainly, I and my father are one, then they took up stones to stone him.

but he escaped] By the secret power of his deity; his hour being not yet come.

V. 40. where John at first baptized] John 1. 28. Bethabara: there John first baptized, but afterward changed the place, chap. 3. 23. this place Christ now chose, as remote, and safe from the Jews, so also to minde the people of those things which John testified of him, as verse 41.

V. 41. John did no miracle] He neither cast out devils, restored sight to the blinde, raised the dead, &c. yet the people believed him sent of God, and in doubt were they whether he were not the Christ, though he did no such works, Luke 3. 15. why then (might they say) should we not rather believe this to be the Christ, who hath done so many and so admirable works; the rather for that John testified of this man, (Matth. 3. 11. John 1. 26. and 3. 27. &c.) and all that ever he said of him, the event sheweth to be true.

V. 42. many believed] For Johns testimony, and their own experience of Christs words and works, to which he remitted the unbelieving Jews, chap. 5. 33. 36. Though the feed of Gods word seem sometimes to be bestowed in vain, yet in its season by God appointed, is that appear in the elect and believers: where ever Jesus went he saw the fruits of his gracious labours; except onely in the obstinate hearers, whom their own malice marked out to destruction. See 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4.

CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. Out of Bethany] A village about two miles from Jerusalem, beyond the mount of Olives, mentioned, Luke 10. 38.

town of Mary] Where they dwelt. The Evangelist describeth Lazarus by his two sisters, Mary and Martha, of whom the former Evangelists had spoken, as zealous and excellent followers of Christ, and this history is exactly written, as being a great demonstration of the divine power of Christ, opportunely fitted to prevent the dangerous scandal of the crosse, Christs death and passion, then instant.

3. 2. it was that Mary] Matth. 26. 7. This is here spoken by way of anticipation; as if he said, the same of whom ye shall read, chap. 12. 3. (Matth. 26. 6. Mark 14. 4.) there were divers of that name, therefore he here setteth down this note of difference.

V. 3. Behold, he whom thou loveft, is sick] He of our family whom thou loveft, is sick: he loved others also, as this Evangelist, chap. 13. 23. &c. they say but our brother, as pretending to any merit of their own; nor do they say Lazarus, as relating to any thing in him, for which Christ honoured him with the name of friend, they seem onely to remember him of his own love, which indeed being infinite and eternall, could have no cause but it self: a short; but an effectual message: a longer form of prayer is not prohibited, where need requireth, but the main is, to unload our wants and desires into the bosome of Christ, and to desire his help; which they sufficiently did in this modest and implyed supplication: they prescribe him not, but believe it to be enough to enform, to divine a lover, of their danger and want: their confidence was not in any length, or compasse of their message, but in the surest ground of confidence, the love of Christ, who never deserteth those he loveth, and best knoweth how and when to relieve and deliver them.

V. 4. not unto death] Because he purposed to restore and raise him again presently.

V. 5. Now Jesus loved, &c.] This the Evangelist inserteth, the better to expound the message, verse 3. this family was religious, therefore Christ loved that therein, which himself had given; as God, the fountain of all good; as man, he had not onely a reasonable soul, but also humane affections, as sorrow, love, joy, anger, being in all like us, sinne onely excepted: thus loving, he justified the degrees of love, and honoured that sacred life of this life, holy friendship, which can be onely between the good and wise.

V. 6. he abode two dayes still] That Lazarus might die, and be buried, lest they should have said, ὅτι οὐκ ἀπεθανεν ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ. Chrysost. hom. 61. that he had raised him up, who was not yet dead: by this delay we may learn that he doth not forget: or neglect us in our distresses, but onely stay for that time, which shal best serve to advance his glory and our salvation.

V. 7. after that, he said to his disciples] After two dayes, verse 6. lest his disciples might have thought that he neglected Lazarus, for fear of danger to himself.

into Judea again] Into the region of the tribes of Juda and Benjamin, (for, Judea is here strictly taken, See Matth. 2. 1. Luke 6. 4.) whereof Pilate was Governour. Luke 3. 1. for they were at this time beyond Jordan, chap. 10. 40. under the jurisdiction of Herod the Tetrarch: See Luke 13. 31. he had a little before left Judea, chap. 10. 39, 40. to avoid the perfection of the enraged Jews; and now left his disciples should fear to return with him (who were to be principall witnesses of the ensuing miracle) he acquainteth them with his purpose, and armeth them against their fear.

V. 8. lately sought to stone thee] Chap. 8. 59. and 10 31. 'Tis but about 100 moneths past that they would have murdered thee; and wilt thou now cast thy self into the same danger again? here were too great imperfections in their love to the person of Christ their Master, and zeal for his safty: first in that they considered not that Christ must once dye for the elect to give them eternal life; secondly in that they feared that he might either be surprized as unawares, or suffer death against his wil as being over powred by men, though he had taught them the contrary, as before, so lately, chap. 10. 17, 18. Chrysostome's conjecture here, is probable, that they much feared their Masters life and safety, but most their own.

V. 9. are there not twelve hours in the day?] The Jews, both summer and winter, divided the day into twelve hours: for they made them long or short, according to the length of the day, between sun and sun.

if any man walk in the day] Meaning, that he that walketh in his calling, and hath the light of God for his guide, needs not fear: he that hath but day-light, walketh secure; how much more should you be confident, who have me with you? for he meaneth, the appointed hour of my suffering is not yet come; no man can precipitate the day, nor any worldly power out off the hours thereof, which God hath appointed: we need not fear might before the appointed hour (See Job 14. 5. Matth. 10. 30.) neither our ends before the determined time: Christ often escaped and fled from his persecuters; his ministery being not yet accomplished, (who came to teach, as well as to suffer for us) that we might learn not to tempt God by any wilful and needlesse exposing our selves to our enemies malice.

V. 10. he stumbleth, &c.] He continueth in his allegory, to shew them that they had yet no cause of fear while they went with him, who was the light of the world, chap. 9. 5. for, as Euthymus saith, the power of Christ leadeth or protecteth them; perpetuall fear of falling into destruction have they, who are not with Christ.

V. 11. Lazarus our friend sleepeth] The Hebrews were wont to call death a sleep, to intimate their assurance of the resurrection. See 1 Kings 2. 10. 1 Kings 11. 43. & 15. 8, 24.

that I may awake him] Herein he comforteth them by declaring his power, who had the issues of life and death in his handst it was as easie to him to raise the dead, as to awake one from sleep.

V. 12. if he sleep he shall do well] Or shall amend or recover: that is a good signe of health; why wilt thou go into hazard, to awake him?

V. 13. Jesus spake of his death] Their fear of going again to Judea, made them not to understand (which they easily might) for who would go a dayes journey or more, to awake a sleeping friend? that Jesus spake of Lazarus death, and his raising him up again.

V. 14. Then said Jesus unto them plainly] Without any allegory, or metaphor. Lazarus is dead: nor doth he yet say, what he meant to do, will raise him again, by that divine power which in the appointed time shall raise the dead; but as speaking of some easily matter but I go, that I may awake him, verse 11. other circumstances he would not foretell them, but concealed them until the miracle done might speak its own excellency.

V. 15. that I was not there] That I was not bodily present at Bethany with Lazarus: in his deity he was.

ye may believe] That your faith may be strengthened, when you shall see me raise one that had been four dayes dead.

V. 16. called Didymus] A twinne Δίδυμος, Swidas interpreteth δίδυμος by συμφυὴς primul mati, so the interpreter of the Syriac Thawma, qui dicitur, Gemellus תאומא it is of the Hebrew תאם taamgeminus fuit: prophane Histories mention many of this name.

let us also go, &c.] Which he speaketh, either encouraging his fellow disciples to follow Christ: or intimating the danger they should run into, if they went into Judea with him.

V. 17. Then when Jesus came he found, &c.] ἐλθὼν οὖν ὁ Ἰησοῦς, then; or therefore coming found, &c. not that he found that by coming thither which he knew not before: but that so it was indeed as he had spoken concerning Lazarus death: which served to confirm the disciples in the assurance of his divine omnisience, when they reckoned the dayes: and of his omnipotence, when they saw him raise one to life, who had been so long dead.

V. 18 about

V. 18. about fifteen furlongs off] That is almost two miles, See ch. 6. 19.

V. 19. to comfort them concerning their brother] Syriac interpretethit loquerentur cum corde earum, an Hebrew manner of expression, for, to speak comfortably: as Isa. 40. 1, 2 Sam. 19. 7. 2 Chron. 30. 22. & 32. 6. Hos. 2. 14 it appeareth that Lazarus death was divulged in Jerusalem, not without Gods divine providence, that the malicious Jews might not give out that Lazarus was not dead: and the Evangelist mentioneth this company, to shew the certainty of the miracle, whereof there were so many witnesses, and whole not onely of the neighbours and family, but also of Jerusalem.

V. 20. Mary sate still in the house] Martha being first enformed of the approach of Christ, goeth out to meet him in hope of some better comfort than any of her former visiters could speak, but Mary not yet hearing of his coming, sate still in the house, as a mourner with her comforters.

V. 21. Lord if thou hadst been here] This was an effect of her infirmity, wherein she came short of the Centurions faith. See Luke 7. 7.

V. 22. but now I know] Now, though my brother be dead, yet do I believe that which thou said'st to our meitenger, verse 4. thin sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, &c.

V. 23. thy brother shall rise again] Be of good cheer, thy brother shall live again: he answereth nothing to her complaint for his absence, he would give account thereof in his act of raising the dead, rather than in words; but to comfort her, speaketh of his present raising him; so explaining that which he had said to his disciples, verse 11. neither doth he lay, I will ask of my Father that he may rise; but, thy brother shall rise, that she might not think that he should obtain as a meer man, but that he also is the resurrection and the life. See verse 25.

V. 24. I know that he shall rise again, &c.] In the general resurrection. this it seems she said, because Jesus said indefinitely, thy brother shall rise again, not adding, now presently; taking it, as we all do, for a generall comfort, that we shall be raised again, and not perish in death.

V. 25. I am the resurrection] That is, the author thereof; these words contain a secret, or implied promise, (of which, verse 40.) as if he said, I can and will now raise thy brother again.

and the life] Chap. 6. 35. giving life to all that live, the author of eternal life to the elect, which deservedly may be stiled life; by my humane sufferings, I shall purchase and merit it for them; by the power of my deity, I both give it them, and preserve it to them.

he that believeth in me] Faith is a spiritual resurrection of the soul, wherein believers begin to lead a new life. See chap. 5. 25, 24. &c. Ephes. 2. 5. Rom. 5. 17. 1 Cor. 15. 21.

though he were dead] In Body, yet shall he live Body and soul to eternity, so incorruptible a seed is the word of God, by which we are born again, that it liveth and abideth for ever, 1 Peter 1. 23.

V. 26. shall never die] οὐ μὴ ἀποθάνῃ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, he shall not die eternally: he shall not die the second death (Rev. 20. 6.) which is a separation of body and soul from God eternally, Revel 2. 11.

V. 27. I believe] πεπίστευκα, I have believed, and now do believe: meaning, that it was with her, no new, or light opinion, but that in which she was, and had been constant: and so chap. 6. 69. 1 John 4. 16.

which should come] As Matth. 11. 3. meaning the Messias whom God promised by the prophets, Greek εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἐρχόμενον, which was to come into the world: this relateth to Gods decree, and promises made to the fathers, and believers of all ages before Christs incarnation, that he that should come, because God, (all whose words are yea and amen) had so determined and promised by all the Prophets.

V. 28. she went her way, and called, &c.] Very likely Christ bid her so do though the Evangelist for brevity take, doth not mention it.

secretly] Whispering to her, that the Jews might not hear, as Euthymius thinketh; Jesus would not go into the house before he had done that admirable work for which he came; that the Jews accompanying Mary and following her out of the house (verse 31.) to the grave of Lazarus, might (though against their wils) be made witnesses of the miracles.

and called for thee] Commanded me to call thee.

V. 29. she arose quickly] Not acquainting the Jews with the occasion of her sudden leaving them, who came to comfort her; probably she knew the disatisfaction of some of the Jews then present, toward Christ (See verse 46.) and therefore would say nothing to them concerning his coming; neither did she yet know what Christ would command or do for them.

V. 30. was not yet come into the town] Into Bethany: See on verse 18. therefore went Mary (having knowledge of his arrival) out to meet him.

V. 31. she goeth unto the grave] εἰς τὸ μνημεῖον, to the tomb or monument of her brother Lazarus, which was according to the manner, out of the town; and their custome was to build them so, as that there was passage into them, when the covers were taken off. See chap. 20. 5, 6. 8. 11. and here verse 38.

to weep there] To sit by the grave, and ease her grief with weeping.

V. 32. Lord if thou hadst been here, &c.] These sisters grief was one, and their infirmity of faith a like, verse 21. possibly the sisters, in Christs long delay, had spoken these things one to another: her words were brief, the rest she supplied with teats.

V. 33. he groaned in his spirit] Such sympathy and compassion had he, to weep with those that wept (See Rom. 12. 15.) that he inwardly groaned, or from the heart.

was troubled] ἐνεβριμήσατο ἑαυτῷ, he troubled himself, considering the misery of man subject to death by reason of sin. Christ had humane affections, and perturbations of minde, without any sinimuch like the agitation of some clear and pure water in a glasse, so did they move his humane soul, but stirred up no pollution of sin in excesse or defect.

V. 34. where have ye laid him] He asketh not because he was ignorant (for he that knew of his death being absent, knew also where they had buried the dead) but for their sakes who were present, attending to shew him the place, expecting what he would do, he asketh (saith Nazianzen orat. 35.) for he was man; but he raised him from the dead, ὡς θεὸς ὢν, for he was also God.

V. 35. Jesus wept] As man, he wept, as God he raised the dead; there was humane affection (as verse 33.) here divine power: there he wept as man, but far above man was he, when he commanded the dead to come out of the grave bound hand and foot. Ambros. ep. l. 7. 47. See Hilar. de trin. lib. 10. near the end. ille flevit, ne tu homo dnefleres, saith Ambros. de fide. l. 2. he wept (and suffered all things as man for thee) that thou, O man, mightest not weep long, or to eternity.

V. 36. Behold how he loved him] They judge of his love by his tears, as of the cause by its effects; we most bewail that lost, which we loved most.

V. 37. Which opened the eyes of the blinde] Chap. 9. 6 some think that they here question his doing that miracle, as if they intimated, either that the man was not indeed born blinde; or that there was some collusion, or they dreamed of some defect of his power. See Psal. 78. 19.

V. 38. again groaning] As verse 33. Christ answereth not their words, with words, but groans, who meant presently to answer to the satisfaction of the well-meaning, and to the cavillers conviction by a wonderfull work in raising Lazarus from the dead, in himself] In his Spirit, verse 33.

a stone lay upon it] To defend the dead from injury; as the manner among them was, See Matth. 27. 60. this made the miracle more evident, and freed it from fusipition of any compact or imposture.

V. 39. take away the stone] He could have commanded that away, by the unseen ministery of Angels; but he would have them eye-witnesses of that which he did, lest they should have said here, as of the blinde man cured, chap. 9. 9. he is like him, but not the same.

V. 40. See the glory of God] That is, a miracle which I shall do by the soveraign power of God, whereby he shall be glorified.

then they took away the stone] As Jesus had commanded; most probably the whole company then present, must in the opening of the vault, wherein was the body so many dayes dead, finde sufficient assurance that he was indeed dead, by the loathsome smell of that, which Gods providence so disposed to the greater evidence of the miracle; and to the confirmation of the faith of the resurrection from the dead.

V. 41. father I thank thee] Jesus being in one person both God and man, calleth him father, as God, and giveth thanks as man.

V. 42. I knew that thou] It is not newr or unexpected, I knevv thou alvvayes heareſt me. So it is said, Hebrevvs 5. 7. that he was heard in that he feared; yet he tasted of that cup vvhich he deprecated, Matth. 26. 39. note here that God even then heareth us, vvhen he giveth not our vvill and desire, but to his ovvn ever blessed vvill, vvhich vve should ever submit to, and most desire.

that they may believe] This expresseth that which he said, because of the people, they might possibly think that I do these things by magicall powver, as the blasphemous Pharisees said, but I thus said, that they may believe that thou sentest me, and vvorkest by me.

V. 43. with a loud voice] That all might hear: he vvhispered not as inchanters use, but cryed aloud, that this voice might be a symbolum of that trumpet vvhich shall once avvake and call the dead out of their graves. 1 Cor. 15. 52. 1 Thel. 4. 16. John 5. 28, 29.

Lazarus come forth] Ie vvas nowv only the carcase of Lazarus, a liveleſſe body, until the Lord of the spirits of the just, caused the soul soul to return unto it again, thus quickneth he the dead, and calleth eſhose things which be not, as though they were, Rom. 4. 17. come forth, of the sepulchre; thus calleth he the dead, as if they lived; (so do they to God, who are dead to men) this sheweth what he meant by waking Lazarus, verse 11. arise from the dead, and come out, that all theſe present may see thee truely and really raised from the dead.

V. 44. came forth] The bands giving so much way that he might come forth, which, it seemeth, Christ would not so much loose, but that his present friends might see that they were, as they had tyed them when they buried him.

V. 45. Believed on him] That he was the very Messias and Saviour of the world, sent of God: thus were they strengthened in Lazarus infirmity, and God glorified in his death and raising again, as verse 4.

V. 46. but some of them went, &c.] Euthymius conjecturеth that they were some of them who faid, could not this man, &c. v. 37. so invincible is malice, if we could and should evidently reſtore fight to the blind, and raiſe the dead; neither would they so believe: theſe not only believed not, but went to the Pharisees, as it were to admonish them, to take some course with Jesus, that others might not believe in him, yet did they herein but cast on oyl to quench the fire; they served as witneſſes to condemn their own and the Phariſees unbelief and obſtinacy; but they more confirmed the truth of the miracle which believers testified, and unbelievers confeſſed. So their sealing and guarding Christs sepulchre rendred the truth of his death and resurrection more evident, and undoubted, it is a dangerous thing to erre from the truth: there is in man a miſchievous self-love, putting him on to defend his errours, by erring more. Arnobius. adv. Gent. l. 6. noted it well: quod semel sine ratione fecisti, &c. that which ye have once done without reaſon, ye defend, leſt ye ſhould ſeem to have once been ignorant: ye think its better, non vinci, not to be overcome, than to yeild to a confeſſed truth.

V. 47. Then gathered he the chief priests] See Mat. 26. 3. when they heard that Jesus was come again, and contrary to their wil and authority, ſtill wrought ſuch evident miracles, ſo near them; they were cut to the heart; their envy mad e them mad against him. Some of the ſpectators of that which Christ did at Lazarus grave, had related the whole matter and manner of his raiſing the dead Lazarus, therefore they call the Synedrion or great counſel to advise what they ſhould do to Jesus.

V. 48. If we let him thus alone] Thus endeavour they to reſiſt Gods will by their counſel: too common a practice among men of this world; here they borrow a marvellous blindneſſe, and desperate rage against Christ; why conſider you fighters against God, how eaſily that power which raiſed the dead, can overthrow all your deſignes, and counſels against him: how eaſily can he ſmite you all dead, that but commanded, and the dead came forth of the grave? men can by their power (God ſo permitting) kill the living, but God only can raiſe the dead: what ſhall your ſucceſſe at laſt be, who ſtrive with your maker?

take away both our place and nation] That is, they will diſpoſſeſſe us of our countrey as the Chaldees have formerly done, thus they pretended a neceſſity of ſtate against Christ; whereas Tertullian ſaith well, certè nulla neceſſitas præsendi poteſt deliquendi ab iis, quibus una incumbit neceſſitas non delinquendi, certainly no neceſſity to quibus una incumbit neceſſitas non delinquendi, certainly no neceſſity to ſinne can be pretended by thoſe, on whom lyeth one neceſſity not to ſinne.

V. 49. that same year] For that preſent time he was ſuffragan. See c. 18. 13. and on Luke 3. 2.

V. 50. nor consider] See c. 18. 14. he pretendeth to ſome inſight into ſtate intereſts, and yet knew not what he ſaid himſelf: he thought he had now engroſſed the ſpirit of counſel and policy; and therefore moveth by an argument from the ſafety of the ſtate; but it ſeemeth grounded on that former reſult of the Sanhedrin which was. — if we let him alone---the Romans ſhall come, &c. verſe 48. Caiphas preſently anſwereth, as it were reſolved upon the queſtion, rather let one man dye, than the whole nation of the Jews periſh, if you know not that, you know nothing, neither conſider things expedient.

and that the whole nation periſh not] That is, rather than the whole nation ſhould periſh: Caiphas took it for concluded, that either Christ, or their nation muſt periſh, and as he fooliſhly thought, that of two evils he deſigned the leaſt to be choſen; that is, that Christ ſhould rather periſh, than their nation.

V. 51. But being High Prieſt that year] He ſpake not this by his own Spirit or inſtinct, but God would have this propheſie come from the High Prieſts mouth, to leave the Jews more inexcuſable in their unbelief, he being ſo publique a perſon.

V. 52. gathered together in one, &c.] That he might gather the Church, the elect of the Jews and Gentiles, diſperſed by the providence of God, diſtributed, and dwelling in every nation of the world. See chap. 10. 16. & 12. 32. Epheſ. 2. 13.

V. 53. from that day forth they took counſel] They all unanimouſly conſented to Caiphas advice, as if that had been an oracle, ſufficient to take away all ſcruple of conſcience, and to aſſure them, that they might juſtly deſtroy Jeſus; ſo wretchedly can Satan blind the malicious, that they ſhall be confident they do wonderous well to perſecute Gods elect to death. See chap. 16. 2. they took counſel: συνεβουλεύσαντο, by a common conſent of the whole Sanhedrim.

N. 54. Walked no more] Converſed no more publickly, becauſe his hour to ſuffer, was not yet come. See chap. 7. 30. and 8. 20.

near to the wilderneſſe] Far from the malicious Phariſees at Jeruſalem.

a city called Ephraim] Some read Ephrem, Ἐφρὲμ: Jerom de loc. Hebr. readeth as we, Ephraim juxta deſertum---See Joh. Druſ. ad voc. N. T. com. 2. and præterit. lib. 4. in loc.

V. 55. To purifie themſelves] To prepare themſelves by prayer, ſacrifices; and paying of vows, or other legall ceremonies; which though (as being carnall rights) they could not ſanctifie (Hebrevvs. 9. 9, 10.) yet the faithfull both acknowledged their ſinnes, and (under theſe ſhadows) that purification which was to be accompliſhed in them by the ſacred blood of Christ.

V. 56. then sought they for Jeſus] For he uſed to come up before the feaſt day, to teach the people.

V. 57. knew where he were] They thought becauſe they ſaw him not yet at the feaſt, that he had hidden himſelf for fear, but he came in now more publickly, and with greater ſolemnity than at any time before, and five dayes in the temple and city, freely ſpake and converſed before their faces; neither could they hurt, or apprehend him untill the time appointed, wherein he was to be offered up a living and conſummatory ſacrifice for our redemption and ſalvation.

he ſhould ſhew it] To the high prieſts and elders, that they might according to the decree of their counſell apprehend him, yet we read of none that did, or could obey this mandate of theirs, but that ſon of perdition, Judas that betrayed Christ.

CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. Ἓξ ἡμέρας πρὸ τοῦ πάσχα, &c. before ſix day of, &c. here is a tradition of the word πρὸ, before, as if it were written, ἓξ ἡμέρας πρὸ τοῦ πάσχα, as we give it, ſix dayes before the Paſſeover, Tremelius ſaith it is a Syriac manner of ſpeaking.

V. 2. There they made him a ſupper] In the houſe of Simon the Leper, for there Mary anointed him with precious oyl: Lazarus is here mentioned as a Trophie of Christs victories over death; and therefore is reckoned among the guests, to expreſſe the certainty and reality of his raiſing from the dead; that we may know that it was no viſion, or appearance of things which were not: and that he did not preſently die again, but lived to eat, drink, and converſe with men as formerly; that believers might have certain teſtimony of the divine power of Christ in his reſurrection, and that the enemies might alſo thereby be convicted.

V. 3. of ſpickenerd] It was a cuſtome in thoſe parts, to uſe pretious odours and ointments at ſolemn feaſts, See Mark 14. 3. and Auguſtin de doctr. Chriſtian. lib. 3. cap. 12. Plin. l. 13. c. 3.

anointed the feet] The other Evangeliſts ſay ſhe powred it on his head, Mat. 26. 7. Mark 14. 3. whereas this Evangeliſt ſaith, ſhe anointed his feet, we muſt know that both are true: for ſhe anointed as Auguſtin ſaith, de conſenſ. Evang. l. 2. c. 79. non ſolum caput ſed & pedes Domini: this ſeemeth to have been beyond the uſuall cuſtom, to anoint the feet, Plinius nat. hiſt. l. 13. c. 3. noteth it among the Romans, for a kinde of forraign luxury: victimus (ſaith he) etiam noſtigia pedum tingi, and further, that P. Licinius Craſſus, and L. Julius Cæſar, being Cenſors, made a decree, that none ſhould ſel unguenta exotica, forraign ointments: but theſe things were much uſed among the Eaſtern people, and here, as Mary did it in thankfull acknowledgment of the mercy of Christ ſhewed them, as alſo of her love to him; ſo alſo he juſtifying her fact, declareth uſe of Gods creatures, good and reſpectively lawful, where the abuſe is condemnable.

and wiped his feet with her hair] This was a ſigne of her officious humility; but it is probable which ſome conjecture, from Luke 7. 38. that the order of things here done is inverted: for either the firſt wiped his feet: and afterward anointed them, as Luke 7. 38. or elſe ſhe ſhould have more anointed her own hair, than Jeſus feet.

V. 4 One of his diſciples] The other evangeliſts ſpeak of more; this nameth only Judas, poſſibly becauſe he was the author and beginner of the murmurings, and it may be (which Auguſtin conjecturеth) the reſt were ſimply led thereto; propter pauperum curam: for, and becauſe of the true care they indeed had of the poor, which Judas onely pretended to, for a vail of his covetouſneſſe: ſo eaſily are good intentions abuſed to ſchiſme and faction: and ſo commonly do hypocrites diſguiſe and cloke their moſt impious deſignes with faig ſhews of religious charity. Judas is here called Iouδας

Ἰσκαριώθ

Σίμωνος Ἰσκαριώτης, Judas son of Simon (ἀπὸ τοῦ Καριώτου, as some some read) or Cariot, or Iscariot.

V. 5. sold for three hundred pence] See on Mat. 18. 28. and on Mark 14. 5.

V. 6 he was a thief] That is, as Nonnus interpreteth φύλαξ κακὸς, a bad keeper of the stock, from whence he impropriated, to lay up for himself, that he might make himself an estate, and store for his subsistance, when he had forsaken Christ, as it is likely he had already designed; because he had often heard Jesus mention his suffering and the dispersion and persecution of his disciples at hand.

had the bag] Chap. 13 29. he had charge of the purse and stock of money wherewith they that administred to Christ furnished him to buy necessaries: see Luke 8 3. Gr. γλωσσόκομον, a purse or bag, linguæ speciem habens, saith Æmilius Portus. interpreteth Suidas, hereof Iudas was treasurer or steward: Iesus knew his minde, yet committed that office to none other of the twelve: Iudas was fittest for the bag, it is sin and pity to impropriate the faithful ministers of Christ, or with any secular imployments to distract them from the ministery of the word and sacraments. Iudas was discontented, for that this precious oyntment had not rather been brought in ready money and put into his bag, that he might have shared therein. The hypocrites own private interest crossed is that which troubleth him, when he pretendeth the cause of piety and religion, for which he taketh as much care, as Iudas did for the poor.

V. 7. hath she kept this] Thus the providence of God had disposed her pious intention, which was to honour Christ with the best of her substance, who esteemed nothing too good or costly to bestow on him; though possibly she might not at present think of his death and burial near, which he knew, therefore said he, let her alone; she hath not bestowed this cost in vain, it is in stead of enbalming and preparation of me to my grave, who must very shortly dye; she shall not then perform this office, permit her now: See Mat. 26 12, Mark 14. 8.

V. 8. the poor alwayes] See Matth. 26. 11. Thus he answereth Judas objection; and this verb plurall ἔχετε sheweth, that he had led some of his fellow Disciples into this murmuring.

V. 9. not for Jesus sake only] They would fain satisfie their own curiosity, by seeing whether that were true which they had heard reported of Lazarus raising from the dead: they would either congratulate, hear, see, and ask him some questions concerning the truth of his death, and possibly of the state and condition of separated souls in the other world. It may well be, that many before this time had come from Jerusalem to see and enquire of Lazarus; but now they came to see Jesus and Lazarus together, both the dead man raised, and the author of the miracle, the restorer of his life

V. 10. that they might put Lazarus also to death] Such is the mischievous reach of malice: now they had nothing to calumniate, neither the violation of the Sabbath, assistance of Beelzebub, &c. this stingeth them so, that they consult how to suppresse the very memory thereof, by destroying him whom Christ had delivered from death.

V. 11. because that by reason of him many, &c.] Because many saw, heard, and conferred with Lazarus, whom many knew dead four dayes, and saw raised from the dead again by the voice of Jesus calling him out of his grave: therefore, convicted by so evident a miracle, they withdrew themselves from them who conspired to destroy Jesus, and belived on him as the Messias.

V. 12. on the next day] Mat. 21. 8. the next day after that supper at Bethany, mentioned verse 2. it seemeth to have been the fift day before the passeover. See verse 1.

V. 13. took branches of palm trees] They took, τὰ βαΐα, boughs or branches of palm trees: this they were wont to do in token of rejoycing and victory. See 1 Mac 13. 51. They entred with praise, καὶ βαΐων. &c. So 2 Mac. 10. 7. They bare branches and fair boughs, and palms also, and sang psalms unto him who had given them good successe. So Revel. 7. 9. καὶ φοίνικες, and palmes in their hands. The Jews were commanded to take such branches at the feast of tabernacles, Levit. 23. 40. כפת תמרים cappoth temarim, boughs of palm trees which the Greek, in some Copies give by the word βαΐα here used, in others κάλλυνθρα φοινίκων: the Chaldee by לולבין lulabin, as growing out of the heart of the tree: It was in use also among other nations to carry the branches of this tree in their hands, in signe of victory. See Pausan in Arcadic. and Cal. Rhodigin lect an iq. lib. 5. c. 6. the palm tree is green and flourishing, Psal. 92. 13 the leaves thereof fall not (Plin, Nat. Hist. l. 16 c. 20. and so like the Saints, Psal. 1. 3.) of tall and upright stature: hereto the Church is likened, Cant. 7. 7, 8 With these branches in their hands the Israelites went about the altar, and said הושיעה נא Hosanna, Save now I beseech thee Lord, Psal. 118. 25. This now the people (though at another time of the year) by Gods providence did, to shew that all the legal feasts were to have their accomplishment in Christ who was shortly to triumph over all spirituall enemies and that the honour of those solemnities did of right appertain to him.

V. 14. when he had found] Greek εὑρὼν; The sense is; having gotten, or obtained. So Luke 1. 30. εὗρες χάριν, he sent his Disciples to fetch it for him, Mat. 21. 2. &c. Luk. 19. 30.

V. 15. fear not] Zech. 9. 9 Mat. 21. 5. the Evangelist here citeth not the very words of the Prophet, Zech. 9. 9. where we read הריעי jubila filia Jerusalem (the verb רוע is either a shouting for joy, as conquerers used, or sorrow, as the conquered) which the 70. give, χαῖρε σφόδρα θύγατερ Σιών, &c. vehemently rejoyce, &c. John here following the maine drift of the prophesie in its application to the present occasion; giveth it, μὴ φοβοῦ θύγατερ Σιών --fear not, &c. for besides that rejoycing and fear are incompatible, and mutually exclusive of each other, the Princes and people of the Jews, could not but be troubled at these extraordinary voices, and acclamations of the multitude, verse 13. sounding out in the open streets of the imperial city, that name of king, suspected and hated of the Romans, under whose power & government the Jews now were; probably therefore they feared the Romans sword, if they rebel'ed against them, or the heavy exactions of a new king; therefore God warned them by the holy Prophet, long before; that they should not need to fear any of these things by their spiritual King Messias, who should not at all be ambitious of secular honour nor covetous of worldly riches and therefore he should be no tyrant, cruel, rapacious, hard or terrible Prince, but a meek, humble, just, holy, and beneficent man, who should not come to pillage, or judge and revenge, but to save them; they ought therefore rather to rejoyce and shout for joy, than to fear and be troubled at his approach.

daughter of Sion] That is, Church of Israel, used to assemble for Gods publick worship in their solemnities, in the Temple built on Mount Sion in Jerusalem.

behold thy king] Christ thy spiritual and eternall King: this his humility sheweth that his kingdom was not of this world, and consisting in externall and secular pomp, magnificence, or outward things.

V. 16 these things understood not his disciples] Being commanded in that manner to fetch the Asse, they were so far from doing it to the end that the Scripture might be fulfilled, that they understood not these things.

they remembred that these things were written] Some refer this to the Disciples (and that most probably) that they acted, but for present, understood not that it was to fulfill any Scripture, but after that Christ was ascended, and the holy Ghost given, to lead them into all truth, and to bring all things necessary to their remembrance: others refer it to the multitude in entertaining him so as was prophesied: in either we may observe the truth of God fulfilled; and the sincerity of the Gospel, free from all compact and fraud in so much that the very acters, and witnesses of others actions therein historified, for present knew not what these things meant.

V. 20 certain Greeks among them] Either Proselytes or Heathens converted to the true religion professed in Israel; as 1 Kings 8. 41 or Jews of Greece; that is, whose ancestors were Jews, though their selves were bred and born in Greece; for these also came up to the Feast, See Acts 6. 1.

V. 21. Sir we would see Jesus] That is, speak to him, or hear him in private: no doubt but they had heard much of his admirable works; and probably they might sometimes see and hear him in the multitude; but they desired favour to be admitted to his presence.

V. 22. Andrew and Philip told Jesus] As not presuming to bring any to him without his leave.

V. 23. that the son of man should be glorified] He answereth not to the information of his disciples, or the desire of the Greeks, but that which was of importance to his hearers; that the time of his death, resurrection, ascension, and manifestation to the world by the Gospel preached, was now at hand, and so might possibly intimate that the Grecians should more happily be satisfied very shortly in hearing and believing the Gospel declaring him their Saviour and Redeemer, than in seeing him now in the form of a servant and man of sorrows.

V. 24 except a corn of wheat] He taketh up this allegory to preposesse an objection which some might have made when they should have seen his death and passion: how said Christ, the Son of Man should be glorified, when now we see him dead and buried? why, consider that which is neer, and familiar unto thee: Frumentum si servas perdis, si seminas renovas, Greg. hom 32. in Evang. If you keep the grains unsowed, you lose your crop; but by casting them into the ground you renew them. The death of Christ was as sowing of corn, which seeming lost, proveth our greater advantage.

V. 25. he that loveth his life] ὁ χαριζόμενος αὐτῇ παρὰ τὸ δέον, he that indulgeth thereto more than he ought, Chrysost. hom. 66. or if the love of this life, ease, or pleasures, let him from coming to Christ (see Mat. 10. 39. & 16. 25. Mark 8. 35. Luke 9. 24. & 17. 33) or, shall, to save it, deny me.

he that hateth his life] That setteth not dear by his life for Christs sake, as Acts 21. 13. He that is ready to lose his life, Qui retinendæ vitæ non nimis cupidus est, Euthymius. So that he may seem to hate, or not value it when the truth and honour of Christ requireth his exposing it. See Matthew, 10. 39. Luke 14. 26.

V. 26. let him follow me] That is, imitate me, in my ready obedience of God, to the death.

and where I am, there also, &c.] For there shall neither be errour in the way, nor end in death, where any man followeth me; He cannot but be happy that is with Christ.

him will my Father honour] making him a Co-heir with Christ, Rom. 8. 17.

V. 27. now is my soul troubled] Out of a deep sense of Gods wrath against sins, for which he was to suffer, he flieth to Prayer, yet preferreth his Fathers will and glory, and our salvation, before his own life.

save me from this houre] Of death now instant. See Luke 22. 42. Matt. 26. 39. Mark 14. 35. ταῦτα τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης φύσεως τὰ ἀσθενήματα, Chrysost. hom, 66. These are the infirmities of humane nature; but without sin, because in subjection to Gods Will.

came I unto this houre] That I might in the appointed time suffer for the redemption of thine elect.

V. glorifie thy Name] Let thy Holy Name be praysed and magnified through the World for mans redemption wrought in my passion.

then came there a voice from Heaven] A voyce was heard from Heaven. See Matt. 3. 17. or therefore came there a voice, because Jesus thus prayed, according as the Apostle said, Hebr. 5. 7. who in the dayes of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard, in that he feared. God therefore answered from Heaven, I have both glorified it, and I, &c. as to comfort him against the sorrowes of instant death, so to remove the scandal of the Cross.

I have both glorified, &c.] I have hitherto glorified my Name by thee in the many Divine workes done by thee, and I will in thy death, resurrection and ascension glorifie the same, as also by the mission of the Holy Ghost, preaching of the Gospell, conversion and salvation of the Elect, both of the Jewes and Gentiles, to the uttermost part of the Earth, the end of time, and all Eternity.

V. 29. said it thundred] Many of them so said. This sheweth that it was no obscure whispering, but loud as thunder, though the unbelievers understood it not.

others said, an Angel spake to him] They who heard the words, said an Angel spake to him, so conjectured they, though they heard them delivered in the person of the Father, to whom he prayed.

V. 30. came not because of me] Not onely for me to comfort me, but also to instruct you.

V. 31. now is the judgement of this world] The reformation and restoring of those things which were out of order.

the prince of this world] Satan (So c. 14. 30.) shall be overcome by my death, Hebr. 2. 14.

V. 32. if I be lifted up] That is, crucified and taken away (c. 3. 14.) from the earth; as the Syriac giveth ܐܬܪܝܡܬ by אתרימת etherimeth; which is from the Hebrew word רום rom, which signifieth both lifted up, as Gen. 7. 17. Gen. 31. 45. and taken away, Dan. 8. 11.

draw all men unto me] All the Elect of all sorts, not onely Jewes, but also Gentiles: Ex omni gente & conditione, —— some of every Nation and condition: —— He saith all, Quia nemo salvus fit, nisi quem ipse traxerit, No man is saved, but he whom Christ draweth, Fulgen. de incarn. & gra. D. Jesu c. 31. I will draw all the Elect, as captives, ὑπὸ τυράννου κατεχομένους Chrysost. hom. 66. held by some Tyrant.

V. 33. What death] What manner of death; to wit, the death of the Crosse. This had he in express terms often spoken unto you his Disciples, Matt. 20. 19. therefore some thinke that he now thus spake to a multitude present, not plainly saying that they should crucifie him, but yet so intimating it that when they that believed or were to believe should see it, they might know that he who foreknew it, and revealed it to others, offered up himselfe a voluntary sacrifice.

V. 34. We have heard] Psalm 110. 4. some of them that were present, said, We have heard out of the Law, that is, our Scribes and Doctors taught us out of the Scriptures, for so Christ calleth the Law. c. 10. 34.

out of the Law] The Scriptures, Psalm 89. 36, 37. Ezek. 37. 25. See on c. 10. 34.

that Christ abideth for ever] That he shall continue amongst the living: this they collected out of misunderstood Scriptures. See Psalm 72. 17. Psalm 89. 30 they marked not those places which concerned the state of his humiliation and death, as Dan 9 26. Isa 53. Psalm 22. 17 18 had they well compared the one with the other, it would have better appeared to them, that Christ was by death to enter into his glory.

V. 35. yet a little while the light] He confirmeth that which he said concerning his death; and secretly taxeth their wilfull blindness, who neither in his doctrine nor miracles understand him to be Christ, therefore resolveth them not concerning that they asked; but imitateth that both Christ and the Gospel, which now, as a clear light shined among them, should shortly be taken from them and they delivered up to their own obstinacy and ignorance of the means of salvation. See Matt 21. 43. Acts 13 46. Rom. 11.

V. 36. departed and hid, &c.] After his teaching in the day, now when it grew toward night (Mark 11 11.) He went out of Jerusalem to lodge at Bethany, Matt. 21. 17. Secretly with his disciples, that his enemies who laid wait for his life, might not know where to finde him: for though we read not here that they took up stones, yet he that knew their hearts, saw them now growing hot, and ready to kill, therefore would he not stay there untill it brake out into action. Chrysost.

V. 37. yet they believed not] That is, many of them believed not, some did.

V. 38. Lord who hath believed, &c.] Isai 53. 1. Rom. 10. 16. This interrogation importeth as often in Holy Scripture, such a vehemency of speaking, as is with admiration, as if he said, Lord, how few will believe! It is strange that so few believe the evidence of the truth constantly affirmed by us all; certainly coming to pass, which according to thy Word, we preach unto them.

the arm of the Lord been revealed] That is, the Gospel, which is the power of God to salvation to every one that believeth, Rom. 1. 16. by זרע zeroah, an arm, the Hebrews usually expressed power, vertue, aid, relief, &c. See Luke 1. 51.

V. 39. therefore they could not believe] This is spoken to shew us, that contempt of Gods Word, and wilful shutting the eyes against the light of the Gospel, taketh away all ability of believing to salvation. See Matt. 13. 14, 15. they could not; that is say Chrysostome and Theophylact, they would not. They will, not indeed believe, nor is it in a wicked mans power vellere credere, to be willing to be belive: for as Faith is the gift of God (Ephes. 2. 8.) So is a true and hearty desire thereof which God bestoweth on them onely whom he will therein satisfie and make blessed, Matt. 5. 6. and justly giveth not unto those who under-value his mercies, and despise his Ordinance.

V. 40. he hath blinded their eyes] See on Matt. 13. 14, 15. Rom. 1. 21. 28. 2 Thes. 2. 10, 11 12.

V. 41 when he saw his Glory] Isa. 6. 1, 2.

and spake of him] Of Christ. The Evangelist collecteth that the Prophesie and Doctrine of Isaias concerned ages then to come: for He saw the glory of Christ under the Gospel, and accommodateth it to those times of which he spake: the Vision indeed was in the year wherein king Uzziah died. Isai. 6. 1. yet was it of things appertaining to the time and Kingdome of Christ under the Gospel: See on Matt. 15. 7.

V. 42. put out of the Synagogue] That is, excommunicated, so c. 9. 22. The vanity of Pharisees argument to disswade men from believing in Christ, c. 7. 48. (have any of the Rulers, or of the Pharisees believed on him?) seemeth here answered: yes, among the chief Rulers also, many believed on him: as also a further objection which might be made, why do they not profess that their Faith openly? why, for fear of the active malice of the Pharisees, lest they should excommunicate them, and so they should loose their credit and reputation with the people.

V. 43. they loved the praise of men] c. 5. 44. To be honoured of men, and to justifie themselves before them. See Luke 16. 15. the Evangelist here noteth the cause why few of the great men sincerely professed the Gospel, not because their consciences were not sufficiently convicted; but because they loved their own ease, honour, and riches, more than Gods Honour, or their own salvation. So dangerous a thing it is for fear of men to dissemble Faith. See Heb. 11. 27. Matt 10. 33.

V. 44. he that believeth on me, &c.] This is not simply to be understood, but with reference to the Jewes sence, who took him to be meer Man: to them he saith, the way to Faith in God, is to believe in me; and that he spake not of himself, as verse 49. 50. but that which God the Father gave him Commission and Command to speak. See Luke 10. 16. And that it is the greatest injury to God, to disbelieve the Gospel, as if his Truth were not sufficient for us: And, lastly, that they who hear the Gospel, must be confident, that therein they heare not men, but God, whose Word and Truth it is.

V. 45. he that seeth me] For he is the lively Image and Pattern of his Person, Heb. 1. 3. and one God with the Father, c. 14. 9.

V. 46. I come a light] c. 3. 19.

V. 47. if any man] c. 3. 17.

Judge him not] I condemne him not now, but he shall be judged at the last day: I came now to call sinners to repentance, to preach the Gospel of Peace.

V. 48. the word that I have spoken] The Doctrine of Christ, the Gospel, which the wicked now so securely contemn, shall once rise in judgement against them, and condemn them, (See Mark 16. 16. John 3. 18) by so much more heavily, by how much greater means of salvation they have neglected.

V. 49 what I should say] God therefore anointed him, Isai. 61. 1. So that what ever he taught concerning Faith, justification by it, rewards, punishments, the resurrection, Baptism, &c was the eternal Counsel of God revealed by Christ, of all which he changed nothing in the delivery thereof

V. 50. I know that his Commandement is life] That is, that the Doctrine of the Gospel which I have, at the command of my Father, preached unto you, is the Word of life (as Peter confessed, chap. 6.68.) that which truely sheweth you the onely way and means to Eternal Life, if you believe and obey it. And so he aggravateth their unbelief, who were so blinde and malicious in their own wrong.

CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. NOw before the feast of Passover] See Matt. 26. 1. Mark 14. 1. Luke 22. 1. See Is. Casaubon, Exercit. ad Annal. 16. N. 28.

he loved them unto the end] Not onely his Disciples, but all his Elect, which are here called his own; those which his Father gave him. See John 17. 20. He loved them even to the death, which he suffered for them; and so, inceffantly; and when he saw the danger coming towards him, he tooke the more care for them.

V. 2. supper being ended] Or when they were at supper; a little before the institution of the Lords Supper, Matt. 26. 26. that is, after the supper (wherein according to the ceremonial Law, they eat the Paschal Lambe) was ended, befo e they had taken away the remainder of bread and wine, see Luke 22.19. 20.

V. 3. given all things into his hand] See c.3. 35. This is said, to set off his admirable humility, to which for our sakes he descended, who knew and remembred the power which God had given him: the meaning is, as if it were said, although he well knew that the Father had given all things into his hands (as Matt. 28. 18.) and that he was now shortly to ascend into that incomprehensible Glory, which as God, he had eternally with the Father, yet as man, He would thus perform the part of a servant, in washing his Disciples feet.

V. 4. riseth from supper, &c.] Leaving his Disciples sitting; layeth aside his garments (which they used to wear, long, and loose) τὰ ἱμάτια, Hebr. שִׂמְלָה shimlah, Gen. 9 23. which the 70 give thereby τὰ ἱματισμὸν.

V. 5. began to wash his Disciples feet] Partly to shew his admirable love to them, to give them an example of humility, and love one to another; and partly to intimate, that he onely cleanseth us from our sins, as 1 John 1.7.

V. 6. Lord dost thou wash my feet?] This he seemeth to say as fearing it had been too much dishonour for Christ the Son of the immortal God, to wash a sinners feet (See Luke 7.8.) not then fully understanding (as after he did, 1 Peter 1. 19.) that he came to redeem us, with his own precious blood: in effect he saith; O my Lord, shouldst thou wash my feet with those sacred hands, with which thou openedst the eyes of the blinde, with which thou didst exercise Divine Power in healing the sicke, raising the dead, &c. I am unworthy to perform this office to thee, and wouldest thou doe it for me?

V. 7. what I doe thou knowest not now] hereby Christ signified, that he now did something more than simply wash their feet: there was in his action, a teaching Mystery, which at present they knew not, untill they were further in structed, they yet perceived not, that it was not so much material for them to have clean feet, as to be clanfed by the blood of Christ, and to have true humility and love to one another.

V. 8. I wash thee not] And make thee clean from thy sins, freely pardoning them, and sanctifying thee.

thou hast no part with me] So the Hebrews express an alienation, or disclaim of that which we call right, title or interest. So Deut. 14. 27. it is said of the Levite אֵין לוֹ חֵלֶק נַחֲלָה עִמָּךְ en lo chelek vena chala himmach —— τὸν οὐκ ἔχοντα μερίδα οὐδὲ κλῆρον μετὰ σοῦ. he hath no part nor inheritance with thee. So Deuteronomie 18. 1. See 1 Kings 12. 16. 2 Samuel 20. 1. Optatus. l. 5. faith hereon, negat illi Christus regnum, nisi accepisset obsequium. Christ denieth him the kingdome except he had accepted the obsequie.

V. 9 Lord, not onely my feet] Either terrified with the threats or now better understanding the mystery, he wholly subjecteth to christs will: as if he faid, if it be of that consequence; if thou christs will: wash me thoughly: as Psalm 51. 2. See also 1 John 1. 7. 1 Corinthians, 6. 11. Titus, 3. 5. 6.

V. 10. needeth not] That is, to be purged, save only to the sense of the sinners own conseience, by dayly renewing of Repentance for the remainder of those corruptions which defile him. Optatus forecited, lib. 5. understandeth this washing, of Baptism, which may not be iterated: Absit (faith he) ut jam totum renovemus ad fontem —— absit ut iteremus quod semel est: aut dici iteratus quod unum est. God forbid that we should recall him who is already washed to the Font —— that we should iterate that which is (but) once, or should make double that which is but one; the Apostle saying, there is one Lord, one Faith, one Baptisme, Ephes. 4. 5. if (faith he) ye give another Baptisme, dare alteram fidem, give another Faith: If you give another Faith, give also another Christ, another God ye are clean] Your sins are remitted and done away; not that there shall no sinne remain in you henceforth; but because none shall be imputed (so Chap. 15. 3.) ye are regenerate, and in part sanctified.

but not all] Not all of you, not absolutely any of you; Judas must be accepted in their company; and the remainder of the old Adam in the best of their persons: a Canaanite left to exercise, not to overcome, nor condemne them that are in Christ, Rom. 8.1.

V. 11. who should betray him] τὸν παραδιδόντα, who it was that now agitated that treafon: therefore he faid to him verse 27. that which thou doeft, do quickly.

V. 12. after he had washed their feet] The Evangelist leaveth it to be understood, that after the conteft with Peter, He washed both Peters feet, and the reft of the Apoftles, without further contradiction.

taken his garments] After he had put on his garment, which he had laid by, verse 4.

sat down again] ἀναπεσὼν πάλιν, falling, or lying down again according to their manner of eating; to invite his Disciples to a new fupper, Spiritual, and Myftical, the Truth, which the former Supper repreferted; as a tore-running fhaddow of that which more nearely repreferteth his Church with his body and blood; not onely as the Fathers (who fed on him to come, 1 Corinthians, 10. 3. 4.) but as his body the Church, unto the World: end, which in the Sacrament of the Supper here inftituted, feed on his body and blood (by Faith in the repreferting Myftery) once offered on the altar of the Croffe, and therein fully fatisfying the juftice of God, and accomplifhing the redemption of all the Elect.

Know ye what] That is, as he faid to Peter, verse 7. ye doe not yet know, but now will I teach you; this he fpeaketh unto them, yet ignorant what he meant by this his Act of Humility, that they might be more attentive to, and retentive of that he would hereby teach them: as if he had faid, now mark well and remember what I have done in washing your feet, that you may know how ye ought to imitate my love and humility.

V. 13. Master, and Lord] διδάσκαλος ὁ κύριος, Master, or Teacher and Lord: the Syriack words here uſed, רַבָּן rabban, and מָרָן maran, (as in Maranatha, the Lord cometh, 1 Corinthians, 16. 22.) fomnieth fomething more Sacred and Divine, than ordinarily διδάσκαλος and κύριος. So that he now taketh up an Argument from their own mouth, to fhew what they ought to do in imitation of him, except they will contradict themfelves, and in actions diffent from their own words of common ufe.

V. 14. Ye also ought to wash] That is, If there be need, and mutual edification require it (as 1 Cor. 6. 19.) you ought to be ready, and willing to ferve one another in love, Gal. 5. 13. and to this he urgeth his own example; as alſo Matt. 11. 29. So that here, ὑμεῖς, and you. is put for σπλὴν ἐμοῦ καὶ ὑμῶν much more ought ye, feeing you are not (as you confeffe me) lords over one another, but fellow-fervants, equally bound in mutual duty: for as Optatus faith, lib. 5. eft univerſis ſervientibus non dominatio. Fed miniſterium: all ſervants have belonging to them, miniſtration not dominion.

V. 15. given you example] See on verse 13. example is the powerful Rhetorick: prius diſce qui doces, Lactant. lib. 4. cap. 23. firſt learn thou who teacheſt: men had rather have examples, than words: it is eaſie to ſpeake, but hard to perform: would we had as many good doers, as ſpeakers: the perfect teacher ought both dicere & facipiendo, and confirmare faciendo, ib. c. 24. ſpeake in giving precepts, and confirm the ſame in his own practiſe.

V. 16. ſervant is not greater, &c.] Chap. 15. 20. Matt. 10. 24. Luk 6. 40. much leſſe is he that ſerveth then his Maſter, much leſſe the Ambaſſadour, than his Prince that ſendeth him, though leſſe the Ambaſſadour, than his Prince that ſendeth him, though he repreſent his perſon for a time in that Commiſſion, as you ſhall doe mine in your preaching, See 2 Corinthians, 5. 20. and compare therewith Luke 10. 16. by this Argument from the greater to the leſſer, He exciteth them to doe as he had done: Doe not you ſcorne, or thinke your ſelves too good to doe any Office of Holy Love one for another, ſeeing I, whom you profeſſe your Maſter, and the Sonne of the living God, have vouchſafed thereto, not onely by Precept, but alſo by my owne Example, to teach you.

V. 17. if ye do them] If ye be indeed ready to ſerve one another in love (which is the ſumme of the Law, Romans 13. 9.) and humility, which is the ground of Religion, Not the hearers, but the Law are juſt before God, but the doers of the Law ſhall be juſtified, Romans 2. 13. Romans, 10. 5. &c. the Cherubims, Ezekiel, 1. 8. had hands under their wings: the one might ſignifie knowledge of God and his Will, (the other action) which we alſo muſt know that we may obey him, and in obedience doe, that we may be happy: otherwiſe to him that knoweth to doe good, and doth it not, to him it is ſin.

V. 18. I know whom I have choſen] 2 Timothy, 2. 19. I know whom I have choſen to Eternal Life, and alſo whom I have choſen to be my Apoſtles, Luke 6. 13. I knew what they had beene, were, and would be: I did not ſo choſe the traytor and ſon of perdition, to the charge of the bag, that he alſo might for a time, be one of my Domeſticks and Apoſtles, it was that the Scripture might be fulfilled, that is, the Will of God declared in the Scripture, it was the determinate Councell of God, that one of his owne ſhould betray him; Acts 4. 28.

V. 19. now] ἀπ' ἄρτι, from henceforth.

I tell you before] How one of you ſhall betray me, leſt when you ſee it come to paſſe, you ſhould ſtartle, and your faith in me ſhould be too much ſhaken: as if ſo beſt I had been unſtaken and deceived in my choyce, and ſo not God omniſcient: no, no, God cannot be deceived: on which ground Auguſtine proveth, that none of the Elect can finally fall away.

that I am he] That is, the Chriſt whom the Scriptures foreprominſed, and the ceremonies of the Law prefigured.

V. 20. Verily, verily, I ſay, &c.] Matt. 10. 40. Luke 10. 16. becauſe he had before taught his Diſciples humility by precept and example, and that he ſhould be betrayed by one of his own, leſt they ſhould be too much troubled to think that when Chriſt ſhould thus be taken from them, they ſhould be hated of all men as traytors, or contemptible as ſubmitting themſelves, as Chriſt commanded them to the meaneſt Offices of mutual love, here he propoſeth a great reward to thoſe that ſhould receive them, and ſhew any kindneſs, mercy and goodneſs to them, and that he would take it on his owne accompt, and as done to himſelfe.

V. 21. When Jeſus had thus ſaid] Matt 26.21. John 11 33. and 12.27. He was troubled by the concourſe of ſeveral paſſions, fear, ſorrow and indignation at Judas odious treaſon

V. 22. looked one on another] Being troubled and very anxious, becauſe of Jeſus ſpeech. See Matt. 26. 21, 22. Mark 14. 19. they not yet knowing which of them he meant.

V. 23. leaning on Jeſus boſome] which by reaſon of their poſture at meales, he had convenience to doe. See Luke, 7. 38.

V. 24. beckned to him] Νεύει, nodded the head; giving thereby a ſilent ſign, that he would deſire him to aske Jeſus whom he meant, he having convenience by reaſon of his nearneſſe to aske privately.

V. 25. then lying on Jeſus breaſt] That is, leaning nearer to Jeſus breaſt, that he might tell him in his ear, which of them was the traytor; ſo probably he whiſpered unto Jeſus, and Jeſus anſwered him that the others might not hear.

V. 26. I ſhall give a ſop] Or morſel of bread. Cyril notes that he gave no other ſigne whereby to deſcribe the traytor, than that which the Prophet gave, Pſalm 41. 9, 10 and Chryſoſtoms conjecture was not improbable, (that Chriſt gave this ſign to remember him of the table and bread, whereof he did partake, that he might not betray him, and rage againſt his feeder) if Chriſt had ſpoken openly, that all might hear: the Diſciples could not have ſo doubted as we ſee, verſe 28.

V. 27. Satan entred into him] And took poſſeſſion of him: not that the morſel hurt him; but becauſe that ſignal, conſcious Judas perceived, or feared that his treaſon was diſcovered; therefore being embittered and vexed, he reſolved to proſecute it with ſpeed and effect.

give ſomething to the poore] Thus they conjectured; becauſe though his ſtocke was but ſlender, yet they knew he uſed to ſpare ſomething to the poore, that he might therein leave us an example.

V. 30. and it was night] It might have ſeemed unſeaſonable for the traitor then to repair to the High Prieſts, not to diſcover, but to deſigne a treaſon: but no imporcunity hindreth ardent malice: And thus alſo we ſee that word is true; evil doers, ſhun the Light, Chapter, 3. 20. ſo when they had taken Chriſt, He told them, This is your houre, and the power of darkneſſe. Luke 22. 53. night beſt ſuits with ſhamefull acts, which the Prince of darkneſs loves.

V. 31. Now is the Sonne of Man glorified] That is, He ſhall ſhortly be glorified in the admirable work of Mans redemption: for in death to overcome death is, as Chryſoſtome ſaith well, Hom. 71. δόξα μεγάλη, great Glory: this Chriſt onely could doe.

V. 32. if God be glorified in him] That is, in his Obedience to the death, and mans redemption in his death, then however ſcandalous and ignominious his ſufferings may ſeem to the World; yet ſo ſhall he enter into his true and unſpeakable Glory See Chap. 21. 19. Phil. 2.8,9. Luke 24. 26. teaching us that it is glorious to ſuffer for the Honour of God.

V. 33. little children] Becauſe his departi g from them by the Croſſe muſt needs afflict their hearts, therefore he prepareth them to patience, by the intimation of his Fatherly love and care of them, as of tender children.

as I ſaid unto the Iewes] Chap. 7.34.

ye cannot come] Ye cannot now preſently come after me to Heaven, as you were wont on Earth to follow me, when ye miſſed me.

V. 34. A new Commandment I give you, &c.] Levit. 19. 18 it appeareth it was an old precept, and the ſumme of the Law, Matt. 22. 39, 40. 1 John 3. 11. but continually to be renewed, Ch. 15, 17. 1 John 4. 21. Epheſ. 5. 2. He made the Pattern new, whereof he ſaith (as I have loved you) I did not pay any debt of your merit (ſaith Chryſoſtom) I began to love you freely, to love you thoſe who have not deſerved your love: love is the moſt certain and undobted mark of Chriſts ſervant (verſe 35.) for it is τὴν ἀρετὴν τῆς ὑποθέσεως the foundation of all Vertue. See 1 Corinthians, 13, 1, &c.

V. 35. By this ſhall all men know] By this, or in this, ἐν τούτῳ, it is an Hebrew manner of expreſſion, Gen. 42. 15 בְּזֹאת bez'th, in this 70. ἐν τούτῳ φανεῖσθε. Moſes Diſciples are known by their circumciſion &c. others have their marks and habits: but this is the mark by which I will own you, and by which alſo you ſhall know your ſelves, and the world alſo may know you to be mine. It is a vain brag of Chriſtianity without Love and Charity: Satan will permit men any diſguiſes, ſemblances, or external works of Religion, upon condition that he may but ſet his own Image (that is, malice) on them: becauſe he well knowes, that all ſeeming excellencies in the World, without true Charity, are nothing. See 1 Cor, 13. 1, &c, Charity is the life of Religion, by which Faith it ſelf worketh, Gal. 5. 6.

V. 36. Thou canſt not follow me now] Yet thou art not ripe for thy diſſolution; thou ſhalt follow me into Glory, but yet thy courſe is not yet finiſhed: the Saints may deſire to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt, Phil. 1. 23, but their dayes are numbred, which they muſt firſt accompliſh.

V. 37 I will lay down my life for thy ſake] Matt. 26. 33. Luke 22. 33. He meant it now, and at laſt did it: but this example teacheth us, not to preſume on our own ſtrength: ſeeing that God onely giveth conſtancy in good, and many times permitteth us to ſtrong temtations to ſhew us our own weakneſs, and to correct our overdaring confidence in our ſelves.

V. 38. The Cocke ſhall not crow, &c.] See Matt. 26. 34. and Luke 22. 34.

CHAP. XIIII.

Verſe 1. BE troubled] So verſe 27. Chap. 16. 1. which he ſpeaketh, not commanding or approving any ſtoical apathy, as if he would have men put off natural affections, and to be troubled at nothing; but forbidding de jection of mind, and diffidence in afflictions proceeding of unbelief.

believe in me alſo] In me whom God hath appointed to be your peace and reconciliation: they were now to encounter ſtrong temtations, therefore he armeth them with conſolations, leſt the novelty and ſuddenneſs of unexpected trials ſhould overcome them.

V. 2. many manſions] This whole ſpeech being Metaphorical, the meaning is, there is place in the kingdom of Heaven for all the Elect; (which are many) according to their ſeveral degrees of glory aſſigned them. See on Luke 16. 9. Dan. 12. 3. 1 Corinthians, 15. 41. 42.

V. 3. I will come again] At the latter day, Acts 1 11. Acts 3. 21. Acts 17. 31. Gr. πάλιν ἔρχομαι, I come again: it is a preſent for the future; as certain, as if it already were: this may either import the death of every particular, or the univerſal judgement of all; either of them being inſtant and moſt certain; the ſence is, though I goe from you for a little time: I will neither deſert you nor be unmindful of you in theſe things which ſhall concern Gods glory, and your ſalvation, I will ever hear you, and timely relieve you.

V. 4. Whither I goe ye know] By theſe often repetitions of his going hence; he intimateth, that his death ſhould be o ely a receſs and with-drawing out of this world for a time, into the preſence of God in Heaven, that we may reſolve how we muſt follow him our Head, and whither: this way he ſaith, they knowv, becauſe he had declared to them, that by death, he muſt enter into his glory.

V. 5. We know not whither thou goeſt] That is, but imperfectly knowv; for they did not yet vvell underſtand, nor remember vvhat he had taught them.

V. 6. I am the way] ἡ ὁδὸς, that vvay, by vvhich only man can enter into eternal bleſſedneſs, Acts 4. 12. Cyril. cat. 10. readeth

θύρα, the door, as John 10. 7. to the same sence: as Cyril. Alexandr. here saith, ἄνωθεν πάλιν ἡμᾶς ἐν ἑαυτῷ, we have all in him, He only is that way which leadeth to Heaven; the truth prefigured by all the legal Ceremonies, as chap. 1.17. the life; the Authour and giver of Eternal life, as chap. 11. 25.

V. 7. from henceforth] See c. 13. 19. Gr. ἀπ' ἄρτι, hereafter, after the Holy Ghost the Comforter shall come and teach you all things, —— v. 26.

have seen him] By seeing the Father, He here meaneth, knowing him in Christ: no man hath seen, or can see his Essence: but he that believeth hath seen his mercy.

V. 8. Shew us the Father] Shew us him, as he was revealed to the Prophets, τῆς σωματικῆς ὀφθαλμοῖς (as Theophylakt. expresseth it) to our bodily eyes.

V. 9. Have I been so long with you, &c.] He taxeth their ignorance, who conceived that the knowledge of God was, or could be by sence: knowy you not me? who I am by nature? and whence I am? that I am One in Essence, and Eternall substance with the Father. See Chapter 10. 38. See also Chapter 12.45.

V. 10. I am in the Father, and the Father in me] For the fulnesse of the Deity remaineth in Christ, Colos. 1. 19. and 2.9. See Fulgent. ad Monim. lib. 3. (paulo ante finem) and Augustin. Paulina ep. 112. cap. 4. fine. The Son is in the Father (saith Athanasius lib. 1. Contr. Ar. dissol. incarnabilis est, ignorabilis non est: it is such as none can declare, nor any be ignorant of.

not of my self] Not of my self as man, not so of my self, as if the same were not of my Father; whatsoever I speak to you, as man to man, God speaketh to you by me, Hebr. 1.2.

he doth the works] The miracles which ye have seen me do, are all wrought by divine power, not humane.

V. 11. for the works sake] If the infallibility of my words prevail not with you, let the excellency of my works and miracles which you have seen me do (workes exceeding all power of the creature) perswade you to believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; in him dwelleth all the fulnesse of the God-head, —— Col. 2. 9.

V. 12. Shall he do also] He exhorteth them not to be offended at his passion, for as much as this power of doing miracles shall be derived to themselves also, whereby it shall appear that he which suffered in the infirmity of his assumed humanity, as also truly God, who alone could give such power to men.

and greater workes than these] He seemeth to mean hereby the conversion of men to the Faith by their preaching the Gospel, as Acts 2. 41. &c.

because I go unto my Father] Because going up unto the right hand of my Father. I will send the Holy Ghost upon you, by whose power you shall preach, and do miracles to the conversion of men to God, and their salvation: See Ephes. 4.8. Psalm 68.18.

V. 13. whatsoever ye shall aske in my Name] See Matth. 7. 7. 1 John 5.14. and Chap. 16. 23. if it be according to the Will of God, I will do it for you; for the Father hath committed all Power unto me, Matt. 28.18.

V. 14. in my Name] Through my Mediation; for my merit sake.

I will doe it] I will heare and grant your requests, which are to Gods Glory: I who am coequal with the Father will doe it for you.

V. 15. If ye love me, keep my Commandments] As if he said, Sorrow, and sad dejected countenances at the knowledge of my departure hence, are not the Arguments of love which I require of you, but Faith and Obedience: love indeed cannot be fruitless; but probatio dilectionis exhibitio est operis, Greg. hom. 30. the proof of love is in the exhibition of the worke: obedience to Christ sheweth how men love him. See verse 21.

V. 16. another Comforter] Because they could not be without much trouble in an impious world; he promiseth to send the Holy Ghost to comfort them, and remain with them: to supply his bodily absence, wherein He comforted them during his abode with them in the world.

V. 17. Spirit of Truth] Who is truth, because very God, inspiring his with knowledge of the Truth, and giving them sweet and comfortable tasts of the graces of Sanctification; thus dwelleth he in them; concerning this it is written, 1 John 2. 27. the anointing which ye have received of him, abideth in you, &c. See Galat. 2. 20.

V. 18. I will not leave you comfortless] Or Orphans, as forsaken Orphans, who have none to take care of them; but will come again to you after my resurrection, shewing my self to confirm your faith; but specially by inspiring you with the admirable gifts of the Holy Spirit.

V. yet a little while &c.] A few houres; for his death drew near: and after that, he would not be seen of any, but his elect witnesses, to whom he shewed himself alive from the dead according to the Scriptures, and whereas they might possibly feare, that they must row die with him, He saith, ye shall live also, to be my witnesses; and ye shall believe, and live in me Eternally.

V. 20. and you in me] As ye are lively members of my Church, my Body of which I am the Head, Colos. 1. 18. 24. Romans 12. 5. to whom I communicate Grace and Life, Ephesians 1. 22. Ephes. 4. 16.

V. 21. is he that loveth me] See on verse 15.

I will love him] Not that he did not first love that man, to whom he gives an heart to love him and keep his Commandements; but ad hoc diligam, ut manifestem; I will so love, as that I will manifest the same in happy effects, Prosper. now He loveth us, to give us Faith and Obedience: but in the life to come he will love us in rewarding us: prorsus donum est Dei, diligere Deum: ipse ut diligeretur dedit, qui non dilectus, dilexit: it is altogether the gift of God, that we love God; He gave us hearts to love him, who when we loved him not, loved us: see Romanes, 5. 5, 7, 8, 10.

and will manifest my [self unto him] Chapter, 1. 17. understand this of a Spiritual Exhibition of himself, not to a bodily presence, ad hoc diligam, ut manifestem, Augustine tract. 75. I will so love him as to manifest my self to him. He now loveth us to give us faith to believe, then he will love us so as that we may see him, and in seeing receive the reward of Faith: now we love in believing that which we see not, but then we shall love in seeing that which we now believe.

V. 22. not Iscariot] Not the Traytour Judas, but the same who was called Lebbeus or Thaddeus: Matthew, 10. 3. See hereof, Jo. Drusius ad Vsc. N. T. Com. 1. Thaddaus & ibid. Lebbaus.

V. 23. He will keep my words] He will obey me: to him will we come, as to our sanctified Temple: and bring with us the inestimable treasures of godlynesse, and true and lasting consolation; we loved him from Eternity, and in due time inspired him with the Spirit of Regeneration, Faith, Hope, Charity, Obedience, and we will come unto him in whom we have begun this worke of Grace and Mercy, by a multiplication of all Spiritual gifts, giving him a comfortable perseverance therein; unto Eternitie.

V. 24. is not mine] Not mine as man: it is his that sent me, that is, Gods Word. See Chapter, 6. 38. and Chap. 7. 16. and verse 10.

V. 25. being yet present with you] I have spoken these things to your outward ears, and though you perceive not the fruit thereof as yet, you must expect a better increase, when the Holy Ghost the Comforter shall speak to your hearts and understandings, after my ascension into Heaven.

V. 26. the Comforter] c. 15. 26. παράκλητος, or the Advocate. So Christ is called παράκλητος, 1 John 2. 1. See Rom. 8. 26. they were called Advocates, παράκλητοι, who were called or retained to speak or plead for them who had enditements against them, or otherwise, were impleaded in any Court of Judicature. One entreateed to favour another in judgement: an intercessour. Philo, de vit. Mos. l. 3. See Ulpian. l. 3. D. de prævar. Joh. Drus. prælect. l. 4. John 14. 16.

he shall teach you all things] He is that good Sanctifier of his Church, καὶ Βοηθὸς, καὶ διδάσκαλος —— the Helper and Teacher of his, Cyrile. c. 16. if he teach not within, Dolorii linguæ exterius in vacuum laborat, the teachers tongue labooreth externally in vain. We all hear one voice of a Preacher, but what different apprehensions, affections, and resolutions of and concerning the same we have: the Word is one and the same, but in some it proveth a savour of death, in others a savour of life unto life: the difference is, as this, Magister interior, inward Master teacheth some, and leaveth others to their own obstinacy, and blindenesse, to pervert all they hear to their own destruction, 2 Peter 3. 16.

whatsoever I have said unto you] For there is but one Truth, which Christ taught, and the Holy Ghost remembered them, of, and opened unto them, οὐ γὰρ ἄλλας χεῖρας διδάγματα, καὶ ἄλλα ἀγία πνεύματος, The Doctrine of Christ, and the Holy Ghost, are not divers, but one and the same Truth of God. Cyril. qu. 5.

Vs 27. my Peace I give unto you] He yet continueth in the same Argument of Consolation; according to the custome of Friends departing, taking a solemne leave, giving charge, and wishing all prosperity and happy successe; all which the Hebrewes comprehended in שָׁלוֹם shalom, Genesis 43. 26. 2 Chronicles, 15. 5. Exodus 4. 18, &c. but Christ here intimateth a Peace, which the World can neither give, nor take away, Peace with God, Peace of Conscience, and true comfort and Happinesse in Christ.

V. 28. if ye loved me you would rejoyce] They loved him, but their love was not yet well enformed concerning the issue of those things: because there was a dangerous mixture of self-love with their love to Christ, so were they most sorry for their own secular losse, in Christs departure from them, who still dreamed of a temporal kingdom of Christ

Aug. God assumed the Manhood, but the Manhood lessened not the Godhead.*

V. 29, that ye might believe] That is, increase in faith, and be assured, that I am indeed the Son of the living God, and Saviour of the elect (as Augustine expresseth it) Qui potuit hoc facere cum prædixisset, & præsciere, antequam hoc faceret, who could do it when he had said it, and foretell it before he did it. See c. 13. 19.

V. 30. prince of this world] The devill as c. 12. 31. He will stir up all the malignity of wicked men against me, See Luke 22. 52. he will now in his last charge and onset muster up all his forces against me, and here again is a prefent put for a furure, conteth, that is, will very shortly come: as with many mischievous and malignant spirits with him, so with Judas, his guard, and the high Priests servants, instigated by him, to destroy me; therein secure that he shall be conquerer; but herein deceived, that I shall destroy him and his vvorks, not by force of armes, but by suffering, and dying for the redempton of the elect.

and hath nothing in me] Nihil juris in me, no right nor power: that is, he shall not have his will in me, becausе he cannot tempt me to sin, though according to the holy will of my Father, I subject my self to death for mans redemption.

V. 31. but that the world may know] As if he [aid, power is permitted to Satan and his accomplices to perfecute me to death, that dying for mans redemption, the world may see the obedience and love I bear to the Father, who hath thus determined.

arise let us go hence] They were yet sitting at table; now he hasteneth to meet and encounter with his passion: let us go to the place where the Prince of darknesse hath prepared his armed troops to take and destroy me. See Mat. 26. 46. Thus appeared his love to God the Father, whom he willingly obeyed to death, and to all the elect for whom he died.

CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. I Am the true vine] By these manner of speeches he teacheth, that being by the Father spiritually implanted into Christ, we have life by faith in him; and bring forth fruits of good works by vertue of his Spirit working in us; whereas we are by nature barren and unfruitful. Probably these speeches were occasioned by their passing through or by some vineyard; his usual manner being to take occasions of leading his hearers from the sight of things temporal, to the consideration of the spiritual. See c. 4. 10. 32. 35. c. 6. 27. &c. By true Vine he meaneth here, the most excellent, that which beareth fruit for the elect of the whole World, at all seasons, in all ages.

V. 2. every branch in me that beareth not fruit] Every one in my Church, (into which they are implanted by baptisme, Rom. 6. 3, 5. & 11. 17, 20.) that beareth not good fruit, he pruneth off, an unprofitable and dead branch, Mat. 3 10. and 15. 13. to shew that the regenerate have need of continual assistance and culture, without which they can do no good; he enlargeth his allegory, to shew Gods care of his vineyard, the Church (Isai 5. 1. &c.) in pruning and co refting, to make it more fruitful: but for afflictions, men would grow high and barren; the minds of men are commonly luxuriant and barren in prosperity.

V. 3. now ye] Chap. 13. 10. lest they should be terrified by any fear, in the apprehension of their own infirmities and failings in tentations, as if they therefore were to be reputed unfruitfull branches appointed to be cut off and cast into the fire, he comforteth them with the assurance of their being cleansed from their sins, ye are already clean. So the Syriack interpreteth this אִדֵּן, by הָכָא jam nunc, or hucusque, already, thus farre; it only remaineth that ye persevere.

are clean] Sanctified by my Spirit, See 1 Cor. 6. 11. 1 Joh. 1. 7. word which I have spoken unto you] Being accompanied by the power of my Spirit (See chap. 17. 17. Ephes. 5. 26. 1 Pet. 1. 22.) he meaneth the word of the Gospel, which they all beleeved, Judas excepted, chap. 13 11.

V. 4. abide in me, and I in you] Perseverance is a condition of salvation, Col. 1. 23. Mat. 24. 13. Ab arbore frange ramum, fructus germinare non poterit, break a bough from the tree, that which is broken off cannot bud forth, Cyprian. tr. 3. de simpl. prælat. Out of Christ there is no life of grace, no salvation. Nec perveniet ad Christi præmia, qui relinquit Ecclesiam Christi, neither shall he come to the rewards of Christ, who leaveth the Church of Christ: so dangerous is the state of a separatist.

V. 5. without me ye do nothing] Or severed from me, ye can do no good: members divided from the head cannot live. Ye can do nothing truly good, but by me. See Hosea 14. 8. Phil. 2. 13. Are ye afraid of taking away Free-will? Operante--spiritu Dei juvatur arbitrium, non aufertur: & hoc agit gratia ut voluntas peccato corrupta--non remaneat in languoribus suis; sed per opem misericordiæ medici curata revelescat, &c. Ambros. l. 10. ep. 84. The Spirit of God working the will is helped, not taken away: and grace working so, that the will corrupted by sin--remaineth not in its sickenesse, but by the assistance of the merciful Physician, being cured groweth well again. To the like purpose saith Prosper, contr. collat. on that Mat. 16. Blessed art thou Simon son of Jona. for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in Heaven. Hac regula nulli hominum aufertur voluntas: quia virtus gratiæ non hoc in voluntatibus operatur ut non sint; sed ut ex malis bonæ, &c. This rule taketh not away any mans will; because the power of grace doth not work this in wills, that they should no more be, but that they should become good of evill; of unfaithfull, faithful; and that they who were of themselves darknesse, should become light in the Lord; that that which was dead, might be quickned, &c.

V. 6. he is cast forth] Out of the vineyard, as a branch cut off, &c. fit for nothing but the fire. See Mat. 3. 10. Ezek. 15. 2, 3, 4, &c. Here also appeareth the great danger of separation from Christ: there can be nothing but Hell and damnation out of him. See on verse 4.

V. 7. my words abide in you] If you continue grounded and eſtablished in my doctrine.

ye shall aske what ye will, &c.] αἰτήσασθε, that is, you may freely ask any thing according to Gods will.

V. 8. herein is my Father glorified] See 5, 16. Phil. 1 11. Eph. 1, 12. Good works declare men the Sons of God; as the fruits shew the tree, as the effect the cause.

V. 9. as the Father loveth me, &c.] As the Father loveth the Son and communicateth all good to him, sustaineth him in his sufferings, and delivereth him from death, to doth Christ love all his; which is a singular ground of comfort to all those who love God: for first none can love him, but those whom he first loveth, 1 John 4. 19. Secondly, it is most certain, that the Fathers love to the Son, Christ, is eternal, and therefore unchangeable (he not only having love, as the creature in some weak measure may, but is, love, 1 Joh. 4. 8. it is no accident, but his unchangeable essence for quicquid est in Deo, Deus est) now Christ so loving us as his Father loveth him, if we can be assured that he ever loved us, which by our love to him we may, we may be confident with Paul, Rom. 8. 38, 39. that no creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, because no creature can be able to separate Christ from the love of his Father.

so have I loved you] I have loved you to the death. See 1 John 3. 16. giving my self for you. Ephes. 5. 2. greater love can no man shew, verse 13.

continue ye in my love] Only this have I required for all my love to you, that you constantly love me. See Deut. 6. 5. & 10. 12. But how shall we continue in the love of Christ, who neither have any ability in our selves to do any good, nor constancy to persevere in that we are moved to? he said verse 7. ask what ye will, &c. Whereas we must needs feel a want of the grace of perseverance; we ought to beg it of him, who only can give us to do that which he commandeth us. If any enquire concerning the rule, it followeth in the next verse.

V. 10. if ye keep my commandements] 1 John 2. 5. Specially that which he nameth verse 12. We can never love God if we love not our neighbours also. See 1 John 4. 20. Keeping Christs Commandments, importeth a remembring them and laying them up in faithful memories, with resolution to do them.

V. 11. that my joy may remain in you] That is, the joy and comfort which ye conceive in me your Mediatour and Redeemer. See Rom. 14. 17.

V. 12. this is my commandement] Chap. 13, 34. 1 Thes. 4. 9. 1 John 3. 11. This is the summe of the second Table, and the mark by which Christ will own his Disciples. Without this all gifts are vain. See Mat. 22. 37. chap. 13. 35. 1 Cor. 13. 1, &c. This is the end of the Commandment, 1 Tim. 1. 5.

V. 13. greater love] A man will rather lose his riches, and all that he hath, then his life; better. (said the Philosopher, when he cast his merchandize over-board in a storm) that these should perish for us, than with us: when a man therefore layeth down his life for his friend, it appeareth that he loved him better than any thing he had in this vvorld.

V. 14. ye are my friends if, &c.] This was Abrahams great priviledge, James 2. 23. But here is the condition of Gods holding friendship with us, if we do what he commandeth: principally if we love one another. See verse 17. 1 John 3. 16. For sinnes cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience, Ephes. 5. 6. The just God can have no peace nor amity with wilful contemners of his holy Commandements; and the chief end and ground of all the Commandements is love to God and Man. See on verse 12. and 1 Tim. 1 5.

V. 15. all things that I have heard of the Father] all things necessary to salvation, See 2 Tim 3. 15.

V. 16. ye have not chosen me] He setteth of his love in the freedom thereof; it began not from any merit of theirs left they should be proud. Misericordia ejus prævenit eos secundum gratiam non secundum debitum; Augustine de prædest. sanct. lib. 1. cap. 17. His mercy prevented them according to (his) grace, not (their) merits, meris, or) debt. Elegit ergo Deus fideles, sed ut sint, non quia jam erant; ibid. Augustine. God therefore chose the faithful, but that they might be such; not because they were already such. Gods love is eternal, and therefore can have no cause but it self: For as Augustine saith, Non est gratia, si precesserint merita; it is not grace (but debt) if merits proceed it. See Rom.4.4. God made man at the beginning, not because he had any need of man or his service; but as Irenæus, lib.4. cap. 28. saith well, Ut haberet in quem conferre sua beneficia, that he might have one on whom he might conferre his benefits; and therefore doth he require mans service, that because he is good and merciful, he might do good to them who persevere in his service, saith the same.

that ye should bring forth fruit] This is true in two senses. First, that election is the cause of our fruits of sanctification, See Rom. 8. 30. 2 Pet. 1. 10. and these fruits shall remain to eternity, Psal. 1. 3. Mat. 25. 34. &c. Rev. 14. 13. Secondly, that the Disciples should go forth, and their preaching should have fruit and successe to the conversion of the Gentiles; and that the Church so planted by them should continue to the worlds end, in spight of all her enemies; the perfections and all the machinations of Satan, because God giveth the increase, 1 Cor.3.7.

whatsoever ye shall ask] Here he layeth down a singular encouragement to Ministers, in that they shall have free accesse to the Father to beg and obtain whatsoever they have need of in their ministery: there are indeed ever many lets, and enemies to our preaching the Gospel, whose assaults we are no wayes able to bear, except the power and providence of God sustain us; therefore he saith in effect, though you are unsufficient, the Father will not be wanting to you.

V. 17. that ye love one another] This he saith most seasonably to admonish the Ministers of the Gospel to mutuall love and concord: if there be strife of tongues, they must needs build to confusion: they ought to love the rather, because the world will ever hate them who love the truth. Love is the fulfilling of the law, no pretence will serve to the breach of this precept, seeing God hath commanded mutual love: thou wilt say, he is evill; and what art thou who hatest thy brother? thou sayest thou hatest the evill only? but malice is a false medium, making that seem evill which God accepteth as good: but indeed, as Augustine said to Macedonius, ep. 54. Omnes odit, qui malos odit: he hateth all, who hateth the evill, seeing all men sin. But therefore Diligendi sunt mali, ut non sint mali: we must love the evill that they may not continue evill, as we love the sick to make them well.

V. 18. If the world hate you] That is, if the wicked hate you, as chap.14. 19. for such only hate Christ and good men. Having admonished his disciples that they should abide in him, and love one another, he now sheweth them what they shall find contrary hereto, to wit an impious world, to draw them away from Christ, and from unity one with another, against which he fortifieth them in the following words.

ye know that, &c.] γινώσκετε, Know ye, or consider ye; that you may be comforted in that therein you do but share with me in my sufferings.

V. 19. therefore the world hateth you] The wicked of the world (guided by the malicious spirit of Satan) hate the elect, for Gods favours bestowed on them See Genes. 4. 4, 5. 1 John 3. 12. And because the image of God appeareth in their faith and sanctimony of life and conversation: he seemeth to correct others who dissenteth from them in judgement or practice: they think it strange that you run not with them to the same excesse of riot, speaking even of you: 1 Pet.4 4. the Phylosopher noted this impious quality of the heathenish world, in the example of Aristides hated, only because, prater modum justus erat, he was more just than other men.

V.20. the servant is not greater, &c.] Mat.10.24. chap.13.16.

if they have kept my saying] That is, seeing they have not believed and obeyed my saying, but contemned it, it must not seem strange to you that they will also contemn and disobey your words. By this he will strengthen them against despaire of successe in their preaching, by his own example, be not out of heart when you perceive your auditours neglect and disesteem of the word you preach: all have not faith, and of rebellious Israel the Apostle saith, Hebr. 4. 2. The word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith, in them that heard it, and the same faith, 2 Cor.4.3,4. if our gospel be hid it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the God of this world hath blinded the mindes of them which beleeve not, &c.

V. 21. because they know not him that sent me] They know not, or for malice will not acknowledge that which you preach to be the word of God. See Jer 43. 2. & 44.16. Ignorance of God is the cause of the persecution of his Ministers.

V. 22. if I had not come] If I had not come unto the Jews according to the word of the Prophets concerning me.

they had not had sin] Either not so much sin, if they had not despised so clear light, and a truth so confirmed, as v. 24. or they should still have seemed innocent, if I had not discovered their hypocrisie. See chap.9 41. And truly, Minor erat culpa, ubi erat culpæ ignorantia, Ambrose l 9. ep. 71. there was lesse fault, where there was no knowledge of a fault, See Luke 12. 48. & Mat. 10. 15. But they that sin against knowledge, have no cloak or excuse for their sin.

V. 23. hateth my Father] For they are one God, and one truth, so that he that hateth one, hateth both.

V. 24. not had sin] Not so much sin: the more men sin against a convicted conscience, the greaterand more desperate is their sin. See on verse 22.

V. 25. written in their law] Psal.35. 19. See chap.10. 34.

they hated me without a cause] Undeservedly: for he did all things well, good to all, harm to none; so Davids enemies hated him, Psal.15.19. חנם chinnam 70. δὲ μισοῦντές με δωρεὰν, freely; that is, without any of my offence given them, hating me. So Jonathan said to his father King Saul, 1 Sam.19.5. why shouldest thou sin against innocent blood חנם chinnam, δωρεὰν undeservedly.

V. 26. when the comforter is come] chap.14.26. Luke 24.49.

whom I will send] So the holy Ghost is said to be sent of the Father (chap. 14.26.) and the Son, of the Father and holy Ghost, Isai 61.1. Luke 4.18. not by change of place, but illo missionis nomine, under that name of mission, we must understand, opus manifestationis indutæ, the work of manifestation in vulged, as Fulgentius speaketh, de miss. sp. S. ad Monim. l. 2. and as Greg. hom. 26. in Evang. saith well, ejus missio, ipsa processio est, his mission, is his proceeding of the Father and the Son, he is coequall, consubstantial, coeternal with the Father and the Son: for as Aug. fl. de temp. ferm. 184. saith, in the holy Trinity is nothing, minus aut majus, lesser or greater. He came down on his Apostles, in several gifts (as the same saith, ferm, 185.) velut imber sanctificationis illapsus-falling as it were a shower of sanctification. How great, how unspeakable is the goodnesse of our Redeemer? Hominem portavit ad cælum, & Deum misit ad terras: ib. He carried man to Heaven (as in his ascending humanity) and sent God (the holy Ghost) unto the earth. See also Hilar. de trin. l 8.

V. 27. ye also bear witnesse] You who were eye-witnesses, who have heard and seen the very same which the Spirit also testifieth, Acts 1. 8. 21,22, & 5.32. 1 John 1. 1,2,3.

CHAT. XVI.

Verse 1, Should not be offended] σκανδαλισθῆτε, cometh of σκάνδαλον, to halt; σκανδάλον, of the same is a stumbling block, or stone in the way, at which, suddenly striking the foot we fall or stumble. See Rom.14. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 8. In both which places it is interpreted by πρόσκομμα, offendiculum, of προσκόπτω, impingo, to dash ones foot against something in the way. Here Christ telleth them before hand, what troubles they must look for in preaching the Gospel; lest stumbling at that which they expected not; they might fall from their patience, hope in, and profession of Christ; flesh and blood (ever too indulgent to it self) being apt to suggest to them in their perfecutions and continual troubles, that God favoured not the preaching and doctrine of the Gospel, which all the world disliked and perfecuted, and for which such grievous things were inflicted on the preachers and professors thereof: therefore Christ fore-armeth them by fore-warning them what they must expect: for that which suddenly falleth upon one, may trouble a great and constant mind, but that which is foreseen and expected, is more easily born, as Cyril noteth. But herein is a singular argument of the truth and sincerity of Christian Religion; that it could ever take root, and so many generations, according to the word of Christ. Mat. 16. 19. in spight of the gates of Hell, and powers of darknesse, it yet flourisheth; though it hath been so constantly persecuted in all times and places; and seeing that Christ, at the first proposal thereof, never allured any one Disciple to follow him by promise of honours, pleasures, secular gains, or any thing which flesh and blood liketh; but on the contrary told them plainly, as here, so, many other times, that they must expect persecutions, malice of all the world, loss of goods, and life it self for professing the same: He that on these terms and conditions is a resolved Christian, must, by the Spirit of truth, be assercained of the truth of his religion, otherwise he would never suffer such things for the profession thereof; the very spectatours of the Martyrs sufferings (when they have seen them torne with sundry torments, & under the tired hands of their tormentors, hold an invincible patience) have thought, as the truth is, that neither the consent of so many, nor the perfeverance of dying men could be vain, nec ipsam patientiam, sine Deo, cruciatus tantos posse superare, Lactant. lib.5. cap.13. neither that patience it self, without God, could overcome such great torments: hence came it, that the blood of the Martyrs was the seed of the gospel.

V. 2, put you out of the synagogues] Excommunicate you. See Chap. 9, 22.

whosoever killeth you will think] They shall in their blinde zeal think you such pernicious and evill men, that you are worthy to die, as was commanded concerning the idolaters, Exod.32.27.and blasphemers, Leviticus 24. 16. See Acts 22.22.

V. 3. because they have not known the Father] See chap. 15.21. ignorance of God, is the cause of persecuters rage: so unhappy a mother of devotion is ignorance, this made them persecute Christ in his facred person, Acts 3. 17. and in his servants, Acts 9 5. 1 Tim. 1. 13.

V. 4. I said unto you at the beginning] He would not at first so expressely expressely tell them of all these things which they must suffer, but considered their weaknesse: and indeed while he was with them, the rage of the adversaries fell upon him; but after his ascension, when Satan could no more reach him, he stirred up all the fury of wicked men against the professors of the truth of Christ: it was therefore necessary, both that now before his departure; they should be forewarned of their dangers; and after his ascension, that they should be armed with a greater measure of the holy Ghost, as to instruct them in all truth, so to confirm them in their professing and preaching the same; which was also done accordingly.

because I was with you] He speaketh as if he were not now with them, because he was upon his departure from them. And we may hence learn, that as Christ not at once declares all the mysteries of eternall life and salvation unto his hearers, but accommodateth his doctrine to their capacities, (as verse 12. 1 Cor. 3. 1, 2. Hebr. 5. 11,12.) so doth he in due time and measure instruct them therein, that the believers may be fixed.

V. 5. and none of you asketh me] This is not simply to be understood, for Peter asked it, Chap. 13. 36. but he greatly reproveth their negligence, for that they no more cared to be further enformed what should be the effect of his departure.

V. 6. sorrow hath filled your hearts] Because I tell you now of my departure, and your afflictions to come: whereas if you would have diligently enquired concerning the end of these things, you should have found matter of rejoycing in the assurance of my glory, and the accomplishment of your redemption therein.

V. 7. it is expedient for you] It shall make for your advantage. Such are the works of Gods power and unsearchable counsel, whereby he bringeth light out of darknesse, good out of evill; and comfort out of sorrow: so he giveth them his peace in the worlds malice, and spiritual joy of the holy Ghost in the bitter sorrows and afflictions of flesh and blood: so he advantageth them in manifesting to themselves, and the world, their righteousnesse, by permitting them to be condemned of the world for malefactours: so he giveth them life, by permitting them, to death: so tryeth he the elect, and blindeth the carnal hearted.

if I go not away, the Comforter, &c.] Could he not have given the holy Ghost being present with them? Yes, but God had otherwise determined to confirm the truth of the Gospel, by the manifest graces of the holy Ghost, and them therein, who were now to be weaned from the desire of Christs bodily presence, and to awaked out of their dream of a temporal and worldly kingdom of Christ. See 2 Cor. 5. 16.

V. 8. he will reprove the world of sin] ἐλέγξει, he will not only accuse but also convince the world of sin, by such evident and concluding arguments, as that πᾶσαν ἀπολογίαν αὐτῶν ἐκκλεῖσει, Chrysost. hom 77 he shall take from them all excuse, he shall convince their obstinacy and unbelief, by the power of truth making it clearly appear, that I am the Christ. See Acts 2. 37.

V. 9. of sin] Of unbeleef: See chap.15. 22, 24. However the world and fecare sinners think themselves free from the guilt of sin and the just punishment thereto due, yet when by the light of Gods spirit they shall understand their own condition under the burden of original sin, derived to them from Adam, and their many actual, contracted by their own wilful disobedience, they shall to be convinced of sin, as that they shall groan under the burden thereof as unsupportable, untill they by faith can lay hold on Christ for their peace with, and justification before, God. See Rom 8, 23. Rom. 7. 23, 24, 25. Rom. 5. 1. thus shall the light of the holy Ghost reprove the world of sin, thereby moving the consciences of the elect to faith and repentance, and terrifying the hearts of the reprobates, who can neither find peace to their souls under the curse of the law, nor beleeve in Christ that they might be delivered from it.

because they beleeve not] And therefore are still lyable to the power and curse of the law against sinners, so long as they continue in unbeleef, being not made free by the Son, who only freely justifieth sinners. See chap. 8. 34, 35, 36. Rom. 3. 19. 24. & 5. 1, &c.

V. 10. of righteousnesse] Not the worlds, but Christs: because they contemned the true righteousnesse of God in Christ (1 Cor. 1. 30.) whom they blasphemed, and condemned as a malefactour: hereof their consciences shall be convinced, when they shall perceive the gospel confirmed, by the admirable power of the holy Ghost, evidently working by the Apostles.

V. 11. of judgement] Because they condemned him whom God the Father justified (which was not his injustice, but theirs) and appointed Judge of the living and the dead, Acts 17. 31. or my power of judicature exercised against Satan in part already, chap. 12. 31. Luke 10. 18, &c.

prince of this world] Satan; not that he is so; for God alone is king, and and his providence ruleth over every creature, but because he arrogateth to himself that high title (Luke 4.6.) lying to deceive, and because the wicked are permitted to his government, 2 Cor. 4. 4. of this see Acts 2. 22, &c. that they might perish through his delusions who received not the love of the truth that they might be saved. 2 Thes, 2 11. 12.

is judged] Shall presently be judged, that is, overcome, and his kingdome overthrown by Christs passion, and the preaching thereof. See Hebrewes 2. 14. Luke 11. 22. & 10. 18.

V. 12. I have yet many things to say unto you] Thus he attemperateth to his hearers capacity: his doctrine distilleth like rain upon the herbs, (Deut.32. 1.) by little and little as the hearers can receive it to nourish them, not by Cataracts to drown them. See 1 Cor.3. 1. I have many deep mysteries, which you cannot now understand, or bear them without offence by reason of your weaknesse, but the holy Ghost will reveal them unto you: See John 6. 56. 60. 1 Cor. 3. 1. See on verse 4.

V. 13. he will shew you things to come] Concerning the kingdom of Christ, which they knew not till after his resurrection.

V. 14. he shall receive of mine] He shall shew you the same truth which I have spoken to you, opening the treasure of wisdom and sanctification, which are yet hid in me: he shall fill you with my spirit, and make you understand that which I have taught you, fealing you up to the redemption which I work for you, and assuring you of your intereest in, and conjunction with, me.

V. 15. all things that the Father hath are mine] This he speaketh in the person of the Mediatour; because of his fulnesse we all receive. chap.1. 16, and herein the weeth the unity of essence in the holy Trinity, and community of power, wildom, sanctity, truth, eternity, glory, majesty, &c.

V. 16. because I go to the Father] See chap. 14. 28, 19. I passe by death and resurrection into the glory which I had, and have eternally with the Father; yet shall I be more spiritually with you than ever, because ye shall then have more experience of my spirit. See Mat. 28 20.

V 17. Then said some of his disciples] Often had he mentioned his death, and going to the Father, yet understood they not; so deafe is flesh and blood to the doctrine of the crosse; and so blinde are we untill the Spirit of God illuminate us, 1 Corinth 2. 14.

V.18 what is this that he saith] What meaneth he hereby? they understood not. that he should so soon die, and so quickly rise again from the dead, the third day: therefore that same τὸ μικρὸν, a little while. was obscure and hard to them, untill this prophesie opened it self in the fulfilling thereof. There is in the regenerate in this life, so great a remainder of carnal reason and wildom, which is but spiritual blindnesse, as that they understand but in part (see Gal. 5 17. 1 Cor. 13. 9.) even sometimes plain and easie things often taught them: as in this example appears he had often, and but lately acquainted them with his death, and suffering at Jerusalem, and his rising again the third day, yet they thought not that it had been so nigh, that he should that very night be apprehended, and slain the next day; they understood nothing of these things, and this saying was hid from them, &c. Luke 18 31,32,33,34.

V. 19. that they were desirous to aske him] They, like good auditours, are not offended at that they do not presently understand, but resolve to ask that they may learn: he as a graelous Saviour, preventeth their enquiry by a further explanation of himself.

V. 20. ye shall weep, &c.] Ye shall have sorrow and trouble of heart; when impiety and popular rage shall triumph: but you shall have a spiritual joy in receiving the holy Ghost; which shall take away, and make void secular and worldly sorrows (as Aarons serpent did the inchanters. Exod.7.12.) so had they many sharp encounters, injuries, preffures, sorrows as Christ foretold them, Mat. 9. 15, &c.) but they rejoyced that they were counted worthy to suffer for the name of Christ: so are the saints advantaged in their sufferings. See Acts 5. 41. 2 Cor 4.16. 17, 18. Rom. 5. 3. when the Saints weep, the world shall rejoyce, but when all tears shall be wiped from their eyes, (Revel. 7. 17.) then shall all the kindreds of the earth wail and mourn, Mat.24. 30. Rev. 1. 7. so do the saints and the world take their turns of sorrows and tears, as Gideons fleece and floor did of the dew. Judg. 6. 37, &c.

V. 21 her hour is come] The time of her travel appointed of God. This similitude often used in holy Scripture, importeth sodain fear and sorrow. Psal.48. 6. Jer. 6. 24. Jer.13. 21. & 22. 23. & 49 24 & 50. 43. Mich.4. 9,10 1 Thes. 5. 3 so should their dispersion, fear and sorrow be, but they should (and so did) rejoyce when the issue thereof, the resurrection, and ascension of Christ, the gifts and graces of the holy Ghost powred out upon them, and their admirable comfort in their faiths confirmation, as also in the conversion of the beleevers of Jewes and Gentiles to the faith, and their salvation by Christ.

V. 22. I will see you again] After my resurrection from the dead.

no man taketh from you] ἄρει, taketh away: ἀφεῖ shall be able to take away: Because Christ is their joy (faith Augustine) who shall die no more, but be to the fountain and authour of eternal joy. See 1 Pet. 1.8. this joy is begun in this life, and compleated in the life to come.

V. 23. in that day ye shall aske me nothing] When ye shall see me me risen from the dead; ye shall not then enquire of me those things which you now doubt of; as chap.13. 36. & 14. 5. you shall be taught of the holy Ghost, and so understand these things, 1 John 2. 27. or ye shall not ask of me as now ye do.

V. 24. ye

V. 24. ye asked nothing in my name] Hitherto you have not grounded your requests to God through my mediation and intercession, which you shall now learn to do in my bodily absence. How by he comforted them in assurance of his spiritual assistance to them in all their trials, which they should obtain in their faithful and earnest prayers unto God in his name and mediation openly; which they according to this word of Christ doing, had a comfortable experience of the performance of this his promise on that behalf; whereof see Acts 4. 24, 29, 30, 31, 32. &c. this was probably an unusual manner of praying with the former saints before the coming of Christ; for the Apostles had not yet practised it after his manifestation to Israel, and their being so much instructed by and under his divine magistery, untill after his ascension into heaven; to wit, their praying to God through the name and mediation of Christ.

V. 25. in proverbs] Or parables, in similitudes, in dark sayings, but openly, as verse 29. & chap. 10. 6. & chap. 11. 10. Mark 8. 32.

no more speak unto you] I will henceforth to the end of my ministery speak unto you.

V. 26. Ye shall ask in my name] Chap. 14. 13, 14. for my sake, through my mediation, and according to the will and promise of God: otherwise the name of Christ is but vainly pretended, Nam si id quod non expedit petitur, non in nomine Jesu petitur pater, Gregor. hom 26. for if that which is not expedient is asked, the Father is not entreated in the name of Jesus.

I say not unto you] Not that he will not mediate that to shew the readinesse of Gods love to hear the beleevers.

V 27. because ye have loved me] This is not because, here as Luke 7. 47. sheweth a consequence not a cause of Gods love to beleevers See on Luke 7. 47. we love Christ, because God loved us first, which love of his can have no cause but in it self: our love to Christ is therefore a certain sign of Gods love to us.

V. 28. I leave the world] In respect of my bodily presence; but as his Deity left not heaven to come into the world by his incarnation; so neither left it the world by going to the Father in his assumption.

V. 29. Speakest no proverb] No parable, or obscure thing; now we better perceive what thou meanest. They found in themselves some encrease of illumination, so that they could truly say Christs present words were not now such obscure riddles, but that they in some measure understood the scope and meaning thereof; but herein they yet failed, that they thought they were sufficiently enformed, or knew enough concerning his going to his father, with the effects thereof, much more clearly and evidently taught them after his ascension, and the coming of the holy Ghost upon them, as he had promised; when we know most, we must know that we are yet to learn, as God shall be pleased further to reveal himself unto us.

V. 30. Now we are sure] This they say as men fluctuant between fear and hope; therefore Christ presently telleth them of that effect of their faiths weaknesse which he foresaw, that is, their forsaking him, whom they here professe came from God, so infirm is the strongest faith, so inconstant the best resolutions.

V. 31. Do ye now believe?] This interrogation hath in it the significations both of pity and reproof of their too early confidence in themselves, as if he said, Ah poor fooles! who seem to your selves thus strong in faith you know not how quickly you shall be scattered for fear. See verse 32.

V. 32. Behold the hour cometh] Mat. 26. 31. Mark 14. 27.

yet am I not alone] This also he addeth to confirm them against their tryal now at hand; as if he said, let not go your confidence in me, when you shall find your own infirmity in your forsaking me for fear, God will still be with me, when men desert me.

V. 33. that in me ye might, &c.] That trusting in me, ye may have peace of conscience, the surest armour against secular afflictions.

I have overcome the world] Christ his victory is our victory. See 1 John 4. 4. neither the world, Satan, sinne, death, nor any creature could overcome him; so neither shall they us, Rom. 8. 37 &c. though we must through many afflictions enter into the kingdom of heaven, Acts 4. 22. (for as Jerom lib. 2. ep. 19. saith quis sanctorum sine certamine coronatus est? which of all the Saints hath been crowned without a conflict?) yet herein is our comfort and assurance, we have overcome the world, because Christ hath overcome it: this is the victory of our faith; we have overcome, though the fight be not yet done; because we are certaine of victory in Christ, who hath overcome for us, both the world and whatsoever is adverse to our salvation: the world may still afflict us and try us, to advantage us, not finally to hurt us, because we are in Christ by faith. See 1 John 5. 4. Rom. 8. 1.

CHAP. XVII.

Verse 1. THe hour is come] This he saith, because through Christ were manifested, by doctrine and miracles, power and great works; yet his spiritual kingdom, which after this, more clearly shined forth, was yet but obscure towards the world: now the hour which the Father had appointed was come.

glorifie thy Son] He prayeth for that he was assured of assurance of the truth of Gods promises is the cause and ground of faithful prayer, 2 Cor. 4. 13. so we daily pray for remission of sins, because we are assured that they are remitted in Christ: God hath appointed that we shall attain through the merit and mediation of Christ, but the condition on our part to be performed is, that we ask like dutiful children, that he may give like a loving Father.

that thy Son may also glorifie thee] That I may glorifie thee in the afflictions which I shall suffer for the elect, that men may know that I loved thee. Euthym.

V. 2. as thou hast given him power] Authority over all men, and all creatures.

V. 3. the only true God] Not excluding himselfe and the holy Ghost; but in imating the whole Deity in the name of God.

V. 4. I have glorified thee] By Doctrine and miracles; by my whole life on earth: now therefore glorifie me in my death and resurrection, that thou mayest also therein be glorified. See chap. 5. 23.

V. 5. with the glory which I had, &c.] That the divine Majesty which I had from all eternity may now shine forth in the person of the Mediatour; for the nature of the flesh was not yet glorified, and taken up to Gods right hand; as Chrysstome noteth: this glory was (towards the world) clouded for a time by the veil of his flesh, in the form of a servant, but nothing in himself lessened thereby.

V. 6. unto the men] To my disciples chosen out of the world, whom I have instructed. He preached to all the Jews publickly in their synagogues, and in the temple, as occasion served; even all that concerned their believing in, and salvation by him; but there were among them all, but a certain number of the elect who received that word, and beleeved to salvation.

thine they were] By eternal election. They were Gods, that is, the fathers, the sonnes, and the holy Ghosts, who gave and committed them to Christ as he was their redeemer, teacher, saviour, and mediatour; not alienating them by that donation; but more nearly uniting them to God by that mediation, whereby they become, θείας κοινωνοὶ φύσεως, partakers of the divine nature. God gave them to the magistery of Christ, that in the dayes of his flesh, and conversation with them, he might fully teach them those things, which they were, after his ascension into heaven, to teach all nations, that the elect among them might beleeve in him and be saved.

V. 7. are of thee] The elect beleeving know, that all that which they have in Christ is divine and heavenly, no invention or power of man, but the will and power of God to salvation to every one that beleeveth, Rom. 1. 16. See chap. 6. 69. 1 John 5. 20.

V. 8. and have known] Chap. 16. 27. for faith cannot be without knowledge. See chap. 9. 36. Romans, 10. 14. faith is the assent of the mind unto that it knoweth.

V. 9. I pray for them] specially for the Apostles designed to so great and dangerous a work as was their preaching the gospel to the obstinate Jews and Idolatrous Gentiles. I pray not for the reprobates of the world. Christ intercedeth for the elect only who receive his word to faith and obedience; he neither prayeth for, nor heareth their prayers who will not hear, and obey his word and ordinance, see Zech 7. 11, 13. Isai 1. 15.

V. 10. thine are mine] For God the Father made him Heir of all things, Heb. 1. 2. this he saith to give them assurance that the Father heard him; as if he had said, I commend none unto thee, but those whom thou gavest me, and still ownest for thine.

I am glorified in them] As in their beleeving and sanctification, so in that they shall preach my triumphs over sin, the crosse, death, and hell, to all the world, out of which beleevers shall continually be gathered.

V. 11. I am no more in the world] I am presently to depart from this world, and after my ascension will be no more in it by my bodily presence (Acts 3. 21.) by his governing and assisting spirit, he ever is See Mat. 28. 20.

keep through thine own name] That is (as the the interpreter of the Syriack hath it) by thy name, by thy power, mercy, and goodnesse, for thy holy names sake, or by the knowledge of thee: because they are thine, and bear thy name: διὰ τῆς σῆς γνώσεως, through thy help, or assistance. Chrysost.

that they may be one] Joyned in unity of faith and love as brethren in me. Of one heart mind and consent, careful to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. Eph. 4. 3. the effect of Christs prayer concerning this, admirably appeared, Acts 4. 32. Acts 1. 14. & 2. 46. & 5. 12. & 15. 25. Lord Jesus Christ, yesterday, to day, and the same for ever; now remember and intercede for thy distracted Church, whose discordant parts like those dry bones in the Prophets vision lie scattered, O Lord God of peace and unity, breath the spirit of unitie upon them, that they may come together and live. Amen Lord Jesus.

V. 12. son of perdition] This is an Hebraisme. So 2 Thes. 2. 3. ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, that son of perdition, Ephes. 2. 3. τέκνα ὀργῆς, children of wrath. Judas was a Son of destruction; or who deserved destruction; destinated to destruction: not that Judas was without sinne (because designed to perdition) or that God was the authour of sin; no, no: Fulgentius de præd. ad Monim. lib. 1. saith very well, quos præscitinavit ad pœnam, non præscitinavit ad ad culpam; those whom he predestinated to punishment, he predestinated not to sinne; and therefore, illius rei Deus utique est, cujus author non est, ib. God is the revenger of that, whereof he is not the author, that is, iniquity, which he can punish, but not do: there is no sinne in him, and therefore none can be of him. The Hebrews used to say, בן מות ben maveth, 1 Sam. 20. 31. and 26. 16. 2 Sam. 12. 5. &c. a son of death, that is, one deservedly perishing, notoriously wicked. So they said, a Son of Belial, Deut. 13. 13. 1 Sam. 2. 12. without profit, lawlesse, rebellious, given over to wickednesse. Judg: 19. 22. 1 Kings 21. 10. 1 Sam. 25. 25.

that the Scripture, &c.] Psal. 109. 8. God foreseeing his treason and impenitency, foretold of his destruction, and pronounced many severe and grievous curses and plagues to come upon that traytour, Psal. 69. 22, 23. &c. Psal. 109. 7. &c. as on all other impious and unreconcilable enemies of the Church of God.

V. 13. I speak in the world] That is, being yet bodily present, I pray for and with them, my joy fulfilled] Chap. 15. 11. by (in themselves) he meaneth in their hearts; and in their comfortable assurance in this life, and accomplished salvation in the life to come; which he duely calleth his, who rejoyceth in our good, and causeth the same in us, by the presence of his spirit, sanctifying us, and living in us, Gal. 2. 20. whereas we have of our selves nothing but unrest, terrour, and matter of despair; Christ onely is our peace, and joy.

V. 14. they are not of the world] Because being separated by the spirit of regeneration, they dissent from it in affection and conversation, 1 Pet. 4. 4.

V. 15. take them out of the world] By present death, because it was appointed that they should preach the gospel to the nations of the world.

V. 16. they are not of the world] Verse 14. this he repeateth for their sakes, that they might remember that they were but aliants here; and so no wonder if the world hated them, which loveth onely her own.

V. 17. sanctifie them through thy truth] Consecrate, prepare, and enable them to preach thy truth to the world; as if he said, let them first receive the word and digest it; to wit, the word: which they must preach to others. See Ezek. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4. Revel. 10. 9, 10, 11.

thy word is the truth] Thus he meeteth with their hypocrisie, who boast much of truth and godlinesse, yet securely contemn or neglect the word of God; whereas, that only containeth the truth and will of God, for our sanctification and salvation: all other truths pretended to, or alleged by men, are hereby to be examined. Aaron and his sons were sanctified to the ministration of the Levitical Priesthood, with cleansings and sprinkling the blood of those sacrifices (Exod. 29. 7.) which could never make them perfect (Heb. 9. 9.) but, O my Father, sanctifie and consecrate these in the truth of those shadows (now to be antiquated and done away, Ephes. 5. 26. 1 Pet. 3. 18. John 10. 15. & 15. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 22.) which more clearly shineth forth in the Gospel, than in those figures of the Law.

V. 18. as thou hast sent me] Tho I hast sent me to preach the gospel, thy will for mans salvation, I now having finished my course, assigne them to the same office, and assist and keep thou them, that they may perform it.

V. 19. for their sakes] That I may for them merit remission of sins, and eternal life, that they may also be sanctified and consecrated to thee and thy service, as I am to do thy will for the expiation of the sin of man: he seemeth to set himself against the Levitical sacrifices and Priesthood which prefigured him, and were thereto consecrated and sanctified, Exod. 29. 1. those in the shadow, Hebr. 10. 1. but Christ was to consecrated in the truth, chap. 1. 17. Acts 10. 38. Luke 4. 18. Acts 10. 38 Isai. 61. 1. so were the Apostles anointed, according to their measure to preach the acceptable year; but not as Christ, who received the spirit, but not by measure, John 3. 34. but the fulnesse of the deity, Colos. 2. 9. the summe of this petition, is, that God would be pleased to sanctifie the Apostles, and prepare them to preach the Gospel to all nations, as he had sanctified and appointed him to declare the same unto them; intimating that as all good in order to mans salvation was, and is derived from his death and the power of his resurrection from the dead, so also all abilities and consecration of the ministers of Christ, subordinate to the same.

I sanctifie my self] That is, I consecrate and voluntary offer up my self an holy and unblemished sacrifice to thee for their redemption. So Euthymius, after Chrysostom, interpreteth.

might be sanctified] Through the imputation of my righteousnesse to them; in that I have been obedient to the death for them. See Heb. 10. 10. as also for the rest of thy elect, as verse 20.

through thy truth] ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, in the truth, or truly, and to it intimateth our true and real sanctification by the one oblation of Christ, in opposition to those cleansings under the law by the offering up of beasts in sacrifice.

V. 20. for these alone] That is, the Apostles now with me; but for all the elect which shall hereafter believe. Here was comfort to the Apostles in that many should believe through their ministery, for is there to all true believers, in that Christ (whose prayer and intercession preserved Peters faith from falling in his dangerous tryal) hath prayed for us also, God will deny him nothing.

V. 21. that they may all be one] Members of one body of Christ, whose unity is life.

in us] Not one in evil, sin, malice; but in faith, charity, sanctity, consent in good, holding the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Sin separateth man from God; Christ can have no communion with Belial, unhappy sinner. Magna hominis miseria est cum ibi non esse, sine quo non possit esse. Prosper. Epigram. It is a mans great misery not to be with him, without whom he cannot be (happy.)

that the world may believe] Being convicted by their holy unity, may confesse the power of my Spirit in them, and be united to their society of faith and holy obedience.

V. 22. and the glory] That is, Christian unity, which is the honour of God, the gift of Christ, and the glory of true Christians: or the heavenly felicity whereof the elect shall participate in Christ.

V. 23. I in them] That the life of my spirit may appear in their holy conversation, as Gal. 2. 20.

thou in me] By thy divine nature united to my person; and communicating the fulnesse of thy spirit to me.

they may be made perfect in one] Being joyned to the Lord, and so united to him; and one to another, as true members of the mysticall body of Christ, they may be partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4. See also 1 Cor. 6. 17. 1 John 1. 3. John 6. 57, 58.

may know that thou hast sent me] See on verse 21. That men seeing their godly conversation, who professe to be my Disciples, may thereby know that I am of God.

and hast loved them] That is, thy grace, love and favour towards them, which directeth and preserveth them.

as thou hast loved me] That thou lovest them for my sake: all the effects of Gods love are directed to us through his love to Christ.

V. 24. Father I will, &c.] Chap. 12. 26. & 14. 3. that is, I desire and pray, that the elect may be united to me their head, in the eternall blessednesse in thy kingdom of glory, coheires with me thereof, be with me] In eternal glory and happinesse, in which I shall shortly be with thee.

V. 25. the world hath not known thee] The greatest part of the world hath not known thee as they ought, (see Acts 17. 13. Rom. 1. 21, 28.) in the unity of the Trinity: I onely have known thee, and they to whom I have revealed thee, and thy counsel, Mat. 11. 27. John 8. 55. & 7. 29. & 10. 15.

V. 26. thy name] Thy mercy and goodnesse, by the doctrine of the Gospel which I have preached unto them, and the spirit of regeneration, whereby they may understand that which I have taught them.

that the love, &c.] That thou mayest love them for my sake as thou hast loved me their Head: and that they may by faith fall in their hearts, that love wherewith thou lovest me, and themselves in me. See Rom. 5. 5.

and I in them] Dwelling in their hearts by the Spirit of Faith and Sanctification, Ephes. 3. 17. I perfectius eis notus, Euthymius; being more perfectly known to them.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. HE went forth with his disciples] Mat. 26. 36. To shew that he went out willingly to accomplish our redemption, understand by τοῦτον, these words, all that which this Evangelist here recordeth from the thirteenth Chapter hitherto.

over the brook Cedron] Mentioned, 2 Samuel 15. 22. 1 Kings 15. 13. It is (say some) the name of the valley, as well as of the brook running through the same betwixt Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives: It is a shallow brook: the Syriac translateth it, ad transitum pedis, that is, a Foord which may be passeth over on foot. See on Luke 22. 39. Over this brook and Valley, went David and his souldiers weeping, up the Mount of Olives, 2 Sam. 15. 23. 30.

V. 2. Judas, &c. knew the place] This he saith, to shew that Christ hid not himself: for in the night where could he more easily and certainly be found, than in that place, to which he often resorted in the night, Luke 21. 37. This place Judas well knew, and that he should there finde Christ: and Jesus knew that Judas would seek him there; therefore that he might according to his fathers will, be found by Judas and suffer for the sin of man, he that could have avoided Judas finding, by going to some other more remote place with his disciples in the night and darkneste undiscovered, would go into that very garden which he used to frequent, and Judas well knew.

V. 3. having received a band of men] Mat. 26. 47. Mark 14. 43. Luk. 22. 47. which he had obtained of the Governour of the Temple or rather which the Priests and elders had entreated Pilate to assign for their assistance; that they might the more surely lay hold on him, and more securely bring him away with them: now though most probably their own Centurion commanded the company, yet because Judas was to bring them to the place where Jesus was, it is said that Judas received a band of men, &c.

cometh thither] Into the garden, into which Christ entred, being now to expiate and satisfie for that sin also, which Adam (sinning in a Garden) brought upon the world.

with lanthorns and torches] Jesus is apprehended as a Malefactour, that we may be acquitted as innocent.

V. 4. went forth] That is, from that part of the garden where he was towards them who came to apprehend him.

whom seek ye?] He asketh not as doubting, but to amate the Guard, and that he might rather appear presenting himself, than be taken, as by force, seeing he wittingly and willingly offered up himself for our sinnes, as was prefigured in the Law. See Exod. 35. 5. 21, 21, 29. Levit. 22. 21, 23. Numb. 15, 3. & 29.39. Deut 16. 10.

V. 5. they answered him, Jesus of Nazareth] They say not, we seek thee, but Jesus, &c. As speaking to some third person: It seemeth then that they knew not Jesus present, speaking to them, though manifested with lights, and marked out by Judas's treacherous kisse, and though often seen specially of the High Priests servants, who ever noted him with a malicious eye. All which (as also the following words) shews, that he willingly offered himself.

Judas also, &c.] Judas perplexed, in that, that the signe of his treason took not, and that he had in vain discovered himself, who probably hoped, that having saluted Jesus, the Guard would presently have fallen in and layed hands on him, and so in the tumult, his self should not be discovered He came now over to the Disciples, from whose society he was departed, but stood with the enemies of Jesus.

V. 6. fell to the ground] No wonder; for as Augustine noteth, Deus latebat in carne, the Deity was vailed in his Humanity: Christ did this to make them know, that the arms, multitude and power they brought, could do nothing except God permitted: and to teach all obstinate enemies of his Church, that they shall not be able to stand before his Majesty judging in his glory, seeing they could not in his state of humiliation, and when their hour was, that they were permitted to judge him, then sustaining the person of a servant, and in their censure, a delinquent.

V. 7. then asked he them again] After that the same power which cast them down, permitted them to rise again.

they said, Jesus of Nazareth] They persist in their obstinacy notwithstanding their present experience of a divine power casting them down at the word of Jesus: the most evident miracles can neither convert nor work upon the obstinate, untill God turn their hearts.

V. 8. let these go their way] For he alone was to suffer for our redemption. He sheweth his love to them, unto the last: if ye seek me onely ἄφετε τούτους ὑπάγειν, Chrysostom I yeild my self to you.

V. 9. that the saying might be fulfilled] These are the Evangelists words, confessely speaking, omitting these words, this he said, or this was done, that the saying, &c.

of whom thou gavest me] Chap. 17. 12.

the servants name was Malchus] He nameth the party, and where he was hurt, for the evidence of the story.

V. 11. put up thy sword] Christ prohibited him to smite, though in defence of his own sacred person; and he healed him that was hurt, though his enemy: to teach us first to do good to them, who persecute and hurt us. And secondly, that zeal must be limited by the bounds of every mans own calling: we may not use the sword to private revenge. See Deut. 32. 35. Rom. 12, 19. Thirdly, that he willingly tasted that bitter cup of his passion. Fourthly, that he needed no externall defence; he could have commanded legions of Angels. Lastly, that no mis-informed, or misplaced zeal is justifiable.

V. 12. and the captain] χιλίαρχος (See Acts 21. 31.) the tribune; some think these were such as we call High Marshals, Henr. Bebel. de mag. & sacr. Rom. A colonel or Commander of a thousand Souldiers, (of whose office and institution, see Festellla de Magistrat. Rom. cap. 16.) so the interpreter of Suidas giveth it also, so he saith στρατηγὸς is a troop, or cohort: we may understand this command to be of a Regiment, or cohort, as the Romans called it. For as Vegetius lib. 2. cap. 6. de re militar. saith, In una legione decem cohortes esse debere. So Ibid. cap. 12. in one legion must be ten cohorts, the first whereof being the chief, consisting of 1105. Footmen, and 132. Horsemen, and being of the best quality, were commanded by the Tribune; and were called cohors miliaria. See also Pomponius Latus, de Magistrat. Rom. and Ra. Volateran. de Magistrat. & sacr. Rom. However strong or full soever this armed company was, with those Auxiliaries which the Priests sent out with them, they could not take Christ untill he yeelded up himself, which this, ὅτε, then, or therefore, seemeth to point at: then they took him, when he yeelded; or therefore, because he rendred himself; otherwise, they were cast on the ground by his word onely.

and bound him] As a malefactor: this they did to please their impious Governours: and this Jesus suffered to fulfill; that which preceeded in his types, Isaac, Genes. 22. 9. Joseph, Genes. 37. 24. Sampson, Judges 16. 9 and the legall Sacrifices which were bound and layed on the Altar, and to deliver us from the bonds of Death and Hell, Psalm 116. 3. Mat. 2 . 13.

V. 13. to Annas first] See Luke 3. 2. Some conjecture that his house was in the way from the garden: others, that because no matter of great moment was acted at Annas house, besides his examining Jesus concerning his doctrine and disciples, verse 19. and that illegall and impious act of one of the servants imiting Jesus verse 22. therefore the other Evangelists omit this part of the History, not so much as mentioning Annas, but so following the series of the History, as if from the garden they led Jesus first to Caiaphas, Mat. 26. 57. Mark 14. 53. Luke 22. 54. but here it is manifest, that they led him to Annas first. See on Luke 22. 6.

high priest that same year] Annas was high Priest; and this office was for a time of life by Gods ordinance, Caiaphas was his Suffragan, which Office might be for a year, and then another might succeed him therein (see on Luke 3. 2.) the Suffragan was the Vicarius, or Deputy of the High Priest.

expedient that one man should die, &c.] So excellent is truth, that it doth not onely give some light to the dim eyes, but also sometimes break out of the enemies tongues: so Caiaphas prophesied: it was indeed expedient that this One man should dye, that all men might not dye eternally: indeed, ἡ σωτηρία τῆ οἰκουμένῃ ὁ θάνατος ἐστὶ, Chrysostom hom. 82. His death was salvation to the world: but this blinde Prophet understood not his own words.

of his disciples, and of his doctrine] Probably he questioned him, why he gathered so many Disciples, and what he taught them? all to finde something whereof to accuse him of sedition or innovation.

V. 20. In secret have I said nothing] Nothing but that which I have, for substance, publickly preached, in the Temple and Synagogues.

V. 21. why askest thou me?] Wherefore should he answer, when thou wilt not believe.

ask them which heard me] Many strangers, many enemies heard me: examine these witnesses.

V. 23. but if well, why smitest thou me?] Thus he convinceth his adversaries of injustice: complaining as infirm Man, yet being also God omnipotent, so that he could easily have avenged it. But as Ambrose saith, Serm. 20. in Psalm 118. Queri maluit, quam vindicare: to give us example, he had now rather complain, than revenge. The impious servant smiteth the most holy Lord: this was not judgement, but violence.

themselves went not, &c.] Acts 10. 28. It was not lawful by their tradition to accompany the Gentiles: especially being to eat the Passeover. This they make conscience of, but none to kill the Lord of life. See Acts 10. 28. and 11. 5.

but that they might eat the Passeover] That is, those Sacrifices which they usually were to offer, at that feast of the Passeovers; (as some say) because the Paschal Lamb, they were (by the Law) to eat the even before. Deut. 16. 1. and certainly Christ with his disciples, had eaten the Paschal Lamb the even before he was apprehended, and led to Pilate, as it is clear, Matthew 26. 17. &c. Mark 14. 12. &c. Luke 22. 7. &c. Others think otherwise, and that Jesus eat not the Passeover &c. Others think otherwise, and that Jesus eat not the Passeover the same day on which the Jews are it; (against which the forecited places seem to expresse:) they say, because that they finde find no expresse place of Scripture clear enough, whence it may be gathered, those Sacrifices to be offered on the seven days of unleavened bread, were ever called by that name: Deut. 16. 2. Thou shalt sacrifice the Passeover (פסח) &c. צאן ובקר the sheep, and herd, or bullocks. See hereof Numb. 28. 29, 14. and Deut. 16. 2. &c. And you shall finde these Passeover-offerings expresly called חגיגה Pesa. him, the plural of the word פסח πάσχα. See V. Shindlar Pentegl. in פסח 2 Chron. 35. 8, 9. 70. εἰς τὸ φαγεῖν, &c. So Chrysostom understandeth τὸ πασχα, τοῦτ ἐστιν τὸν πάντα, the whole time of the solemnity of that feast of Passeover. But what place of Scripture sheweth expresly, or by necessary consequence, that Christ ate the Passeover, not on the same day on which the Jews did eat it? The first day of the feast of unleavened bread, Christ ate it, Mat. 26. 17. &c. Mark 14. 12. &c. Luke 22. 7. then it was by the Law to be eaten. See Numb. 28. 16 &c. Deut. 16. 1, 2, 3, 4. At even, Deut. 16. 6. And how can it appear that the Jews did not now observe the Law on this behalf? or that (as some think) their strict caution against desilement, making them uncapable (by the Law, or their tradition) of eating at the feast, of their offerings, must needs relate onely to that day on which the Passeover was to be offered and eaten, or the first and last dayes of the feast? seeing every uncleanesse (whether determined by the Law, or conceived to be so, by their tradition) did make them for the time uncapable of eating things offered in sacrifice to the Lord, as Levit 5. 2, 2. &c. Levit. 7. 19, 20, 21. Numb. 18. 11, 13. Numb. 19, 20. or in their opinions so, if it were but conceived such by their own traditions.

V. 29. what accusation bring you, &c.] So Mat. 27. 23. Mark 15. 14. He said, What evill hath he done? for he knew that they had delivered him out of envy, Mark 15. 10. Therefore though they had accused him as a perverter of the people, yet he also publickly professed, I finde no fault in this man, Luke 23. 4, 14. So also here, verse 38.

V. 30. if he were not a malefactour, &c.] As if they said, we are godly people, and would not accuse any but a malefactour: there is no cause why you should suspect our charity, or question our integrity (yee which of the Prophets did they not persecute? Acts 7. 52.) so blinde and presumptuous is hypocrisie: but if it be enough to accuse, who shall be innocent?

V. 31. judge him according to your law] This he spake, either because he conceived it to be a matter of their religion, and so fit for the cognisance of their Sanhedrin: or ironically he derideth their fury against right and equity; for the Romans permitted them no power of judicature in capital matters, as they confesse, nor did they condemn any man to death for favour, or unheard. See Acts 25. 16.

V. 32. that the saying of Jesus] How he should dye condemned by a Gentile. (Mat. 20. 19.) and be crucified, John 12. 33. for that was then the use of the Romans, and as the most grievous, so the most ignominious kinde of death.

judgement-hall] Or Pretory, v. 28.

V. 34. sayest thou this thing of thy self] Is this thine own prejudicate opinion of me? or is this the objection of my accusers? have they enformed thee so, or suggested any thing to induce thee to think, or suspect so?

V. 35. am I a Jew] What care I for the King whom the Jews expect? or for their religion? I am no Jew: I ask not for any interest of mine own: it is the instigation of thy own contreymen; they question whether thou are their expected King Messias, and convent thee as the author of sedition, under pretence of thy affectation of that title.

V. 36. my kingdom is not of this world] Not that he governeth not in heaven and earth: for though his kingdom be not of this world, tamen rex est, etiam in hoc mundo, Bernard in Epiphan. 2. when Pilate had openly declared whose accusation it was: Jesus plainly telleth him, that his kingdom was not secular, but spiritual; not of this world. So that he nothing intrenched on Cæsars right; which he saith, not that he might avoid death, but to shew that he was unjustly accused.

V. 37. Thou sayest that I am, &c.] It is an Hebrew manner of confession; meaning, I am, as Mark 14. 62. or thou gathere st by my words that I am a king.

V. 38. What is truth?] What truth do you speak of? what ever Pilates meaning was in this quere, it is more improbable that he did not therefore enquire concerning truth, with a purpose to be instructed thereby, for he not so much as expected Jesus answer, but presently went out to the Jews.

V. 39. But ye have a custom] Mat. 27. 15.

one at the Passeover] At the feast of Passeover: not on the day wherein the Passeover was to be offered, and eaten, that was now past (See on verse 28.) but at the feast, which lasted divers dayes. See If. Casaubon Exercit. 16. N. 31.

V. 40. then cryed they all again] Mark 15. 8. 13, 14. Luke 23. 18. Acts 3. 14. all his eager and malicious enemies: the major part of the people then present; otherwise it is very likely, that those that consented not to Jesus death, did not so cry out. See Luke 23. 23.

and scourged him] That is, caused him to be scourged by his officers; possibly hoping thereby to appease the fury of the Jews. The Prophet Isaiah 53, 5. foretelleth the effect, that with his stripes we might be healed.

V. 2. a crown of thorns] The crown is a soveraign ornament; and so was the purple robe (see Pompon. Lat. de Magistr. Rom. de R. ge) in so much as that it was once accounted treason, for any private man to wear it: the Romans admitted it to Kings, (so saith Jerom in Isai. 61, it is insigne regii decoris, &c.) great men in triumphs ware it, and others at sacrifices; and funerals: so that although they did this in derision of Christs kingdom, yet it did as it were proclaim him a king, and a sacrificer, by his death triumphant. See If. Casaubon Exerc. 16. N 79.

V. 3. Hail king of the Jews] Or God save thee O King, Syriac שלום לך shelom loch, peace be to thee, it was a common manner of salutation among them. So Judges 6. 23. שלום לך shalom l. ch. So Judges 19. 10 1 Sam. 25. 6. 1 Chr. 12. 18. Luke 10. 5.

smote him with their hands] Or gave him stripes with rods, ἔδωκαν αὐτῷ ῥαπίσματα, ῥαπίζειν is of ῥάπις, virga, a rod, or switch. See on chap. 18. 22.

V. 4. I bring him forth to you] For they would not enter into the Pretorie. See on chap. 18. 28, therefore he caused Jesus after he had been scourged, to be brought out unto them; who were waiting before the pretorie, to attend what should finally be done to him.

I finde no fault in him] See chap. 18. 38. you accuse him of many things, but upon serious examination thereof, I finde in him no crime, no cause why I should condemn him; this sheweth that Pilate slighted all that they urged concerning his affecting to be a King; as either proceeding out of their envy and malice, or Christs otherwise pretending to a kingdom, than could at all be prejudicious to Cæsar, and the state of Rome, had he, either by any secret, or publick practices of Jesus, by drawing a dangerous party, providing armes and treasure, or casting out seditious words against Cæsar or the state, (which things Pilate being the Roman Deputy, would diligently enquire after) perceived any endeavour of Jesus, in their sense, to make himself king, he durst not have pronounced Jesus innocent, lest himself should have been impleaded, guilty of confederacy with him.

V. 5. wearing the crown of thorns] So bare he, and took away that curse of the earth, Genes. 3. 18. this may have an allusion to that sacrifice taken by the head in the thorns, which Abraham found upon the same mountain, whereon Christ began his passion. See Gen. 22. 2. 2 Chr. 3. 1. & Clem. Alexand. Ped. l. 2. c. 8.

behold the man] Behold what a king you are afraid of: or this he said to move them to compassion, whom they saw and knew causelesly terne with whips.

V. 6. they cryed out saying, crucifie him, &c.] ἐκραύγασαν sit importeth, an importunate confused, vociferation or yauling out; such as troubled crows make, when they cry altogether: so Eustat. κρώζειν and κρωζεῖν, is said de cornicibus & corvis. So Clem. Alexandr. ad Gent. useth the word, ὑ κρώζουσι, ὑ κλάζουσι, &c. They who could alledge nothing against Christ, cry him to death with noise of multitudes; by so much more violently reasonlesse, by how much more reason the Judge alleaged to appease them. So cryed the multitude against Paul, Acts 22. 22. So cryed the Ephesians for their Diana, Acts 19. 28. So the Heathens were wont to cry in any publick calamity, christianos ad leonem, cast the Christians to the lyon. Tertul. adv. Gent. cap. 40.

take ye him and crucifie him] This expresseth Pilates indignation at their clamorous proceedings, as Chrysost noteth: he permitted him not to their power to kill, which the Romans gave them not: but in effect denied to be a servant to their unjust passion; which the following words seem to intimate.

V. 7. We have a law] By their law a blasphemer ought to be stoned to death, Levit. 24. 16. which might justly have taken hold on themselves, it could not on Christ; for he is indeed the Son of God: but there appeareth the daring impiety of the wicked, wresting laws to their own lusts, thereby to take away the righteousnesse of the most innocence, and to condemn even Christ himself.

V. 8. he was more afraid] Hitherto the innocency of Jesus made him fear to condemn him, though so may confused outcries founded in his ears; sometimes the Law, sometimes necessity of state, and Cæsars right was pretended: yet flustuant between these, and his own fear, his conscience told him that Jesus was innocent: and now a sharper scruple toucheth him, lest he should condemn one more than a man, and that prove true which they objected against him for a crime, that he was indeed the Son of God,

V. 9. whence art thou?] Of what parents? the Jews last article, and Jesus own former speech, chap. 18. 36, 37. that his kingdom was not of this world, encrease his jealous fear: Jesus knowing that Pilate would at last comply with the Jews fury; and being now to die, not for himself, but for us, answered not to this, as they who plead to be delivered.

V. 10. Knowest thou not that I have power, &c.] By this, Pilate condemned himself, when confessing that he had power to release him, he would yet without any fault crucifie him, to ingratitude with the Jews: mala potestas literæ quod nocet, Ambros. in Psal. 118. serm. 20. it is an evill power to be able to mischief.

V. 11. except it were given thee from above] Except God gave it thee (as chap. 3. 27. 31.) or permitted it to thee, how ever great thy authority, and the strength of the wide-spreading eagles wings, the Roman empire be, thou couldest do nothing at all against me, did not God for the present permit thee to do that which is in order to the performance of his holy will for my sufferings, to redeem his elect.

hath the greater sin] Greater sin than thine, the Syriac hath it, as comparing Pilates sin in condemning Christ for fear, with the high priests sin, delivering him up to Pilate for malice; for he exacteth the Jews in that they sinned against God, for whom Judges must judge, and whose office it is to defend the innocent: and against Pilate, whose authority their impotunity abused and misled; and against holy JESUS the Lord of life, whom for envie they delivered.

V. 12. Whosoever maketh himself a king] That is pretendeth to be a king

V. 13. the pavement] Λιθόστρωτον, a kinde of rich pavement of stones artificially wrought and joyned together. See Plin. lib. 36. 25. cap. Ezek. 40. 17. and 42. 3. it is called רצפה ritspah of רצף ritsaph [Pyrrus lapidibus, Syriac רצפתא ורצפא ratsiphatho deiphe, a pavement of stone: but in Hebrew it is here called * Gabbatha, [Chaldæa forma est vox, significat autem altum & editum, &c. Vetabl.] of גבא gabah, which signifieth, to be raised up, or made high; the word here used by the Greek Λιθόστρωτος, is compounded of Λίθος, a stone, and στρώννυμι, to strew or pave, and importeth a place raised (as Tribunals used to be, that the Judges might with convenience see and hear, and be seen and heard) and curiously paved with stone. See C. Rodigin. Lect. ant. lib. 17. cap. 9. the evangelist here useth the word גבתא, made of the Hebrew.

V. 14. It was the preparation] παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα, a day wherein they prepared themselves, and those things which were necessary to that solemnity: or a parasteve of the Passeover; one day of the feast, which Mark 15. 42. is plainly laid, to be the προσάββατον, the day before the Sabbath. See also verse 31.

about the sixth hour] That is, about noon. If we compare this place with Mark 15. 25. it will appear that Mark saying it was the third hour when they crucified him, reckned according to the Jews accompt; who began their artificial day from sun-rising, but John according to the Roman accompt in use with us, who begin our day from midnight, and so this sixth hour was their first, our fixth in the morning, between which and the third hour, (our nine) in the morning, were acted many things omitted by the Evangelist, and related by the rest, as his sending to Herod, Luke 23. 7. &c. he questioning with him in many words, the chief Priests accusing him before Herod: Herods Souldiers arraying him; and mocking him, sending him again to Pilate, and which took up the three hours, between Pilates first sitting, and his giving the finall sentence on Jesus, and the execution thereof in fastning him to the crosse.

behold your king] This he speaketh in scorn.

V. 15. We have no king but Cæsar] They acknowledge that the sceptre was now departed from Judah, and therefore had not malice blinded them, they would have understood that mark of the Messias coming at that very time. See Genesis 49. 10.

V. 16. then delivered, &c.] Mat. 27. 26. Mark 15. 15.

V. 17. and he bearing the crosse] Which they had prepared to crucifie him on. Crucifying and bearing the crosse, was a capitall punishment; and putting to death after the Roman manner: they made him bear it till they found Simon of Cyrene, whom they compelled to carry it for him. See Luke 23. 26. See note thereon.

Golgotha] The place where they executed malefactors, on the North side of the mount Sion, Hieronym. de locis Hebraicis. Euseb.

V. 18. two other with him] According to prophecie, Isa. 53. 12. he was counted with the transgressours.

V. 19. And Pilate wrote a title] Christ upon his crosse is entituled king, by his hand, whose mouth condemned him for aspiring to a kingdom. See Mat. 27. 37. Mark 15. 26. Luke 23. 38.

V. 20. Hebrew, Greek, and Latine] Gods providence so disposing it that many might read it; for unto these feasts at Jerusalem came men of several nations. See Acts 2. 5. it was the fashion of the Ancients to signifie to the publick, the cause of any delinquents sufferings, either by the voice of a cryer, or by setting it up written in Capital letters. See Spartian. in Severo. Lamprid. Alexand. Suet. in. Caio.

V. 21. Write not the king of the Jews] They were afraid that this would be too much honour to Christ, and ignominy to themselves among the nations, when they should hear that they had crucified their king; therefore they desired that the title might be so altered, that Christ might thereby seem condemned for his ambition, not their importunate malice.

V. 22. What I have written, &c.] That is, I will not change it; for so it seemeth their custom was: the publick tables containing the decrees of their Proconsuls, once published, might not be reversed. See Apulei Florid. l. 1. sub finem.

V. 23. Then the Souldiers] Mat. 27. 35. Mark 15. 24. Luke 23. 34. the souldiers of the Roman garrison, who put him to death.

woven] Of one peece without seam. See hereof Is. Casaub. Exerc. 16. Num. 117.

V. 24. they parted my raiment] Psal. 22. 18. they made four parts of his raiment, beside the seamlesse coat, which they agreed not to make vnseasible by dividing it, but to cast lots for it, which of them should have it whole to himself, they cast lots for the other four parts, according as they had agreed tor to divide, but here they again put the coat to another particular lot, See Mat. 27. 35. this part of the history. John more exactly recordeth than the other Evangelists to shew, that as all other things foretold by the Prophets, concerning the sufferings of the Messias, so even this concerning the parting of his garments, was fulfilled in Christs passion, declaring him to be the promised and expected Messias and Saviour of the elect, to whom all the prophecies so punctually agreed.

V. 25. Cleopas] Or Clopas. See Luke 24. 18.

V. 26. whom he loved] John, who wrote this Gospel, Chap. 21. 24.

Woman behold thy son] Meaning, I commend thee to his care and charge, that he may keep thee in thine age: a singular pattern and example of piety, amidst such torments to be careful of his dear mother.

V. 27. unto his own home] εἰς τὰ ἴδια, as c. 1. 11. Syriac interpreter, apud se, Epiphanius hæref. 78. 10. giveth it, apud suos, unto himself, to his house, care and custody.

V. 28. that all things were now accomplished] That all things were thus far forth accomplished in the great work of our redemption.

that the Scripture might be fulfilled] Psal. 69. 21. as al other prophesies, in every particular, concerning the Sufferings of the Messias were exactly fulfilled in Christs passion, so was this; their giving him, this sting, vinegar to drink.

V. 29. a vessel full of, &c.] They were wont to give those who were to be executed, vinegar, or sharp wine mingled with myrrhe (Mark 15. 24.) some say to stupifie them; it may be to keep those from fainting, whom they would longer torment: the souldiers gave it him instead of drink, out of barbarous inhumanity, and impiety mocking him, but Gods providence turned it (as all other their actions, which whatsoever intention designed) to the clear demonstration of his truth really fulfilled in Christ.

put it upon hyssop] Not that hyssop grew in those parts so high, as to be used in place of a reed, as some think; See Is. Casaubon exercit. 16. N. 126.) See 1 Kings 4. 33. where it is reckned among the small plants: probably they bound hyssop to the reed or cane (mentioned Mat. 27. 48.) and put the spung filled with vineger on the top of the same, that they might reach it to his mouth; as that which (as some Physicians affirm) being used with vineger would keep from fainting; possibly for some such end they made their Hyssopites, Plin. lib. 14. cap. 16. hyssop wine. See Plin. l. 20. cap. 1. sub finem Dioscor. lib. 5. cap. 50. This herb was in use, in their sacrifices and lustrations with water, Exod. 12. 22. you shall take אגרה אזוב aguddah ezob, a bundle of hyssop. 70. Λαβόντες κόνυζαν, signified a middle or mystery: certainly neither could the blood of bulls or goats herewith sprinkled, take away sin; but that which was hereby signified, the sacred blood of Christ. The Apostle expresseth the ceremony, Heb. 9. 19, 20. Moses took the blood of calves and goats, with water and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people. saying, this is τὸ αἷμα τῆς διαθήκης, the blood of the testament which God enjoyned unto you: now the law had but a shadow of good things to come, Heb. 10. 1. Suidas therefore but a shadow of the new covenant. this cup is, ἡ καινὴ διαθήκη the institution of the seal of the new covenant. this is my blood, Luke 20. 20. τοῦτο ἐστὶ τὸ αἷμά μου, the new testament in my blood, Luke 22. 20. now presently to be shed, the old Testament signifying the same, was that before mentioned, Heb. 9. 19, 20. what ever the souldiers of Christs blood, Gods providence disposed it all so, that we may herein learn that comfortable doctrine concerning the cleansing of our sins typified under the Law, but performed in the blood and passion of Christ.

V. 30. it is finished] That is, mans redemption; and all the ceremonies monies of the Law, are fulfilled and ended in the exhibition of that truth which they prefigured: He speaketh here of that which presently should be; and in the yielding up his ghost was accomplished. See chap. 17. 4.

V. 31. for that Sabbath was an high day] Μεγάλη ἡ ἡμέρα, a great day, that is a very solemn day, in respect of the concurrence of a double celebrity: the Sabbath, and a day of this feast of Passeover: (See Numb. 28. 17. 18. So here chap. 7. 37. the last day of the feast is said to be, that great day of the feast) so that they might not take him down thereon.

V. 32. brake the legs of the first] The souldiers which crucified them came and broke their legs to dispatch them, after they had obtained it of Pilate, verse 31. that they might not remain upon the crosse on the Sabbath; therefore when they saw Jesus dead already, they saved that needlesse labour: this did Gods providence dispose so, because he was shortly to rise again: for though he could as easily have made his bones whole, as cure his heart-wound, and rise again from the dead; yet other concurrent difficulties hindring the faith of infirm men, he would not have this added thereto.

V. 34. there came out blood and water] They pierced his side, to prove if he were indeed dead, or otherwise to make him sure; this water and blood forthwith issuing out shewed that he was truly dead, the pericardium which keepeth that water about the heart, being pierced: thus was fulfilled that which was foretold, Zach. 12. 10. and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, as verse 37. thus came Jesus by water and blood, 1 John 5. 6. thus was there a fountain opened to the house of David, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem (even to all the Elect) for sin and for uncleanesse, Zach. 13. 1. this was done that the enemies might not object. that he rose again because he was but half dead on the crosse, and so, taken down, revived: to testifie the contrary truth, John so seriously affirmeth (verse 35.) the certainty of his death, his heart-blood streaming out, which he saw that stood by the crosse.

V. 35. He knoweth that he saith true] He knoweth exactly, and certainly, who was so near an eye-witnesse, that he could not be deceived therein, as they easily may, and often are, who take up things upon the bare report of other relaters.

that ye might believe] That is, that Jesus was truly dead, his heart being thus pierced.

V. 36. that the Scripture might be fulfilled] Exod. 12. 46. Numb. 9. 12. Psal. 34. 20. that those types might be accomplished in Christ the truth which they prefigured. So it appeareth that Christ our Passeover is offered, 1 Cor. 5. 7. and that he is that onely Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, chap. 1. 29. and that which was here done fell not out by chance or the counsel of man, but by Gods all disposing providence, working by the impious murderers of Christ, that which his own hand and counsel had pre-ordained, as Acts 4. 28.

V. 37. they shall look on him, &c.] Zach. 12. 10. Whom they thus wounded on the crosse. This the Psalmist (speaking of the parting of his garments, &c) recordeth also, Psal. 22. 17. they look and stare upon me: and in the judgement, every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, Rev. 1. 7. Happy shall they be who with the eye of faith now look up to him, as the wounded Israelites to the brazen Serpent; as those happy heart-wounded Converts, Acts 2. 37. at Peters Sermon, look back on him whom their sins have crucified, in true faith and repentance for the remission of those their sinnes: that they may be saved.

V. 38. after this Joseph, &c.] See on Mat. 27. 57. and on Luke 23. 50, 51.

but secretely] Before Christs death, secretely; but now he declared himself to be one of Christs Disciples.

for fear of the Jews] Who had determined to excommunicate any that confessed Jesus to be the Christ, chap. 9. 22.

V. 39. Nicodemus which at first, &c.] Chap. 3. 1, 2.

V. 40. in linnen clothes, &c.] Because they had not time then perfectly to embalm him, the Sabbath being so near: This was done by Gods providence, that these men should give Christ an honourable burial, that it might be more remarkable; which would not probably have been so, if some poor or obscure persons had performed this office: and had his own Apostles, or any of them been so daring as to have done it, the adversaries would possibly have said, that they had conveyed him away, and not indeed buried him: but this objection was taken away, and the Jews were herein convicted by the testimony of some of their own; and those honourable persons.

V. 41. was a garden] In a garden the first Adam fell, in a garden the second Adam was buried, and rose again; as we fell in Adam, we shall rise in Christ. See Is. Casaub. exercit. 16. N. 134. 98.

wherein was never man yet laid] Gods providence so ordaining it; lest any caviller should say, that it was some other body not Christ which rose again: or that he rose again by some others vertues, not his own, as 2 Kings 13. 21. in alienâ sepultura ponitur, qui pro aliorum moriebatur salute, Augustine de temp. serm. 133. he was laid in another mans sepulchre, who died for others sins, not his own.

V. 42. the Jews preparation day] Verse 14. John speaketh here, as of a thing already antiquated and abolished: for the Lords day, our Sabbath, was observed by the Christians when he wrote this Gospel. The Jews preparation, was our Fryday, and their Sabbath our Saturday, and the Lords day, which we observe from the Resurrection of Christ, their first day of the week, chap. 20. 1. Luke 24. 1. Mark 16. 1, 2. Mat. 28. 1. 1 Cor. 16. 2. Revel. 1. 10.

CHAP. XX.

Verse 1. The first day] See on chap. 19. 42. Mat. 28. 1. Mark 16. 1. which is with us the Lords day: τῇ κυριακῇ ἡμέρᾳ, on the Lords day, Rev. 1. 10.

when it was yet dark] She departed from home before day, and by that time she came to the sepulchre, the sun was about to rise, Mark 16. 2. this was the first day of the week, τῇ δὲ μιᾷ τῶν σαββάτων here τῇ μιᾷ is put for τῇ πρώτῃ: the one day; that is, the first. So Gen. 1. 5. אחד יום jom. echad. 70. ἡμέρα μία, the first: the same Gen. 8. 5. give, יום ראשון the first; so Dan. 9. 1. which manner of speaking the Apostles also retained in the Greek, Mat. 28. 1. 1 Cor. 16. 2. See Is. Casaub. exer. c. 16. N. 170.

unto the sepulchre] These women named, Mark 16. 1. came to embalm him; which, for want of time they could not before do. See chap. 19 40.

and seeth the stone taken away] For the Angel descended and rolled it back, Mat. 28 2.

V. 2. other disciple whom Jesus loved] Chap. 13. 23. and 21. 20.

V. 4. the other disciple did outrun Peter] Both made hast to know what the matter was (ἐδόκει γὰρ φθῆναι τὴν ἀναλυσιν ὁ ΘΕΟΛΟΓΟΣ Nazianzen orat. 18. zeal (and love) brooks no delay, but with unequal ftength: John being young, and so of better agility, came first to the sepulchre: See on Luke 24. 12.

V. 5. and he stooping down] παρακύψας, the word is of that which signifieth to hold down the head to see, or look into, James 1. 25. who so παρακύψας looketh into that perfect law, &c. The door of this sepulchre was low, and the vault of such depth digged into the rock (in manner of a cave) Mat. 27. 60. that without stooping down they could not see into it: it may have this moral; the mysteries of our salvation accomplished in the death, burial, and refurre ction, of our Saviour, can be looked into by none but those who stoop to see: they admit no eyes of the proud to view them.

V. 6. Then cometh Simon] See on Luke 24. 12.

V. 7. the napkin that was, &c.] See Luke 24. 12. It was now light enough to see the white clothes there lying. See Mat. 27. 59. Mark 15. 46. Luke 23. 53. John 11 44. and thus Gods providence had disposed, that even these small, and, things, to mans judgement not much considerable, should serve to the evidence of the truth of Christs Resurrection, and the refutation of the false report of the Jews, that his Disciples stole away his body out of the Sepulchre; for in all reason and probability, they would not have carried him away naked but in the linnen in which Joseph and Nicodemus had interred him.

V. 8. and believed] That Christs body was taken away according to Maries report: for as yet they knew not the scripture, that he must rise again from the dead, verse 9.

V. 10. went away again] They made hast away, while yet but few were stirring about, for fear of the implacable malice of the Jewes.

to their own home] Where they before were, and from whence they ran to the sepulchre: finding there nothing certainly appearing to their sense, but onely their missing of the body of Jesus, which possibly they might think was stolen away. See verse 13. they returned to the rest of the disciples, wondering with themselves how these things could so be, and what would be the issue, Luke 24. 12. relating to the rest, that Jesus body was not in the sepulchre where it was laid, Luke 24. 24. and fiuently expecting the event.

V. 11. But Mary stood without, &c.] Peter and John made hast away, left notice should have been taken of them, as Christs Disciples; and here the weaker sex sheweth more ftength of resolution.

weeping] Not yet understanding the mystery of Christs resurrection, she venteth her grief with tears.

she stooped down] See on verse 5. Either moved by the splendor of the Angels, or some noise by them made. She was not yet satisfied with others report, but as in the losse of that which we dearly love, conceiveth hope against sense and reason; and, as Gregory saith, hom. 25. amanti semel absexisse non sufficit: a lover is not satisfied with one look: nor looked she in vain, to whose better information God sent his glorious Minist-ring Spirits.

V. 12. seeth two Angels] Whether she knew them to be Angels, or supposed them to be men, it is not here expressed: in white clothes, or garments.

the one at the head, &c.] That is, at that part of the sepulchre where the head of Jesus was laid when they buried him.

V. 13. Woman, why weepest thou?] That is, weep not: it is not now now a time to weep, but to rejoyce: thy said more unto her, which the other Evangelists mention; but this, omitteth: this is a speech mixed of rejoicing and comfort.

she saith unto them] Surcharged with sorrow she considereth neither who these creatures were, nor much what they said to her, but minded only the occasion of her own present sorrow.

they have taken away my Lord] Friends, or enemies, I know not whether, have conveyed away the body of my dear Lord Jesus, here buried: so, too much passion maketh one for present uncapable of reproof or comfort.

V. 14. and saw Jesus standing] Hearing some behind her, or perceiving by the Angels gesture, or countenances, some other present, she looked back.

knew not that it was Jesus] She saw, but knew not him she sought. See Luke 24. 16. Mark 16. 12. Mat. 28. 17. probably, he would not suddenly be known to her, left now rising from the dead he might have affrighted her, which this, her flowneste to believe (being before instructed concerning his death and resurrection and now again by the Angels) justly deserved: yet see the mercy of Christ; the first found him, who most affectionately sought him.

V. 15. Jesus said unto her] He well knew why she wept, and for whom she wept, but thus he takes occasion to manifest himself to her.

Sir, if thou hast born him hence, &c.] Probably the might suppose that he had overheard, what she answered the Angels, therefore she replyeth as presupposing it: if thou hast born him hence; yet she did no aspire to the thought of Christs divine power to raise him from the dead: so hard is it to shake off the deluding dreams of flesh and blood.

V. 16. Mary] In this familiar and usual compellation, she understood that it was Jesus which spake to her.

Rabboni] Sudden joy intercepted what the might more desire to say: this hath the force of an interrogation; Is it my Master? my Lord Christ? See on chap. 1. 38.

V. 17. touch me not] She being too much addicted to sense, Christ would teach her to lift up her mind to the consideration of his state of glory in heaven, where we must find him now with the eye of faith, not bodily senses, 2 Cor. 5. 16. according as Augustine saith to Paulinus. ep. 59. he would intimate, tallum spiritualem, i. e. accessum fidei, se requirere: that he now requireth a spiritual touching; that is, that we come to him with faith, whereby we believe him to be on high with the Father: and he would now shew her, that she must attend another office, which was to testifie his Resurrection from the dead: as if he had said, thou needst not make so much haste to touch my feet; I am not yet ascended, neither shall I so quickly, but that thou mayest be assured, by seeing, hearing, and touching me, that it is I who now am indeed risen from the dead; the pledge and assurance of your life and resurrection. See on Mat 28. 9.

my brethren] The disciples. See on Mat. 28. 10. notwithstanding they had been scattered, and Peter had denyed him in his great infirmity; yet without exception to him, he calleth them his brethren.

my Father, and your Father] Mine by nature, yours by adoption. Cyril. Hieros. Catec. 7. and 11.

V. 18 Magdalene came and told, &c.] This Evangelist recordeth not how Jesus appeared to her with the other women as they were going to tell these things to the disciples, which, Mat. 28. 9. is recited.

V. 19. Then the same day] Mark 16. 14. Luke 24. 36.

when the doores were shut] Shut (either because it was night, or for feare of the Jews) but he could make them open to himself, as he afterward did for Peter, Acts 12. 10.

Peace be unto you] This was an Hebrew manner of salutation; who by peace, meant all prosperity. See on Matth. 28. 16

V. 20. He shewed unto them his hands, &c.] Which were pierced with nails fastning him to the crosse: thus confirms he them by all means, that they might be assured, that it was he who was indeed risen from the dead; lest otherwise they might have thought he it had been but some apparition, or some other body, and not he. See on Luke 24. 40.

V. 21. As my Father hath sent me] He gave them a mission, and charge before, but as preachers to warn the Jews to hear Christ: but now he feadeth them as Apostles, and Ambassadours into the other Nations: committing that ministery to their execution, which himself had performed in teaching: he appointeth them and their successours his surrogates in his absence. See Ephes. 4. 11. and that their authority to preach, might be understood to be Gods own ordinance. he telleth them, that as his Father sent him, so he sendeth them to preach to all nations in his Name. See chap. 6. 38 Mark 16. 15. Mat. 28. 19. Christ speaketh the same truth by the Apostles and Ministers of the Gospel, which his self preached when he was conversant with men on earth.

V. 22. he breathed on them] By this sign prefiguring what they should receive; to wit, the gifts and graces of the holy Spirit, proceeding from the Father and the Son.

V. 23. Whosoever sins ye remit] Mat. 18. 18. this power is equally given to all the disciples, and their successours respectively; first in respect of the doctrine of faith, and repentance, as the key of Heaven committed to their ministery, which (according as it is received and obeyed) bindeth or looseth; if we believe and repent here on Earth, God forgiveth in heaven; and it is the ministers office to preach the same in general, and to apply it particularly, for the comfort and instruction of the truly penitent. Secondly, in respect of the power of excommunication and absolution, which is in discipline, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord, 1 Cor. 5. 5.

V. 24. called Didymus] See on chap. 11. 16. Thomas recited under the character of one of the twelve, is spoken of c. 11. 16. we may not understand this with relation to the number of the Apostles now being; (for Judas was gone to his own place, and Matthias was not yet chosen into his office, Acts 1. 25, 26.) but that which had been, when Jesus had first chosen twelve Apostles, according to the number of the Tribes of Israel.

was not with them] Probably he was not yet returned (after they had been dispersed for fear) to the company of the Apostles.

V. 25. I will not believe] So dangerous is it to be once absent from holy assemblies where Christ will be present (Mat. 18. 20.) to indulge to our own sense, to measure things divine and spiritual by our own carnal reason, and to give our selves lawes of believing.

V. 26. his disciples were within] Within the house where they remained, verse 19. For they or some of them, having been well known to divers in Jerusalem, they could not stir much abroad without great danger; the heat of the Jews rage being yet very little abated; (neither could they before go away out of the city, the feast of unleavened bread being not ended) now Thomas, how ever weak, and disbelieving their report and him testimony concerning the resurrection of Christ, the maine and fundamental Article of our belief, yet would he not separate from their conventions.

Jesus came, &c.] On the eighth day after his resurrection; that is, the next Lords day. Where Jesus was in the mean time, the Scriptures being silent, we may not curiously enquire: more safely the that Thomas being then with them it appeareth that neither did he in unbelief separate from the Church representative, nor did they desert him, or abstain from communion with him, for so great an infirmity as was expressed in his professed unbelief: therefore Jesus came to them who hath promised the blessing to the unanimous, Psal. 133. and Mat. 18. 19.

V. 27. reach hither thy finger] Christ made such use of Thomas present unbelief, that he thereby left the truth of his resurrection, more certain and undoubted unto us: mark the admirable clemency of Christ, for one fouls sake, he would appear again, and shew his wounds to all the rest.

V. 28. my Lord, and my God] Here Thomas confesseth his faith (which Christ approveth, verse 29.) versam in illa cicatricibus patientia at resurgentis virtutem divinitatis agnoscens. Fulgent. de incarn. & Grat. D. Jesu Christ. 11. acclnowledging in those wounds of him that suffered and rose again. the true power of the deity; without which he could not have risen again. Thus Thomas spake, as one coming to himself again: and this abrupt speech importeth a vehement admiration, at Christs mercy, and his own stupidity and dulnesse to believe: it containeth a short, but absolute confession of faith; he collecting from his resurrection that Christ was the very Messias, Redeemer, and Lord of all (See Rom. 1. 4.) and with an explicit faith, professing his own interest therein: so far did his faith now excel sense, on which he before so much depended, that he who felt only the manhood, believed and confessed the united Deity of Christ: so foon can God change pertinatious unbelief into saving faith. See Acts 9. 22. Gal. 1. 23, 24. Thomas twice emphatically repeateth, my, to declare that he now spake out of deep and serious sense of faith. So God permitteth his to infirmity, and some slips; as that in their recovery, themselves and others, are more confirmed. See on verse 27. plus enim nobis Thomæ infidelitas, ad fidem, quam fides credentium discipulorum profuit, &c. Greg. hom. 26. in Evang. For Thomas his doubting more advantageth our faith, than the faith of the believing disciples: If Thomas had not doubted, we had not been so assured that it was indeed the same Christ, who was crucified, dead and buried, and risen again; his doubting put that out of doubt.

V. 29. they that have not seen] Which shall hereafter believe through the preaching of the Gospel, though they see me not in the flesh, or these wounds now shewed thee.

V. 30. many other signes] Chap. 21. 25. He did these in the presence of his disciples to confirm them; after his resurrection, we read not, that he ever appeared to the wicked or shewed himself to them after his resurrection from the dead: he reserveth that to their greater terrour in the day of judgement. See Rev. 1. 7. Acts 10. 41.

which are not written in this book] As being sufficiently recorded by the other Evangelists: or forasmuch as God knew that to be sufficient which is written. See 2 Tim. 3. 15.

V. 31. But these things are written] These things which Jesus taught taught and did: as a father (saith Optatus l. 5.) having many children, while he liveth, and is present with them, governeth them his self, and needeth no will and testament; but drawing towards his end, fearing left after his decease, his children may fall out, he calleth witnesses, voluntatem suam de pectore morituro transfert in tabulas diu duraturas; out of his dying breft he transflateth his will, on long-lasting tables, if any controversie happen, non tam ad tumultum, sed quaritur testamentum: & qui in tumulto quæsitus, iis de tabulis loquitur vivus: they run not to the grave (of the dead) but seek the will and testament; and so he that resteth in the graves, in those silent tables speaketh his mind, as if he were alive: He who made his will is in Heaven; yet thus, his children consult with him: So Christ being bodily present with his Church, did teach and govern them; but at last ordered that his will and testament should be written, for a constant rule of faith and manners, to all his children on earth, until his coming again to judge.

that ye may believe] For, faith in Christ, and our salvation thereby, as it was the onely scope and end of Christs doing of miracles, so was it of the Evangelists recording the same.

CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1. Sea of Tiberias] The sea of Galilee (John 6. 1.) so named from that adjacent Province, or City of that name near to it: of old it was named כנרת Chinnereth. Numb 34. 11. Deut. 3. 17. Josh. 11 2. & 12. 2. Chalde גינוסר Ginnosar: 70. Κενερεθ, Χενεθθ. See on Luke 5. 1 John 6 1. Jerom de loc. Hebr. calleth it, Chennereth the bound of Judea, in the Tribe of Neptalim: Herod called the city Tiberias, in honour of Tiberius Cæsar, Jerom ib. they fince called it Tabaria. Adrictom. Theatr ter. S. Zabulon, Ptolome, Strabo, and other Greek Authours, call it as in the Gospel χινησαρετ. Mat. 14. 34. See Iremelius note thereon. Joseph. de bel. Jud. l. 3. c. 18. calleth it Genesar. Plini. l. 5. c. 15 this lake Genesar is sixteen miles long, and six miles broad; befet with pleasant Towns: on the West thereof flood Tiberias; it abounded with divers sorts of fishes: the River Jordan runneth through it. Adrictom. q. l. the Apostles, according to the command of Christ, and the admonition of the Angels, after his resurrection, the dayes of unleavened bread being ended, leaving Jerusalem, went to Galilee. See Matth. 26. 7. Matthew 26. 32.

on this wise shewed he] He setteth down the time, place, persons, occasion, and manner of Christs appearing to them, to shew the evidence and certainty of his resurrection.

V. 2. Nathaniel of Cana] See chap 1. 49 Some think this was he who is called also Βαρθολομαῖος Bartholmew, the son of Tholomeus, of בר bar, a son, and תולמי thalmai. Numb. 13. 23. Jud. 1. 10. 70. Θολαμαῖ or Θολμί.

V. 3. I go a fishing] For though they were fishers of men, they were not yet sent out, neither had they received those visible gifts of the Holy Ghost, which were to furnish them out to that great work of preaching the Gospel to all Nations: moreover, they wrought in their callings, to supply their present necessities, as Paul also sometimes did, 2 Thes. 3. 8. See Luke 24. 49. therefore he acquainteth the rest with his purpose, that they might joyne with him; which they accordingly did.

we also go with thee] We will goe with thee, and joyne with thee in fishing: for albeit the word be of the present tense; yet because it relateth to an action not present, but future, it is well interpreted by the future. It may be the Evangelist, who was one of them, would hereby expresse their present assent and readinesse of mind upon the first motion of Peter, as also their certain resolution to goe.

that night they caught nothing] Thus the providence of God disposed it, for the more clear evidence of the ensuing miracle: had they caught any thing the power and prefence of Christ had not so clearly appeared, in this fudden succesfe: all labour and endeavour of man is vain, unlesse God blesse it with succesfe, Psal. 127. 1. See Gen. 11. 28. Hag. 1. 6, 9. &c. Deut. 28. 13 &c. God often exerciseth the patience of his: should all our labours succeed well, how few would beg Gods assistance? how seldome would men acknowledge his blessings?

V. 4. When the morning was now come] He expected until these disciples (weary with successlesse labour) and out of hope to get any thing) would leave work; to declare that the opportunity and time which God taketh to supply and relieve his, is then, when there appeareth to them least hope of help from second causes.

but the disciples knew not, &c.] Either because it was not yet clear day, or because of the distance, they being so far from shore; but specially because Jesus would first be known by the miracle; and then by his countenance.

V. 5. children have ye] Or, Sirs.

have ye any meat?] Have ye taken any thing? have ye any thing to eat? as the Syriac hath it: he asketh as one who came to buy; but his purpole was in his eating, to testifie his resurrection from the dead, and to give them assurance thereof by a further manifestation of himselfe unto them.

V. 6. cast the net on the right side] Thus he counselleth them, as some ordinary person, the right side of the ship, is that which is one right hand of him that siteeth at the helme, which the Seamen call the starboard side: he assigneth one certain part of the ship, ne fortuita videretur captura, Euthymius: left it should (rather) seem that they had taken such a draught by chance, than divine providence.

V. 7. it is the Lord] It is Christ who hath thus admirably blessed our labours in this draught of fishes.

girt his fishers coat unto him] Some close linnen coat, which hindred not his swimming.

for he was naked] Before he put on this, he had some thing on; for we may not simply understand that he had none other clothes on: 1 Sam. 19. 24. it is said that Saul stript off his clothes, and; laid down naked all that day and all that night; that is, he put off his Kingly Robe, not all other his clothes. So walked Isaiah the Prophet, naked, and barefoot, Isa. 20. 2. that is, without his Prophets garment. We may not think he went stark-naked to the discovery of his shame, and contempt of his person: and so Peter here was naked; that is, had not on that usual outward garment with which he used to go in publick: except we shall understand, that he in his work of fishing had onely the coat here mentioned on his otherwise naked body, which, hearing that it was the Lord, he prosently girded so close to him, that it might not hinder his swimming ashore, and so hide his nakednesse; but this theweth with what diligence they had assigned without succesfe, until Christ came to them.

cast himself into the sea] He leapt over-board to swim a shore, that he might come to Jesus (which the Syriac addeth) impatient of the delay, which the ship must necessarily make, being to bring such a draught to shore: ferum æstimans si cum cæteris navigo perveniren. Ambros. in Luc. sub. fin. esteeming it too late to come with the rest in the ship: he valued no gains, but to come to Christ.

V. 8. dragging the net with fishes] σύρων, is properly to sweep the ground, as they do who fish with trailes, or draught-nets, whole plummers sink the lower part of the net to the ground, left the enclosed fish should escape.

V. 9. they saw a fire of coals there, &c.] It seemeth while they were labourin in an ordinary calling, that Jesus (ever mindful of his) prepareth food for them by an extraordinary way, against they came ashore, weary and hungry, so that they find there all necessaries ready: nor need we doubt who provided, or how; He being present, who prepared Israel a table in the wildernesse, who fed so many thousands with five loaves and two fishes: all creatures obey him; he gave them here an example of his divine providence, which never faileth those that trust in him. See Exod. 34. 28. 1 King. 19. 8. Hebr. 13 5.

V. 10. bring of the fish. &c.] That they might not neglect his blessing, and lose that which he gave them, nor think that it was a vision: he biddeth them bring of the fish which they had now caught; it was his blessing, and their labour: his beneficence, and their propriety: so we fay our daily bread, we pray God to give it: that is ours, in which Christ giveth us, a Divine, and civil right.

V. 11. Simon Peter went] Not he alone, but he with the rest: he chiefly is named, (who in zeal to enjoy the presence of Christ, waved the usuall means of coming to him) and is now instructed to use the ordinary means to receive, and save Gods blessings, bestowed on him. Christ would not distract us from, but blesse us in our lawful callings, that we may therein acknowledge his mercifull providence. See 1 Tim. 4. 4.

V. 12. Come and dine] Nor that he now wanted food, but this was to assure them of the truth of his manhood then present, that they might not think it to be only a meare phantasme; but that they might be evidently assured of his resurrection from the dead.

knowing that it was the Lord] He so evidently manifested himself to them, that they durst not question the certainty of his resurrection and presence with them.

V. 13. taketh bread] They knew him in the manner of his breaking of bread. See Luke 24. 35.

V. 14. this is now the third time] That is, the third time that he appeared to his Disciples together, for otherwise he had more often appeared to some singly, chapter 20. 16. Luke 24. 15.

V. 15. lovest thou me more than these] More than thou loveft these; or more than these love me: one reason of this query might be; for that Peter leaping into the Sea to come to him before the rest, might seem to intimate so much: but the maine is, because Christ had remitted a great sinne of his. See Luke 7. 47.

feed my lambs] That is, the fouls committed to thy charge: for this is a sure argument of the Ministers love to Christ, if he conscionably labour to edifie those whom Christ (the great shepherd of our fouls) loveth, and for whom he dyed, they love the world, not Christ, who seek their own gains, but neglect their auditours salvations;

salvation; this Peter now learned, and afterward faithfully taught it others in the like ministration to them given in charge, 1 Pet. 1. 5. 1. 2. &c.

V. 16. feed my sheep] The repetition of the same charge, sheweth the importance thereof; and the necessity of our endeavour in this duty, which Christ so often, and so seriously enjoyned him and all other faithful Pastors and Ministers of the Gospel, in and by him.

V. 17. he said unto him the third time] This often repetition of the charge doth not onely occasion Peters threefold confession, opposed to his thrice denying; but chiefly declareth to the other Apostles, that Peter was not to be rejected from their fellowship, office, and communion, for his threefold fall; being graciously received again by Christ, in his threefold confession of his love and obedience to him: and thus is washed off his former sinne, confirming him to his Apostleship and preaching the Gospel.

Peter was greived, because, &c] Remembring how he had fallen, and fearing left he should so fall again as he had done when he promised great constancy; or doubting that Christ (to whom he was better known than to himself) saxed him of dissembling: we grieve to have our fidelity questioned. Peter had been more cautious at first, had he well observed Christs words, Mat. 26. 34. but he had not then so much experience of himself, as now: now he cautiously appealeth to Christs omniscience; he presumeth no more; most dangerously they fall, who most presume.

Lord, thou knowest all things] τὰ πάντα καὶ τὰ μέλλοντα, Chrysost. all things present and future: what I now am, and what I shall be: thus modestly answereth he now, having had dear experience of his infirmity and failing.

V. 18. girdest thy self] Tis he spake, alluding to the manner of those Eastern Countries, where wearing long loose garments, they could at their pleasure, gird them to their bodies, to prepare themselves for labour or travel, and withal, in the next words, to the binding of Peter, as a prisoner for execution, and suffering martyrdome for the testimony of the truth of the Lord Jesus.

whither thou wouldst not] τῆς φύσεως λέγων τὸ συμπαθές, καὶ τῆς σαρκὸς τὴν ἀνάγκην, &c. Chrys. He speaks the affection of nature, and necessity of flesh and blood; intimating that the soul unwillingly parteth from the body, how ever willing, by the comfort of the grace of regeneration, we are in Spirit.

V. 19. he should glorifie, God] This he said that we may know, that to suffer for Christs sake is δόξα τῷ πάσχοντι καὶ τιμὴ, the glory and honour of the sufferer; in that he honoureth God in suffering, which is the end for which we were created and redeemed. See 1 Cor. 6. 20. Revel. 4. 11. and those who honour God, will he assuredly honour, 1 Sam. 2. 30.

V. 20. Whom Jesus loved] Chap. 13. 23. and 20. 2.

V. 21. What shall this man do?] That is, shall he not also feed thy sheep? shall he be divided from me? or how shall he die?

V. 22. What is that to thee] He slighteth this curious unprofitable question of Peter: admonishing him not to trouble himself about others, but to look to himself: if I would have him live unto my second coming; what concerneth it thee? follow thou me in that I command thee.

V. 23. then went this saying abroad] The Evangelist here correcteth this errour rising from the misunderstanding Christs words concerning himself; left when he died the malitious adversary should hence take occasion to asperse the truth of Christ, whom the very Disciples understood not, but mistook in that matter: man is naturally prone to mistake: the more to be admired, is their overdaring ignorance of themselves, who think they cannot erre: so high an opinion of a mans self concludeth him, neither good, nor wise.

V. 24. This is the disciple which testifieth] Hitherto he mentioneth himself under a third person: now he declareth himself, an ear-witnesse, and an eye-witnesse, of that which he wrote for the greater certainty thereof. The Apostles doctrine is certain, his modesty is observable; he calleth himself a disciple, a learner, who excelled the most accomplished Doctors, of the ages since: John Baptist called himself the voice of a cryer in the wilderness, chap. 1. 23. Peter and Paul, those great lights of the Church and Apostles of Christ called themselves, servants of Christ, Rom. 1. 1. 2 Pet. 1. 1. &c. what Spirit ruleth in those vain-glorious Prelates, who think no titles high enough for them?

V. 25. there are also] Chap. 20. 30.

the world it selfe could not contain] Herein he followeth the vulgar manner of speaking, as chap. 12. 19. the meaning of the hyperbole is, there would be very many books: moreover, he here glanceth at the depth of some mysteries, in the words and actions of Christ, which the world could not have apprehended, had they been written, which are to be put on account to those things which are reserved to be revealed unto us in the world to come; When that which is perfect is come, and that which is in part shall be done away, when we shall know, even as also we are known, 1 Cor. 13. 10, 12.

Amen] See Luke 24. 53. Mark 16. 20. Mat. 28. 20. and John 3. 11.

ANNOT.

ANNOTATIONS

On the ACTS of the APOSTLES.

The Argument.

THE Penman of this Scripture was Luke the Evangelist (as appeareth in the first words hereof) for the most part, an Eye-witnesse of these Things he recordeth, being constantly a fellow-Labourer with Paul.

His purpose in writing this Story, was, (as he intimateth in his first Preface) That the Church might have the certain knowledge of Christ, his Gospel and Kingdom, that our Faith might not be built on the uncertain reports of Pretenders to Truth; As also, That he might shew how God fulfilled his promise in calling the Gentiles, and the Apostles, their Charge and Office, by Preaching the Gospel to all Nations: And that he might fore-arm all the Faithfull, by discovering the rage and malice of Satan, persecuting the true Ministers and Professours of the Gospel, even from the first publication thereof: And the gracious providence of God, preserving and increasing his Church, in the midst of all her pressures, giving us an evident assurance of the truth of the Gospel, not only in that the powers of Hell, all the machinations of Satan, and malice of wicked men, could never prevail against it; but also, that Gods providence, by these oppositions, confirmed it to the hearts of Christians, in the constancy of those that suffered persecution for it.

This Story setteth out.

1. The Truth of Christ after his Ascension; performing his Promise to the Apostles, sending the Holy Ghost the Comforter, unto them.

2. The malice of Satan, labouring to suppresse the Gospel, by raising up tumults, conspiracies, slanders, persecutions, and (where he could not prevaile by violence) Heresicks to corrupt the Truth thereof.

3. The vigilant providence and power of God over his Church, overthrowing the malicious enterprises of the enemies, and filling the world with the sound of the Gospel, by so few unlearned men.

4. The many divine Sermons of the Apostles and Disciples, concerning the Death, Resurrection, Ascension and Kingdom of Christ, the Mercy of God in the free Remission of our sins by him, the Immortality to come: Care that Ministers ought to have of Christs flock, Repentance and Fear of God, and other principal Grounds of Faith, that we bearing our trials patiently (knowing that the Crosse usually accompanieth the Gospel) and resting confident in his mercy, who is unchangeably the same good God to his now, that he was to the first Christians) we may at last attain the end of our hopes, the salvation of our Bodies and Soules. Which He grant us, who gave so great a price for our Redemption, as the unvaluable Blood of Christ Jesus. AMEN.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1.  He former treatise have I made] That is, the Gospel by Saint Luke.

all that Jesus began] This is, not simply to be understood, of all that Jesus did and said; for John chap. 21. 25. declareth it impossible; but of some things, which Jesus began to do and teach, that is, as Chrysostome interpreteth, from the beginning to the end; from the story of Christs birth, unto the relation of his resurrection, Luke wrote in the Gospel: but yet he saith not πάντα, all things, but περὶ πάντων, concerning all, that is, ἀδιεξοδεύτως καὶ παχυμερῶς, or παχυτέρως, crassâ Minervâ, grossely, or summarily, to wit, of all that which the Holy Ghost thought necessary to dictate. Chrysost. To reveal and make known unto me concerning the Gospel of Christ, and which his pleasure was, that I should write, for the edification of his Church.

both to do and to teach] That is, Christs doctrine, and miracles for the confirmation of the same.

V. 2. taken up] Into heaven, by his ascension, Luke 24. 51. which story he now more particularly prosecuteth, as also those things which, in further order to edification of his Church, followed the same in the Actions of the Apostles, and the successe of their preaching according to the commandment of Christ, Mat. 28. 19, 20. Mark 16. 15.

after that he through the holy Ghost had given commandements, &c.] Some otherwise joyn these words (through the holy Ghost) with the following, (whom he had chosen) so the Syriack hath it, quos elegit in spiritu sancto: whom he chose by the holy Ghost, both are true, therefore here needs no controversie: the rule is, that the works of the holy Trinity ad extra, are common to the three persons; so the Father sanctifieth, John 10. 36. the Son sanctifieth, John 17. 19. 1 Cor. 6. 11 and the holy Ghost sanctifieth, Rom 15. 16. and so the Father calleth, the Son calleth, and the holy Ghost calleth: so the Father commandeth, the Son commandeth, and the holy Ghost commandeth: the first reading, teacheth, that the Apostles commission to preach and do miracles was from the holy Ghost, and therefore their word is to be valued as his word and infallible truth: the second way of reading, sheweth, that the Apostles calling or election to their ministery was not of any humane, but divine authority: neither is the calling and ordination of any faithfull Minister grounded on humane, but divine authority wherein albeit God useth the ministery of man, as in imposition of hands in their consecration, or prefentation, institution or induction, into some particular cure; yet as God alone can give them ability to minister, and power and successe in their ministring, so he onely calleth thereto, (or they are not rightly called, but are hirelings & intruders: See Act. 20 28.) and their authority to preach dependeth not on the authority of man but Godshower: or the ordinance of God in men of authority thereto, may not be despised, nor can without contempt of God himself: Luke 10. 16. so then we may understand stand this place thus, that God to the Apostles gave command to preach the Gospel, and execute that function and charge which he had given them.

V 3. by many infallible proofs] Τεκμηριοις the word is of τιθημι, an end, and importeth such undoubted signes, as necessarily, and constantly importing one and the same thing (Arist. Rhet. l. 1) conclude and put an end to any doubt, or controversie; as to speak walk or eat and drink, are τεκμηρια, undoubted signes, and proof of life, &c. See Quintilian l. 5. *c.*9. Suidas giveth it by ἀποδειξις, a demonstration: such proofs of Christs resurrection were, their seeing Christ, talking, eating with him, and touching him after the same.

fourty dayes] Christ would not presently ascend into heaven after his resurrection, that he might assure the Apostles of the truth thereof, by his conversing with them so long at certain times.

pertaining to the kingdome of God] What the Apostles were afterward to deliver to the world, either in preaching, or writing; whereby God may reign in us here by grace; and such as concern our being with him in future glory.

V. 4. assembled together with them] Conversing with them; having gathered them together (who were dispersed with fear) that they might now be witnesses of his ascension into heaven.

not depart] Or separate themselves. The Greek word μὴ χωρίζεσθαι signifieth, both that they should not divide or disperse themselves, nor depart from Jerusalem; where he would have them receive that admirable gift of tongues, as Chap. 2. because at the feast there used to be a very great confluence of people from several parts of the world, & many nations who might be competent witnesses of their speaking of divers tongues, which in some more private place they had not had; and that by this meanes, they who were strangers (of severall nations) at Jerusalem, returning home again, and reporting that which they heard and saw, might so farre prepare those nations for their reception of the Gospel.

but wait for the promise] That which the Father had promised; that is, the holy Ghost; as verse 5.

which, saith he, ye have heard of me] Which I have told you of. Luke 24. 49 John 14. 15. & 16.

V. 5. For John truly] Mat. 3. 11. Mark 1. 8. Luke 3. 16. John 1. 26. Acts 11. 16. & 19. 1.

with the holy Ghost] With the graces of Gods holy Spirit: ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ in the holy Ghost, for διὰ πνεύματος ἁγίου, through the holy Ghost: or πνεύματι ἁγίῳ with the holy Ghost: an usuall Hebraisme.

V. 6. the kingdome to Israel] The secular kingdom and worldly prosperity, which they imagined the Messias should set them up. See Luke 24. 21.

V. 7. not for you to know the times and seasons] The opportunities for the works of God, which he reserveth to himself.

V. 8. but ye shall receive] See chap. 2. 1.

power after the holy Ghost is come upon you] Or the power of the holy Ghost coming upon you: gifts of tongues, healing, interpretation, boldnesse to preach, enlarged hearts, &c.

uttermost part of the earth] Both to the Jewes and Gentiles, according to their commission. Mark 16, 15.

V: 9. and when he had spoken] Luke 24. 51. they saw him risen, not rising; and ascending, not ascended; the one perfected, the other begun.

a cloud received him, &c.] The Apostles looke after him ascending, untill a cloud intercepted their sight of him.

V. 10. two men stood by them in white apparell] Two Angels in the shape of men. See Mark 16. 5. Luke 24. 4. John 20. 12.

V. 11. into heaven] To which he is gone to take possession for us, by carrying thither the same flesh & blood of which we consist.

shall so come] At the last day, he shall locally come, in the same body, manifestly appearing in the clouds. 1 Thes. 4. 16, 17. Mat. 24. 38.

V. 12. a sabbath-dayes journey] How farre it was lawfull to walk on the sabbath day, the law of God determined not; but their tradition limited it to two thousand cubits, or about two miles. John 11. 18. it appeareth, that Bethany was fifteen furlongs, that is, almost two miles from Jerusalem; and Luke 24. 50. So far did Christ lead them out, when he would ascend, which is here called a sabbath-dayes journey: so that either Christ having taken leave at Bethany, came back thence with them, and ascended from the mount of Olives, which lyeth between it and Jerusalem; or else the sabbath-dayes journey here mentioned, must be two miles wanting one furlong; though some learned authours say otherwise.

V. 13. they went up into an upper room] εἰς τὸ ὑπερῶον, a room in the top of the house, where they might be freest from distraction by company coming in and out, and also most private and secure from the Jews, who having put their Master to death, would not spare any that should confesse him to be the Christ.

Peter, and James, and John, &c.] Probably the Evangelist recounteth their names, to shew that Christ had not rejected them, for their forsaking him in his suffering; but that they were restored to their former office and dignity, that none might degrade from the authority of their preaching or writing.

and Judas brother James] Ἰούδας Ἰακώβου: Judas of James, an usuall ellipsis; the Syriac supplyeth it with בר bar: son of James; it may be both his fathers and brothers name was James; it was the same who is called Lebbeus, and Thaddeus. Mat. 10. 3. Mark 3. 18. Jude 1. his relation to James is here mentioned to distinguish him from the other Judas the traytour.

V. 14. continued with one accord, &c.] The word is of καρτερέω, signifying a continuance in performing or suffering some thing, with an invincible and strong constancy.

in prayer and supplication] Their hazard was then very great; their implacable enemies about them, many, and those also in authority: Christ had often warned them to watch and pray, lest they entred into temtation; therefore thus take they up the armour of Christians, unanimous prayer; what they prayed, is not mentioned; probably amongst other blessings; it was for deliverance from their enemies, as chap. 4. 24. and for the coming of the holy Ghost the comforter, which he had promised them, and for which he commanded them to stay at Jerusalem.

with the women] Those who went to follow the Lord (Luke 8. 2. 3.) and the Apostles wives.

with his brethren] That is, Christ his kinsmen according to the fleth: possibly those of whom it was said, John 7. 5. that they believed not in him: God hath his times to call.

V. 15. in those dayes] While they attended at Jerusalem for the promised comforter.

the number of names] The number of the persons, to have been numbred.

V. 16. this scripture] Psal. 41. 9.

which the holy Ghost, &c.] By him were all the holy scriptures endited. 2 Tim. 3. 16. 2 Pet. 1. 21. Now lest any should be scandalled at the fall of Iudas; Peter beginneth from the ancient Prophesie, to shew that it was the same which was long before Prophesied of; all was foreseen and ordered by the providence of God, to accomplish the work of our redemption. See chap. 4. 28.

guide to them which took Jesus] Mat. 26. 47, 48. John 18. 2, 3. For he undertook for thirty pieces of silver, for which the chief Priests had contracted with him to deliver him unto them, and he well knowing the place, the garden which Christ with his disciples frequented, led the officers and soldiers thither to take him; and he gave them the signall by which they knew him.

V. 17. for he was numbred with us] Christ had chosen 12. Apostles, according to the number of the tribes of Israel, of whom they shall be judges, Mat. 19. 28. Therefore one falling away, they were to chose another, which election Peter here proposeth unto the rest, and the Church there assembled: he saith Iudas was obtained a part of this ministery] That is, was appointed to the same Ministery of the Gospel with them.

V. 18. Now this man purchased a field] Mat. 27. 7 This the Evangelist Luke speaketh in respect of the event: because with the thirty pieces (the price of blood) a field was bought by the Priests, for the burial of strangers, Mat. 27. 6, 7, 8.

falling headlong] Casting himself from the place where he hanged himself. Mat. 27. 5.

V. 19. in so much as that field is called in their proper tongue, &c.] The Syriack giveth it, in the tongue of that region; thus it was publickly named in their own tongue: he saith not in our tongue, but in their &c. to point out the conscionsnesse of the authours of this piety. See Mat. 27. 7. 8.

Aceldama] Haceldama, or Aceldama is a name compounded of two Syriack words, חקל (which in the Chalde and Syriack signifieth a field, of the Hebrew root חקל chalack, divisit in partes, hereditatem &c. thence by a metathesis and transposition of letters חקל chakel a part, portion, or field; or possession of fields divided from others. Isai. 61. 7. Hos. 5. 7.) and דם, dam blood: Peter also might say it is called in their proper tongue, or dialect (See ch. 2. 8.) in regard he was a Galilean; their pronunciation somewhat differing from that about Jerusalem: therefore had they so urged that he was a Galilean, and one of Christs disciples, for (said they) thy speech bewrayeth thee. Mat. 26. 73.

V. 20. let his habitation be desolate] Psal. 69. 25.

his Bishoprick let another take] Or his office, or charge Psal. 109. 8. that which the Hebrew calleth פקדה pecudah, (Numb. 3. 32.) oversight, or cure.

V. 21. went in and out amongst us] Or was conversant with us as man; and preached unto us. See Deut. 31. 2. 2 Chron. 1. 10. &c.

V. 22. From the Baptisme of John] From the time that Christ was baptized of John. Mat. 3. 16. Luke 4. thence began Christs publick Ministery.

of his resurrection] In that he mentioneth the principal article of our faith (see 1 Cor. 15. 14.) he comprehendeth all the rest.

V. 23. they appointed two] The before mentioned Apostles: put two in election, that is, Joseph called Barsabas and Matthias.

V. 24. and they prayed] Because the Apostles were immediately chosen by God, therefore they here pray God to direct the lot, for the choyce of one in Iudas room.

V. 25. that he may take part &c.] See verse 17. that he may be a partner with us, in our Apostleship and Ministery: here κλῆρος is put for μέρος, a part, or partnership.

his own place] To hell and eternall damnation, to which God who foreseeth all things, had justly designed the traytour. See Psal. 9, 17.

V. 26. they gave forth their lots] Lots were several wayes drawn or given out, either from the lap. Prov. 16. 33. or some vessel, an urne, pot, or head-piece: however, as they were in use for division of lands or goods, or for compoſing of any controversie, God disposed them, Prov. 16. 33. therefore Augustine said well, lots are nothing else but in rebus dubiis indicatio divinae voluntatis, the declaration of Gods will in things doubtfull: they are here called, their lots, after the common use of speaking, in respect of the two, put into election for Judas place for Apostleship.

he was numbred with the eleven, &c.] Or acknowledged to be one of the twelve Apostles; συγκατεψηφίσθη: as they say, communibus calculis est electus: the word is of ψῆφος, a stone or counter, with which they were wont to give voyces in commission, or judgments: sometimes it is taken for the event determined by lot, as here it is intimated; they all rested contented with the lot, as being confident, that God disposed and approved the event thereof: he was numbred with the eleven Apostles, by a common declaration of their general content.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. Pentecost was fully come] When the fiftieth day from the Passeover was come. See Deut. 16. 9. Levit. 23. 15. which time God chose to send the holy Ghost; much people being then gathered to Jerusalem, that it might be divulged to the world. See on chap. 1. 4.

they were all &c.] The Apostles; for this was divinely and extraordinarily to consecrate and fit them who were to preach the Gospel to all nations.

V. 2. a sound from heaven &c.] This preternatural winde God sent before, as it were a messenger to stirre them up to attention, and to give them notice of the coming and presence of the holy Ghost: also to intimate in the type, the speedy, unexpected, and unresistible succesſe of the Gospel; and that the whole dispensation thereof should be by the power and providence of God.

V. 3. tongues] The similitude or appearance of tongues, to signifie their gift of tongues, or speaking divers languages; miraculously infused into them who were to preach to divers nations; as a remedy for the confusion of tongues. Gen. 11. 7. by which a great part of the world was separated from communion with God and his Church.

of fire] To signifie the admirable force which should be therein, by the spirit of God.

V. 4. filled with the holy Ghost] With his gifts and graces; with a greater and more admirable accesſe and increase thereof; more abundant knowledge of the mysteries of salvation by Christ, which before they did not so well apprehend; greatnesse of mind and constancy, to do and endeavour all things for the testimony of the truth of Christ; the gift of tongues, largeneſſe of heart, and admirable utterance; power and evidence of the spirit in preaching and praying.

to speak with other tongues] Besides their mother tongue, they spake languages which they never studied, or understood before that moment: so it was promised. Mark 16. 17. and so it was necessary that they might be able to speak the tongue of every nation to whom they were to preach the Gospel.

V. 5. dwelling at Jerusalem, Jews devout men out of every nation] They were of Jewish parents, though they were born, or had dwelt in other nations; these came up from divers nations, or were of divers nations hereafter mentioned. and were at Jerusalem at the feast.

under heaven] That is every nation; this hyperbole is familiar with the Hebrews. See Deut. 2. 25. thus was fulfilled that which was faid by Isaiah. Chap. 43. verse 5, 6.

V. 6. when this was noyſed abroad] γενομένης δὲ τῆς φωνῆς ταύτης, when this voyce was made; that is the report and rumour of these things, being spread abroad, or spoken of among the people, to wit, how the Apostles spake all languages upon the sodain; when this was voyced abroad.

confounded] Or troubled in minde: or as verse 7. amazed, and marvelled, forasmuch as they knew not the cause thereof, nor what these things would come to at last.

V. 7. are not all these which speak, Galileans?) These which speak several languages; are they not such as have been constantly bred in Galilee, and never learned these tongues at home, nor travelled abroad to gain them?

V. 8. how hear we every man] Nor that in the sound of one voice, every man heard his native language, as if one and the same word spoken by Peter, should found Greek to the Grecian, Latine to the Roman, Egyptian to the Egyptian (for so had this been a miraculous gift of interpretation, or speaking, in the hearers, (the people) not in the Apostles, the speakers) but because every Apostle now spake all languages, as occasion and the auditory served him.

V. 9. Parthians, and Medes] For the greater evidence of the miracle, he instanceth in those men of several nations, now present at Jerusalem, and ear-witnesles of these things.

V. 10. Proselytes] Gentiles converted to the Israelites Religion. See Mat. 23. 15.

V. 11. the wonderfull works of God] τὰ μεγαλεῖα τοῦ θεοῦ, as Luke 1. 49. the Syr. giveth it miracula Dei: he meaneth the Gospel, the wonderful counsel of God for mans salvation in Christ; which Paul calleth the power of God, Rom. 1. the hidden mystery, Eph. 3. 3. the unsearchable riches of Christ. Eph. 1. 18. So that here are noted two causes of their wondring, first that unlearned men, bred in such a place as Galilee should sodainly speak so many tongues: Secondly, that they were able to speak so deeply, wisely, learnedly, and divinely in those heavenly matters.

V. 12. what meaneth this?) What will this come to? what will this be? some of these were to be converted, and therefore it may be they spake not as contemning, but enquiring what might be the end, use, and fruit of these new and admirable things.

V. 13. others mocking] Calumniating, and calumniating the Apostles; these most likely, were of the Scribes and Pharisees, men of carnall wisdom (which is ever enmity to God) justly delivered up to Spiritual blindnesse, and such hardnesse of heart, that nothing (no not the most evident testimony of Gods power and presence) could move them: thus are there ever some such impudent adversaries of truth, that will not be afraid to jeere at the gifts of Gods own Spirit, and vilifie his Ministers; See Joh 6. 41. Joh. 8. 13. & 10. 20. & 11. 37. Mat. 11. 9. there is nothing so holy and sacred which precipitate malice, dareth not blaspheme.

full of new wine] γλεύκους which the vulgar Latine, and Erasmus giveth musto, so the word sometimes signifies Must, or new wine: also it signifieth sweet, or pleasing wine, as the Prophet Isai. 49. 26. useth עסיס Asis, which (though the 70. give οἶνον νέον; new wine) we there interpret sweet-wine.

V. 14. But Peter standing up with the eleven] The holy Ghost had now confirmed and emboldened him, so that without fear of Priests and Pharisees, he stood up that he might be heard of the multitude, with the rest of the Apostles, as witnelles of the same things, and partakers of the same gifts of the holy Ghost; and speaketh with a loud voyce.

V. 15. These are not drunken] First he cleareth himself and the rest of the Apostles from that unworthy calumny of drunkennesse which they cast on them; and that mildly, as 1 Sam. 1. 13, 14, 15, Acts 26. 24, 25.

but the third hour of the day] Meaning but early dayes; the third hour according to their account (who reckoned the hours from sun-rising, and so made them longer in summe, and shorter in winter) might be, as with us, about nine of the clock in the morning: as if he had said, they that are drunken, are drunken in the night. 1 Thes. 5. 7. now it is but early in the morning.

V. 16. This is that which is spoken by the Prophet Joel] This which you conceive to be drunkennesse, is the gift of Gods holy Spirit, foretold by the Prophet Joel. 2. 28. it is herein fulfilled.

V. 17. it shall come to passe] See Isai 44. 3. he washeth off the the unjust aſperſion, by interpreting and applying the prophesie: and sheweth their impudency, who durst deride the very mercies of God powred out on his Church.

in the last dayes] When the Messias shall be exhibited in the flesh, for so those dayes are accounted in the new Testament, 2 Tim. 3. 1. Hebr. 1. 2. 2 Pet. 3. 3. 1 John. 2. 18. Jud. 18.

I will powre out] I will give graces, in abundant measure. The meaning is, that God under the Gospel would give a greater measure of his grace and holy spirit than formerly he had done: greater knowledge, and clearer demonstration of the truth concerning the mysteries of eternal life and salvation by Christ, which before lay under the shadowes of the ceremonial law. Moses said, Deut. 32. 2. My doctrine shall drop as the rain: my speech shall distill as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herbs, but here he said by the Prophets, Isai. 44. 3. Joel 2. 28. I will powre out my Spirit upon all flesh. So are there here two parts of the antitheſes first in this word powring as if it had been said, under the law God gave grace and knowledge of Christ, but sparingly, not in that abundant measure as since Christ the branch, as it were the golden pipe, emptied his fulneſſe into his Church. The other part is in the universality of the receivers; the law was confined to Judea, but the Gospel, like an overflowing flood, shall extend to all flesh, all nations of the world.

upon all flesh] Upon all sorts of people, Jewes, and Gentiles; bond and free, high and low, &c.

young men shall see visions] Dreames, and visions, were one ordinary meanes whereby God revealed his will to the Prophets. Numbers 12. 6. So we must understand the Prophets speaking of things to come, accompanied with the capacity of the present times wherein they preached and wrote: so when they speak of Gods service, they name; altars, sacrifices, gold, silver, incenſe, &c. all which when they relate to times of the Gospel, are to be understood, as allusions to legal rites, not proprieties of the Gospel: so that here, dreames, and visions import excellent gifts of the Spirit, and understanding of things revealed by the Holy Ghost: as if he said, under the Gospel, there shall not be a few Prophets or Ministers, to whom (as of old) God will reveale his will; many shall know it, as Jerem. 31. 34. there shall be a cleare revelation of Gods will in Christ: so that the Apostles purpose in citing this prophesie is, to invite his hearers to a participation of the same grace, as if he said; the same Spirit which God hath now powred out on us, he is ready to poure out on others, far and near; so that, except your selves hinder your selves by your obstinacy and unbelief, you shall also receive of he same fountain with us; the same graces. God still offereth, and respectively bestoweth now on his Church, in the Spirit of sanctification, though not in the faith of miracles.

V. 18. and on my servants] So he limiteth and restraineth the promises to Gods servants only, to them that believe and obey, of what sex or condition soever they are; Men, women, Bond, Free, all are one in Christ. See Gal. 3. 28.

V. 19. and I will shew wonders in heaven] As he had two sorts of hearers, so useth he two kindes of arguments: to the holy he citeth Gods promises; to the wicked he urgeth his threatnings, to terrifie those scorners, and to bring them to repentance: he numbereth certain prodigies, as presages of Gods wrath, and the callamities of men in the last dayes; some in heaven, as these fearful Chasma's, Comets, blazing-stars, and strange eclipses of the Sun and Moon; which though they have natural causes, in the ordinary power of God, yet are they sometimes extraordinary and certain tokens of Gods anger, and some imminent miseries coming on men: it is indeed but the voyce of experience, Nunquam fulgura excanduit ignibus æther. By signes on earth, he meaneth earthquakes, inundations, monstrous births, and such prodigious and monstrous things. And the Prophet by those expressions, blood, fire, vapour of smoke, darkenesse of the Sun, and bloody or red colour of the Moon, intimated a turbulent and calamitous condition of the World in the last times; so that whither soever wee shall look, we shall see the terrible signes and effects of Gods anger, as if the whole fabick of the World were upon the point of confusion and dissolution. See Isai. 13. 10. 25. 34. Ezek. 32. 7. Joel 3. 15. Amos 8. 9. Mat. 24. 29. Luke 21. 11.

V. 20. the sun shall be turned into darkenesse,] Joel. 3. 1. Meaning, that God will shew such signes of his wrath through all the world, that man shall be no lesse amazed, than if the whole order of Nature were changed, or the Sun darkened.

V. 21. whosoever shall call upon, &c.] Joel 2. 32. Romans 10. 13. He sheweth the onely way to escape those evils threatned, faithful and fervent prayers: the Name of the Lord importeth all his Attributes, Wisdom, Power, Mercy, &c. the only sanctuary in distracti ons, fears, and dangers, is calling on the Name of the Lord in faithful and fervent prayer.

V. 22. Jesus of Nazareth, &c.] Now he cometh to his purpose, which was to shew, that Christ whom they crucified, was the true Messias promised by all the Prophets, by whose merit and beneficence, whose gifts of tongues, &c. were now poured out on his Apostles; and that therefore this was the accepted time and day of salvation, of which the Prophet Joel fore-spake; also that if they meant to be saved, they must not neglect and over-slip it; he nameth Christ, Jesus of Nazareth, to the end that they might plainly know that he spake of that very Jesus, whom they in scorn and contempt called Jesus of Nazareth, and upon whose crosse they fixed that title, a man approved of God among you] He doth not presently affirm, that Jesus is the Messias, but cometh to it by degrees: first saying that he was a man approved of God: as appeared by his miracles, of which the Jewes themselves were witnesses.

V. 23. by the determinate counsell, &c.] chap. 4. 28. Not that the counsel of God herein excused the Jews, or Judas wickednesse, seeing God wrought not in them, but by them, making good use (for mans redemption) of that they did wickedly. He mentioneth here the determinate counsell of God, as chap. 4. 28. to let them know who were to believe to salvation that the sufferings of Christ were neither casual, nor by any counsel or power of man, as their first or principal cause, but of Gods good providence, he was delivered to the power of Jews and other sinners of the heathens, that they crucifying him, Gods justice being satisfied in his death, we might be saved from the curse of the law and death eternall.

ye have taken] Thus he would smite their consciences, not yet acquainting them with the end and fruit of Gods counsell herein; lest the Jewes should think, either that Christ was not of God or that Gods determinate counsel excused their fact; he saith, ye have taken, and by wicked hands, &c.

V. 24. whom God hath raised up] Now cometh he to prove him to be the true Messias, by his resurrection from the dead. See Rom. 1. 4, for none but he that was God and man (Immanuel. Isai. 7. 14. Mat. 1. 23.) could raise himself from the dead.

the pains of death] Meaning the power of death, and bands of the grave.

V. 25. I fore-saw the Lord] Psal. 16. 8. Hebr. שויתי shivithi, I have set. 70. προωρώμην, I foresaw. So here.

on my right hand] Or at my right hand Ever ready to help me. The meaning is, that in all the pressures which he suffered for our sins, he propoled to himself, both the will of God concerning his passion, and his promise and power to preserve him, as also his will concerning mans salvation by his sufferings.

V. 26. my flesh shall rest in hope] In spe resurrectionis, August. in Psal. 16. 9. in hope of victory through the power of God, by a glorious resurrection from the dead.

V. 27. thou wilt not leave my soul in hell] See on Luke 16. 33. or, my life, my person in the grave, ψυχή often importeth so, Rom. 13. 1. And the word ᾅδης here used, is in the Hebr. שאול sheol, Psal. 18. 5. 6. which sometimes is put for the place of the dead, but is also sometimes to signifie the grave, and can no otherwise be reasonably understood; as Job 17. 13. Genesis 37. 35. in both which places, as also Psal. 16. 5. 6. whence this here is cited, the 70. use the word ᾅδης and if it be not reasonably conceived, that Job, Jacob, or David in his own person thought of going to Hell, or of ever being there; what necessity is there of understanding this place concerning Christ, otherwise than that God would not leave him long in grave? See verse 41.

suffer thy holy one] That is, sanctificatum corpus, Augustine qu. 5. the sanctified and sacred body of Christ lay not so long in the grave, as to be corrupted, to see corruption] That is, to be corrupted, Quomodo enim poterat vel in carne marcescere, cujus nomen unguentum exinanitum est, de virg. lib. 3. inter opera Ambrosii; how can he corrupt whose name is an ointment poured forth? Cant. 1. 3. Augustine to more purpose saith, ep. 120. to Honoratus, his flesh corrupted not, quæ tam celeriter resurrexit, which rose again so soon.

V. 28. the wayes of life] In restoring me from death to life, and that most happy and pleasant, as in thy presence, Psal. 17. 15. This present life is full of bitternesse and troubles; but in the next, we shall be conformed to Christ, and filled with joy.

V. 29. let me freely speak,] Or, I may freely, &c.] He now sheweth, that the Psalm spake principally of Christ: for David is dead (saith he) and we have his Sepulchre amongst us to this day. But this Psalm speaketh of one that liveth, whose body, though buried, saw no corruption, which could not be said of Davids body, long before turned to dust and corruption.

of the Patriarch David] See 1 Kings 2, 30 As if he had said, I well know that you have the memory of that excellent King, Propher, and Patriarck in high esteem, so that you think this Psalm endited by Gods spirit, speaketh only of him, but if you will more nearly look into it and consider the particulars, you may well understand that it did not, as to the main, concerne David, who died, and his sepulchre to this day with us testifieth his corruption and turning to dust, but Christ: for this Psalm speaketh of one who must dye and be buried, but so soon rise again, that his body might not be corrupted; this is true of Christ, but of David in his own person, as David himself both knew by the holy spirit and prophesied as a peculiar mark of Christ, the Messias, verse 30. 31.

V. 30. therefore being a Prophet] And so knew by speciall revelation, that which was to come concerning the resurrection of Christ.

and knowing that God] Psal 132. 11.

V. 31. that his soul] Psal. 16. 10. See verse 27.

soule was not left] In hell] Or in the grave, Gr. εἰς ᾅδου, as verse 27. See on Luke 16, 23. the word signifieth a lightlesse place, and so is here put for the grave; for the Apostle saith, that David being a Prophet left in the grave, when he rose from the dead. See Iob. Drus. prater. lib. 5.

V. 32. this Jesus hath God raised up, &c.] This Jesus, the Christ and Messias whom David foresaw in spirit: this Jesus whom ye despised and crucified, hath God raised up: and of whom ye are witnesses.

V. 33. by the right hand of God] By the power of God. By another argument he will here prove Jesus to be the very Messias of whom David spake, that in, from his ascension into heaven and sitting at Gods right hand: Christ not only rose again, according to the Scriptures, but also ascended into heaven, which we saw with these eyes; of this ascension David also prophesied. Psal. 68. 18. Ephes. 4. 8. and Psal 110. 1. cited verse 34. now that which is hereto annexed in the Prophesie (giving the gifts of Gods holy spirit to men as the speaking all tongues) can neither agree to David nor any creature, but to Christ only; David therefore spake not of himselfe, but Christ.

V. 34. the Lord said unto my Lord] Psal. 110. 1.

sit thou on my right hand] Have thou glory and power over all. See Ephes. 4. 9, 10. David speaketh this concerning Christ, not of himself: for he concerning whom that was spoken; saw not corruption, which David did: therefore that was spoken concerning another who saw not corruption, See chap. 13. 36, 37. Neither is David so ascended into Heaven body & soul, as to sit at Gods right hand, and to have power over all creatures: neither can this agree to any, but Christ only.

V. 35. thy foostool] Untill I subdue, and subject them all to thee.

V. 36. both Lord and Christ] The anointed King: So that the Jewes must know that he was called Christ, because he was the Lords anointed. See Eph. 1, 21. and 4. 10. Phil. 2. 9, 10.

V. 37. that they were pricked in their heart, &c.] This is the effect of of Peters Sermon: first their consciences tell them that Jesus was indeed the Messias, of whose death they were guilty; and so liable to Gods heavy judgement, who had cried out, his blood be on us, and on our children. Next they break out into a confession of their crime, in that they aske Councel of Peter, and the rest what they should now doe, who could by no means undoe what they had done.

what shall we doe] Not what must we say: let the wise man shew his wisedome; (said Clemens Romanus, epist. ad Corinth pag. 50.) not in words onely, but good workes also.

V. 38. Peter said unto them repent] This he did like a good Physician, whose part is not onely to discover the disease, but to prescribe the remedy, Pœnitentia hujus temporis, dolor medicinalis; Augustine in Psalm 57. Present repentance is a medicinable grief. The first of innocency is not to sin: the second to acknowledge our sins, Illic currit innocentia integra & illibata quæ fervet; hic succedit medela quæ sanet. Cyprian epist. 3. lib. 1. there runneth intire and unsoucht innocency which might save: here followeth the medicine to heal. But this repentance is not onely in knowing, acknowledging our sins, or saying, God be mercifull, but in the change of our minds, purposes and evil courses of our lives, as Augustine de Ecclesiast. Dogmat. cap. 54. saith very well; Pœnitentia vera est, pœnitenda non admittere, & admissa deflere, true repentance is no more to commit things to be repented of, and to bewaile sinnes committed. See also Tertul. adv. Marcion. lib. 2. cap. 24. fin. See on Matt. 3. 2.

in the Name of the Lord Jesus] He speaketh of and respecteth here not the form of Baptism, but the use and end thereof, which is to implant us unto Christ, Rom. 6. that we may be Christians. See on c. 10. 48.

V. 39. the Promise is unto you] Christ is promised both to Jewes and Gentiles: but the Jewes had the first place.

V. 40. untoward generation] This corrupt World: perverse and wicked men: he meaneth principally Scribes and Pharisees; and all the enemies of Christ and the Gospel.

V. 41. soules] Or persons. See on v. 27. Here began to appear the fruit of Christs prayer, Luke 23. 34.

V. 42. in breaking of Bread] This is a terme taken from that which Christ did, at his last Supper, Matthew, 26. 26. used to signifie the Holy Supper of the Lord, which they used to celebrate, when they made their Love-Feasts: or Feasts of Charity. See Acts, 20. 7. 11. Jude 12. though not always so.

V. 43. feare came upon every soule] They were all amazed, at the newy and marvellous state, encrease, gifts, miracles, and power of the Church: so that no man durst oppose them.

V. 44. had all things common] That community was not of all goods, of all the faithfull: but of that which every one, would consecrate to the publick necessity, or to the relief of any particular person, this was no absolute community, as Anabaptists dream (for that overthroweth all propriety Divine and Civill) for yet they retained propriety in their Houses, c. 12. 12. and 16. 15. had they not had propriety, they had had nothing to give, or exercise their love and charity withall. Paul professed that he had coveted no mans gold or silver, c. 20. 33. which had been a vain profession, if it had not been lawful for Christians to possesse any thing: the community here mentioned speaks them charitable who gave something, not unlawful possessours, who gave not all: and this the words of the Text intimate, verse 45. First, in that some parted their possessions and goods, or gave them (which none but proprietors could justly doe.) Secondly, in that these donors made a choice (as every man had need) neither needed Paul to have given precepts concerning gathering for the poore, 1 Corinthians, 16. 1, &c. if in the Church there had then been any such communion as excluded propriety: for then one had had as much right to any goods or possession, as another.

V. 45. and parted them] Distributing their goods, or the price of their possession, sold.

as every man had need] As far as they were able to relieve their poor brethren.

V. 46. in the temple] Not that they might joyn with the Jews in antiquated Ceremonies of the Law; but because they might there have dayly occasion of testifying the truth of Christ to the multitude there assembling.

and breaking bread] The Syriac hath it domi frangebant portiones; that is, they invited each other home, and eat together; praying God for his benefits, spiritual and temporal. See Isa. 58. 7. This breaking of bread near בתיהון from house to house, understand of their eating and inviting one another, according as some were able and others had need to be relieved, as religious, good, and charitable neighbours use, or ought to do.

V. 47. having favour with all] That is, with many, generally, or with all good men; though they had some implacable enemies among the Pharisees.

the Lord added to the Church &c.] It is mans ministery, but Gods blessing, (see 1 Cor. 3. 7 8.) who suffers not his Ordinance to be fruitlesse (Isa. 55. 10.) though the reprobate be as the Sea to the sweet showers; what ever falleth is presently turned into that invincible bitternesse of the receiver; yet the Elect shall benefit by it: neither is it here to be omitted, that if by the ministry of the Gospel God dayly addeth to his Church, number, society, and external communion of the faithful, such as shall be saved; then is it a dangerous symptome or prognostick of their reprobation who separate from the Church: this is indeed that Temple of God, out of which if any depart, de qua vitæ, ac salutis æterna alienus est, Lactant lib. 4. cap. ult. So Rahabs house typum portabat Ecclesiæ. Cyprian. lib. 1. Ep. 6. hæc a Type of the Church, out of which if any goe, His blood shall be upon his own head.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. The ninth houre] Which was their three of the Clock in the afternoon: the time of their evening, sacrifice, at which the Apostles would be present, not to communicate therein, (See on Chap. 2. 46.) but to conform them the more the shadowes of the Law vvere abolished by Christ, whom they all prefigured.

V. 2. lame from his mothers wombe] Born lame, lame, not by any external violence or accident; but native indisposition of his joynts; so infirm, that they carried him up and down, and it was of no less continuance than fourty years, c. 4. 22. and so incurable by man: This setteth out the Truth and greatness of the miracle done in the Name of Jesus.

called beautiful] Built instead of that of Solomon, and so called.

to ask almes] See c. 9. 8. to sustain him with food, and viands necessary for the preservation of his life, a wretched condition of, and in it self; but if we consider the event we may surely conclude, it was a happy lamenesse, by which he came to the knowledge of Christ, and to feel his Divine Power and Vertue, repairing and curing him: consider the admirable providence of a merciful God, who bringeth some to his knowledge and their happynesse by poverty, some by sicknesse, some by lamenesse, others by other grievous afflictions, imprisonment, plundering, banishment; few by prosperity prove finally happy.

4. look on us] They would have him diligently mark by what power he should be healed; they being well allured of the certain event, by the Spirit of God, would have him mark by whose Name he should be healed and to vvhom he should ascribe the honor and praise for so great a mercy received: as if they said, believe that thou shalt receive something of us: look on us, but believe in Christ Jesus.

V. 5. expecting to receive something] He looked for money, but obtaineth that which no money could have purchased for him.

V. 6. silver and gold have I none] As if he said, If I had wherewith to relieve thee in that thou desirest, I would give it thee, but having none, I give thee that which is better, that which Christ hath given me power freely to distribute.

in the name of Jesus Christ] By the power and command of that JESUS CHRIST, whom in contempt and scorne you called Jesus of Nazareth, be healed, rise up and walke.

V. 7. took him by the right hand] Being confident on the promise of Christ. Matth. 10 8 Mark 16, 17, 18 and immediately his feet, &c.] This speed sheweth that the cure was by divine power, which can do all things how and when God pleaseth.

V. 8. he leaping up] This sheweth a perfect cure and setteth out the truth and excellency of the miracle done in the name of Jesus Christ: here were no remainds of the old malady which are commonly seen long in the moft absolute cures by the art of men, but having at once received perfect foundnesse and vigour of his limbes, he leapeth up, and walketh with the Apostles into the Temple.

praysing God] Attributing his health to God alone: to conceal the mercies of God is ingratitude; to ascribe them to second causes, sacrilege.

V. 9. all the people saw, &c.] So publickly was it done, that none could modestly deny it: therefore the enemies acknowledged, cap. 4. 16. that a notable miracle was done by them.

V. 10. they knew it was he] That it was the same Creeple which they saw daily lying at the gate of the Temple begging, therefore they wondred to see him so suddenly walking: Who they all well knew had been lame his infancy and never able to goe, and that for the space of about fourty years, c. 4. 22. the Syriac addeth here, by way of interpretation, quod is esset ille mendicus qui, &c.

V. 11. all the people ran together to them] With deaf ears, taking no notice of the Name of Jesus by which the lame was restored; they come about the lame man, and those that cured him, looking on them with admiration: Here (all) is again set for (many.)

that is called Solmons,] It is likely that this porch was built in in the place where Solomons formerly ſtood (1 Kings 9 3.) and thence was named ſo. For the Temple built by Solomon being demoliſhed by the Chaldees, Zerubbabel and Ezra in their re-edification thereof, imitated the old pattern as near as they could. See John 10.23. He nameth this place, becauſe hither came that concourſe of people who were witneſſes of theſe things.

V. 12. as though by our own power] He correcteth the abuſe of men, who commonly attribute that to mans power or godlineſs, which appertaineth onely to God.

V. 13. the God of our fathers] Chap. 5. 30. The ſame onely true God, whom Abraham, and all our Holy fathers worſhipped. He ceaceth them firſt the efficient principal cauſe of this miracle, The God of our Fathers ; and next, the final in theſe words, hath glorified his ſonne Jeſus; in that he gave ſuch Divine Power to the Apoſtles to doe theſe miracles in, and by the Name of Jeſus raiſed from the dead, whereby he was mightily declared to be the Sonne of the living God, the Meſſias and Saviour of the world, and in theſe words, the God of Abraham, Iſaac &c. He remembreth them of the promiſes of God concerning their Meſſias, made and often repeated to their fathers, Geneſis, 12.3. Gal. 3.8. that they might know that they now propoſed no other God than the ſame whom all their fathers worſhipped, neither any other Doctrine than that which they all received, and conſtantly in their generations profeſſed.

whom ye delivered &c] hereby he aggravateth their immane wickedneſs that he might move them to repentance, and faith in Chriſt, that they might obtain mercy and be ſaved.

V. 14. but ye denied the Holy One] Matt. 27. 20. John 19. 15. when Pilate had determined to acquit him as innocent, urging the moſt impious and diſhonourable end of their requeſt, which was to put their King to a ſhamefull death, they cried out, We have no King but Cæſar; John 19. 15. whereby they publickly denied Chriſt the Holy one, and long expected Meſsias to be their King and in his ſtead, profeſſed their allegiance to Cæſar, no wayes compelled thereto for fear of the Romans, whoſe Deputy again and again, declared him guiltleſs, and himſelf willing to diſmiſſe him.

deſired a murderer] That is Barabbas, Mark 15 11. John 18.40. This aggravateth and ſets off the horrid atrocity of the malitious Jewes, who having the free choyce which of the two ſhould be ſaved, the Holy Jeſus, or the murderous Barrabas, they would have the murtherer freed, and the innocent and moſt beneficient Jeſus crucified. Sin and wickedneſs knoweth no limit : when once the ſinner forſaketh the known right, he cannot ſtay till he come to Hell.

V. 15. and killeth the Prince of Life] Or Authour of life, Chriſt Jeſus. So ſtill the impious and unjuſt world favoureth the wicked, and perſecuteth the juſt.

V. 16. through Faith in his Name] Becauſe by Faith he apprehended him who was riſen from the dead, whoſe Name he heard of us ; or Name may here import Chriſt himſelfe, or his Power.

V. 17. through ignorance ye did] He excuſeth not their malice; but becauſe ignorance and blinde zeale led many of them into their ſinne, he putteth the penitent among them in hope of pardon. See 1 Tim. 1.13. it is like that which is ſaid, 1 Cor. 2.8. and Luke 23. 34.

your rulers] He meaneth ſome of them ; not all. See Luke 23. 50, 51. John 3. 1.

V. 18. by the mouth of all his Prophets] See verſe 21. The Prophets were many, yet being all inſpired with one Spirit of God, they ſpake all one truth : in reſpect whereof, the Holy Ghoſt here attributeth but one mouth to them all.

V. 19. time of refreſhing ſhall come] It is a figurative manner of ſpeaking, taken from women reposing themſelves in the cool ſhades, to repreſent eternall reſt, after the labours and travels of this life. See Luke 16. 25. Revelation 7. 15, 16. and 14. 13. or He pointeth here at that which Paul writeth Romans 11. 23. 26. the final calling of the Jewes by the Goſpel preached, to which theſe words (which before was preached unto you) may alſo relate, verſe 20.

V. He ſhall ſend Jeſus Chriſt] To judge the world : This he ſaith to thew them, that the contempt of the Goſpel cannot be unpuniſhed ; and alſo to give them aſſurance of comfort, who believe in him.

V. 21. whom the heaven muſt receive] That is contain, having received his humanity which was thenceforth reſident in Heaven, and ſhall be no more here on earth, untill he come to judgement, for he hath a true, and therefore circumſcribed body; not confounded with the Deity, as to have any of its incommunicable properties, as ubiquity, omnipreſence, &c. He hath ſtill a true and reall Body, though glorified, as ours ſhall once be which ſhall not in that ſtate be every where or in more places than one at once.

times of reſtitution of all things] Unto the perfection of the Kingdom of Chriſt, wherein all ſhall be repaired which ſin hath diſordered and ruined ; wherein the creature ſhall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God. See Rom. 8. 21.

ſince the world began] Or from all ages.

V. 22. A Prophet ſhall the Lord] Deut. 18.15. Chap. 7.37.

of your brethren] Of the ſtock of Abraham ; for he ſpake this unto the Jewes, who were the children of Abraham, of whom Chriſt came according to the fleſh ; and ſo was one of their brethren.

V. 23. every ſoul] Every perſon, as Chapter, 2. 27. Romans, 13. 1. Geneſis, 46.26. Here is deſtruction threatned to all contemners of Chriſt and his Miniſters. See Luke 10.12. 16.

V. 24. All the Prophets from Samuel] After Moſes, He nameth Samuel, between whoſe times, the Word of God was pretious, 1 Samuel 3. 1. from Samuel, all the Prophets foretelling of Chriſt, as many as have ſpoken, have foretold of theſe times of grace.

V. 25. ye are the children of Prophets] Or Patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac Iacob, &c. you are they to whom the promiſes, were made, and the Prophets addreſſed, and with whom God made the Covenant, See Rom. 9. 4.

and in thy ſeede] Geneſis, 12. 3. Galathians, 3. 8. Geneſis, 18. 18. and 22. 18. and 26. 4. That is, CHRIST JESUS, of the Seede and Linage of Abraham, according to the fleſh.

V. 26. unto you firſt] To you before the Gentiles, is the Goſpel and Doctrine of Chriſts reſurrection to be preached, Matt. 10. 6. Acts, 1. 8. and 13.46. or ἀναστάσας, raiſed, here is of the ſame ſignification with ἀναστήσω, verſe 22. and Deuteronomy. 18.15, 18. 1 Samuel 2. 35. 1 Kings 14. 14. the word הקים uſed among other things to ſignifie, conſtituit, He appointed to an office; the 70. give ἀναστήσει (See 2 Samuel 23. 1.) So Zacharias ſaid, God hath raiſed up an horn of ſalvation, Luke 1. 69. and the people ſaid, Luke 7. 16. A great Prophet is riſen up among us, that is, being appointed of God, is ſent among us ; for no man taketh this Honour to himſelfe, but he that is called of God, Hebr. 5.4.

to bleſſe you] In giving you Faith and Repentance by the Spirit of regeneration : (Gal. 3. 9. 14.) the bleſsing hath a condition annexed to the promiſe ; if ye convert and repent you of your iniquities ; the Syriack expreſſeth it, בדנחתכון אן, in returning, if ye convert, &c. we muſt perform this condition if we will have the bleſsing: ſin bringeth the curſe : therefore no man can be bleſſed in impenitency, and continuing in ſin.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. Captain of the Temple] Or Ruler : ſome thinke that he was a ruler or commander over the Levites, who miniſtred by turns, and guarded the Temple. See 2 Chronicles, 35.4. 5. but more probably he calleth him στρατηγὸν τοῦ ἱεροῦ, the Ruler or Tribune of theſe ſouldiers, whom the Romans allotted the Jewes for the guard of the Temple : for Pilate ſaid, Matt. 27.65. ye have a watch. See Luke 22. 4. John 18. 12. It was one who had committed to him the guard of the Temple. Vatabl. See alſo Io. Druſ. præterit. lib. 5.

the Sadducees came upon them] Who deny the reſurrection of the body from the dead. See Luke 20. 27. Matt. 22, 23.

V. being grieved] They were angry ; the Syr. giveth it ſome colour had they, for if any man intruded into the Office of a Preacher, it belonged to the Prieſts to ſuppreſſe ſuch audacity ; as alſo to retain the people in the Doctrine of the Law, and Prophets to prevent their ſeducements, by any new Doctrines ; therefore, ſeeing men, to them unknown, or not allowed by any publick authority, preaching in the Temple, they reproved them, not underſtanding, or acknowledging their extraordinary calling, and the main being, that the Sadducees Atheiſtical opinion contradicted, they exaſperated the Prieſts, and Rulers againſt the Apoſtles. See Chap. 23. 8.

V. 3. They laid hands, &c.] Hands not yet clean from the blood of Chriſt : the Argument of the wicked is violence : now the Apoſtles have experience of the truth of Chriſts Words. See Luke 21. 12.

V. 4. many of them which heard the word believed] Many who heard what Peter had ſaid unto the people, Chap. 3. 12. &c. the Word never deſcended in vain. See Iſa. 55. 10.

about five thouſand] Of thoſe who adhered to the Apoſtles ; ſo the blood and in jury of the Martyrs, is ſtill the ſeed of the Church ; the Apoſtles were now ſhut up in priſon ; but the Church flouriſhed the more ſhe was wounded, ὅσῳ γὰρ θλίβεται μᾶλλον, Oecumen. you ſee the working of God manifeſt herein. It is no ſmall demonſtration of his power, defending believers againſt all the rages of Satan, and giving them more boldneſs and conſtancy, by how much more they are oppoſed and in jured : in this number we muſt underſtand the whole Church then being, not a new acceſſion of ſo many : as Peters firſt Sermon, Acts 2. 41. they were about three thouſand ; now they are at his ſecond Sermon encreaſed to five thouſand : thus appeareth the effect of Chriſts promiſe to make them fiſhers of men. See Phil. 1. 13, 14.

V. 5. Rulers and Elders] Which the Hebrewes called זקנים zekinim, old men : theſe were the Judges of their greater Sanhedrim ; they call a Councel to oppoſe the truth by a ſeeming legal proceeding, deſiring that it might appear juſtly damned : but there is no Counſel againſt Chriſt and his Truth. See verſe 25, &c. Pſal. 2, 1, 4. Prov. 21. 30. Iſai. 46. 10.

and ſcribes] See on Luke 20. 1.

V. 6. as many as were of kindred, &c.] Thus ſtrengthened they their party, to countenance the matter : theſe had indeed by Gods appointment the charge of things Eccleſiaſtical : theſe were Aarons ſucceſſours ; for which they had alſo about 1500. years preſcription : theſe were the men, who now flouriſhed among the Jews in honour and wealth yet theſe now combine and aſſemble againſt the Goſpel.

V. 7. by what name] By what authority, and by whoſe command have ye cured the lame man : hence, as in many other things appears their ſtupid, or wilful ignorance, that they would queſtion the authority of an Act which none but God could do : they asked not with any purpoſe to believe in Chriſt, but that they might awe and terrifie the Apoſtles under pretence of their juriſdiction and authority to command in all things to be done in and about the Temple, eſpecially concerning preaching, leſt any new and erroneous doctrine ſhould prevent the people, or any without their Ordination ſhould preſume to teach them.

V. 8. Peter filled with the Holy Ghoſt] Aſſiſted by the grace of Gods Holy Spirit enabling, and emboldening him to ſpeak, who before was terrified by the voyce of a maiden.

V. 9. if we this day] Or Seeing that.

among men] ἐν ἀνθρώποις, that is, as the vulgar hath it, datum hominibus : given to men ; to wit, appointed by God for their ſalvation.

V. 13. unlearned and ignorant men] ἀγράμματοι, illiterate men, men without letters : not brought up in the Schools of the Scribes and Phariſees, but in a ſchool incomparably better ; that is, in the School of Chriſt : therefore this is not ſimply ſpoken (for they had ſpent ſome time in the ſtudy of the Holy Scriptures, and were all Doctors in the Law taught of God, 1 Theſ. 4. 9. John 6. 45. and 14. 26.) but in relation to ordinary means of attaining learning by the Magiſtery and teaching of men, humane learning, or the Phariſees eſteem of them : ἰδιῶται private men, Suidas interpreteth it by the foregoing word, ἰδιώτης, ὁ ἀγράμματος, an unlearned man : and ἀπαίδευτος, an ignorant and unskilful man ; ſuch as private, unimployed men commonly are : the word is of ἴδιος private. See more hereof, Ioh. Druſ. præterit. lib. 5. Theod. Bez. annot. major. on this place.

V. 14. nothing againſt it] It was ſo evident a miracle, and good work, that they could neither deny it, nor ſay ought againſt them, as the Syriack giveth it.

V. 15. conferred among themſelves] they would not let the Apoſtles hear that which an evident and undeniable truth extorted from their own mouths, verſe 16. becauſe they would maintain their credit with men, and ſtill pretend that the Apoſtles were delinquents, worthy of ſuppreſsion and puniſhment, as innovators, and diſturbers of the peace.

V. 16. What ſhall we do, &c ?] Here is a true pattern of malitious injuſtice ; they convent them as malefactours, and then ſeek for, and conſult about ſome accuſation againſt them : ſomething they would do, but knew not what ; becauſe however unjuſt they were, they would by no means ſeem ſo to men : this is the miſery and madneſſe of great ſinners, they had rather ſin ſtill, than ſeem to have ſinned. reſolving to palliate, if they cannot juſtifie their faults, majore facinore.

זקנים zekinim, old men : theſe were the Judges of their greater Sanhedrim ; they call a Councel to oppoſe the truth by a ſeeming legal proceeding, deſiring that it might appear juſtly damned : but there is no Counſel againſt Chriſt and his Truth. among men] ἐν ἀνθρώποις, that is, as the vulgar hath it, datum hominibus : given to men ; to wit, appointed by God for their ſalvation.

V. 13. unlearned and ignorant men] ἀγράμματοι, illiterate men, men without letters : not brought up in the Schools of the Scribes and Phariſees, but in a ſchool incomparably better ; that is, in the School of Chriſt : therefore this is not ſimply ſpoken (for they had ſpent ſome time in the ſtudy of the Holy Scriptures, and were all Doctors in the Law taught of God, 1 Theſ. 4. 9. John 6. 45. and 14. 26.) but in relation to ordinary means of attaining learning by the Magiſtery and teaching of men, humane learning, or the Phariſees eſteem of them : ἰδιῶται private men, Suidas interpreteth it by the foregoing word, ἰδιώτης, ὁ ἀγράμματος, an unlearned man : and ἀπαίδευτος, an ignorant and unskilful man ; ſuch as private, unimployed men commonly are : the word is of ἴδιος private. See more hereof, Ioh. Druſ. præterit. lib. 5. Theod. Bez. annot. major. on this place.

V. 14. nothing againſt it] It was ſo evident a miracle, and good work, that they could neither deny it, nor ſay ought againſt them, as the Syriack giveth it.

V. 15. conferred among themſelves] they would not let the Apoſtles hear that which an evident and undeniable truth extorted from their own mouths, verſe 16. becauſe they would maintain their credit with men, and ſtill pretend that the Apoſtles were delinquents, worthy of ſuppreſsion and puniſhment, as innovators, and diſturbers of the peace.

V. 16. What ſhall we do, &c ?] Here is a true pattern of malitious injuſtice ; they convent them as malefactours, and then ſeek for, and conſult about ſome accuſation againſt them : ſomething they would do, but knew not what ; becauſe however unjuſt they were, they would by no means ſeem ſo to men : this is the miſery and madneſſe of great ſinners, they had rather ſin ſtill, than ſeem to have ſinned. reſolving to palliate, if they cannot juſtifie their faults, majore facinore.

V. 17. but that it ſpread no further, &c.] They count it a principal piece of policy, to keep the people ignorant, that they may the more eaſily beguil them : it is a great, but miſchievous skill, in ſuch motions to leſſen the light, that their legerdemain may not be diſcovered by the ſpectatours.

ſtraitly threatned them] ἀπειλῇ ἀπειλησώμεθα, threatning, let us threaten ; an uſual Hebrew Pleonaſme ; for, let us ſtrictly, or ſtraitly threaten them.

to no man in this name] That is, that they preach concerning Chriſt no more. They more valued their credit with men than their own or the peoples ſalvation ; therefore however convinced in conſcience, they would hide the light of Chriſt from the people.

V. 18. not to ſpeak at all] That is, not to ſpeak any word concerning Jeſus, that he had taught, done or ſuffered, and do no more miracles in his name, or pretend to his power for the doing of the ſame.

V. 19. judge ye] we appeal to your own conſciences herein : God commandeth us to preach in this name, you under pretence of your authority, command us not to preach ; ſhall we now obey God for you ? will God judge this right, will he excuſe us, if againſt his commands we obey yours ?

V. 20. We cannot but ſpeake the things] We cannot chuſe but obey Chriſt, who hath commanded us ſo to do : for the diſpenſation is committed unto us, and woe ſhall be to us if we preach not the Goſpel. See 1 Cor. 9. 16 it is the power of God to ſalvation, Rom. 1. 16. How fearfull a facrilledge were it, to with-hold it from the Iſrael of God. We have heard, ſeen and believed theſe things, and therefore ſpeak. See Pſalm 116. 10. Acts 17. 16. I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeake any more in his name (ſaid the Prophet Jeremie in his great tentation, Jer. 20. 9.) but his word was in my heart as a burning fire ſhut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not ſtay ; for the grace (and Spirit) of Prophecie, incited him unwilling to ſpeak, ſaith Theodoret in Ier. where the Spirit of God is in the Miniſter, no fear or threatnings of men, can ſo ſilence him, but that at laſt, the Word of Truth ſhall break out.

V. 21. all men glorified God] All that believed, or many men : they found no fault in them, and without ſome colorable pretence of Juſtice, durſt not harm or puniſh them for fear of the people, who prayſed God for the good which he had done by them.

V. 22. above fourty years old] It may ſeem ſtrange, that being ſo old, and dayly laid at the gate of the Temple, into which Jeſus ſo often entred (conſidering that it appeareth not, that he ever denied to heal or cure any that entreated it) He did not receive help from him all this time : but certain it is, he was reſerved unto this time, and means of healing by the all-diſpoſing providence of God, for the further confirmation of the Apoſtles, and truth of the Goſpel.

this miracle of healing] Gr. τὸ σημεῖον τοῦτο, &c. this ſign, See Chap. 3 7, 8.

V. 23. they went to their owne] To glorifie God, and to encourage them, by letting them know how God had aſſiſted them.

V. 24. they lift up their voyce] Either all ſpeaking this ſame thing, as they were guided by one Spirit ; or which is moſt probable to avoid confuſion, (that the company might diſtinctly hear, and ſay, Amen.) ſome one or few in the name of the reſt, thus prayed.

V. 25. Why did the Heathen rage] Pſalm 2. 1. למה lammah why ? what cauſe had they to rage againſt the Lord ? or. to what end do they rage ? what will their ſucceſſe be, who fight againſt God ?

V. 26. againſt the Lord] That is, againſt Chriſt Jeſus his Truth, and his Miniſters ; Whoſoever oppoſeth, deſpiteth or perſecuteth theſe, riſe up to oppoſe and perſecute Chriſt himſelfe. See Numbers 16 11. Luke 10.16. Acts 9. 4. 1 Theſ. 4. 8. Thus did Saul, the Princes of the Philiſtims, and others ſtand up againſt David, who was a Type of Chriſt : ſo here : Herod, Pontius Pilate with the Romanes and Jewes, conſpired againſt the ſacred Perſon of CHRIST himſelf.

V. 27. againſt thy Holy Childe Jeſus] Thy Holy Son Jeſus, παῖδα here, as v. 25. is ſet, not ſo much to import years, as dearneſſe, or obſequiouſneſſe to God, as c. 3. 13. So Joſhua, though in years a man, is called נער nahar, the child or ſervant of Moſes, Exod. 33. 11. if ſuch plots and combinations were againſt Holy Jeſus ; let us in all our ſufferings run with patience, looking up unto the Authour and finiſher our Faith, let us conſider Him that ſuffered ſuch things for us (See Hebr. 12. 1, 2, 3, 4) it is no diſhonour to us to ſuffer of our brethren that which Chriſt ſuffered of his, nec illi gloria eſt facere, quod fecerit Judas, nor is it any glory to them, to do that which Judas did, Cyprian. lib. 1. epiſt. 3.

V. 28. for to do whatſoever] Though they meant nothing leſs than to obey God in cruciſying Chriſt, but had ſeveral other ends, yet God ordered this to our redemption. See Acts 13. 27. Iſa. 10. 7. thy thy hand and counsel] Thy power and thy providence: for as Cyprian forcefully saith well: nihil interest quis tradat aut faviat, cum Deus tradi permittat, quos disponit coronaritis skilleth nothing who betrayeth or rageth, seeing God permitteth those to be delivered up (or betrayed) whom he appointeth to be crowned.

V. 29. behold their threatnings] Consider what they threaten: divert their rage and malice, who enterprise against thee and thy truth.

and grant, &c.] Because God onely can give patience, constancy and perseverance in truth, and also boldness to preach the Gospel, they pray him to give it, who well knew they could not have these gifts of themselves; here is the Saints refuge in all their wants and necessities, earnest prayer.

V. 30. by the name of thy holy child Jesus] See on v. 10. 27. by the power, and in the name of thy Holy Son Jesus: for their aim and hearts desire was to advance his Honour and Truth.

V. 31. place was shaken] By this sensible signe, God shewed his presence, and readinesse to heare and confirm them in their ministration.

all filled with the Holy Ghost] They were strengthned, and enabled with greater confidence and largeness of heart to speak. Mark here, first the result of impious Counsel: the Jewes consulted against the gospel, laboured to suppress it by power, threatned and charged the Apostles to speak no more in the name of Jesus; God gave them greater courage to preach it, and more excellent gifts than before: all opposition more propagateth truth. Secondly, here it appeareth, that the safest refuge in danger, and the happiest issue of fear is, when it awakes us to a more fervent calling on the name of God; which to the perplexed soul is, as the ark to the tyred dove: as David said Psal. 116. 7. Return unto thy rest. O my soul: in which fence it is true which Gregor. Nazianzen said, epist. 16. Κάμνουα ψυχὴ, ἐγγὺς δὲ Θεῦ the weary soul is near God.

V. 32. were of one heart] So unanimous, as if they had all but one and the same heart, and one soul; because they were all united and guided by one Spirit of God, whence you may know, that where strife, envy, malice, and contention is, there an evil spirit governeth. See Jam. 3. 14, 15, 16. &c.

was his own] They gave, as if the needy brethren had as good interest in their goods, as their selves who were owners thereof. See on c. 44.

V. 33. witnesse of the resurrection, &c.] This by a Synechdoche is put for the whole gospel: this the Sadduces lately quarrelled at, therefore they testified it the more powerfully.

great grace was upon them all] As God gave them that great grace of real charity (with which the present world is little acquainted) so was this very effectual for the gaining a good opinion among the people, both concerning their persons and doctrine, which they saw so admirably exemplified; and thereby they were the more easily invited to joyn themselves to their society whom they perceived so far from any secular and worldly ends, that they gave freely what they had to the relief of others who wanted.

V. 34. any among them that lacked] That is, who was destitute and not relieved.

for as many as were possessours, &c.] Not that they who believed, did all of them sell all that they had, but as need required: as if it were said, the owners did not onely relieve those who wanted, with their rents divided among them; but as there were further necessity, they spared not the Fee-simple, but sold of that also.

V. 35. down at the Apostles feet] That is, submitted it to their disposal: this intimated, as Oecumenius notes, τὸ πολλὴν τιμὴν, &c. that great Honour and reverence of the Hearers towards the Apostles.

according as he had need] They who most wanted, had most relief given them.

V. 36. Joses, who by the Apostles was surnamed Barnabas] This Levite was of Cyprus: he is mentioned as an example of that which was said; the Apostles named him Barnabas (the sonne of consolation, or a comforter) not onely for that he gave so liberally to comfort the needy Christians; but probably in respect of those excellent gifts he had in comforting afflicted minds of hearers. Hieronym. de scriptor. eccles. calleth him Iosephe, so also many Greek copies: so also the Syriac. Others made Ioses. Some, but improbably think him called so from the Syriac word בר bar and נבא nabba consolation of the Verb בא baia, consolatus est, (c. 20. 1. and 16. 40. &c. Ephesians, 6. 2. Colossians, 4. 8. &c.) others more probably derive it from בר bar, sonne, and the Hebrew word נבא naba to prophesie, intimating him a son of consolation in his gift of Prophesie: and indeed a principal part of the Prophets, or Ministers function is to comfort the hearers, by applying the promises of the Gospel unto their Consciences. This Barnabas Chap. 11 24. is said to be a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost, that is, an excellent Prophet or Teacher: a Man of excellent gifts.

V. 37. having land, sold it] Here is rehearsed one instance of that is said, v. 34.

at the Apostles feet] See on v. 35.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. NAmed Ananias with Saphira, &c.] The scope of this History is to shew how odious to God that perfidiousness is, which counterfeiting sanctity would impose upon God, as if he saw not what men do: (for otherwise, Ananias giving a part, had been commendable) so great a mischief is Hypocrisie, so dangerous the perversion of an Holy purpose and the withdrawing of things consecrated to the Churches use (though by himself who gave) that the sacrilegious perished by detaining a part of that whole which he would seem to give: by this was Ananias (as Chrysostome saith) κλέπτων τὰ ἑαυτῆς φοιτᾶσις, taken stealing his own goods. It is the heart, not the hand which God looketh into: the poor Widow (Luke 21. 3.) cast in but two Mites, and it was better accepted than all those who offered greater sums. Here Ananias selleth a possession, and presenteth the price, reserving to himself, but a part thereof, and yet is condemned for it: if he that taketh from the Church but a little of that which was his own, be sacrilegious, and stricken dead for the same: what punishment will the same Divine Justice lay on him, who by fraud or violence taketh away the possessions wherewith other men endowed the Church? See more hereof chrysost. in Act. hom 12.

V. 2. kept back part of the price] Syriac, he hid apart. So he did; for pretending to be as charitable as the best, he sold, and seemed to bring the whole price, as others did, but he concealed a part, which he would reserve to himself and his wife. So Suidas and Chrysost. me interpret νοσφιζόμενον ὑφαιρούμενον, surripientem, intervertentem —— ἰδιοποιούμενον which Æmilius Portus also rendreth Illum qui res aliquas suas facti, subtrahentem, impropriating or stea.ing. See what ambition will do: Ananias would not come behind the best in seeming charitable: therefore though he was loath to part with his money; yet you see how dear he would purchase the good Opinion of Men. In the mean time, not considering that God saw him, and would once severely revenge it.

V. 3. but Peter said] The matter being Divinely revealed to Peter; or he might know the possession, and conjecture the value of it; the first conjecture seemeth most probable.

to lye to the Holy Ghost] that thou shouldest thus lye, or deceive: of ψεύδω, fallo, frustro. So Sophocles cited also by Suidas, μὴ ψεύσαι —— τῆς ἐλπίδος ἣ πρὸ Θ. ψευσαμένη σε deceive not your approaching hope. So mentita auspicia, Cicer. Lying presages, deceiving hope. He calleth this lying to the Holy Ghost: for when they had dedicated the possession to God, for the relief of his servants, the fraud and falsehood concerned his interest, and this their seeming Charity was Hypocrisie and lying to God: though they so behaved themselves in this business, as if they had to deal with men onely, not with God: they presumed that Man could not discover this sacrilege, and detention of that which was consecrated to the use of the Church, neither considered they that God would.

V. 4. while it remained] ἕως μένον σοὶ ἔμενε; remaining, did it not remain to thee? That is, it was thine own rights; thou mightest justly have kept the possession to thy self, or the price thereof, to thine own uses, neither would that have made thee unworthy of the society of Christians: the fault is aggravated in that he was urged by no necessity: had the Apostles compelled him to sell, there might have been some colour for his detention of some part of the price; but now, it being his own to dispose of, his sinne was, that dedicating the whole to the Churches use, he kept back a part thereof. Here appeareth, that they had no Law or Decree made, or in use among Primitive Christians, to alienate and sell their possessions; for Peter clearly sheweth, that Ananias might justly have kept his own in land or money: For otherwise, he would have said, it remained not to thee, but to the Church, by right of community. They who now would have all things in common, have no ground from these practises of the Primitive Church, as they pretend: their community was not compulsory, but free and voluntary: otherwise, it had neither been thankeworthy, nor such a leading example of Piety in the particulars, as the Holy Ghost here setteth out: It is considerable which Chrysostome saith, hom. 12. See (saith he) how they (who were owners of possessions) permitted not the Apostles to sell (them) but the (owners) their selves sold, and gave the price to them, to distribute. Neither could they have given them, nor the Apostles justly received; had not the giver been bona fidei possessores, true and lawfull proprietors. It is theft without the owners consent, to give that which is not our own, and no less to receive it.

was it not in thine own power] No man compelled thee to sell and give; but to make God a Proffer of all, and to perform but a part; this was to tempt God (as verse 9.) to try whether he saw and vvould revenge.

thou hast not lied unto men, but, &c.] Thou hast not lied to us onely, or chiefly, but unto God, whose interest thou hast invaded, by concealing that which thine owne pretence made sacred

V. 5. hearing

V. 5. hearing these words fell down] Thus God sometimes presently revengeth sinnes, to terrifie others, and to restrain them from the like, as here: So God is known when he judgeth, Psalm 9. 16. Neither may any think sacriledge no sinne now, because God doth not presently punish it with sudden death, as here: the punishment following will once shew it an abominable sin, and come too soon on him on whom it ever cometh. He is the same God still of unchangeable justice: and if we mark well, this age hath afforded many remarkable examples, of sacriledge heavily punished; eternity will shew innumerably more.

V. 6. and the young men arose] Which were of the Church, they arose, that is, set themselves about it; an usual Hebraisme, Josh. 8. 3. and 24. 9. Jud. 20. 8, &c.

V. 7. came in] To the Apostles and others with them, in the Temple, or private house, where they used to assemble. See chap. 2. 46. See also v. 12. Unto the foregoing example of divine justice, Luke annexeth the narration of another in Saphira, who consenting to her husbands sin, shared with him in the like punishment: to the evidence of the truth of this history, the circumstance of time is recorded: about the space of three hours after Ananias was dead, Saphira his wife, not knowing what was done, came into the place where the Apostles were.

V. 8. yea for so much] She who had agreed with her husband what to say, thus vailed her sin with a lye: a fault too common now a dayes, to endeavour to cover sin with sin. She knew, and her conscience told her it was a lye, and so a grevious sin; yet she who consented to her husbands sin, addeth sin to sin. Such is the sinners misery, one sin unrepented, draweth on other sins, until destruction come.

V. 9. to tempt the Spirit of the Lord, &c.] It is the same in effect which he said, verse 4 to lye unto God, or in the presence of God: as often as men sin against their own consciences, they do presumptuously tempt God, or try whether God will be just or no.

behold the feet of them] Meaning they that buried thy husband are returned: and here also by a divine revelation, he foretelleth of her death presently to ensue.

V. 10. then fell she down straitway] They that are in the same faults must expect the like punishments or worse (except in case of timely repentance) which being prolonged are ever greatned. It were well to be wished, that the sacrilegious of these times would timely be warned by these examples; and remember that it is the same God of unchangeable justice now looking on this sin, who so severely punished it in these two: and that detaining that which they have received any-wayes from other unjust possessours, is consenting with them in the same crime, and that, except in case of restitution and true repentance, they must once suffer grievous punishment, because God is impartially just: nor will it availe the hypocrite that he maketh conscience of some sinne, or sinnes, if he wilfully dispence with any; the Apostle saying --- thou that abhorrest idols, committest thou sacrilege? Rom. 2. 22.

V. 11. and great fear came upon all] All that saw or heard of this severe judgement of God, which was to warn all to be sincere, and to beware of hypocrisie. Such restraints flesh and blood have sometimes need of, to make them know that it is a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, Hebr. 10. 31. See 1 Sam. 6. 19, 20. 2 Sam. 6. 7, 9.

V. 12. many signs and wonders] Miraculous things done by the Apostles, whereby not onely the power of Christ, and his justice in this example of Ananias and Saphira, but also his mercy appeared in healing all diseases, that thereby they might be invited to the faith; and these were necessary to the Gospel, as the other for restraining those corruptions wherewith Satan would otherwise have infected the Churches minority.

they were all with one accord] This he saith, to shew that none among them was schismatical, to forsake their publick assemblies, or in neglect thereof to hold private Conventicles. Of Solomons Porch, see chap. 3. 11. Here appeareth their constant resolution, to testifie the truth of Jesus, from which no fear or danger could now deter them.

V. 13. of the rest, durst no man joyn himself to them] They were so terrified with this example against Hipocrites, that they who were not sincere, durst not now make false shewes of religion, contemn the Apostles, or encounter with them by argument.

V. 14. believers were the more added] The example of Ananias, &c. was so far from discouraging men from Christianity, that it more encreased the Church: these evil branches cut off the Lords vine, the Church, flourished the better.

V. 15. into the streets] Or in every street, the Apostles did so many and admirable miracles, in healing the sick, restoring the lame, &c. and that so publickly, notwithstanding the rage and vigilant malice of the chief Priests and Pharisees; that the people brought their sick out into the open streets to be cured even such as could not come out themselves, but were by their friends brought out of doors on beds and couches.

the shadow of Peter passing by] See also c. 19. 12. Not that the body of the Apostle, much lesse the shadow, or garments, had any such inherent vertue, as to heal the sick; but God exercised the power of healing so abundantly, as that the weakest and otherwise improbable means were made effectual thereto; that men might know that it was his power onely, testifying the exhibition of the Messias.

V. 16. bringing sick folks] Hearing the rumour of the Apostles healing: and this was by the providence of God, that thereby the truth of Jesus might appear, and the Gospel be more propagated.

V. 17. filled with indignation] Or envy, or preposterous emulation: ζῆλος, in Scripture signifieth many things; sometimes good, 2 Cor. 9. 2. Gal. 4. 18. Tit. 2. 14. But here it importeth an evil affection, as c. 7. 9. and 13. 45. and 17. 5. 1 Cor. 3. 3. and 13. 4. &c. Here was indeed a zeal, but without knowledge; which is but a kind of blind heat (so Christ taxed the ignorance of the Saducees, Mat. 22. 29.) violent zeal without knowledge, is but as strength in a blind champion, serving to destroy himself and others: Holy zeal, is to Religion as the natural heat to the body, wherein the life thereof is preserved; but it must be fetcht (like that coal wherewith one of the Seraphims touched the Prophets lips, Isa. 6. 6.) from the altar, and word of God, not humane phancies.

V. 18. put them in the common prison] Where common Malefactors were put: here is a fruit of blind zeal: they were not able to deal with the Apostles by Scriptures or reason; therefore they betake themselves to open violence. See John 16. 2. Luke 21. 12.

V. 19. but the angel of the Lord] God could otherwise have delivered them, but thus he would now confirm them when they should see by experience, that he gave his Angels charge over them, and had made them ministring Spirits for their good. See Psal. 34. 8. Hebr. 1. 14.

V. 20. stand and speak in the temple] There, was a time when Christ would not have them preach, (somethings afterwards to be preached, Mat. 16 20. and 17. 9. But now was that season of which he said Mat 10. 27. preach on the house tops; that is, in publick: Gods dispensations have their times and seasons: and he deliver-eth his, that they may more boldly preach the truth.

all the words of this life] See John 6. 68. That is, the Gospel which is the Word of life eternal; which directeth believers to eternal life in Christ.

V. 21. when they heard that, they entred] When they had received commission so to do, they feared not the most apparent dangers, but committed themselves and the issue to Gods providence: Faith adviseth not with flesh and blood, which would easily fugge-t; Behold Lord, they sought our lives but now, for preaching there, and shall we expose our selves to their malice by a further provocation? but presently they obey Gods Word, to whom they lived, and for whom they now feared not to dye.

but the high priest] Malice is restlesse: they call a Council, (that is, other Priests and Scribes, their Colleagues, as the Syriac giveth it; not that Sanhedrin, or great Council of 71. Judges which far on highest causes within their jurisdiction. See Mat. 5. 22.) they must seem just and legal who least intend to be so: they send to the prison, confident that they had the Apostles sure enough.

V. 22. and found them not] So easily can God when he pleaseth, frustrate the counsels and expectations of the enemies. These very servants were witnesses of their fighting against God, by whose divine power they must know the Apostles were delivered out of prison; so closely guarded, that they could not esse have made any escape, but they that wilfully shut their eyes, cannot see things in the cleare-t light.

V. 23. the prison truly found we shut, &c.] This miraculous deliverance might have converted the adversaries, who might easily have concluded, that a Divine Power, against which there is no striving, had delivered these prisoners, the doors being all fast, shut with all safety, ἐν πάσῃ ἀσφαλείᾳ, with all possible diligence which might secure them, the Guard watching without: but their hearts were hardned, and they could think of nothing but the impious and vain pursuance of their own counsels against the truth of Christ.

V. 24. they doubted, &c.] διηπόρουν; it cometh of ἀπορέω, ad angustias detrusus inexplicabiles hæsito: it is commonly said of those who know not which way to turn themselves; such shall be the condition of the wicked, when they shall see the evident presages of Gods eminent judgement, Luke 21. 25. Thus Gods judgements often startle the wicked, but convert them not.

V. 25. then came one and told them, &c.] This message troubleth them more: while they are consulting to destroy the mes-or preaching, they hear that they are preaching again in the Temple. There is no counsel against God. Prov. 21. 30.

V. 26. then went the captain with the officers] See on c. 4. 1. No doubt they sent now with greater indignation than before, as conceiving their authority contemned: yet durst they not use violence as before, because they feared the people might take part; they feared Men but not God: yet he maketh that fear of a guilty conscience a bridle to restrain the rage of the wicked.

V. 27. set them before the council] Here was some shew of equity; to hear them before they would condemn them.

V. 28. did not we straitly command you] Chap. 4. 18 The enraged high Priest charged them with three pretended crimes: first contumacy against their authority: did not we straitly command you, &c.

behold ye have filled Jerusalem, &c.] Here was the second charge of schisme and heresie: that was by their law, likewise capital, Deut. 13.

this mans blood upon us] That is to make us seem guilty of Christs death: thus Hypocrites will be guilty, but not seem so. This was their third charge: it seemed to be an intolerable disgrace and dishonour to the chief Priests and Elders, to be accused openly of injustice and shedding innocent blood.

V. 29. we ought to obey God rather than man] That is, when men command or forbid us any thing contrary to the Word of God; we ought to obey God, and not Man. See c. 4. 19. Dan. 3. 18.

V. 30. the God of our fathers] Chap 3. 13.

V. 31. his right hand] τῇ δεξιᾷ αὐτοῦ. God with his mighty power hath set up him to be a Prince and Saviour. See c. 2. 36. This is the sum of the Apostles doctrine, the ground on which the anchor of their souls fastened, who shall be saved. The office of Christ is described by two things. First in that he is a Prince to govern his Kingdom, to beat down the rebellious, and to protect his servants and subjects. Secondly in that he is also a Saviour, as his name Jesus importeth, and the Angel interpreted it, Mat. 1. 21. herein he declareth, as their impiety who would strive against their Prince and Saviour; so their madnesse who persecute him whom God exalteth by his mighty power. See Hsal. 2, 4, 6. Phil. 2. 9.

to give repentance] This sheweth how Christ reigneth in and for his, giving them hearts to repent, that through him they may be reconciled to God, Rom. 5. 1. This they say, to win (if it were possible) some of their enemies to Christ, shewing them the onely way to be saved in him: it is no more in mans power to repent, than to create himself; this Christ giveth by the Spirit of regeneration, and hereunto is remission of sins most certainly annexed. So that the Jews might hence have gathered an argument against despair, though they had crucified Christ if they could but have repented. See Luke 24. 47. and c. 2. 38.

V. 32. whom God hath given to them that obey him] That obey Christ, who believe in him; the Syriac hath it: indeed there is no true obedience without faith, nor faith without obedience. Oecumenius gives this sense; that he giveth remission of sins, we are witnesses, and the holy Ghost also, who would not have come upon us, οὐκ μὴ πεπίστευον αἱ ἁμαρτίαι ἐλ ἄφεσιν, except our sins had first been forgiven; and that the Jews, notwithstanding their sin in crucifying Christ should not be deprived of their share in the same gift, if they would now repent and obey: but we must not understand that God gave the Spirit of regeneration to any because he obeyed: the effect cannot precede the cause; the holy Ghost giveth an heart to believe and obey, without which we can neither believe nor obey. But if this (whom God hath given) relate to the extraordinary gifts of the holy Ghost, (as speaking tongues, power of healing, &c.) then the sense may be, as Oecumenius intimateth; God gave these extraordinary graces, to us whom he made obedient to the faith, and so will he to you, if ye will obey. Now the sum of this argument is, that Christ is thus exalted: First we are eye-witnesses, who eat and drank, and conversed with him after his resurrection, and after his charge given us to testifie these things, saw him ascending into heaven. Secondly, the holy Ghost witnesseth the same in our gifts and tongues and power to do these miracles (which your selves have seen, or otherwise certainly know) in the name and by the power of Jesus whom you crucified; which miracles he had been utterly impossible to have done by his command and power, except he had not onely lived being raised from the dead, but also were so highly exalted, to glory and supream power, as to be able to give us ability to do all that he herein commandeth us.

V. 33. they were cut to the heart] διεπρίοντο, σκίλοι, is properly to cut with a Saw: here it significeth a bitter perturbation of anger; taken from them that saw or grinde their teeth for anger: the Syriac giveth it, they were cut asunder with anger: ready to kill them: with anger and indignation, so that they consult again to kill them: and why are they so angry? the Apostles giving them no uncivil or provoking words, it must needs appear an influence of Satan, who hateth all truth; therefore they (as our moderne hereticks and schismaticks) regard not the most evident proofes from Scripture; but burn with a devilish and revengful malice against the Apostles.

V. 34. Gamaliel] This was Pauls Tutor, chap. 22. 3. whom Gods providence stirred up to moderate and allay the precipitate heat and fury of the rest of the Council who were resolved to destroy the Apostles: God sometimes raiseth up friends among our enemies to speak for us and to save us. See Gen. 37. 20, 21. Joh. 7. 50, 51.

V. 35. take heed to your selves] Do nothing rashly, and out of passion: but advise well, before you enterprize that which may hurt your selves.

V. 36. rose up Theudas] A notorious Impostor; who under pretence of being a Prophet, moved sedition among the Jews: now he speaketh hereof as of a thing not very fresh, nor much before those times: this Council was held about the year of our Lord 35. See Is. Casaubon, exerc. 2. N. 57. and Theod. rer. in loc.

V. 37. in the dayes of taxing] The insurrection which this Judas the Galilean (not Judas the Gaulonite) made against the Romans, was when they sent out another tax, after that which is mentioned, Luke 2. 2. See Isaac Casaubon, Exercit. 2. N 59. Joh. Drusius praterit. lib. 5. and Theod Bez. ibid.

V. 38. now I say refrain] He perswadeth them to moderation by a Dilemma: either this work which these Apostles and followers of Christ act, is of Man, or of God: if of Men, it will come to nought without your troubling your selves with them: but if it be of God, you can never reasonably hope to prevail against it: it is vain and impious to fight against God.

V. 39. lest happily ye be found, &c.] μήποτε; lest, that is, beware, take heed lest, &c. It is a concise and short manner of speaking: as Gen. 3. 22. lest he put his hand, &c. That is, prospiciamus ne, &c. See Mat. 25. 9. Budæus noteth that this word, is not so much, percontantis, as addubitantis & addubitanter deterentis.

V. 40. When they had beaten them] This kind of punishment, it seemeth, the Romans permitted the Jews to execute within their Synagogues, but not publickly. Mat. 10. 12. 2 Cor 11. 24.

they commanded that, &c.] In some things they are advised by Gamaliel, but other things they act against his counsel, in that they beat them and prohibited their preaching, in which they but sought against God.

V. 41. rejoycing that they were counted worthy, &c.] They were not Stoicks, men not sensible of injuries and disgraces, but they who had in their infirmity forsaken their Master, now in strength of Spirit, rejoyce that they may suffer for his name: they remember now that Christ told them, that they are blessed who suffer so, Mat. 5.

V. 42. and daily in the Temple, &c.] Constancy accompanieth their joy: they are not deterred by their enemies threatnings, but preach the word freely, in season and out of season. (2 Tim. 4. 2) Oppositions of truth, are as the conflicts of the wind with fire. Oppositions of truth, are as the conflicts of the wind with fire, which enflame it more: such is the admirable work of Gods spirit giving confidence in Christ, and assurance of victory in him: gaudet Petrus in verberibus, qui ante in verbo timebat. Gregor. homil. in Evang. Peter rejoyceth in stripes, who before, was afraid at (a damsels) words.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. THe Grecians against the Hebrews] These were Jewes of Palestine, which are here called Hebrews, born and bred there; and Jewes of Greece, here called Grecians: whose ancestors were Jewes, though they had dwelt in Greece, and used the Greek tongue as their native. See Jo. Drus. praeter. l. 5.

were neglected in their daily ministration] They were not duely relieved by those who had the care and oversight of the poor.

V. 2. and serve tables] To make provision for, or serve at tables, in their ordinary diet provided for the poor; and at their feasts of charity; because they had greater work in hand; that is, to preach the word of God, as, verse 4.

V. 3. Look out among you seven men, &c.] Thus they shew them a means to take away the grievance, and to compose the difference, that they may hold unity, and establish some discipline and order, without which no Church can subsist: they name seven, not tying other Churches to that number, but considering what was sufficient for them; and they shew how Church Officers ought to be qualified, as in the following words appeareth --- of honest report, &c.

V. 4. but we will give our selves continually, &c.] They meant not to assign the charge to some surrogates, or deputies, that their selves might live at ease, but to follow a more principal part of their ministry, consisting in these two specified duties, prayer and ministry of the word a proselyte of Antioch] See chap. 2. 10.

V. 5. Philip] Chap. 21. 8.

V. 6. and laid their hands on them] By this imposition of hands the Primitive Church signified a confecration of a man to God, in some office or design, as chap. 13. 3. this rite the Hebrews used in their solemn sacrifices, and in their prayers, and private blessings, as Gen. 48. 14. Mat. 19. 13 and this same rite the Christian Church used in ordination of Ministers, as here, so 1 Tim. 5. 22. and many other places it appeareth; to avoid intrusion into that sacred office; and to signifie the approbation of the Church thereby declaring them fit, and authorized to their ministry, by it, as by their publick seal. See 1 Tim. 4. 14. 2 Tim. 1. 6. Hebr 6. 2. Which being now cast off, and despised by schismaticks, hath brought in so much confusion and misery upon the Church: every vain babler now, (without any ordination by imposition of their hands whom God trusted with that power) intruding at his pleasure, into the Office of the Ministry.

V. 7. obedient to the faith] That is, the doctrine of the Gospel, Rom. 1. 5 and 16. 26. the sense is, that now many of the Levitical Priests (before, the most implacable enemies to Christ, and the most active adversaries of the Gospel) were converted to the faith, and truth of the Gospel; though it be most probable, that that this (πολὺς τὸ ὄχλος, a great multitude, or company) rather relates to the Jews in general, than peculiarly to the Priests, the Syriac gives it, & populus multus ex Judeis obedientiæ fidei, much people of the Jews obeyed; multitudes, among whom were also some, or many Priests.

V. 8. Full of faith] That is, of an excellent measure of faith, and powerful in miracles.

V. 9. certaine of the Synagogue] It is likely that the Romanes permitted other nations, having trade at Jerusalem, to have their Synagogues, or Church by themselves.

the Libertines] Thus the Romans called the issue of their slaves when they were manumised, or set at liberty, as Beda thinketh, Chrysost. hom. 15. taketh the Libertines for any whom the Romans manumissed. Philo, legat. ad Caium, cited by Theod. loc. describes them thus; that Tiberius suffered a good part of the City beyond the Tiber, to be inhabited of the Jews, whereof the most part were Libertines, who being taken captives and brought home, were afterward set at liberty, and not compelled to change any thing of their countries rites; all which makes it more probable, that it was not a colledge for youth, but a Synagogue for those who came from Rome, or other places to Jerusalem, being men of this condition.

of Cilicia] A countrey in Asia the lesser, in which was Tarsus, the City where Paul was born, c. 22. 3.

V. 10. They were not able to resist] Here also was the promise of Christ, Luke 21. 15. fulfilled. So much were these sophisters deceived, who promised themselves an easie encounter with, and victory over, an unlearned antagonist; they knew not that they had to deal with the invincible wisdom of the holy Ghost speaking in him.

V. 11. then they suborned men that said] They instructed false witnesse what they should say against Stephen: to such artifices, Satans instruments still turn themselves, not able to make their party good by Scripture, and evidence of truth, they flee to false witnesse, lies, and calumnies.

we have heard him speak, &c.] The devil the father of liars, as also his children put forward false witnesses are ashamed of no lies: otherwise they would not have accused this Saint of blasphemy: what was the matter of that blasphemy they accused him of, is set down v. 14. they counted it high blasphemy for any man to speak concerning the abrogation of the ceremonial Law; because they could not for the vail laid over their hearts, look unto Jesus the end of the Law; or the demolishing of the Temple of Jerusalem, with which possibly they dreamed, the World must have its end. Now because Stephen probably preached the abolition of the Ceremonial Rites, when all was fulfilled in Christ the truth and substance of all legal shadows; they prefently conceive that he preached blasphemy. 'Tis a common folly, ignorant men accusing them of errour, whom they understand not; discover their malice and ignorance.

V. 12. They stirred up the people] Boing foiled in their disputes, they burn with revenge, composing their plot against him, first by suborned witnesses, next by clamouring among the people, and complaining of him to the Priests: and then by laying violent hands on him to convent him before the council.

V. 13. To speak blasphemous words, &c.] The accusations run very high; first that he spake words against that holy city, and the temple; and secondly that he also blasphemed the Law: it is usual for the most impious to accuse the servants of God, of greatest impieties: so they accused the most Holy Jesus: such accusations fasten not on the just, (for God will finally judge) but render the accusers the more unjust and guilty.

V. 14. That this Jesus, &c.] This they spake in scorn and contempt: so they misconstrued, and wrested the words of this holy Preacher; as the enemies of Religion still do.

the customes] Or rites.

V. 15. as it had been the face of an Angel] With an admirable splendor and Majesty, such as we read of Moses, Exod. 34. 30. an argument of a good conscience, and the Divine presence of the Holy Ghost assisting him.

CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. ARe these things so] This saith he, having heard the accusations of the false witnesses; as if he would give Stephen a fair liberty to defend himself, whom he yet prejudged, resolved before hand to condemn any thing which should be alleaged in defence of the truth of Christ. See also John 9. 22. therefore he demanded not why Stephen preached, as he did, but whether he preached so, as intimating that if he preached Christ, he was to be condemned.

V. 2. men, brethren, and fathers, &c.] Thus he stileth them, because how ever they were professed enemies of the Gospel, yet were they governours of the Church of Israel, which God had not yet rejected and thus he would gain attention to that which he spake, in hope it might take with some of them, for whom he also prayed; and so did it. See chap. 8. 1, 9, 19, 20.

the God of glory] See 1 Cor. 2. 3. He to whom all honour and glory is due, Rev. 4. 11. and 5. 12. Rom. 11. 36. this he saith to distinguish him from all false gods; and to shew that he worshipped and preached none but the true God.

when he was in Mesopotamia] In Ur of the Caldees, Gen. 11. 28. he speaketh here of Mesopotamia, as comprehending Babylon, and Chaldea in it: and this he saith to intimate, that the true Religion was not (as some of them vainly conceived) tyed to Jerusalem, or Palestine: for God appeared to Abraham being yet in Mesopotamia, and called him thence, and that he went not immediately into Canaan, but dwelt a time in Carran, a City of Mesopotamia, unto the death of his Father Thare: the purpose is to shew them, that there was truth of Religion with Abraham, before he ever saw Canaan, or that he received circumcision, and before any of the ceremonies appointed by the ministry of Moses were in use; before there was either Temple, or Tabernacle. See Rom. 4. 10. & Carran was a city famous for the destruction of Crassus, and the Roman Army there. Plutarc. Cras. Dio. Roman. lib. 40. Plin. nat. hist. lib. 5. cap. 24.

V. 3. Get thee out of thy Countrey] Gen. 12. 1. Hebr. 11. 8. He will shew them, that neither the land of Canaan which Abraham had yet never seen, nor the ceremonies of the Law not yet given by the ministry of Moses, nor the Temple which was not yet built, did any thing availe Abraham, as to the favour of God; but this faith which the Author to the Hebrews forecited, speaketh of; and therefore it was a frivolous objection concerning their rites, and holy place: as if God could no where else be served but at Jerusalem, or would no otherwise than by legal ceremonies: nay but faith and obedience to Gods command here set off the excellency of Abraham; both which have here a sharpe tryal; In that God commanded him to go out of his Countrey, from his kindred, and that to a place and people utterly unknown to Abraham; herein Abrahams obedience was an evident demonstration of that faith which was imputed to him for righteousnesse, Rom. 4. 3.

V. 4. Then came he out] When he had received a command from God; which commendeth the readinesse of his faith, subjecting all his interest and affections, to Gods will and pleasure.

he removed him] God removed him, or removing him caused him to dwell, by commanding him to go into Canaan, which he would give to him and to his posterity, Gen. 11. 26.

V. 5. gave him no inheritance, &c.] These things are said in respect of the general and full possession, which he gave him in his posterity: for otherwise he purchased a field of Ephron, Gen. 23. 17. thus God tryed Abraham, and thus he tryeth many of those whom he calleth heirs of the world, (Rom. 8 17. Tit. 3 7 1 Cor. 3. 22) suffering them for the present to want possessions, that they may learn with Abraham to cast themselves wholly on Gods providence, and to follow his guidance, and to look for a city which hath foundation (in heaven) Hebr. 11. 10.

when as yet he had no child] This setteth off the excellency of Abrahams faith. See Gen. 15. 2. &c. believing the promise of God in things to carnal reason improbable: for the promise of the land of Canaan to be given to Abrahams seed and posterity, when as yet he had no child; his wife was barren and old, his seed in years, seemed in relation to second causes, more than improbable; yet Abraham believed, against hope, in hope, that he might become the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, so shall thy seed be, Rom. 4. 18.

V. 6. that his seed should sojourn] This also sheweth Abrahams faith depending on God, while yet to carnal reason there appeared no probability of enjoying those promises; God telling of a posterity, but to be as he said, Gen. 15. 3, 4. גֵּר ger-vethshab. 70. παροικον & παροικησει, a Stranger and sojourner; that they should live in bondage, and be evilly entreated so long.

four hundred years] Gen. 15. 13. beginning to reckon the years from the birth of Isaac. See Exod. 12. 41. yet Abraham believed the Lord: true faith hath heavenly eyes, and can see the truth of God through a thousand difficulties: see the ground, Rom. 4. 18, 19, 20, 21. Abraham was fully perswaded, that what he had promised, he was able to perform: Gods promises are for determinate times, and therefore sometimes to us, seem slow, but are ever sure; and the more difficulties seem to intercept them, the more comfortable shall their performance be to us at last.

V. 7. The nation to whom] That is, the Egyptians. That was added to comfort him that was not weak in faith: the strongest faith is subject to tentation, and therefore hath need of confirmation.

I will judge] κρινῶ I will punish. So 1 Cor. 11. 31. which he did in sundry plagues, Exod. 7. 20. & 8. 6, 17, 20. V. 14. all his kindred] πάσαν τὴν συγγένειαν, the word ſignifieth both conſanguinity and affinity, as doth the word cognatio among the Latines (which the Interpreter of the Syriac here uſeth) import kindred, or alliance: and ſo συγγενὴς is kin, or allie, either man or woman, as Suidas interpreteth: the number here mentioned, compared with that number coming out of Egypt, Exod. 12. 37. ſix hundred thouſand men beſides children, conſidering their abode in Egypt, and Pharaohs cruelty to deſtroy their children, may well be reckoned among the admirable works of God, Deut. 10. 22.

threeſcore and fifteen ſoules] Whereas theſe perſons are variably reckoned 66. 70. & 75. we may conceive that this variety proceedeth from the ſeveral accounts; in one account they onely are reckoned, who lineally deſcended from Jacob, to be ſixty ſix perſons, Gen. 46 26. in a ſecond account, the whole number of the promiſed ſeed going into, or being in Egypt, are reckoned ſeventy perſons; for ſo, if we account, Jacob; Joſeph, Ephraim, and Manaſſes, with the ſixty ſix of the firſt account, the number is ſeveney ſpecified, Gen. 46. 27. in a third account are reckoned Jacobs Sons wives (excepted in the former reckonings as appeareth, Gen. 46. 26.) to make up the ſeventy five perſons in this word συγγένειαν, ſignifying, as hath been ſaid, as well affinity (or kindred by marriage) as conſanguinity or kindred by blood; one thing in this and the like places, is ever neceſſarily to be remembred, that the Apoſtle did not in vain warn us of too much curioſity about fruitleſſe queſtions. See 1 Tim. 1. 4. Tit. 3. 10.

V. 15. ſo Jacob went down into Egypt] Gen 46. 5. Hereby he would ſhew them that their fathers had the truth of Religion, and Gods favour in Egypt, before they had either Ceremony Temple, or Canaan to repair to, to the end that they might not vainly put Sanctity in place, or Ceremony.

V. 17. when the time of promiſe drew near] That is, when the time of fulfilling Gods promiſe made to Abraham, drew near; for multiplying his ſeed, Gen. 15. 5. then God encreaſed them, when men endesvoured maliciouſly to deſtroy them.

V. 18. until another King aroſe] Another Pharaoh: (ſo their Kings were called, as the Roman Emperours Ceſars) ſucceeded that Pharaoh, who had Joſeph and his kindred in ſo much honour.

V. 19. The ſame dealt ſubtilly with our kindred] The Syriac hath it, he compoſed, or ſet himſelf againſt our kindred: the word κατασοφίζω, of κατασοφὸς (which is ſophiſtically to deceive, to beguile or circumvent with a fallacy) importeth, craftily deviſing, or plotting againſt one: he alludeth to that which Pharaoh ſaid, Exod. 1. 10. come, ſaid he לְהָה נְחַכְּמָה לוֹ nithchamma lo. 70. κατασοφισώμεθα αὐτὸν; the word here uſed, חכם chacham ſignifieth aſtutus fuit, he was craftie, and, ſapuit; he was wiſe: and ſo חָכְמָה chochma, is craft, as well as wiſdom: ſo here it importeth a clandeſtine and ſecret deſtroying the Iſraelites: For ſo he firſt gave in charge to the Midwives: but that not taking, he uſed open violence, commanding the male infants to be caſt into the River. So Moſes was fair τῷ Θεῷ, that is, by the ſingular providence and counſel of God that hereby Pharaohs daughter might be moved to ſave him, and bring him up as her Son, thereby fitting him for the great work to which God had aſſigned him; of his beauty Juſtin. alſo ſpeaketh. hiſt. l. 36.

See chap. 20. 28. So the Apoſtles viſited the Churches which they had planted, to reform their errours in faith and converſation and to confirm and comfort them in the truth: now that Moſes having been brought up fourty years in King Pharaohs Court, ſhould on a ſudden have it come into his heart, to look into the condition of his afflicted brethren the Iſraelites, it appeareth to be by the inſtinct and motion of Gods Spirit, to do that which neither they, nor Moſes before thought of.

would have ſet them at one] συνήλασσε: Syr. interpret, Suadebat eis; he gravely exhorted them to peace: it is a principal part of a governours office, to compoſe contentions, and to preſerve peace.

Sirs ye are brethren, why do ye, &c.] He remembreth them of their near conjunction, and the bonds of nature which ought to unite them in love and peace: all diſſention is evil, but that worſt, which breaketh the bonds of nature, or holy profeſſion. It was Joſephs charge to his brethren, Gen. 45. 24. See that ye fall not out by the way; and their argument of reconciliation to Joſeph, forgive the treſpaſſe of the ſervants of the God of thy father, Gen. 50. 17. diviſions between brothers and profeſſors of one religion, and offences multiplyed by all the bonds which ſhould unite them together.

V. 27. But he that did his neighbour wrong, thruſt him away, &c.] Which ſheweth that the injurious are moſt averſe from peace: an evil conſcience hating any diſcovery, and ſin being impatient of any reproof. See Prov. 15. 12 yet they to whom God hath committed this charge, muſt perform it for their own indemnity. See Ezek. 3. 19.

V. 28. wilt thou kill me, as thou didſt, &c.] Moſes dealt meekly with him, but he that was faulty (as Oecumen. ſaith) πικρῶς καὶ μετὰ ὕβρεως ἀπεκρίνατο anſwered bitterly, uſing his country (a Jewiſh) protacity againſt their benefactours rejected him; by this his intended recrimination aſſailing to cauſe Moſes to deſiſt from reproving: ſo the guilty would ever vail their crimes by others failings.

V. 29. Moſes fled at this ſaying] See Exod. 2. 15. &c. When Moſes perceived that it was carried to Court by ſome of his own brethren, and that Pharaoh ſought to ſlay him, he ſaved himſelf by flight into another nation and dominion.

in the land of Madian] Or Midian: a people that a ſtranger in the land of Madian ſon by Keturah, Gen. 25 1, 2. Here came of Madian Abrahams ſon by Keturah, Gen. 25 1, 2. Here Moſes married with Zipporah, daughter of Jethro, or Jether (he was alſo called Reuel, Exod. 2. 18. and Hobab. Numb. 10. 29. Jud. 4. 11.) Prieſt or Prince of Midian: where he had two ſons born.

V. 30. When fourty years were expired] Exod. 3. 2 Here was the long tryal of Moſes faith; and the mildeſt that one or few mens ſins brought upon all Iſrael, driving away their deliverer; and as much as in them was, lengthening their heavy oppreſſion fourty years: this was their ingratitude to God and Moſes, whom they ſorely wanted all that time.

in the wilderneſſe of mount Sina] Where he kept the flock of Jethro his father in law, on the back-ſide of the deſart of Arabia. Exod. 3. 2. (with ſo much humility, as if he had never been brought up at court, as a ſon of king Pharaohs daughter) with admirable patience expecting Gods time for Iſraels deliverance: this place was called the wilderneſſe or deſart of Sina, or ſin; becauſe it was all that countrey that lyeth between Elim (where Iſrael found twelve wells of water, &c. Exod. 15. 27.) and Sinai. Exod. 16. 1. there was much paſture for cattel: it took name from that very high mount Sinai, which was alſo Agar. Gal. 4. 25. and Horeb, the mountain of the Lord, which is a part thereof, it having two heads or tops; that on the weſt is Horeb, that on the weſt part of the mount, Sinai: it was called the mountain of the Lord, becauſe it was great, high and excellent (ſee on verſe 20.) or becauſe it was ſanctified of God by his appearing to Moſes firſt, Exod. 3. 2. &c. and again when he came down upon it to give the law, Exod. 18. 5. and 19. 3, 17, 18. fifty dayes after their departure from Egypt See Jerom Ep. 3. Fabida. Oth. Manſ. and de loc. Hebr. Horeb ſignifieth dryneſs, חָרֵב charab, wruit. So Hag. 1. 11. I called חֹרֶב Choreb a drought, or dryneſſe for this wilderneſſe had not waters, Deut. 8. 15. this mount had the name of Sina, Exo. 19. 1, 18. either of the buſhes there growing, (for סְנֶה ſeneth is a buſh or bramble, Jerom, Fabiola 4.) or becauſe God there appeared to Moſes in the buſh burning, but not conſuming.

an angel of the Lord] The angel of the covenant Chriſt, as appears, verſe 32. here he ſheweth by whom Moſes was called to that great and difficult charge of bringing Iſrael out of Egypt; not by any counſaile, or deſigne of man, but by the Son of God, Chriſt, who is ſtiled the Angel, Mal. 3. 1. in reſpect of his office of mediatorſhip: for the ſame is here avowed, verſe 32. to be the God of the Fathers, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob.

of fire in a buſh] Thus God here appeared to Moſes, who at other times, and on other occaſions appeared to the holy fathers in other aſſumed viſible repreſentations of his preſence, accommodated ever to thoſe things which he would thereby teach them, or declare unto them: ſo here he appeared in the forme of fire in a buſh, not conſumed thereby, to intimate that Iſrael in their fiery tryals and hard afflictions ſhould not be conſumed, but admirably declared to be the people, whoſe God was amongſt them to keep them: ſo that the moſt devouring creatures ſhould not deſtroy or harme them.

V. 31. when Moſes ſaw it he wondred] To ſee the fire in the buſh, and it not conſumed, which bare a type of the Church in fiery tryals not deſtroyed. See Ierom q. ſ. this was done, that, Moſes might be toucht with the ſence of Gods preſence, and ſo be made more attentive to that which he would then give him in charge.

the voice of the Lord came unto him] ἐγένετο φωνὴ, it is an uſual Hebraiſm, Jer. 7. 1. &c. 70. ἐγένετο λόγος κυρίου, &c. Jer. 1. 4. the Syriac hath it here, the Lord ſaid unto him בקלא bekolo, in a voice; that is, the Lord ſpake to him, not in a viſion or dream (as ſometimes he did to the Patriarchs and Prophets) but in an audible voice.

V. 32. I am the God of thy fathers, &c.] That Moſes might not doubt of his calling, God who called him, revealeth himſelf to him; to which end alſo he mentioneth his mercies to the Fathers, unto whom he made the promiſes of delivering his people, their poſterity, from the bondage they were now in; to aſſure him that he would perform the ſame, and that the time was now come wherein he would do it: hereon was Moſes confidence grounded, becauſe he had the ſure covenant of God with the Fathers, and his word to himſelf for warrant: from this place, Exod. 3. Chriſt proveth the reſurrection of the dead, Matth. 22. 32.

Moſes trembled and durſt not behold] So dreadfull is the preſence of God to fleſh and blood, though appearing in mercy. See Exod. 19. 16. Daniel 8. 17. this was to ſtrike the greater reverence in to Moſes. See alſo Exod. 20 20 nulla quippe admiratio eſt ſine quadam formidine, Auguſtin in Pſal. 109. there is no admiration without a certain fear, how terrible will it be, when he cometh to take vengeance on thoſe who have obſtinately contemned him in his ordinance and holy laws?

V. 33. put off thy ſhoes from thy feet] In ſigne of reverence, and reſignation of thy ſelf unto my providence. See Ruth. 4. 7.

is holy ground] In reſpect of Gods preſent manifeſtation of his preſence and majeſty there, not otherwiſe.

V. 34. I have ſeen, I have ſeen] Exod. 3. 7. ראה ראיתי rao raithi, 70. εἰδὼν εἶδον, I have ſurely ſeen; this doubling among the Hebrews is emphatical: God is ſaid to ſee our evil or affliction, when he reſolves it for us to undertake our deliverance: as on the contrary he is ſaid to ſhut his eyes, or ears, or to turn away; when he will not regard, or deliver: this is ſpoken to our capacity: and ſo he is ſaid to hear their groanings, and to come down; though indeed the evidence of every fact or paſſion be ever preſent with him, and though he who filleth heaven and earth, comprehending all, comprehenſible of none, changeth not place (Jer. 23, 24.) yet is he ſaid to deſcend when he evidently manifeſteth his preſence: this Stephen here mentioneth to beat down all opinion of merit in their fathers, God ſaw nothing in them but affliction: to pitty. See verſe 51.

V. 35. by the hands of the angels] This Moſes whom they ingratefully calumniated as a delinquent did God honour in making him a ruler and deliverer of Iſrael, by the hand of the Angel of the Covenant, Chriſt. Gr. ἐν χειρὶ in the hand, that is, by the hand. Hebrews uſed to ſay בְּיַד bejad in the hand, for by the hand. So Levit. 26. 46. &c. they called any thing which was an inſtrument to act by יָד jad: but here it importeth the principal agent, Chriſt; (as 1 Cor. 10. 4.) by whoſe power Moſes was enabled to that great work.

V. 36. ſhewed wonders] Exod. 7. 9. &c.

in the red ſea] Exod. 14. Hebr. סוּף יַם jam ſuph; mari juncti; or juncoſum; becauſe of the abundance of bulruſhes growing on the ſhore, ſome think it is ſo called: nor is it called the red ſea; from the colour of the ground or ſand appearing through the ſhallow waters, as V. Schindler. Pentegl. notes. So Ariſtophanes Avib. calleth it ἐρυθρὰν θάλασσαν. See Strabo lib. 16. Plin. lib. 13. 25. Some give it this reaſon: mare rubrum here ſonis; becauſe it is mare ultimum terræ ſanctæ: the bound of the holy land (Schindl. eth Benjamin itenerar.) ſo indeed it is to the ſouthward. Exod. 23. 31.

lively oracles] The powerfull words which God ſpake to Moſes. See Numb. 12. 6, 7, 8. John 6. 68. See Deut. 32. 47.

V. 39. Our Fathers would not obey] He ſheweth here, that their fathers of whom they ſo much gloried, were rebellious againſt God, who delivered them by the Miniſtery of Moſes, as they now were againſt Chriſt, who came to ſave them from ſin and deſtruction: ſo that neither they, nor their fathers had any merit to ſave them.

in their hearts turned back] That is, in their deſires and affections, (See Numb. 14. 3, 4.) underſtand here by Egypt, all that ſuperſtition and idolatry to which that impious nation was given; which interpretation appeareth from the following verſe.

V. 40. Saying unto Aaron] Exod. 32. 1.

make us gods to go] &c.) That is, images to be carried before us; or to prepare our way: this ſhews their minde to return to Egyptian idolatry, and impious manners, and the abominable levity of that people, who having had ſuch late and admirable experience of Gods favour toward them, and preſence with them, were ſo ſoon turning back to the ſenſleſſe vanities of heathens, who had no knowledge of the power or law of God.

we wot not what is become of him] Thus ſtupidly and ingratefully do they contemn that admirable deliverance which God wrought for them, by Moſes; they knew he was gone up into the mount by Gods command, that he had left Aaron and Hur to govern them, untill he returned, Exod. 24. yet ſo quickly had they forgotten God, of whoſe power and gracious preſence, they had ſo much, ſo late experience, Pſal. 106. 13. 21.

V. 41. They made a calf in thoſe dayes] In Imitation of the idolatrous Egyptians, who worſhipped Apis under the ſhape of an Ox. See Ammianus Marcellin. l. 22. Alexandr. genial dier. l. 6. c. 2. Pſal. 106. 19, 20. Rom. 1. 23. and Minuc. Fel. Octav. Athanaſ. contr. Gent. & at.

and offered ſacrifice unto the idol] Sacrificing was then proper to God alone (as Auguſtin proves, de civ. Dei. l. 10. 4) but here was their groſſe idolatry, though they might poſſibly pretend that they would ſerve God by the idol, their worſhip being not (as ſome now would excuſe it) by any meanes terminative in the creature ſeen. See 1 Cor. 10. 20. but theſe making an idol, forſook God.

rejoced in the works of their own hands] See Exod. 32. 6. So prone are idolaters to adore their own, though moſt irrational & fooliſh, inventions, as this was; and to pleaſe themſelves with (that which diſpleaſeth God) the moſt ſacrilegious prophanations: this is the devils joy; cujus gaudium eſt ruina ſanctorum. Proſper. ref. ad. Gal. whoſe joy is mans ruine.

V. 42. Then God turned, and gave them up] So Rom. 1. 25, 26. God withdrew that meaſure of general grace, or light of knowledge which they made ſo bad an uſe of, giving them up to wretched apoſtacie: yet as Fulgent. de pradeſt. ad Monim. l. 1. truely ſaith: no man juſtly ſins, though God juſtly permits him to ſin: for juſtly is he forſaken of God: who for ſaketh God and becauſe man forſaking God, ſinneth; God for ſaking the ſinner, doth juſtice.

to worſhip the hoſt of heaven] The ſun moon, and ſtars. Deut. 17. 3. 2 Kings 23. 5.

as it is written, &c.] Amos 5. 25. He denyeth that they offered unto him, becauſe they corrupted his worſhip; and ſo in effect he was not worſhipped at all. See Iſa. 43 22, God not accepting the ſacrifice of the wicked Iſai. 1. 11. they are an abomination to him. Prov. 28. 9. Pſal. 50. 16, 17, 23.

V. 43. ye

V. 43. ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch] Moloch, or Melchom, which some call Saturne (Minut. Fel. q. f.) others Mars: the abomination of the children of Ammon. 1 Kings 11. 5, 7. to whom they sacrificed their sons and daughters.

your god, Remphan] That which the Prophet Amos 5. 26. calleth כיון Chijun: see hereof Jo. Drusius com. 1. ad Voc. N. T. Remphan, and præterit l. 5. Acts 7. 43. that for Chijun, the Greeks read Ῥεμφάν, Ῥαιφάν, Ῥέφαν, (as the Syriac hath it רפן) Ῥαφάν, as Justin.
Martyr. dial. cum. Try. Jud, or Ῥεφάν as Occumenius it sheweth much variety of reading; rather than matter: other idols were variably called likewise; it may be it was the stature of a Gyant, as the Egyptians were wont to make Hercules, whom they called Chon, which varied into another tongue, might easily make Chijun, and it may be Ῥεφά or Ῥεφάν, might in the change from Hebrew to Greek, come of רפא Rapha, (a Gyant) as Gen. 14. 5. and smote רפאים the Rephaims in Asteroth, that is, the Giants, or men of strength, or monstrous stature: it may be that Stephen spake the words of the Prophet in his own tongue, and that Luke writing in the Greek, followed their manner of speaking: it is not material, the sin here reproved was not in the name, but thing, which was an idol, and abomination, how ever variably called. Most probably it was Moloch or Saturn: now Saturn among the Egyptians (where the 70. translated) was called Ῥέφαν: see the notes of Ludovicus de Dieu upon this place; and Athanasius Kirkerus c. 5. Prodrom. Copti.
pag. 147.

and I will carry you, &c.] Or therefore, &c.

beyond Babylon] Into Persia; a countrey in the east part of Asia;
the Prophet Amos, 5. 27. hath, therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus: that is, further than the people of Damascus, which Stephen here interpreteth, beyond Babylon: for as the learned Junius saith, the people of Damascus were carried away (by the king of Assyria Thiglath-Pileser) into (Kir) Hyromedia near Susa (that royal city, where Cyrus had his magnificent Palace Ester 3. 15. & 8. 15. & 1, 2, 3. and other Persian Monarches)
2 Kings 16. 9. but the Israelites both much further into Persia, and also into the region of the Caspians; as appeareth, Ezra 8. 17.

V. 44 the tabernacle of witnesse] ἡ σκηνὴ τοῦ μαρτυρίου, that which the Hebrews called אוהל מועד ohel mohed; either the tabernacle of condition, because Israel was commanded to come thither to ask counsell of the Lord: compare Exodus. 33. 7. with Exodus 40. 2.) or the tabernacle of the congregation. Exod.
33. 7. because there Israel congregated in solemn assemblies; and here Stephen calleth it, the tabernacle of witnesse, because here God principally witnessed, or shewed his glorious presence, and where the ark of the covenant was, and the law and testimonies, concerning the appointment and making hereof. See Exod. 25. Exod. 26.
& 27.

that he should make it, &c.] Exod 25. 40.

V. 45. in with Jesus] With Joshua, who bare both name and type of Jesus Christ, in that he brought Israel into the promised rest.

V. 46. desired to finde a tabernacle, &c.] David found favour to know where the ark should rest, and the temple should be built, as also by whom; when he had begged it in earnest prayer. See Psal. 132. 2 Sam. 24. 18. 2 Sam. 7. 10. 13.
1 Chron 21. if then unto Davids time the tabernacle had no fixed seat, it must follow, that the worship of God is not tyed to place.

V. 47. But Solomon built him an house] 1 Chron. 17. 12. 1 Kings
6. 1, 2 &c. 2 Chron. 3. 1, 2.

V. 48. the most high dwelleth not in temples made, &c.] Chap.
17. 24. that is, is not comprehended in any place, though he will be worshipped in place: he taxeth the impiety of them, who trusted in an imaginary sanctity derived to them from the temple, which they yet prophaned, abused, and neglected the true worship of God, there to have been duely performed. These words he inserteth, lest any should foolishly conceive, that after the temple was built and consecrated, the worship of God was so tied to that place, as if God were shut up therein: no no, the most High, filleth, and comprehended of none, comprehendeth, heaven, earth, all places.

V. 49. Heaven is my throne] Isa. 66. 1, 2.

V. 50. hath not my hand made, &c.] Hands are attributed to God, according to our capacity: the scope is to intimate, that God hath no need of gold, curious ornaments of his temple, nor sacrifices; as Psal. 50. 10, 11, 12. &c. and that the substance of Gods worship consisteth not in outward ceremonies, neither did he require any offerings for his own sake: but to exercise men in the duties of piety, and obedience to him: whereby it appeareth, how much distant humane inventions are, from true religion and worship of God.

V. 51. ye stiff necked] He alludeth to the words of Jeremie 7.
26. and other like. See Exod 33 3 Deut. 9. 6 meaning that they were ever obstinate, and would not submit to the guidance of Gods word.

uncircumcised in heart and ears] Who carry the external signe of circumcision in the flesh, but have not the effect thereof, and inward regeneration of the heart. See Rom. 2. 28, 29. Jer. 9. 26.

V. 52. which of the prophets] He sheweth that their disobedience to God, and persecution of the Prophets was not new with them, but even as it were hereditary; so that their pretence of succession and holy ancestors was but a vain ostentation.

of the just one] That is, Christ, 1 John 2. 1. Acts 22. 14. Christ our righteousnesse, 1 Cor. 1. 30. in whom onely we are justified; Rom. 5. 1.

betrayers and murderers] They betrayed him, who hired Judas to betray him; and they murdered him, who delivered him up (with their importune and outragious suffrages and outcries) to be crucified, See c. 2. 23, 36.

V. 53. by the disposition of angels] By the ministery of Angels, by the mandate (as the Syriac hath it) or proclaiming of Angels, Deut. 33. 2. Gal. 3. 19. Hebr. 2. 2. the meaning is, if ye despise the law given by so glorious and dreadfull a ministery; no marvell if you despise the gospel proposed to you in so simple and mean a mannner, as by infirme men.

V. 54. were cut to the heart] See chap. 5 33. It is very true, nunquam sine querela, ægra tanguntur: Senec. de ira cap. 10. you can never touch the sore without grief of the patient: all would be praised, nulli grata reprehensio est (saith Salvian de guo. Dei lib. 8. init.) none love reproof (none but the wise, Prov. 9. 8. & 19. 25) that which is worse, the most wicked cast-away would rather hear his own false praises, than true reprehension, and be deceived with jeering applause, than saved with wholsom admonitions.

V. 55. the glory of God, &c.] In this extraordinary vision, he saw the admirable glory of Christ in heaven, (as mortal man could apprehend) to strengthen him in this trial.

V. 56. I see the heaven opened &c.] This he testifieth, to assure them, that they did but vainly strive against the truth of Christ, whom they supposed to be destroyed by their malice, for he was now in the highest glory, reigning with God in heaven.

on the right hand of God] See Psalm 110. 1. Mark 16. 19. Hebr. 1. 3. this is a translatitious speech complying with our understandings, taken from things familiar and known to us; with whom the right hand is the place of honour. See 1 King. 2. 19. Psalm 45. 9. here understand not with the foolish Anthropomorphites (of whom Socrat. hist. eccles. l. 6. c. 7.) that God hath parts and lineaments like man, but as Peter Chrysologus well expresseth it, Serm. 57. Deus loca nescit, divinitas recipit nil sinistrum: God is not in any place (circumscribed) the deity hath no left hand: and as Gr. Nazianzen, ora. 37. saith of such like attributes, ἐς τοῦτο ἡμῖν τεῖον, thus also belongeth to us: and is attemperated to our capacity: here he intimateth Christs standing as an advocate with the father, 1 John 2. 1. who is elsewhere described sitting as a Judge Mark 16. 19. &c. So saith Ambros. lib. 10 ep. 82. stabat Jesus quasi advocatus —— sedens enim judicat, all importeth his power and kingdom over all, and his care of us.

V. 57. then they cryed out] This they do to interrupt his further audience: so wicked men contend with clamours and violence: so grievous was it to Christs enemies to hear of his glory: what will it be to see it, and feel his power (see chap. 22. 23.) when he shall come to judge the living and the dead?

V. 58. and stoned him] Thus that impiety which began with shew of justice endeth in tumultuous and raging violence: thus they were to proceed against false Prophets, Deut. 13. 10. and to cast out blasphemers. Levit. 24. 14. but here tyranny turned judgment into wormwood; and the wicked and damnable condemn and destroy the innocent and just: the Romans permitted them not this power, but this they acted in a popular rage. See John 18. 31.

the witnesses laid down their clothes, &c.] For the true witnesses against blasphemers were to begin stoning, Deut. 17. 7. they were before, murderers in their tongues by their false witnesse, and now their seared consciences fear not to embrue desperate hands, in innocent blood.

at a young mans feet whose name was Saul] See chap. 22. 4, 20, afterward called Paul, that excellent Apostle of Christ, chapter 9. on whom God shewed so great mercy in his conversion, 1 Timothy 1. 13. &c. in how desperate a condition was he, whose youth was so active in persecuting Christ? yet God shewed mercy on him, that none might despair, who can but repent and convert.

V. 59. Lord Iesus receive my spirit] Probably he used more words, but these were the summe of all. See Psalm 31. 6. this is the true comfort of the elect, that they are assured that Christ Jesus, who dyed for them, in their dissolutions receiveth their souls, into his safe and blessed custody (See 1 Peter 4. 19.) to live with him who is the life, and God of the living. Luke 23. 43.

V. 60. And he kneeled down] The most decent gesture of humble suppliants. See 2 Chron. 6. 13. Psalm 95. 6 Dan 6. 10. Acts 9. 40. and 20. 36. & 21. 5. Ephes. 3. 14. Ezra 9. 5. Luke 22. 41.

Lord

Lord lay not this sinne to their charge] This was the precept and practise of our Saviour; Matth. 5. 44. Luke 23. 34. this is invincible charity, which shall give us boldnesse before the Lord, and assurance that we are his, where God giveth this heart, all the injuries of the world shall make the sufferers more happy: and certainly this prayer was not without singular effect, as appeareth in the example of Saul afterward converted, 1 Tim. 1. 16.

he fell asleep] That is, quietly dyed, as if he had fallen into a sweet sleep: which term the Scripture often useth to give us secure and certain hope of resurrection from the dead.

CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. And Saul was consenting, &c,] Chap. 7. 58. So that though he acted not, yet his consent spake him guilty of the same crime: a minde to do evil, is sin in the seed, which time bringeth forth, James 1. 14, 15. there is an adultery of the heart, Mat. 5. 28. and a murder of the heart, Mat. 22. John 8. 44. God esteemeth the evil we would do, as done, though we have not done it, and so, justly punisheth it, merito autem malus punitur affectus, etiam cui non succedit effectus. Augustin. de C. D. lib. 16. cap. 4. deservedly is an evil affection punished, though the effect (or successe thereof) follow not, they that allow of the evill which others do, become guilty of the same sin by their allowance: so were the Jews guilty of all the blood, shed by their fathers from Abel, so many ages before they had being in the world, Mat. 23. 35. because in shedding innocent blood, they shewed their consent with them, who first did so; consider their state who are now pleased with all the injuries done to Gods servants; the Syriac hath it, Saul was desirious, and a partaker in his death, at that time there was a great persecution] When the people quietly suffered Stephens death, then they who before were awed with fear of the people, fell violently on the Christians: hitherto their rage was onely against the Apostles, but now it was against all the Church.

all scattered abroad] Divided in persons, not in doctrine; fear of their persecutors compelling them to save their lives by flight: now began they to do that which Christ fore-commanded them, Mat. 10. 23. and so began the partition wall between Jews, and Gentiles to be broken down, Ephes. 2. 14. and whereby it appeared that the time was now come, wherein the Gentiles were to be called and joyned in communion with the people of the God of Abraham, who believed in Christ: and now began to be fulfilled that prophesy of Noah, Genes. 9. 27. God shall enlarge (or perswade) Japhet, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem.

except the apostles] They yet stayed by it, having received command first to preach the Gospel at Jerusalem, Luke 24. 47. not because they were more free from persecution than other Christians; they were then, as many faithful Ministers of Christ since, more hated and persecuted than others; but because God would yet a little longer by them hold forth his grace and mercy in Christ, to the murderers of his dear Son Christ Jesus, and bloody persecuters of those, who by his charge and comission, offered them gratious conditions of Gods mercy, if they would yet repent and believe in him from the free remission of their sins; which they obstinatly rejecting and putting from them, judged themselves unworthy of any mercy, and therefore were justly rejected, and utterly destroyed. See c. 13, 43.

V. 2. carried Stephen] The body of Stephen, these faithfull servants of Christ, (notwithstanding the fury of their enemies, those raging butchers) buried solemnly, and with great mourning, considering the Churches losse in him: a moderate, and pious mourning for the dead is justifiable, by the example of Christ, John 11. 35. the Patriarchs, Gen. 50. 1. &c. and the saints here, which is observable against the unnatural apathie of Stoicks, rather than Christians.

V. 3. Saul, he made havock] Which he afterward relateth of himself, c. 26. 10, 11. See also c. 9. 1. Gal. 1. 13. he spared no sex, but brake into houses, to drag out Christians to prison, and worse than that, caused them to blaspheme, c. 26. 11. all this in his conversion, setteth off the mercy of God, who made so excellent a pastour, of so bloody a wolf.

V. 4 went every where preaching, &c.] Thus doth God turn the malice of the enemy to the propagation of the gospel, while they being driven from Jerusalem, carry the light thereof, unto the Gentiles, augetur religio Dei, quanto magis premitur. Lactant. lib. 5. c. 20. Gods religion flourisheth the more, by how much more it is oppressed.

V. 5. then Philip went down] Probably, this was Philip the Deacon, chap. 6. 5. for the Apostles stayed at Jerusalem, verse 1.

the city of Samaria] See on John 4. 4. and on Luke 17. 11. the city of Samaria is here put for Samaria (as Urbs Roma, for Rome) Samaria was the name of a mountain, city, and region. See 1 Kings 16. 2 Kings 17. Samaria was the metropolis of that province: it being demolished by Hircanus, was built again by Herod, and named Sebaste. Euseb. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 15. the Countrey of the Samaritans lyeth between Iudea and Galilee, John 4. 4.

and preached unto them Christ] That is, repentance, and remission of sins by Christ, as Luke 14. 27. preached unto them concerning Christ. Syr.

V. 6. with one accord gave heed, &c.] This sheweth the admirable power of God uniting hearers hearts, and preparing them to attend, where he purposeth to save: the Syriac paraphraseth here, they attended unto him, and מתטפיסין methtephisin, acquiescebant omnibus, they consented to all, or were perswaded to all that he said, טפס מתטפיסין tephas, acquiescere obedire, &c. I. Buxtorf. Iun. lex. Chald. Syr. the same word is rendred sometimes to be perswaded, as chap. 21. 14. sometimes, to obey, as Gal. 5. 7. Heb. 13. 17. &c. See chap. 5. 29 Sometimes to believe, as John 3. 36. the meaning of this place is, that the Samaritans diligently hearkned to Philip, preaching, and carefully marked what he said, it is a main duty of an hearer: faith is by hearing, Rom. 10. 17. here was now the first degree thereto, reverend attention to the word of God; no wonder that faith is now so rare, how few attend to Gods word preached.

V. 7. unclean spirits] See Mark 1. 23. Luke 4. 33, 36. and 6. 18. and 8. 29. so called, because they are delighted with the spiritual uncleannesse and filthinesse of sin, and thereto allure and instigate men.

Crying with a loud voice] By which it appeared that they went out by constraint, not willingly. See Mat. 8. 29. 31. which declareth the omnipotency of Christ, in whose name, and by whose divine power they were forced out, however unwilling and reluctant they were.

taken with palsies] This is that which was promised, Mark 16. 17, 18. for under these few recited species, we must understand all maladies; according to the promise of Christ, Mark 16. 17, 18.

V. 8. great joy in that city] This was the effect of faith, und hope of reconciliation to God, and future salvation; the effect of Gods kingdom, See Rom. 14. 17. (such variable effects doth one and the same word preached, produce; devils and wicked men are vexed, and cut to the heart with it (c. 7. 54.) but the elect, who have interest in Christ, are glad and rejoyce at it, in this one example observe, what confidence concerning religion and sanctity may be reposed either in places, or counsells and societies of men; the gospel was exploded, blasphemed and persecuted, at Jerusalem, the once holy city, by the Scribes, Pharisees, high Priests, elders and their great councils; and the same is joyfully received in the despised Samaria.

V. 9. A certain man called Simon] This was a Magitian, witch, or conjurer, who of a long time had besotted, and deluded the people of Samaria with his magical inchantments, so that they had generally a great opinion that he was some one of the Gods, or that he had some extraordinary favour and power with them: so did he professe himself some great one, the Syriac hath it he said, I am the greatest: of his blasphemies see Euseb. lib. 2. cap. 13. eccel. hist. Irenens. advers. hæres. lib. 1. cap. 20. Epiphanius. adv. hæres. lib. 1. hæres. 21. ibit. it is reported that in Claudius Cæsars time there was a statue set up in Rome, in his honour with this blasphemous inscription, Simoni deo Sancto, that is, to Simon the holy god, Iustin. Martyr. apol. 2.

V. 10. to whom they all gave heed] They marked and believed his words, as oracles; so easily are men perswaded to believe lies: whereas Luke so diligently setteth down their great opinion of this impostor, he thereby shewеth the divine power of the holy Ghost in Philips Ministery, who was to break through such difficulties, that he might plant the gospel there.

V. 11. of long time he had, &c.] Old diseases are more hardly cured; they having been so long time stupified with lying miracles, might seem the most unapt hearers of the gospel, but truth shal prevail, against all the power of Satan.

V. 12. but when they believed] Faith ought to precede baptisme, in men and women of years, when they who were aliants and strangers come to be baptized; for it is necessary, that they should confesse their faith, and testifie their conversion, before they be admitted by baptisme.

if perhaps, &c.] Not that Gods mercy to the penitent is fortuitous or uncertain (if perhaps) in scripture is not always, set to expresse doubting, sometimes it relateth to a condition of the sinners pardon; as ἐὰν ἄρα. &c. Ezek. 3. 11. אם···ישמעו Hebr. si audierint. Ar. Montan, on which place saith Ambros. de penit. lib. 2. c. 5. nesciebat ergo eos posse aut non posse converti? non ergo semper dubitantis ista est elocutio, but God doth therefore propose his mercies and mans salvation, under conditions, that man may know both his duty which God requireth at his hands, and the free and bountifull reward thereof, which God will give to them that obey his voice; such are faith, repentance, conversion, obedience, &c. which are not causes, but conditions of our obtaining mercy, neither proposed dubiously on Gods part, who well knoweth (as that man cannot have them except he give them, nor shall have them in vain, so) the certain issue and effect of them in that man to whom he pleaseth to give them.

V. 23 in

V. 23. in the gall of bitternesse] Meaning in a bitter and desperate prefent condition. Gr. εἰς χολὴν πικρίας, here firſt, εἰς is put for, ἐν in: and χολὴ πικρασμὸς, for χολὴ πικρὰ, in which words he ſheweth the hypocriſie and ambition of Simon, as odious and diſpleaſing to God, as bitterneſſe is to the palate of man.

V. 24. pray ye to the Lord for me] At leaſt for fear of Gods judgements, he commendeth himſelf to the prayers of the Church; whether he truely converted or not, the ſcripture being ſilent, we cannot determine.

V. 25. When they had teſtified] This inſorteth their office and duty enjoyned them by Chriſt, c. 1. 8. which they faithfully did, preaching the word, as they had received it from Chriſt; not onely in Samaria, but in many villages adjoyning, ſuch was their unwearied and invincible induſtry.

V. 26. unto Gaza, &c.] It was deſtroyed by Alexander the great, and ſo remained waſte: ſome ſay, another of the ſame name was long after built in another place.

V. 27. an Eunuch of great authority] Or, a great officer, or nobleman of the Queens court. See Gen. 37. ult. & 40. 2. Eſther 4. 5.

Candace Queen, &c.] This name was not peculiar to one Queen, but was given to all that reigned there, Plin. nat. hiſt. l. 6. c. 29. as Pharaoh to the Kings of Egypt, or Cæſar to the Roman Emperours.

V. 28. read Iſaias the Prophet] This ſheweth that he had ſome knowledge of the true God, and that he came not to worſhip according to his own phancy; for he joyned reading Gods word, with his externall worſhip which was to direct him therein.

V. 29. Then the ſpirit ſaid unto Philip] By revelation, or Divine inſpiration, the holy Ghoſt thus moved him to do that whereof he would preſently ſhew an admirable effect in the converſion of the Eunuch.

V. 30. Philip ran thither, &c.] He readily obeyed Gods command, and found him to whom he was ſent, ſtudious of the way of God: therefore he asked him, whether he underſtood that which he read, with purpoſe (according to the guidance of Gods Spirit) to interpret it unto him.

V. 31. how can I except, &c.] That is, except ſome who underſtandeth it interpret it unto me, here appeared a very religious comity in ſo great a perſon, ſo wel taking Philips queſtion, and meekly acknowledging his ignorance: therefore he invited Philip to come into his chaier and ſit with him.

V. 32. he was led as a ſheep to the ſlaughter] Iſaiah 53. 7. as a ſheep in reſpect of his patience, and as a ſacrifice for our ſinnes: as a ſheep for our redemption, ἀλλὰ σταυρούμενος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν. Gr. Nazianzen orat. 35. yet is he the ſhepherd, to feed and keep his Iſrael, Pſal. 8. 1.

V. 33. in his humiliation] Becauſe he took on him the form of a ſervant, ſubjected himſelf to death, and ſtate of condemnation, due to us; God highly exalted him, Phil. 2. 8, 9.

his judgement was taken away] When he had ſuffered death, and fully ſatisfied the juſtice of God due to our ſins, even in the loweſt degree of his humiliation, then was he delivered safe from that judgement, which he ſubjected to for us.

who ſhall declare his generation] τὴν δι γενεὰν αὐτοῦ, his age, that is the continuation of his life, for, as Rom. 6. 9. Chriſt being raiſed from the dead, dieth no more: in the Hebr. Iſa. 53. 8. דור dor o (70. γενεαὶ, as here) דור dor, is duratio, ætas, ſeculum, &c. So Gen. 15. 16. ſometimes it being doubled, it ſignifieth, many ages, or eternity, Iſa. 13. 20. & 60. 15. Exod. 17. 16. Iſa. 49. 11. &c. his kingdom ſhall have no end, Luke 1. 33. and who can declare, or reckon that which is eternal.

for his life is taken from the earth] His death was the paſſage to his endleſſe and eternall glory, however this ſeem improbable to carnal reaſon with the Prophet there foretold, concerning Chriſt his exaltation into his eternall kingdom and glory from this ground to be attained --- for his life is taken from the earth: yet the holy Scripture teſtifieth, that by the admirable counſel of God, it was ſo determined, that Chriſt through afflictions and death ſhould enter into his glory, Luke 24. 26. and becauſe he became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſſe, therefore God alſo hath highly exalted him, and hath given him a name, which is above every name, &c. Phil. 2. 8, 9.

V. 34. Of whom ſpeaketh the Prophet this?] He enquireth of the perſon concerning whom the Prophet ſpake, becauſe that was a neceſſary degree toward the opening of this propheſie, when we doubt concerning the meaning of the ſcripture, we ſhould conſult them who have knowledge and the gift of interpretation.

V. 35. Philip opened his mouth] This was an uſual manner among the Hebrews, to expreſſe a begining to ſpeak of ſome weighty matter.

V. 36. What doth hinder me to be baptized?] It appeareth hence, that among other parts of Chriſtian religion, Philip had preached to him concerning baptiſme, and that this great man had admirably profited in ſo ſhort a time of hearing as to deſire to become a Chriſtian.

V. 37. If thou believeſt, &c.] With a ſincere and perfect heart, without which baptiſme cannot ſave; he had here to do with a man of years, and yet an aliant, and therefore might not admit him into the Church of Chriſt untill he had made profeſſion of his faith. See on verſe 12.

I believe that Chriſt is the Son of God] As baptiſme and the effect thereof is grounded in Chriſt, ſo the Eunuch deſiring to be baptized, ſpeaketh onely of Chriſt: he knew that there was one God, who from the beginning had promiſed a Meſſias to ſave the world, now he acknowledgeth by that he heard from Philip, that Chriſt was he, prefigured under all the legall ſacrifices and ceremonies: under this title he comprehendeth all that the Scripture ſaith of Chriſt our Saviour: the like confeſſion of faith, See in Peter, Matthew 16. 16, and here we muſt know that naming Chriſt, he underſtood the Sacrament of baptiſme to be adminiſtred in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt: and becauſe our petitions to the whole bleſſed Trinity; ſo where we read of men baptized into Chriſt, we muſt know that it was performed in expreſſe terms naming all; as Chriſt appointed, Mat. 28. 19.

V. 38. They went both down into the water] They were wont to dip the whole body, or go down into the water as here, and Matth. 3. 16. and ſprinkling with water hath alſo been of uſe in the Church; the effect is all one: and indeed, baptiſme is ſometimes expreſſed by waſhing, 2 Cor. 6. 11. Tit. 3. 5. and ſometimes by ſprinkling. Hebr. 10. 22. 1 Pet. 1. 2. which doth well anſwer to the ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus, as was prefigured in the type, the ſprinkling of the blood of the Paſchal Lambe. Exod. 12. 3. the vertue of the ſacraments conſiſteth not in the quantity of elements, but in the power of Gods ordinance as in the Lords Supper, it skilleth not, how much or little thou eateſt or drinkeſt (with diſcreet moderation) but how worthily: to him that eateth more as to the gatherers of Manna) there is not the more; nor the leſs (as to the gatherers of drinketh little; ſo in baptiſme. See on verſe 39.

V. 39. That the Eunuch ſaw him no more] He was ſuddenly taken away, and tranſported by the Spirit of God, as 1 King. 18. 12. Ezek. 3. 12, 14. this was done that the Eunuch might know that Philip was ſent to him by God. Jerom de loc. Hebraic. ſaith, this water was a brook at the foot of Bethſur, or Bethoron, where the Eunuch was baptized.

V. 40. But Philip was found at Azotus] That is, he was preſently at Azotus, a town in Paleſtine: ſome think this city was alſo called Aſhdod, one of the five cities of the Philiſtins; Joſhua 15. 47. wherein was that idol Dagon. 1 Sam. 5. 3. Jerom de loc. Hebr. Adi.

CHAP. IX.

Verſe 1. And Saul] Chap. 22. 4, 5. Luke being to deſcribe the admirable converſion of Saul, firſt ſheweth what a one he was before his converſion; a bloody and violent enemy of the Church; that none might deſpair of Gods ſaving grace and mercy, who can convert, and become new creatures, in faith and obedience to God.

breathing out threatnings] This ſignifieth a vehement heat of an enraged heart, which his very breath diſcovered in his words: being blooded in the death of Stephen, he purſueth other Chriſtians, with the like cruel rage: the Syriac readeth here, Saul was yet full of injuries, and cruel anger againſt the diſciples of our Lord: but we muſt underſtand (againſt the diſciples) to be all that there profeſſed Chriſtianity, as verſe 2. appeareth,

V. 2. and deſired of him letters] That his perſecution might have the countenance of juſtice and authority he requireth commiſſion from the High Priest: for the Romans having conquered all Judea, with all the adjacent countreys, permitted the Jews to live according to their own Religion (whence the High Priests, as Preſidents of their Great Councell, had power to examine and impriſon any of theirs, who diſſented therein, though they had no power to determine in matters capitall) therefore Saul deſired their commiſſion to convent the Chriſtians, to Damaſcus] Damaſcus, the chief City of Syria, bearing North from Canaan; from Jeruſalem ſix dayes journey.

any of this way] That is, profeſſed Chriſtians, chap. 24. 14. all which aggravated his ſinne, in that he not onely raged in Jeruſalem, but purſued them into other cities, and in that he ſpared neither man nor woman, though they are commonly priviledged, or pittied among armed enemies, by דרך dereth, way, the Hebr. underſtood any courſe of life, or profeſſour, Pſalm 91. 11. 1 Kings 15. 26.

V. 3. ſuddenly there ſhined a light] He willingly perſecuted, who deſired licence ſo to do, but was converted againſt his intentions, and beſides his will: God ſuffered him to gain letters, to approach near Damaſcus, to conceive hope, and to frame bloody thoughts thoughts for the execution of thoſe cruel deſignes, and then ſuddenly he ſtayed his courſe, who ran ſo headlong to his own deſtruction: ſo true is that of Fulgentius ad Monim. lib. 1. præveniat impium, ut fiat juſtus, ſubſequitur juſtum, ne fiat impius; præveniat elitum, ut ſurgat, ſubſequitur elevatum, ne cadat; he preventeth the impious, that he may become holy, he followeth the holy, that he may not become wicked; he preventeth the broken that he may riſe, he followeth him that is raiſed, that he may not fall; and that ſuddenly and without, and beyond their expectation. See chap. 22. 6.

V. 4. and he fell to the earth, &c.] Caſt down by the power and appearing Majeſty of Chriſt (See John 18. 6.) aſtoniſhing and terrifying him. Here the authority and letters of the high prieſts could nothing availe him, but he is enformed to yeeld to the allſubduing power of Chriſt, whoſe name and memory he ſo violently endeavoured to put out of the tongues and hearts of all men, why perſecuteſt thou me?] See on chap. 4. 26. This ſheweth that thoſe who perſecute the ſervants and profeſſours of Chriſt, in them perſecute Chriſt himſelf, who liveth in them. Galat. 2. 20. See Matth. 25. 40. Iſaiah 63. 9. Zach. 2. 8. for he is the head of the Church. Coloſ. 1. 18. the Saints are his members. Eph 5. 30. it ſhould teach perſecuters a cautious moderation (See c. 5. 35.) and us who ſuffer, patience; rejoyce in as much as ye are partakers of Chriſts ſufferings, 1 Pet. 4. 13. See verſe 5. Chriſt in his own ſacred perſon, and human nature, was now in heaven far above the reach of any creature, but he taketh all that is done here on earth againſt his ſervants on his own accompt, therefore he ſaith, not, why perſecuteſt thou my ſervants, who believe in me, but why perſecuteſt thou me? neither ſaith he, Matth 25. 35. the poor was hungry, and ye gave him no meat, &c. but I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat, neither ſaith he, Mal. 3. 9. ye have robbed the Miniſters of tithes and offerings, but ye are curſed with a curſe, for ye have robbed me.

V. 5. and he ſaid, who art thou Lord?] Theſe words proceed from an aſtoniſhed minde, in ſuſpence and doubt what to do: being dejected and humbled, he is now prepared to receive Gods commands, who before in his Phariſaicall heigth of minde was upon a furious march againſt him.

Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt] See on verſe 4. in that thou perſecuteſt them that profeſſe my name, who are one with me their head.

to kick againſt the pricks] This was a proverbial ſpeech, noting their contumacy and folly, who would obſtinately hurt themſelves in purſuit of others: it ſignifieth here, a reſiſting God to a mans own hurt, Jer. 7. 19. 1 Cor. 10. 22.

V. 6. what wilt thou have me do?] He thought he had done right before (See John 16. 2. Phil. 3. 6.) but now finding the power of God reſiſting him, he ſubmitteth, and deſireth to know the will of God, thus extraordinarily calling him from his intentions. See Pſal. 25. 4.

arriſe and go into the city] That is, into Damaſcus (v. 8.) now near, verſe 3. God could eaſily have inſtructed him, but he would have him go into the city, that Ananias might inſtruct, and baptize him; firſt that he might teach Saul humility, the ground and foundation of all true religion, by ſending, and aſſigning him to their magiſtery, whom but now he not onely proudly deſpiſed, but impiouſly reſolved to afflict and deſtroy. Secondly God would alſo hereby teach all men to reverence and ſubmit to his ordinance in the miniſtery of men thereto called and authorized by him.

it ſhall be told thee there what thou, &c.] That is, there Ananias ſhall inſtruct thee concerning my will: thus Chriſt who could as eaſily have told him immediately what he would have him do, would yet ſend him to Ananias (Ananias is ignorant of Gods will herein, as Saul, at preſent, and ſtarting at, and declining the office enjoyned him) to confirm the authority of mans miniſtery; to teach all hearers to attend unto it, as the very ordinance and power of God to ſalvation, Rom. 4. 16. and to free the preaching of Paul from all ſuſpition of compaſſ: he could likewiſe, eâdem operâ have inſtructed the devout Centurion Cornelius (chap. 10.) by the Angel, but he cauſed him to ſend for Peter to Joppa, to come to enform him for the ſame end.

V. 7. hearing a voice] That is, Sauls voice (as c. 22. 9. See Dan 10. 7) not the voice of Chriſt, except ſome confuſed ſound, the meaning whereof they knew not.

but ſeeing no man] No man ſpeaking to Saul,

V. 8. he ſaw no man] He was ſmitten blinde by the brightneſſe of that light which ſhined unto him: to teach him that he was ſpiritually blind in his opinion of wiſdom, and rage againſt Chriſt and ſhould now. in being obedient unto the heavenly viſion (Act, 26, 19.) be illuminated with a better, even an heavenly light, ſhewing the way to eternal life and ſalvation,

V. 9. and neither did eat nor drink] So much was he amazed at that which happened to him; it may be then was his rapture which he ſpeaketh of, 2 Cor 12. 2.

V. 10. a diſciple at Damaſcus named Ananias] Thus God would beat down Sauls arrogancy; ſending him, not to any of the Apoſtles for direction, but to an inferior Chriſtian, to him ſaid the Lord in a viſion, &c.] This was neceſſary to prepare Ananias, leſt otherwiſe he ſhould have been hindred by fear of Saul, from the duty enjoyned him for Sauls converſion: though he knew that God called and commanded, yet he excuſed; ſo did Moſes, Exod. 3. 11. &c. Exod. 4. 1. 10. &c. therefore God confirmed him,

V. 11. called Saul of Tarſus] This was a famous city of Cilicia near Antioch, chap. 21. 39. now called Hama.

for behold he prayeth] It appeareth that God revealed to Ananias, that Saul prayed, and how he would enlighten him body and ſoul, and therefore commanded him to repair to him for the accompliſhment thereof,

V. 12. and hath ſeen] Or, he ſaw; it is doubtful whether theſe words be a continuation of Gods ſpeech to Ananias, or Lukes concerning Sauls viſion; ſome think the former moſt probable.

V. 13. Lord I have heard by many of this man, &c.] Here was Ananias infirmity: fleſh and blood objected many leſs, and fears to divert men from, or to hinder them in the ſervice of God; but the Spirit of God prevaileth in them againſt all.

V. 14. and here he hath authority, &c.] His name was ſpread far and near for a bloody perſecuter, the more famous was his converſion: and it appeareth that the Saints at Damaſcus had knowledge of his coming now, and commiſſion againſt them.

V. 15. a choſen veſſel unto me] σκεῦος ἐκλογῆς, a veſſel of election; it is an Hebraiſme, importing a choice, or elect veſſel; σκεῦος hath a more general ſignification, and is put (as כלי cheli with the Hebrews) for a veſſel, receptacle, or any inſtrument or utencill: here it ſignifieth one whom God had choſen, to be the divine treaſure of the Goſpel, to the Gentiles, 2 Cor. 4. 7.

V. 16. I will ſhew him how great things he muſt ſuffer] He muſt ſuffer many things for my names ſake, whereof I will before inform him, to frame him to invincible patience; as if he had ſaid, thou ſhalt not need to fear him, as heretofore a perſecuter, for henceforth he muſt his ſelf ſuffer great things for my names ſake; for his profeſſing and preaching the truth of the Goſpel.

V. 17. putting his hands upon him, &c.] Ananias ſheweth his obedience in going, and God his purpoſe to confirm the authority of the external Miniſtery, in directing it ſo, that Saul ſhould receive his light by the impoſition of Ananias hands, who could have reſtored him to a double ſight, by his own immediate power; concerning impoſition of hands, ſee chap. 6. 6.

brother Saul, the Lord, &c.] He being aſſured by Chriſt of his converſion and adoption in Chriſt, ſalureth him by the name of brother: alſo he ſheweth his authority and miſſion from Chriſt, which that Saul might be aſſured of, he nameth a private token, Chriſt appearing to him by the way as he came: and the end of his commiſſion, that he might receive his ſight, and be endued with ſuch admirable gifts of the holy Ghoſt, as might further enable him to his charge, and confirm him in the faith and truth of Jeſus.

V. 18. fell from his eyes] Theſe ſcales falling off, ſhew that his blindneſſe was not ordinary, but ſuch as might minde him of his former ſpiritual blindneſſe: for though, being brought up at Gamaliels feet, he had much profited in that kinde of learning, yet his life, after his illumination, accounted that knowledge no better than blindeſſe, Phil. 3. 7. 8.

and was baptized] It was neceſſary for him by this ſolemn ſigne and ſeal of Gods covenant of grace, to give his name to Chriſt, to teſtifie his converſion, and to confirm his faith in Chriſt, and him in the profeſſion of the Goſpel.

V. 19. when he had received meat. &c.] A prudent and moderate care of health muſt be had, whereby we may be enabled to our calling. 1 Tim. 5. 23. ſuperſtitious abſtinence is willworſhip, Coloſ. 2. 18. and doctrine of devils. 1 Tim. 4. 4. 1 Tim. 5. 23.

certain dayes with the diſciples] He joyned no more with Chriſts profeſſeſſed enemies, but with the Saints: it is ſkilleth much what company we keep, See 1 Cor. 5. 9. 11. Prov. 1. 15. & 2. 12. & 5. 8.

V. 20. and ſtraight way he preached Chriſt, &c.] Declaring him to be the Son of God, and Saviour of the Elect, which doubtleſſe he copiouſly delivered. (See verſe 22.) by that largeneſs of heart which the holy Ghoſt gave him bearing down that double error of the Jews, who thought, 1. that this Jeſus the Son of Mary, was not Chriſt, 2. That the Meſſias, was to be a meer man, a victorious and glorious ſecular Prince.

V. 21. were amazed] Becauſe in his ſuddain converſion they perceived the hand of God: this made his preaching more powerfull and effectual in them.

is not this he that deſtroyed, &c.] Remembring his former actions; they admire that ſuch a perſecutor ſhould now preach the ſame Goſpel which he ſo lately, and violently oppoſed: and they glorified God for him, ſee Gal. 1. 23, 24.

V. 22. proving that he is very Chriſt] By comparing or matching places of Scripture, ſee c. 17. 11. & 18. 28. So the word συμβιβάζων ſignifieth, ſaith Budeus on this place, ex collatione ſacrorum uticinorum docens & probans, teaching and proving by comparing sacred prophesies.

V. 23. after that many dayes were fulfilled] That is, three years, God would not presently expose him to conflicts with, and assaults of, adversaries, but for a convenient time restraine the fury of persecuters: for it appeareth that after his conversion, he went into Arabia and returned again unto Damascus, and three years after he went up to Jerusalem, — Gal. 1. 17, 18.

V. 24. but their laying of wait was known of Saul] 2 Cor. 11. 32. this was after his return from Arabia, that the Jews at Damascus plotted to destroy him: but God discovering their designe, he foreknowing the danger, escaped from them.

V. 25. the Disciples took him by night] That is the faithful Christians, thus provided for his safety.

V. 26. but they were all afraid of him] Between his conversion and coming again to Jerusalem, were three years expired; Gal. 1. 17, 18. wherein he preached in some parts of Arabia, and thence came back again to Damascus: in this time was the conspiracy of the unbelieving Jews against him: he escaping, and coming to Jerusalem, and desiring to unite in external communion with the Disciples, as now he did in the faith of Christ, they remembring his former rages against them, suspected his pretences which was a great tryall to him.

V. 27. But Barnabas took him, &c.] Of him see chap. 4. he being thereto incited by the holy Ghost, presented Saul to Peter and James, acquitting him from the jealousie they had of him: which he did by three arguments. 1. Because he had seen the Lord Jesus in the way, when he was going to Damascus to persecute. 2. Because Christ had spoken to him. 3. Because he had boldly, and openly preached the Gospel at Damascus.

V. 28. was with them coming in, and going out] Conversant with them, that is, Peter and James, Gal. 1. 18, 19.

V. 29. he spake boldly] He openly professed the Gospel of Christ.

the Grecians] Acts 6. 1.

V. 30. forth to Tarsus] See on verse 11. that he might preach the gospel to his own countrey-men.

V. 31. then had the Churches rest] When Saul (against whom the adversaries were implacably enraged) was gone out of their sight.

were edified] In that the Church still encreased in the number of the faithful, and they in knowledge, faith, love, and holiness: this word οἰκοδομούμεναι, edified is a metaphorical expression taken from building; spiritually the church the house of God, 1 Tim. 3. 15. (as every faithfull servant of Christ, is a temple of the holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 3, 16. 1 Cor. 6. 19) and we are all living materials, 1 Peter 2. 5. prepared and fitted here by the word preached, which is compared to an hammer that breaketh the rock, Jerem. 23. 29. so as that there shall be in the finishing and seting all up in heaven, no noice thereof; as in the building of Solomons temple, 1 Kings 6. 7. there was neither hammer nor ax heard.

V. 32. all quarters] Where the Saints were, whom he was to visit, to confirm them in the faith.

at Lydda] This town in Jeroms time was called Diospolis: it was a famous place, not far from the Mediterrane sea: near to this was Joppa, now named Japha. (Syr. לוד lud, and Hebr. לד lod,) 1 Chron. 8. 12. in the tribe of Benjamin. See Ezra 2. 33. Nehem. 7. 37.

V. 33. a certain man named Æneas] Mentioning the disease, and the antiquity thereof before the cure, he setteth out the excellencie of the miracle, and certainty of the history.

V. 34. Jesus Christ maketh thee whole, arise, &c.] This he said, being assured of the will of God herein, shewing that himself was but a servant unto the power of Christ, who wrought the cure. Here appeared the excellent faith of Peter, assured of the truth of Christ's promises: see the marvelous difference of a man left but a little to his own strength (as he was when he denyed Christ, Mat. 26. 70. &c.) and the same confirmed by the power of the holy Ghost, as Peter now was, when he confidently told Æneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole; and in full assurance of a cure beyond all art of man, or power of the creature, biddeth him, arise, and make his bed.

make thy bed] As they who have slept, rising cast up their bed: this sheweth that he was perfectly cured and enabled so to do.

he arose immediatly] Which sheweth that it was done by a divine power: art worketh in time and by degrees, but God when he pleaseth in an instant.

V. 35. all that dwelt] As many as saw it; very many.

and Saron] Σάρωνα, Hebr. שרון Sharon, Isa. 33. 9. 1 Chron. 27. 29. 70. Σάρων, a champion countrey, or tract of fruitful land between Cesarea of Palestine, mount Tabor, and the lake of Genesareth, running along beyond Joppa: this place it seemeth was near Lydda. See Jerom de loc. Act. and Joh. Drus. ad Voc. N. T. com. 1 Saronas.

V. 36. was at Ioppa] A city by the sea side. See on v. 33. and c. 10. 5.

V. 37. whom when they had washed] They used to wash their dead, and to anoint them before they put them into the linen in which they buried them.

V. 38. they sent unto him two men, &c.] Here they shewed their faith and charity, desiring that the pious woman might recover, and be longer profitable unto the Church.

V. 39. Peter arose and went] Both they who sent for him, and Peter going were directed so to do, by the holy Spirit and providence of God, for the advancement of his glory, and the confirmation of the truth of the gospel, else might it have seemed a strange request of the one, or undertaking of the other, to raise the dead.

shewing the coats] Which she made to give to the poor.

V. 40. put them all forth] Probably he either meaneth all those, who with importunate mourning might distract him praying; or, all, here, as verse 35. and many other places, goeth for many. Syr. he put out all the men.

opened her eyes] Her life being restored at that word, Tabitha arise, she looked and sate up.

V. 41. presented her alive] Syr. he gave her to them alive: that is, restored again to life, and doubtlesse, to good health and strength, for in all the admirable cures done by Christ or any of the Apostles or Disciples, in his name we never read that the disaffected person was lesse than perfectly recovered.

V. 42. many believed] This was the end and fruit of the miracle to bring them by faith to Christ and eternal life.

V. 43. he tarried many dayes] Until Cornelius by Gods appointment, sent for him hence, c. 10. 6. 24, &c. it is likely that he stayed here to instruct them further in the truth of Christ, and to confirm them in the faith.

CHAP. X.

Verse 1. Cornelius] An Italian Captain of a garrison; Souldiers of the Romans at Cesarea.

V. 2. a devout man] It seemeth he was a Proselyte in heart, though not of the circumcision and open profession.

with all his house] This was a good signe of his devotion, that his servants also feared God: and a good example for Masters of families thus to order them: it was holy Abrahams praise, Gen. 18. 19.

to God alwayes] His prayers are commended, 1. from the object, he prayed to God; not as the superstitious, to creatures: 2. from their perseverance, they were not by certain fits, in some fear or danger onely (then even Jonahs mariners will be devout, Jon. 6. 1.) but alwayes without ceasing, though not without intermission.

V. 3. He saw in a vision] Not in a trance or rapt of spirit, but in a vision, and that not obscurly, but sensibly and evidently: it is called in the Gr. ὅραμα, visum, that which is evidently and certainly seen, as this appearance of the Angel was; so the Syriac giveth the Greek φανερῶς, by גליאוית by which they meant, apertè, palàm, manifestè, so it seemeth was this, for it was not only about the ninth hour of the day, three hours before night, about which time they usedto offer the evening sacrifice, (Exod. 29. 41.) with prayers, but the Angel of God appeared to him, not in a dumb shew, but bringing a divine oracle, which he clearly spake and delivered to him in an audible voice and words which he understood. See verse 30.

the ninth hour] Which was one of the Jews set hours of prayer, Chap. 3. 1. See Exod. 29. 41.

V. 4. thy prayers and thine alms, &c.] It is a manner of expression borrowed from their burnt-offerings, which they called עולות holoth, ascensiones, holocausts, burnt-offerings, Deut. 12. 6. &c. or ascensions: (it is of the verb עלה halah, ascendit, &c.) or incence, whereof David saith, Psal. 141, 2. let my prayer be set forth before thee, as incense: and Rev. 8. 4. the smoak of the incense which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before the Lord out of the angels hand. So came up Cornelius alms with his prayers for a memorial before God; with such sacrifices God is well pleased, Heb. 13. 18. such contributions to the saints the Apostle calleth, an odour of a sweet smell a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God, Phil. 4. 18 without charity God accepteth no sacrifice of prayers, Mat. 5, 23, 24, Prov. 21. 13.

V. 5. now send men] The angel seemeth to resigne the office of teaching to Peter, whom God had assigned therto: so did Christ to Ananias, chap. 9. 10. God will be heard in those men whom he appointeth to preach, Luke 10. 16. and it is very dangerous to contemn his ordinance.

to Ioppa, and call] See on chap. 9. 36. it was a port town, where Ionah took shipping, when he would flie from God, Jon. 1. 3. here dwelt Simon the tanner where Peter lodged, verse 6. Hebrew יפו japho, Greek, Ἰόππη: a very ancient town of Palestine, so named for its beauty, of יפה japha, pulcher, formosus, as some think: others say of יפת japheth, in Jeroms time it was called Joppa, ib. in loc. Actor. now Jaffa, G. Mercat. Atl. min. in terra sanct.

V. 6. he lodgeth with one Simon, &c.] These particular instructions not onely informed him where to finde Peter, but also confirmed him in his faith and obedience to Gods command.

V. 7. a devout souldier] See on verse 2. though it were in carnal reason full of danger to change religion, specially in compliance with those who were commonly accused of attempting new matters in the government of Palestine and Syria, yet Cornelius faith in God overcometh these difficulties, and presently sent according to Gods command: in matters of religion we must rely on Gods commandments, wherein delayes are dangerous, and not on carnall reason. The souldier he entrusted, was formed according to the happy example of his master, verse 2. and in his devotion not only expresseth his masters religious care to teach his family by precept and example (that most powerful Rhetorick) but also his obsequious readinesse to learn good: In every calling, men may serve the Lord: these shall rise in judgement to condemn wicked souldiers.

V. 8. declared all these things unto them] Which he did, as to furnish them for their treaty with Peter, so to encourage them in this service, wherein the cause of God, and his and their salvations were interessed: his choice of such men of trust is imitable.

V. 9. about the sixth hour] About noon, which was another hour for prayer, Psal. 55. 17. he went up to the top of the house, which was flat rooft, that being a place, as most remote of all the house, from disturbance by any domestick businesses, so, most fit and accomodate for prayer, which ought to be free from all distractions.

V. 10. he fell into a trance] A Supernatural elevation of the minde, by the Spirit of God, filling all the sense and faculty of the soul with a divine revelation.

V. 11. and he saw heaven opened] This was the vision which he saw, we may not think this vision, reall or sensible according to the outward man: his ecstasie gave him other eyes, that is, spiritual.

V. 12. were all manner of four footed beasts] Wherein seemed to him to be all manner of beasts, and creatures, as well those which by their law were to be accounted unclean, as others.

V. 13. and eat] That is, indifferently without any respect to the distinction of clean and unclean: and therefore God affected him with so sharp and sodain an hunger, verse 10. because he meant to present him a vision sutable thereto.

V. 14. common or unclean] That is, which the prescript of the law made such. See Mark 7. 2. See Deut. 14. 4. &c. Peter did not yet well understand how this rapt and vision agreed with that law of God; therefore lest he should have done any thing rashly or with a reluctant conscience, he expresseth his scruple, most probably, that he might be better enformed and satisfied therein, lest he should do that which by the law would render him prophane or unclean.

V. 15. what God hath cleansed] By taking away the difference; which he had put for the time of the ceremonial law only, by this he was taught, not to abhor the Gentiles, seeing God had taken away the difference, Ephes. 2. 14.

call thou not common] Or unclean, μὴ κοίνε, (See on Matth. 15. 11.) Syriac ne contamines: do thou not say, or make as unclean, that is in thy esteem or valew of them: so the Hebrews used to speak: as Proverbs 17. 15. מצדיק רשע matsdik rashah, justifying the wicked: that is, accounting the wicked just; So the 70: ὃς δίκαιον κρίνει τὸν ἄδικον, &c.

V. 16. Received up again] That is, seemed in this vision to be taken up again.

V. 17. While Peter doubted, &c.] διηπόρει. Syr. מתדמר methdamar, wondred: but διαπορέω signifieth (as hath been noted) such a suspension of the minde, as perplexeth and straitneth it so, that one knoweth not what to do.

what this which he had seen, should mean] τί ἂν εἴη. So the Syriac, what it should be: that is, what it should signifie, what the Lord would hereby instruct him to do.

behold the men] The servants and the souldier which Cornelius sent, verse 7, 8.

V. 18. and called] As strangers in civility use to do: the rather, because they being Gentiles (with whom the Jews conversed not) would not by any importunity give offence: a good pattern for all godly souldiers.

V. 19. while Peter thought on the vision] While his thoughts were troubled, and he seriously meditated on that which God had shewed him and said unto him.

the Spirit said unto him] By an inward revelation, the holy Ghost further, and more evidently instructed him what the meaning of the vision was: God will never leave them without sufficient instruction who faithfully meditate on that he revealeth to them.

V. 20. doubting nothing] μηδὲν διακρινόμενος. διακρίνεσθαι, is in matter of judgement to waver, as now inclining to one side, and then to the another: Budæus interpreteth this place, without any dispute, not doubting; citra hæsitantiam; qui enim hæsitant, secum ipsi disputant sententiis alternantibus: without hesitation or sticking: for they that doubt; or stick at a thing, dispute with themselves with variable conclusions; this sheweth how our minds ought to be resolved toward Gods word, we must not waver. See Rom. 4. 20. & 14. 23. there can be no peace or rest of consciences, but on Gods word, and resolute adhering to the same.

I have sent them] I moved him that sent them: so that here is nothing fortuitous, but all directed by Gods Spirit, and holy providence.

V. 21. What is the cause, &c.] What businesse have ye with me? he knew not yet whither all this tended, and therefore enquired more diligently.

V. 22. a just man, &c.] He being a Gentile, and a souldier, they give Peter this character, in three excellent attributes, 1. that he was a just man. 2. that he feared God. 3. that he lived in the good opinion and report of all the Jews that knew him; and this, not (as officious sycophants use) to flatter him; but to do him right, and specially to free Peter from such jealousie as might otherwise, make him fearefull to come to him: in all, here is a good example for servants, ingenuously to give their masters their due honour, and faithfully to obey them.

was warned from God by an holy Angell] See Matt. 2. 12. this was their main argument to perswade Peter to go, because God called him; and had an hand in all this, and that it was no motion of man, who may ofttimes propose things inconvenient and evill (as Balac did when he sent for Balaam to curse the Israel of God) but this was of God who cannot erre nor command any evill.

V. 23. and lodged them] Courteously entertained them as guests and strangers, ξενίζειν signifieth also ξενίας χάριν τινὰ ὑποδέξασθαι. Suidas: to receive one for hospitality sake, or to hospitality: a good example to all good men. See Heb. 13. 2. 1 Tim. 5. 10. Gen. 18. 2. 3. Gen. 19. 1, 2, 3. Exod. 2. 20. Judg. 19. 20. specially for prelates, 1 Tim 3. 1.

On the morrow, &c.] Here was Peters ready obedience to God, he would not beyond necessity delay to execute that which he understood God would have him do: so holy Abraham; having received that grievous precept to sacrifice his onely dear Sonne Isaac, rose up early in the morning to take his journey according to Gods command, Gen. 22. 3. delayed duty (besides the danger of prevention by some unexpected accident) looseth the value which a cheerfull expedition might have given it: God loveth a cheerful giver, and a quick servant.

and certain brethren] So the unanimous Christians esteemed each other. See c. 9. 17. these out of thankfulnesse and honour to Peter, would accompany him on the way, but Gods providence so disposed of it, that they also might be witnesses of his grace and mercy to the gentiles.

V. 24. his kinsmen, &c.] To the end that they also might be partakers of the grace and mercy of God with him.

V. 25. worshipped, &c.] Not as God, with Divine worship; yet with too much humility, which Peter correcteth: see Revel. 12. 19. and 22. 8. προσεκύνησε here translated (worshipped) signifieth also saluted reverendly. So the Hebrews use their verb שחה shacha, to fall down, or bow down to adoration Divine, or civill, Gen. 23. 7. Abraham arose וישתחו vajishtachu, and bowed himself to the people of the land, 70. προσεκύνησε τῷ λαῷ — the word here used: so that προσκυνεῖν, importing both to adore, or worship with Divine worship; and to salute with civill worship, such as man oweth to man respectively: we cannot reasonably think, that Abraham adored the people as God, or Cornelius Peter; yet it appeareth that Cornelius being stricken with reverence at the presence of so great a servant of God exceeded the bounds of more civil respect, as appeareth by Peters words, verse 26.

V. 26. I my self am also a man] This sheweth that Cornelius falling down, too much enclined to the impropriation of Gods honour, and giving it to a creature, which Peter prohibiteth by this reason, I my self am a man: he need say no more: man must adore his creatour, but not be adored by his fellow-creature: here is no kissing of Peters feet.

V. 27. as he talked with him] As Peter went on talking with Cornelius into his house, probably they declared either to other, the work and providence of God in their meeting, Peter excusing himself thereby, for his comming to the Gentiles; and Cornelius, for his sending for him.

V. 28. A man that is a Jew] John 4. 9. & 18, 28. The law of God forbade them to marry with heathens, to have familiar conversation with them, &c. but their tradition barred them from eating with them, or coming into their houses &c. chap. 11. 3. so that where Peter saith it is unlawfull, beyond that which the law of God prohibited, you must understand Peter to speak ἀπὸ κοινοῦ, after the common tradition, or sense of the Jews.

one of another nation] Being a Gentile and not a Jew.

common or unclean] Meaning in respect of the diversity of nations, for now he hereby understood, that God would call the Gentiles to faith and salvation by Christ.

V. 29. I ask therefore, for what intent, &c.] It is probable that he saith this for the companies sake assembled there, that they also might be acquainted with the whole passage, and do be better satisfied, and more attentive unto that which they should hear; for the servants by the way, and Cornelius in that discourse which they might have going into the house, probably had given Peter some light concerning the businesse.

V. 30. Untill this hour] Until this time of day. See verse 3, untill about three of the clock in the after-noon.

a man stood before me] The angel in mans shape, verse 3.

V. 31. thy prayer is heard] See veise 4.

V. 32. send therefore] See verse 5.

V. 33. immediately therefore I sent unto thee] This probably he said to assure Peter, that he would be a carefull and attentive hearer of the mysteries of faith, which is a great encouragement unto ministers, to a cheerfull execution of their ministery, whereas on the contrary a drouse or inattentive auditory, not onely disheartens the minister, but intercept's the blessing of God thereby to have come upon them, and hinders the power of the word preached.

thou hast well done] This is a kinde of thankfull acknowledgement of Peters care and pains taken in comming to him.

We are all here present before God] Thus he declareth for himselfe, his friends and family, their attention, and future obedience to his doctrine: O that this thought were in all that hear the word of God, we are all here present before God.

V. 34. Of a truth] Certainly. See Deut. 10. 17. Rom. 2. 11. 1 Peter 1. 17. as if he said, hitherto I have been carried along with the common streame of the Jewish errour, thinking that Gods grace and mercy were entailed upon the Jews, and that they only were heirs of all his promises in Christ, and the only nation of the world which he would accept, and own for his people; but now I know for a truth, that God is no accepter of persons.

no respecter of persons] Or, hath no regard in his acceptance, to the externall condition of the person, as, of what nation, family, name, or quality he be of, he speaketh here of those following degrees of grace, faith and obedience, which where ever they are found, tis evident they are acceptable to him.

V. 35. he that feareth him] He that is truely religious toward God, and just toward man: by the fear of God the Hebrews understood, the whole worthip of God: Peter, intimating that Cornelius feared God in that he believed in him that came into the world to save sinners, sheweth that the Sacraments are seals of adoption, in children, and of faith, of those who are of years, as Rom. 4. 11. So that they are deceived, who so tie the holy Spirit and the effects thereof, to the receiving the Sacrament of baptism, as if none could fear God, or be accepted of him, and saved by him, who is not baptized: for first, none before Christ received this seal, as since we do: and next, it is the contempt, not the privation, which God herein condemneth. (See v. 44. and John 3. 5.) here it appereth, that Cornelius was accepted of God, before he had received the external seal of his covenant.

V. 36. preaching peace] This is, reconciliation between God and man, through Christ, Isa. 57. 19. Ephes. 2. 14, 16, 17. Col. 1. 20.

Lord of all] Not only the God of the Jews, but of the Gentiles also; and he will gather his elect out of all the world, Rom. 3. 30. & 10. 12.

V. 37. After the baptisme] That is, after John, the forerunner of Christ, had preached, and baptized in his name.

V. 38 God anointed Jesus] That is, indued his human nature, with the graces of the Holy Ghost, and consecrated, or dedicated his whole person to the office of a mediatour, both which were prefigured, by the ancient rite of anointing.

for God was with him] In the fulnesse of the deity, as he was the eternal Son, Col. 2. 9. and in powe, grace and favour, as he was man, and Mediatour. John 8. 29 & 16 32.

V. 39. and we are witnesses] We the Apostles who attended on him, chosen for this end, that we might testifie what doctrine he preached, and what miracles he did, as verse 41, 42.

Whom they slew, &c.] Thus speaking of the death of Christ, he mentioneth the ingratitude and in humanity of his countrey-men the Jews toward Christ: and that we might consider what he sufferred to deliver us from the curse of the law. See Gal. 3. 13. Deut. 21. 23. Here see how necessary, a good end proposed, and a good intention is to every action: for albeit, as Lactantius saith well, lib. 3. cap. 15. nihil interest quo animo facias, quod feisse vitiosum est: in skilleth not with what intention thou doest, that which is wicked to be done: yet doing any thing with an evill intention, though the thing done were so far decreed of God, as that he will draw good out of that evil (as it was in Christs death for our redemption) yet is that same action a sin in the agent, or agents, and Gods goodnesse (so much above all evill, so invincible, that he draweth a good end out of the wicked actions of men) doth no wayes justifie the sins of men, because he never decreeth sin See Gen. 50. 20. 1 King. 12. 8. 15. 19. 1 Sam. 10. 26. 27

V. 40. him God raised] Left the Gentiles should think, therefore Christ, whom these men preach, is destroyed, he presently inferreth, that (which declareth him to be the Son of God, Romans 1. 4. and conquerer of death and hell) he was raised up from the dead.

V. 41. Not to all the people] God shewed Christ alive from the dead, but not to all the Jews, but to all those who were appointed witnelles of the same; and those not a few: he was seen alive after his resurrection from the dead, to above five hundred brethren at once, 1 Cor. 15, 6. he appeared not to the enemies, because his state of humiliation and suffering by them, was finished; and it state of humiliation and suffering by them, was finished; and it beseemed him not them (whose impenitency and unbelief he knew and foresaw) otherwise than that they shal see him coming again in the clouds to judge them Rev. 1. 7.

V. 42. commanded us to preach] See chap. 1. 8. Luke 24. 47, 48. Mark 16. 15. Mat. 28. 19. because the power of Christ's resurrection and the glory of his kingdom, which is now, by mens spirituall blindnesse and unbelief, much clouded, which shall in his coming to judge the living and the dead, clearly and terribly shine out to all the nations of the earth. therefore Peter annexeth this declaration unto the foregoing discourse, as that which Christ principally gave them in charge to preach, and which is of a very high concernment for all auditors of Gods word to attend, and diligently mark and observe.

of quick and dead] Of those who being found alive at his coming, shall be changed; and of those that shall be raised from the dead, to come to judgement. 1 Thes. 4. 15. Rom. 14. 9. 2 Tim. 4. 1. 1 Pet. 4. 5.

V. 43. to him give all, &c.] Jer. 31. 34. Mich. 7. 18. Luke 24. 27. as if he had said, this doctrine which we according to the commandment of Christ, preach to you and must preach to all nations, is no new doctrine, but such as all the holy Prophets attested concerning Christ, even free remission of sins and salvation, by him who died for us wretched sinners, and rose again for our justification, who believe in him, Rom. 4. 24, 25. It is more than probable, that Peter cited many places of the Prophets, and opened the same unto these hearers, thereby evidently proving those things by him alleadged, which for brevity sake are not here recorded, it being sufficient that the sums of these things whereof Peter discoursed, are here set down.

through his name] By his merit.

V. 44. while he yet spake] The Holy Ghost accompanied the sincere preaching, and attentive hearing the word, and here by an evident miracle confirmed that which Peter had preached unto them, that Gods mercy in Christ belongeth as well to the Gentiles as to the Jews.

the Holy Ghost] That is, the graces of the Holy Spirit, in illumination, regeneration, and the gifts of tongues, &c. By this miracle God declared, that the merit of Christs passion belonged as well to the Gentiles as to the Jews; and that the Spirit, thus coming to these before baptisme) the righteousnesse of God is not attained on these before baptisme) the righteousnesse of God is not attained by any thing external, without the inward working of his Spirit, which here came on Cornelius, being neither circumcised nor baptized. See on verse 35.

V. 45. Because that on the Gentiles] They did not before this understand, that the grace of God appertained unto them, which had been so long (like the dew in Gideons fleece) distilled onely on the the Jews, Psal. 147. 19, 20. this made those Jews which came with Peter, amazed, that such an admirable measure of Gods spirit was also powred out upon the Gentiles, as on the day of Pentecost on the Apostles at Jerusalem.

V. 46. for they heard him speak] It was the vulgar errour of the Jews that the covenant of grace, and the Messias, belonged only to themselves, but now they perceive that the Gentiles also had interest therein, hearing them speak unstudied languages, they knew that they had received the holy Ghost.

then answered Peter] This is an usual manner of speaking with the Hebrews, answered, for, then said, &c. so the Syriac ענא wemer, and he said: Peter seeing what was done, better understood what those gifts of the holy Ghost meant, to wit that the believing Gentiles should also be partakers of Salvation by Christ.

V. 47. Can any forbid water] He reasoneth from the thing signified, unto the signe, and this question is in effect a vehement assertion, as if he had said, we ought not to withhold the signe; it were a sin to deny it: his reason may thus, more at large, be formed. Those that are in Christ by the inward effect of the Holy Ghost, ought to be implanted into the Church by baptisme; but these Gentiles are in Christ by the inward effect of the Holy Ghost, therefore they ought to be implanted into the Church by baptisme: the same reason will conclude for baptizing infants, whom the Holy Ghost hath made, and pronounced holy, it born of believing Parents, 1 Cor. 7. 14. the meaning of these words is; seeing God hath given them the inward grace and spiritual part, should we, who are but Ministers, deny to communicate to them the external sign and seal of incorporation into Christs body the Church?

V. 48. To be baptized in the name of the Lord] For baptism is the signe whereby believers are openly declared to be the people of God: that which he saith, in the Name of the Lord, we must understand as relating to the use, not the forme of baptism: They were baptized in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as Christ commanded, Matth. 28. 19, but here, baptizing in the Name of the Lord, importeth, confecration to the Lord Christ, and implantation into the Church, whereof he is the Head. So chap. 2. 38. chap. 8. 16. and chap. 19. 5.

to tarry certain dayes] Cornelius and the Church in his house prayed him to tarry; both that they might be further instructed, confirmed, and comforted by his Ministry, and also to expresse their thankfulnesse to him for so great a blessing as God had sent them by his ministry: the best have ever need to learn, and to be confirmed: and by our desire to know more, we may, no: obscurely, gather how we have profited: no man hath ever tasted of true grace offered in the Gospel, but he desireth more.

CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. That the Gentiles also had received] Which was yet a wonder to them: a mystery hid from the beginning of the World, Ephes. 3. 10, 11. which caused the holy Angels to stand at gaze. See 1 Pet. 1. 12. The Jews held the Gentiles as wicked, incorrigible, desperate sinners, and meer aliants from God. See Ephes. 2. 12. But now that which God here did, was so publick (by reason of those Jewes which were of Cesarea with Peter; relating the miracle to the Apostles and Brethren at Jerusalem) that it might sufficiently teach them the contrary.

V. 2. that were of the circumcision] So were also all the believing Jewes, who did not quarrel with him, neither are here mentioned: but this pointeth at them onely, who were too much addicted to legall ceremonies, in so much that they thought circumcision simply necessary to salvation. See chap. 15. 1, 5. and would have the believing Gentiles also circumcised.

V. 3. thou wentest in to men uncircumcised] Chap. 10. 28. Thus they accuse Peter, as if it had been some grevious sin: whereas the Law of God forbade not all commerce with Gentiles, but that onely which might corrupt them; not that which might gain others to God and salvation by them.

V. 4. Peter rehearsed the matter in Order, &c.] Peter willingly submitted to the judgement of the Church, to give them reasons of that he had done. (See 1 Cor. 14. 29.) by this means he both taught us what every one of us ought to do, and also better instructed them who erred. Peter pretended not to be above the Church.

V. 5. I was in the city Joppa praying] This whole narration. See chap. 10. 9 &c.

V. 15. as on us, &c.] Chap. 2. 4. In the like power, though not in the same signes of fiery tongues, nor with the same degrees of fulnelle.

V. 16. John indeed baptized with water] John 1. 26.

V. 17. What was I that I should withstand] This was Peters conclusion when he had rehearsed the matter: the meaning is; seeing that God hath made the Gentiles equal in grace, with the Jews converted to Christ, it was not in me to deny them an equal share and communion in the external seals and signs thereof: he that shall exclude those who have received the graces of Gods sanctifying Spirit by barring them from the external communion of the Church; in the rule (by Peters conclusion) are resisters of God.

V. 18. They held their peace] They rested satisfied; which is indeed the property of good men, who contend not so much for victory, as for truth; whereas the perverse will be satisfied with no reason.

V. 19. They which were scattered] Chap. 8. 1. He further prosecuteth here, that which was onely hinted, chap. 8. 4. concerning the propagation of the Gospel, by the ministry of those who were dispersed by reason of the cruel persecution: it ought to be a ground of comfort unto us who have long feared a sad darknesse coming on the Christian World, and a dangerous eclipse of the Gospel: yea but the Spirit saith, Rev. 2. 10. — fear none of these things, &c. The more Satan labooreth to oppresse the Elect, and obscure the truth, the more he marketh them for Saints whom the impious world hateth, and that for truth which Satan stirreth up his servants to oppose: Stars never shine so clear as in the uncouth shade of night.

Phenice] A Region of Syria,

Cyprus] An Isle in the Carpathean Sea, between Cilicia, and Syria.

Antioch] A famous city in Syria, near Cilicia.

V. 20. Cyrene] There were two cities of this name, one in Lybia, chap. 2. 10. the other in Assyria.

the Grecians] He meaneth not here the scattered Jews (who used the Greek tongue in their Synagogues; as chap. 6. 1. for of them he spake, verse 19.) but the Grecians which were Gentiles.

V. 21. the hand of the Lord] The power and grace of God, in miracles, and inward working of the hearers, accompanying their ministry, see Luke 1. 66. & 5. 17.

V. 22. they sent forth Barnabas] Of him see, chap. 4. 36. the burden of forming and ordering the Church of Christ, appointing and designing Pastours and Ministers to the several congregations, and holding them in an holy unity, they lay now upon the Apostles, therefore to confirm them that were converted to the faith, they send this son of consolation to Antioch, where a famous Church was now beginning, to order and establish the same.

V. 23. had seen the grace of God] Meaning the admirable effects thereof, bestowed upon the people of Antioch in their conversion to Christ.

cleave unto the Lord] Deut. 10 20 & 30 20 with ardent desire, and zeal resolving to serve him, and to rest allured in expectation of his promises.

V. 24. he was a good man] Meaning Barnabas, verse 22.

much people was added, &c.] They are here said, added to the Lord, who were won to the faith in Christ, and the Church there present: mark here the fruit of Ministers unity; many were added to the Lord; for Barnabas preaching was to confirm that truth which others had taught: it is not so where one casteth down that which another buildeth; consider well Mat. 18. 7.

V. 25. to seek Saul] His ambition was, that the Gospel and glory of Christ, in the conversion and salvation of souls might be advanced; therefore he that might have been in great honour and esteem at Antioch, goeth to seek Saul, that they might joyn in the work of Christ.

V. 26 with the Church] Or in the Church ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. Hence appeareth their great diligence in preaching and propagating the truth of the Gospel, and that set out by the circumstance of time, a whole year, which wanted not an excellent effect, specified in the next following words.

were called Christians first, &c.] Whereas before they were called Disciples, and Nazarens (under which name they used to curse the professions of the Gospel thrice a day: as Jerom in Isaiah 49. speaking of the unbelieving Jews, saith, ter per singulos dies sub nomine Nazarenorum maledicunt in synagogis suis See c. 24 5.) Now at Antioch they were first called Christians. So much honour had this city, that from thence Christ, as it were spread his Banner; that it might appear to the world, that there was a people who would follow him, and glory to be called by his Sacred Name.

V. 27. came Prophets to Jerusalem] See chap. 13. 1. God then furnished his Church with variety of gifts: he gave some to be Apostles, some Prophets, &c. See Ephes. 4. 11 and inspired these with revelations for the good of his Church. See chap. 21. 9.

V. 28. named Agabus] Chap. 21 10. He foretold of the great general dearth in Claudius Cesars dayes, not by judicial Astrology, but the spirit, as it followeth in the next words: These great calamities he foretelleth that the Christians, having such timely notice thereof, might (as good Joseph did) lay up store and so provide for themselves and others safety, in the sad calamity which was then coming upon the world.

signified by the spirit] By divine Revelation: whereby God gave them occasion to relieve the brethren at Jerusalem.

V. 29. every man according to his ability] See Luke 11. 41. Meaning every one of the Christians at Antiochia; because they of Jerusalem might probably be in more necessity, by reason of the malice of the Jews there, and their persecution. See Rom. 15. 26. 1 Cor 16. 1. 2 Cor. 8. 4. & 9. 1, 2. Gal. 2. 10.

V. 30. sent it to the Elders] Their pillars and Ministers of the Church 1 Pet. 5. 1, 2. 2 John 1. 3 John 1. Gal. 2. 9. which Elders, as from Alexandrinus saith, Strom lib 6. he is indeed an Elder of the Church, and a true minister of the will of God, ὁ κατὰ τὸ θεοδίδακτον τῶν κλείς, &c. if he do and teach the things of God, &c. Ignatius Mart. epist. ad Tralliano, speaking thereof saith, ἵνα δὲ πειθαρχῆτε, ὡς συμβέβηκε θεῷ, &c. Vedelius interpreteth it, Presbyteri vero, sunt consessus quidam Dei; an assembly (or Synod) of God: and presently after he saith without these, there is no elect Church, no congregation of Saints: and in the same Epistle, he saith they are συμβούλοι καὶ σύνεδροι τῶν ἀποστόλων, counsellors, and assessours of the Bishop. See the same, same, ep. ad Magnes. therefore Clemens Romanus ep. ad Corinth. 1. saith, you that laid the first foundations of sedition, ὑποτάγητε τοῖς πρεσβυτέροις be obedient to your Elders, Chrysostom To. 4. in 1 Tim. 3. 8. hom. 11. saith; having spoken of Bishops, &c. omitting the order, or constitution of Elders, he passeth to Deacons: why so? ὅτι ἡ πολὺ τὸ μέσον διῆλθε, καὶ τῶν ἐπισκόπων because there is not much difference between them and Bishops, &c. εἰ δὲ ποτὲ ἐπισκόπων ἔλεγε, ταῦτα καὶ πρεσβυτέροις ἀρεμόττει. And that which he speaketh of Bishops, agreeth also to Elders: for they are superiour (saith he) only in ordination, in imposition of hands. Jerom on Tit. 1. saith, idem est ergo Presbyter qui Episcopus, & antequam diaboli instinctu dicerentur in populis ego sum Pauli, ego Apollonis, communi presbyterorum consilio, ecclesiæ gubernabantur, much more saith he there; the summe is, that the same men were Bishops and Elders, and that that time spake indifferently of Bishops, as of Elders: whereto he citeth chap. 22. 17. Acts, where it is said Paul sent to Ephesus, and called the Elders of the Church: and verse 28. he bad them take heed to themselves, and to all the flock, over which the Lord hath made you (ἐπισκόπους) Bishops or Overseers. Ambros. in Ephes 4. (if that be his work) saith, primi Presbyteri Episcopi appellabantur, &c. the first Elders were called Bishops: yet the same taketh not away order, in 1 Tim. 3. Episcopus primus est, ut omnis Episcopus presbyter sit, non tamen omnis Presbyter Episcopus: hic enim Episcopus est, qui inter Presbyteros primus est: The Bishop is the first, so that every Bishop is an Elder, but every Elder is not a Bishop: for he is a Bishop, who among the Elders is the first or chief. The first council at Rome, held 1074. Anno Domini, c. 15. sheweth that the Elder is comprehended under the name of Bishop: Severin Pin. Concil. To. 7. So saith Isidor, that Paul calleth the same Elders under the name of Bishop. Concil. Aquisgranens. Anno Domini. 816. ib. To. 6. yet that they are not the same, Epiphanius (haresi. 75. against the Arrians) contendeth.

Barnabas] See chap. 11. 25.

CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. King Herod] He was nephew of Herod the great, and son of Aristobulus; a Vice-Roy, or Deputy King to the Emperour of Rome, for the government of the Jews: Syr. surnamed Agrippa. See Joseph. Antiq. l. 19. c. 4. 5. &c. See on Mat. 14. 1.

stretched forth his hands] Or laid hands on, or began to lay hands on some Christians.

V. 2. killed James] This was one of the sons of Zebedeus, Mat. 4. 21 and 10. 2. there was another so named which was the son of Alpheus: of whom, verse 17. See Matthew 20. 20.

V. 3. the dayes of unleavened bread] These words intimate the cause why he deferred Peters execution, for reverence of the Passover, which lasted eight dayes. See chap. 20. 6. Sins never go single: Herods tyranny will draw on hypocrisie to vaile it: he would seem to reverence the institution of God in the Passeover and by all means to avoid the profanation thereof; not for any good conscience toward God, but because he feared to offend and provoke the Jewes: however, God used the hypocrisie of this bloody tyrant, to the preservation and safety of Peter, whom he would miraculously deliver and preserve, as for the confirmation of his faith, so for the advancement of Gods glory in the propagation of the Gospel.

V. 4. four quaternions of souldiers] The number being sixteen, was divided by fours, to keep divers wards, or watch by turns: therefore the Syriac hath it, he delivered him to sixteen souldiers; all which imporus diligence of theirs, served to manifest the evidence of the miracle, and Gods merciful providence in delivering and preserving his from the fury of their enemies and persecutors.

V. 5. prayer was made without ceasing] Or instant and earnest prayer was made: ἐκτενὴς, is sedulus, diligens, sedius interpreteth ἐκτενῶς by ἀκοιμήτως, with all the strength of the soul; and so this prayer was made with all fervency of spirit, and perseverance: it was their own cause; therefore they give all the assistance they can, according to the Apostles rule, Hebr. 13. 3. Colos. 4. 2. 1 Thes. 5. 17. this shewes that they believed that God would hear them according to his promise, Psal. 50. 15. Mat. 18. 19. &c.

V. 6. the same night] The Syriac Interpreter paraphraseth thus in the same night on whose morning following he would bring him out. God many times suffereth his to come to the pits brink, and then delivereth them; that they may be the more sensible of his mercy, and have the more evident matter of rejoycing and prayfing him: also that he might by such experience give them assurance, that in the greatest dangers, he can, and will deliver them when he knoweth it best.

sleeping between two souldiers] All these circumstances shew Herods bloody intent, and Gods power in delivering Peter, in spite of his chains and guards.

V. 7. the Angel of the Lord] Chap. 5. 19. For he hath made his Angels Ministring Spirits for their sakes, who are heirs of salvation. See Hebr. 1. 14. Psal. 34. 7.

the light shined] As to light Peter, so to assure him of assistance from heaven: whether it shined to Peter onely, or in the place where he was or went, it skilleth not; the guard probably were either asleep, or so stupified, that they could either not perceive, or not resist: neither is it behooful to enquire what light this was? whence or how it shined? whether it were onely the refulgence of an Angelical nature, or of some natural causes permitted to the power of the Angels? if these, or the like things had been necessary to salvation, they had been written.

the prison] Or house. Gre. ἐν τῷ οἰκήματι, in the house, which was the prison.

smote Peter on the side] To awake, and lead him out: which sheweth the merciful providence of God, watching over us when we sleep; and providing for our safety, when we think not of our own dangers, and keeping us, when sleep hath shut up all our senses. See Gen 19. 16.

his chains fell off] This was done by the power of God, whom all creatures obey. See Chap. 16. 27. So easily can God (whose will is his word; and his word, his work) deliver us: So admirable is the power of faithful prayer to open prison doors, make chains fall off, and to cause the sun and moon to stand still in the heaven, Josh. 10. 12, 13. to open and shut heaven for rain, James 5. 17.

V. 8. thy sandals] Which were a kind of high shoes, tyed on with strings, after the manner and convenience of those hot countreys. Herein Gods fatherly providence appeareth: He knoweth what things we have need of, Mat. 6. 8. and therefore will have us supplyed with all necessary accommodations, as in other infinite examples; so in the Angels bidding Peter gird himself, bind on his sandals, and cast his garment about him, and follow him.

V. 9. and wist not that it was true, &c.] He knew not yet whether it were a reall thing, or a vision: he knew that God could deliver in life and in death, therefore he readily obeyed the voyce of the Angel, though at present amazed at the glory of the same, he knew not whether it were reall which he saw and heard, or a vision.

V. 10. the first and second ward] The watch which kept court of guard in the first and second place: God could at once have set him free by carrying him from so many difficulties; but thus he seemed to give him many deliverances, because from many, and through many difficulties; that the divine power, and the Churches comfort might more evidently appear.

leadeth unto the city] That is, by which they went from the prison into the inward parts of the city: it is not likely that the prison was out of the city.

which opened to them of his own accord] αὐτομάτη; the word signifieth, that which moveth, or doth something of it self, non alieno impulsu, not moved by another; but this was done by the command and power of God, whose will all creatures must obey.

forthwith the Angel departed] Having performed his charge; and that for which God had sent him; he left Peter free, to go to his company.

V. 11. When Peter was come to himself] For before, he was as a man in a trance, or dream; out of himself (See verse 9) amazed at that which befel him: but now recovering a better understanding, he knew what God had done in him. This manner of speaking the Latines also used, who in great and sudden joy, or vehement anger, used to say --- vix sum apud me --- from all the expectation of the people] For they looked that Herod would have put him to death, as he purposed, and had done to James before, verse 2.

V. 12. where many were gathered together praying] Because they could not publickly assemble, they divided company, and met to pray and preach, as they could in those dangerous times, wherein the enemies of the Gospel so violently raged: hither Peter hasteth, to declare Gods goodnesse in his deliverance: and herein they tasted the comfortable fruit of their prayers.

V. 13. came to hearken] To ask who was there: the Syriac gives it, that she might answer: to wit, those who knock'e.

V. 14. she opened not the gate for gladnesse] Sudden joy (as any other extream affection) disturbeth reason, and for a time, perverteth the offices thereof (as here, in Rhode) in so much that some have dyed with sudden joy.

V. 15. thou art mad] μαίνῃ, because they thought the spake improbable things: some read art thou mad? for by saying thus, she discomposed them, and likely, interrupted their prayers: Syr. omnino turbata es: verily thou art troubled in mind. it it is his Angel] Meaning according to the common opinion, an Angel guardian, which they might possibly suppose, came to signifie his death, whom they in reason might give for dead. See Mat. 18. 10. Psal. 34. 7 & 91. 11.

V. 16. but Peter continued knocking] Among so many dangers of the Church, he might easily know they would be fearful to open doors in the night, until they could be well assured who was there: therefore he continued knocking, that he might shew himself, and declare what God had done for him, for their comfort and confirmation.

V. 17. beckning unto them with the hand] κατασείσας δυσὶν to warn faith that κατασείειν is non voce sed manu silentium indicere, to warn silence by the hand: this did Peter, left at any sudden voice of joy of the brethren, some notice might be taken by those who passed by, or dwelt at the next houses, and so Peter might be further pursued, and they endangered.

unto James] The son of Alpheus, James the lesse, by Mark 15. 40. called the brother of (that is, the kinsman of) the Lord, Gala. 1. 19. yet surviving, verse 2. Matthew 10. 3. Luke 6. 15. Acts 15 13. antiquitie took him to be superintendent, or Bishop of the Church of Jerusalem. See chap. 21. 17, 18. Gala. 2. 9. Chrysost. hom. 33. in Act. Jerom. To. 1. catalog. script. eccles.

another place] Some more secret and secure place, for fear of pursuit, when they should misse him in the prison; for in all likelihood missing him there, they would have made very diligent enquiry for, and narrow search for all conventions and hougest of Christians who were most likely to harbour him; and had they found him, both he and others with him must probably have perished by Herods rageing cruelty.

V. 18. there was no small stir, &c.] Syr. there was great contention; probably, all being troubled with fear and admiration, they would lay the supposed faule of the prisoners escape, on the keepers; they were not ignorant of Herods tyranny, nor the ordinary danger of letting prisoners escape.

V. 19. put to death] ἀπαχθῆναι, to be led away; that is, to execution: so the Syriac, he commanded that they should die.

he went] Meaning Peter.

V. 20. was highly displeased] Or bare an hostile minde, intending war.

with them of Tyre and Sidon] Two rich and ancient Cities of Phœnicia, on the coast of Syria; one of the fronter canton, or free towns. See Isaiah 23. 8. It may be, that their wealth begat them insolency, to affront Herod; or his ambition and covetousnesse might possibly instigate him to quarrel with them.

came with one accord] Having formerly suffered grievous things, they now, out of dear experience, learned rather to contend with words, and treaty, than arms; and to try all means to save blood: every state may begin a war, but it will be in the power of the conquerer onely, to end it, and he must be more than wise who shall compose it.

the kings Chamberlain] Gr. that was over the kings bedchamber.

their countrey] See 1 Kings 5. 9, 11. Ezek. 27. 17.

V. 21. Upon a set day] Probably, it was appointed for audience of the Tyrian, and Sidonian Commissioners about the peace.

V. 22. the people gave a shout saying] As prophane Sycophants; they applauded him, and gave him the honour due to God.

V. 23. immediately the Angel, &c.] God sent an Angel to deliver Peter; and now he sends another to punish the sacrilegious Herod: that which Josephus Ant. l. 19. c. 7. & Eusseb. l. 2. speak of other signes and presages about him, there being no other certainty, must be left on the credit of those Authours.

he gave not] Because he suppressed not their impious flattery, but rather encouraged them by countenancing the same.

eaten of worms] Or vermin: some write that his grandfather also was eaten of lice.

V. 24. the word of God] Was happily preached and received of many, with good fruit of faith and obedience; as Col. 1. 6. Acts 19. 20.

V. 25. returned from Jerusalem] To Antioch, which both the Syriac, and some Greek copies expresse. And this is here set down as a preparation and passage into the following history: for the better understanding whereof, we must consider that which we read chap. 11. 29, 30. concerning the disciples determination to send relief unto the Christian brethren in Judea, by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

fulfilled their ministry] Or charge, chap. 11. 29, 30. which now had been to carry the benevolence of the Antiochian Christians, to the Saints at Jerusalem.

John whose sirname was Mark] This is said, to distinguish him from the other Mark: this John Mark was he whose mother is mentioned, verse 12. he going with Paul and Barnabas was afterward the occasion of a bitter dissension between them, chap. 15. 37, 39.

CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. Certain Prophets] So were they called, not onely who foretold things to come, as Agabus, but those also who interpret Scriptures, 1 Cor. 14. See on chap. 11. 27.

Manaen which had been brought up with Herod] Or Herods foster-brother; that was Herod Antipas who slew John Baptist, Matthew 14. 1. this commendeth Manaen's Religion, who in contempt of the World embraced the Gospel, as Moses had done the truth of Religion, and Worship of the true God: or at least, sheweth how God hath in all sorts and degrees of men, some who fear him: he had in impious Ahabs house, an Obadiah, 1 Kings 18. 3, 13. a Moses in wicked Pharaohs; some believers in Neroes, Phil. 4. 22. and Herods, Luke 8. 3.

V. 2. ministred] In the publick service of God, as prayer, preaching, administration of the Sacraments, and other ministerial offices. And here is mention made of fasting, to shew how intent and serious they were in holy duties, from which they admitted no diffraction by things at other times necessary for the maintenance of life and health.

the holy Ghost said] By a prophetical revelation either to some one or more of them.

separate me Barnabas] That they may have like authority with the other Apostles, infallibility of the Spirit, and commission to preach unto the Gentiles, Gal. 2. 9.

V. 3. laid their hands on them] That imposition of hands signified their setting apart to this particular employment, the consent of the Church, and their blessing. See chap 6. 6. and 14. 26.

V. 4. Seleucia] A sea town of Cilicia.

to Cyprus] Chap. 11. 19. An Island in the Mediterrane Sea, famous for fruitfulnesse and amenity.

V. 5. Salamis] A city of Cyprus on the East: hence there was commodious passage into Syria: it was since called Constantia. Atlas minor. G. Mercat Here they preached the word of God in the Synagogues of the Jews: for though they were sent out cheifely for the conversion and confirmation of the Gentiles; yet they were therein first to preach the Gospel to the Jewes, when and where ever they found opportunity thereto, serving, verse 46. 47. Again it is something considerable that they could hardly then finde any other places for publick assemblies, the heathens Temples being furnished with such abominations, as afforded the servants of God no convenience of entring into them.

to their ministery] To the work of the ministery.

V. 6. Paphos] A city of Cyprus.

V. 7. the deputy] ἀνθύπατος, The Proconsul, or Propretor, a Roman officer, of whom see Feneſtella de Magiſtrat. Rom. cap. 11. Pompon. Let. de Magiſtrat. Rom. Volaterran. de Magiſt. & ſacr. Rom.

V. 9. then Saul] Becoming a Christian he changed his Hebrew name Saul, for a Roman name Paul, being specially assigned, an Apostle, and Doctor of the Gentiles.

V. 10. thou child, &c.] See Matth. 13. 38. John 8. 44. 1 John 3. 8. So Christ told the impious Jews, John 8. 44. ye are of your father the devil. So Paul here calleth this enemy of all righteousnesse, child of the devil, that he might discover the author of those impostures by which Elimas had bewitched the people; as also to beat down the arrogancy of the false Prophet, who impudently professed himself to be bar jesus: the Syriac calleth him בר שמא which saith the learned Tremelius, in Latine foundeth filium nominis, a man of name: it is an Hebraisme, signifying a famous man. So Gen. 6. 4. such are called אנשי השם that is, men of renown: and as בן in Hebrew, so בר in Syriac often times signifieth præditum, indued, qualified, or meet, as Deut. 3. 18. Jud. 21. 10. 1 Sam. 14. 52. בן חיל filius roboris a sonne of strength; a man indued with strength (or a valiant man) Job 41. בני שחץ sonnes of pride (that is, proud) So in this place, a sonne of name, signifieth a man --- renowned; (or famous) in what his name was famous both the Hebrew name, which the Greek retaineth, בר ישוע as also the interpretation thereof Elimas do shew: for bar jesus signifieth præditum salute, endued with health or safety; and Elimas, which in Hebrew they would write אלימעס, signifieth, divine counsel; for they who were bewitched, and befooled by his art, ascribed to salvation, or safety unto him, for as much as they thought him to be partaker of the divine counsels: So Satan useth to vcile and adorne his artifices with ample titles: So those inchanters, besore Moses and Daniel, like this Magician, were stiled with an honourable honourable name, being called חכמים, that is, Wise-men.

pervert the right wayes] To lay false imputations on the Gospel, and the way of salvation, to hinder the work of Gods grace.

V. 11. the hand of the Lord] The power of God which sheweth it self in punishing his enemies.

V. 12. being astonished] See Matthew 7. 28. which he saw accompanied with such power of God, in perswading, reproving, and doing miracles; and ot such majesty and sanctitie.

V. 13. Pamphilia] A countrey in Asia the lesse: hither they came from Paphos, now called Paphos in Cyprus. Atlas min.

V. 14. Antioch] This was another Antiochia in Asia, bounding upon Lycaonia, Isauria, and Pamphylia, not that Antioch in Syria, chap. 11. 19.

V. 15. after the reading of the Law] Which they so distributed into parts, to be read every Sabbath day, that they read all the Law and Pro hets once a year. See Luke 4. 16. See Termel. in loc.

rulers of the synagogue] For no man might presume to preach without lawful authority, and calling thereto by the governours by God appointed. See on chap. 18. 8.

V. 16. beckning with his hand] To get audience and warne them to attention. See on chap. 12. 17.

V. 17. exalted the people] This relateth to that dignity of Joseph in Pharaohs Court, and that which his father and brethren had for his sake, until another Pharaoh arose who knew them not. He speaketh these things concerning their fathers to make them know, that whatever excellency they or their fathers had, was not of their merit, but Gods free mercy: and that they now taught no new Religion, but the very same in which their fathers were saved, all depending on Gods free election of the Jewes whereby he became their God. See Gen. 17. 7. Deut. 4. 7. Psal. 147. 19, 20. Ezek. 16. 3. &c. Josh. 24. 2, 3. &c.

when they dwelt as strangers] Exod. 1. 1.

and with an high arm] That which Moses expresseth Exod. 32. 11. with great power וביד חזקה and with mighty hand, 70. ἐν ἰσχυϊ μεγάλῃ, ᾗ ἐν τῷ ἐραχίονι αὐτῦ τῷ ὑψηλῷ: the meaning is, by shewing his might and power, in destroying Israels enemies, and removing all other obstructions to their coming out of Egypt. See also Exod. 13. 14, 16.

V. 18. fourty years suffered their manners] ἐτροποφόρησεν, &c. Τροποφορέω, signifieth to bear with, or to endure ones manners or qualities. So Suidas interpreter giveth it here; but the Syriac ורחרי אנון verbarse innun, and he nourished them, as if it were ἐξεθρεψησεν αὐτῦς, that is, ἐθρεψεν αὐτῦς, he nourished them, bearing them like a nurse, as Moses speaketh, Numb. 11. 12. Deut. 32. 11. indeed he did both: he endured their many rebellions with great mercy, and did feed and carry them like a tender nurse; though here the Apostle aimeth at the first, that he might shew, that Gods free election of their fathers was the cause why his goodnesse would not strive with their unfruitful wickednesse: they many times provoked him to anger, yet God (though he often corrected them) destroyed them not, but with admirable lenity, bare their perverse qualities, that in the fulnesse of time he might perform the promise made to their fathers.

V. 19. destroyed seven nations] That he might plant Israel in that land. See Gen. 15. 17. Josh. 3. 10. Judg. 5. 6.

he divided their land] Josh. 14. 2.

V. 20. he gave unto them judges] Judg. 3. 9.

the space of, &c.] Reckoning from Moses to Samuels government, there were sixteen Judges, Moses, Joshua, Othniel, Ehud, Deborah, Gedeon, Abimeleth, Thola, Jares, Jephte, Abessam, Elam, Abdon, Sampson, Eli, Samuel,; who governed so long in all. See Deut. 1. 34. Judges 3. and 5. and 8. and 9. and 10. and 11. and 15. 1 Sam. 4.

V. 21. afterward they desired a King] 1 Sam. 8. 5.

V. 22. he raised up unto them David] 1 Sam. 16. 13.

I have found David] Psal. 89. 20.

V. 23. of this mans seed] Isaiah 11. 1, that is, of the linage of David, God raised up Jesus Christ our Saviour. See Isaiah 11. 1. Rom. 1. 3. &c. Mat. 1. Luke 3. 31.

V. 24. when John had first preached] Mat. 3. 1.

before his coming] Gr. πρὸ προσώπου τῆς εἰσόδου αὐτῦ, word for word, before the face of his entrance: the Prophets preached in several ages before Christs coming, but not as John, who in view of him: as the Hebrews said לפני liphne to, or before the face here of Christ present it may be said. See Luke 1. 76. John pointed him out present, John 1. 29. and preached and administred the Sacrament of Baptism, and doctrine of repentance, a due preparative thereto.

V. 25. Whom think ye that I am?] John 1. 20.

I am not he] See John 1. 21. 25.

V. 26. unto this salvation] Meaning the Gospel (which is the glad some tidings of Salvation in Christ) was first addressed to the Jewes.

V. 27. because they knew him not] They knew not Christ to be the Messias; or knowing him by his works exceeding all created power, would not yet acknowledge, because he in the form of a servant, Phil. 2. 7. answered not their expectation of a glorious temporal Monarch.

nor yet the voices of the Prophets] That is, as the Syriac interpreteth, the writings of the Prophets according to which he here also saith, which are read every Sabbath, &c.

V. 28 and though they found] Mat. 27. 22.

V. 29. when they had fulfilled all] All that God would have done by them, who so used Christ, that nothing of all the prophecies concerning his sufferings was unfulfilled. See Luke 24. 44. John 19. 30.

they took him down] That is, Ioseph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus. See Mat. 27 58.

V. 30. but God raised him] Mat. 28. 6. Left any should suspect that he could not therefore be their Messias and Saviour, who died by the hands of the wicked; he hence proveth him to be the promised Messias who was to die for the people, (Dan. 9. 26. Isa. 53. 6, 8, 10, 11, 12.) and in his resurrection was declared to be the Son of God, Rom. 1. 4.

V. 31. and he was seen, &c.] See on chap. 10. 41. and Mat. 28. 6.

V. 32. glad tidings how that the promise] Intimating that he taught no new matter, but that the ancient promises concerning the Messias were now fulfilled.

V. 33. as it is also written] Psal. 2. 7. Heb. 1. 5. In that he was incarnate, God began to fulfill his promise which was accomplished in his resurrection and ascension, as appeareth in the next verse.

V. 34. I will give you] Isaiah 55. 3.

the sure mercies of David] Hebr, חסדי דוד תנאמים chasde David hanneemanim, the stable mercies of David: 70. τὰ ὅσια Δαυὶδ τὰ πιστά, which S. Luke followeth; the faithful or certain holy things of David: that is, the promises which he made of his free mercy to David, concerning the eternal kingdom of Christ, 2 Sam. 7.

V. 35. thou shalt not suffer] Psal. 16. 10. See chap. 2. 27.

V. 36. after he had served, &c.] Or after he had in his own age served the will of God: the meaning is, after David had lived uprightly toward God, in his appointed time he died, and therefore that which he foretold in these prophesies, appertained unto Christ, who saw no corruption, not unto David himself.

V. 37. saw no corruption] Did not corrupt, verse 35. and chap. 2. 27. for he rose again the third day.

V. 38. through this man] It is preached and declared unto you, that through Jesus you shall have remission of sins: this is the conclusion of the Apostles Sermon: he had shewed that Christ whom they preached was the very Messias promised to the fathers, and removed the Jews objection, the scandal of the crosse; now he further declareth what great benefits are offered in Christ, and how severely God will revenge the contempt of his beloved Son, if they refuse mercy offered, verse 40.

V. 39. are justified from all things] Whereas by the Law, and ceremonies thereof, no man could be justified or acquitted of the guilt of his sinnnes; they that believe in Christ are justified (Rom. 5. 1.) the Law had but the shadow of that which was to be performed in Christ, Gal. 3. 2, 22. Rom. 3. 20. Hebr. 10. 1, 4.

V. 40. spoken of in the Prophets] Hab. 1. 5. Isaiah 28. 14. the substance of whose words he here citeth and applieth to them, who contemning the word of God, do in effect think they have made a league with death and hell, so that the judgement of God shall not come on them, who have made lyes their hope; whereas Christ is that onely precious corner-stone and sure foundation laid in Sion, in whom whosoever believeth shall not perish. See Isaiah 28. 16.

V. 41 Behold ye despisers] This seemeth to be taken from Isaiah 18. 14, where the Prophet saith, Hear the word of the Lord שמעו דבר יהוה anshe latson, ye men of derision: Ar. Mont. interpres. V. Schindl. pent. viri illusores, Catablus & Vulg. (it is דוגי luts, deridit, cavillatus est) mockers and despisers of Gods word: the rest, for substance out of Habak. 1. 5. which by analogy and proportion he accommodateth to his present purpose: as God, when the people most securely despised prophesie, brought heavy plagues and destructions on them by the Chaldees who demolished their temple, and ruined their city (wherein they so much gloried and trusted) because of their contempt of his word, and other crying sins following the same. 2 Chron. 36. 15, 16. &c. So did it now come upon them again by the Romans, for their despising Christ and the Gospel.

V. 42. might be preached to them the next Sabbath] Or in the week between, on some day before the next Sabbath, as some interpret: but verse 44. the convention was on the next Sabbath: so much were they afflicted with that they heard, that they desired much to hear it again: that they might better understand and remember the same; we would often hear what we love.

V. 43. many

V. 43. many of the Jews] Though some were averse and more enraged against the Gospel, yet God still hath a part. Proselytes; Suid. quasi προσεληλυθότας, because they came to the Religion of the Jews from Paganism. See chap. 2. 10. these and other converts the Apostles exhort to constancy in the faith of Jesus, well knowing with what fierce encounters Satan useth to charge the infancy of true Religion, and our first good beginnings.

V. 44. almost the whole city] A Metonymical expression; city for citizens: some coming of zeal to the gospel; some of malice, to cavil: so are our assemblies mixed still.

V. 45. filled with envy] ζήλου here signifieth, an envious indignation, at the great confluence of the Gentiles following the Apostles, see on chap. 5. 17. they envied the growth and happy successe of the Gospel.

contradicting and blaspheming] Contradicting, and cavilling at the doctrine of the gospel: and likely reviling their persons, discrediting and calumniating them: blasphemie, and persecution of the Ministers of Christ seldome goe asunder.

V. 46. It was necessary] Because so commanded, Mat. 10 6. This setteth off the odiousnesse of their ingratitude to God, in that they, of whom God had so great a care before all the nations of the world, to have the means of salvation by Christ made known unto them, obstinately rejected the same.

and judge your selves] This your unbelief and contempt of the gospel, speak you unworthy of eternal life, which is onely by Christ, your own fact judgeth you not worthy, &c.

V. 47. I have set thee to be a light, &c.] Isaiah 49. 6. To give the people, that sate in darknesse, &c. Mat. 4. knowledge of the way to eternal life. See Joh. 17. 3.

V. 48. When the Gentiles heard this they were glad] When they understood their own interest in Christ, and their calling to the hope of salvation, they received the Gospel with greater reverence and joy of heart: they had hitherto no rest in their consciences, but Christ now thus propoſed to them, and apprehended by faith, giveth them that, Rom. 5. 1. therefore they cannot but rejoyce. See chap. 8. 39 Rom. 14. 17. 1 Pet. 1. 8.

to eternal life, believed] Here is the fountain of all saving grace, Gods free and eternal mercy ordaining the means, as he hath the end: they now obtaining the means (knowledge of Christ by the Gospel preached to them, and feeling the power thereof in their faith and conversion) blesse, and give thanks to God for this favour, being assured of the end thereof to life eternal.

V. 49. published throughout all the region] In spight of all oppositions: so true is that which Christ intimated in the parable of the leaven, Matthew. 13. 33. concerning the processe of the Gospel.

V. 50. devout and honourable women] Which had embraced the law of Moses, and the Jewish religion, and were lead with blind zeal against the gospel which they knew not: so that calling them devout, the Evangelist speaketh according to the worlds estimate of them: The corruption of the best is worst; where Satan can but gain such agents to his party, there are commonly the bloodiest persecutions of the Prophets and Ministers of Christ: Jezabel, Herodias, and these Pisidians here, are examples enough; I would we had no more.

V. 51. Shook off the dust] See Matth. 10. 14. Mark 6. 11. Luke 9. 5. and 10. 11. It was a signe of execration with the Jewes.

came to Iconium] Some say this was a town in Lycaonia near to the famous mountain Taurus, Plin. nat. hist. lib. 5. 27. mentioneth it: others say, there are others of the same name in other Provinces. See chap. 14. 1.

V. 52. the disciples were filled with joy] Because of the succesſe of the gospel: and because the Spirit of God reigned in them, to direct and make them glad: the scope is to shew that the disciples were so far from being discouraged with the Jewes blasphemies, calumnies, oppositions, and persecutions, that they were more confirmed hereby, and glad for their sufferings for the truth of Christ. See chap. 5. 41.

CHAP. XIV.

of the Greeks] Proselytes frequenting the Jews synagogues, though they received not circumcision.

V. 2. unbelieving Jews] ἀπειθοῦντες, those that believed not, or those that obeyed not the Gospel, as not suffering their hard and obstinate hearts to be perswaded to receive the truth thereof. So Syriac, qui non obedichant.

against the brethren] The believers, who with brotherly love and unity call upon one heavenly Father.

V. 3. long time, &c.] ἱκανὸν χρόνον, a sufficient time. See Luke 8. 27 & 20 9. & 23 8.

boldly in the Lord] Of the Lord, as the Syriac giveth it: or rather trusting in the Lord.

unto the word of his grace] The word in which his grace and free mercy is preached and declared to those that believe in Christ.

and granted signes] These words expresse how God gave testimony to the doctrine which Paul and Barnabas preached. See Mark 16. 20.

V. 4. was divided] ἐσχίσθη; they were cut studia in contraria, into contrary factions, or opinions, so that some took part with the Jews, and others with the Apostles.

V. 5. an assault made] 2 Tim. 3. 11. Here appeareth the effect of unbelief; sedition and violence offered to the servants of Christ: impiety cannot contain it self, but on every occasion breaketh out from worse to worse.

V. 6. fled to Lystra] Matth. 10. 23. See here verse 20 when they were in hazared of being destroyed they fled according to our Saviours command, Matthew 10. thereby to decline the fury of their adversaries: this was wisdom, not inconstancy.

V. 7. there they preached] Thus, by their flight they reserved themselves to better opportunities of doing good, in these cities of Lystra and Derbe (where they found Timothie. chap. 16. 1. Rom. 16. 21.) these were towns near Lycaonia in Asia the lesser.

V. 8. creeple from his mothers womb] This setteth off the excellency of Gods power in the cure, as chap. 3. 2 &c.

V. 9. perceiving that he had faith to be healed] Perceiving by his attention, countenance, or some words by him uttered, that he had faith for his cure which unbelief hindereth, Matth. 13. 58. Mark 6. 5.

V. 10. with a loud voice] That the people there present might hear: and that Paul might thereby protestle his confidence of the cure.

he leaped and walked] Shewing a sound recovery, as chap. 3.

V. 11. the gods are come down] Their idol worship was not terminative in their images, but they vainly thought they worshipped some deity by those images, so that though their idols were present with them, yet here they dreamed that those gods who were thereby worshipped, were now come personally down among them. So blind is flesh and blood unto the cleareſt light of the Gospel; though Paul had preached Christ unto them, and his doctrine was presently confirmed with a singular miracle, which by their own principles of reason, none but a divine power could have done, yet they impute that work to their false and imaginary gods; so little can miracles prevail for the spectatours conversion and confirmation, except the holy Ghost open their hearts to understand and believe the truth.

V. 12. called Barnabas, Jupiter, &c.] They called them by the names of their false gods: Barnabas, Jupiter; their chief idol-god: and Paul, Mercury; whom they feigned to be the interpreter of their gods, because Paul here appeared the chief speaker.

V. 13. brought oxen and garlands] Trimmed with garlands of flowers, according to the custom of the heathens.

unto the gates] Meaning the gates of the house where the Apostle lodged; for their temple was without the town: and therefore the priest brought the sacrifices (as he thought) to the gods themselves.

V. 14 rent their clothes] In token of their detesting and abhorring it: knowing that in such impious and foolish sacrilege, their selves should have been made idols. and robbers of God, had they but consented to receive such vain honour from them.

crying out] That all the people might be undeceived, and not held any longer in those snares of the devil.

V. 15. we also are men] See chap. 10. 26.

of like passions] ὁμοιοπαθεῖς; mortal, as you are, subject to death, as all others. See James 5. 17 not without the infirmities of flesh and blood: Pudaus interpreteth this place, eadem conditione mortalitatis, &c. simili conditione vobiscum humanitus afficimur. In the same condition of mortality, &c. in the like nature are we humanely affected, as you are.

V. 15. turn from these vanities] That is, from idolatry; superstition, &c. this is after the Hebrew manner, who called idols הבל hebel, vanity. So Deut. 32. 21. they provoked me to anger בהבליהם behablehem, with their vanities, which the 70. give there, ἐν τοῖς εἰδώλοις αὐτῶν, Jer. 10. 8, 15. the same word they give by τὰ μάταια, vanities, the word here used. See also 1 Kings 16. 13, 26. Jer. 8. 19. certainly adoration of senseleſſe

Idols. is the most irrational vanity that ever Satan put into the stupified heart of man: how much more truly do dumb creatures naturally judge of your gods, (Said Minucius Felix Octav.) Non sentire eos sciunt, rodunt, insultant, insident: they know they have no sense, they gnaw them, leap on them, sit on them; the birds would breed in the mouth of your god, and spiders hang their slender threds on their head, &c.

which made heaven and earth] Genesis 1.1. Psalm 146.6. Rev. 14. 17.

Paul and Barnabas had here to deal with Heathens who knew not God; so that it was necessary to lead them by certain degrees to Christ the Saviour: therefore they begin from that which was not so much remote from common sense; drawing them off from the worship of their inactive and senseless Idols, to the consideration of the true God, who both created Heaven, Earth, and all Creatures, and still governeth and preserveth the same: probably they spake much more concerning, Gods Justice, Mercy, and Eternity, and so prepared the way to lead them up to the knowledge of Christ the Saviour.

V. 16. who in times past] Psal. 81. 12. Acts 17. 30. Here they seem to prepossesse an objection which their hearers might have made; if God were alwayes of such power, why did he not sooner reveal the same unto us? how came it that he so much preferred our ancestours, who served the same gods, with the like worship and rites, as we have hitherto done? had he not approved this service, he would not have favoured us therein: the Apostles answered to this purpose: God was not ignorant of these your impious manners; but in his just judgement gave you up to your own vile affections (Rom. 1. 24, 28.) to perish therein: but now that God vouchsafeth you the knowledge of his will for your salvation, neither consent of multitudes erring, nor antiquity of sin, ought to hinder you from embracing a saving truth; but rather the long-suffering of God, must lead you to repentance.

to walk in their own wayes] To live after their own fantasies: not that God ever approved of their wickednesse, but because he justly gave them over (Rom. 1. 24.) to their sin and superstition, not bestowing on them his Laws and ordinances, as he did on Israel, Psal. 147. 19, 20

V. 17. he left not himself without witnesse] Here he prevenseth an objection: if any should say, how should they not erre, seeing that God neither revealed his will nor himself unto them? the answer is, that God might be seen in the works of his wisdom, power, and providence, in all the known courses of Nature, and things appointed for the common use of man, as showers, fruit, corn, &c. See Rom. 1. 19. As also in his admirable patience, and invincible goodnesse, in that he giveth to the just and unjust, indiscretas pluvias, unfevered showers (Cyprian de bon. patient) and all other secular goods. See Mat. 5. 45.

with food and gladnesse] With gladnesse for the abundance with which he crowneth the year. See Psal. 65. 9. &c.

V. 18. with these sayings scarce, &c.] All that they could say, could hardly perswade these obstinate idolaters to forbear sacrificing to them. So hard is it to make carnal hearts understand the things of God: so hard, to remove an errour, to which time, custome, and popular example hath given deep root.

V. 19. certain Jews from Antioch] See chap. 13. 14. Here appeareth Satans restlesse malice in assaulting the Ministers of Christ: now trying them with sacrificedge and robbing God of his honour, in accepting sacrifices and divine honour, when that artifice failed; he inciteth the Jews, and they the people, to persecute and stone them. See also the inconstancy of the vulgar; but even now mad to adore them as gods, and forthwith as little sober in the other extream, persecuting them, as if they had been the worst of men, stoning Paul, and dragging him out of the city as dead.

V. 20. as the disciples stood round about him] That is, the believers, who followed the Apostles: these forsook not Paul, but compassed him round to keep him, if possible, from further rage of the seditious multitude.

he rose up] He revived, and came to himself again, and entred again into that injurious city, to rest, and refresh himself se.

to Derbe] See verse 6. It was a city of Isauria in Asia the lesser, as some say, though near to Lycaonia, Joh. Drus. ad voc. N. T. tom. 1. Jerom de loc. Act. saith Derbe civit as Lycaoniæ provinciæ, which the sixth verse seemeth to intimate: but that may be interpreted, they fled unto the cities of Lycaonia, to Lystra and Derbe and unto the region that lyeth round about: and that not reckoning Lystra and Derbe as cities of Lycaonia, but shewing that the Apostles did not onely flye to the cities of Lycaonia, but also to Lystra and Derbe, and other places in the adjacent region: the Syriac seemeth to favour this interpretation, which saith, they fled into the cities of Lycaonia, ולוסטרא ודרבא velysteravedarbi, and into Lystra, and Derbe, they fled into the cities of Lycaonia, and into Lystra, and into Derbe.

V. 21. and when they had preathed the Gospel, &c.] This was their undaunted courage and unwearied industry to preach the Gospel, notwithstanding so many dangers.

and had taught many] μαθητευσαντες ἱκανους, and had taught a sufficient number: that is had by teaching brought many to the faith of Christ, making them disciples, who were baptized; for the word μαθητευειν, doth not here signifie onely τὸ διδασκειν, to teach, but by teaching of the capable; and baptizing to make disciples of Christ, as Mat. 28. 19. So the Syriac interpreteth here, they made many disciples: the Jews, and Proselytes were made Moses disciples when they were circumcised, and catechumenists and infants of Christian Parents are made Christians, and Disciples of Christ by baptisme.

to Antioch] Of Pisidia, c. 13. 14.

V. 22. confirming the souls] That is, the mindes of the believers, which was their care to strengthen and comfort them: it is not enough to sow good seed, it must be watered and fenced. So in Gods field.

through much tribulation, &c.] This they say, lest the weak should doubt of the truth of the Word, by reason of the persecutions following the preaching thereof. See Mat. 7. 14. Luke 22, 19. afflictions are the Marahs in the way to our promised rest. See 1 Pet. 4. 13. Rom. 8. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 11. 2 Tim. 3. 11, 13. It is Gods great mercy, Nequitis impunitatem non relinquere, not to leave wickednesse unpunished, and now to correct with the rod, that he may not condemn in hell for ever. Augustine de verb. Dom. Luc. serm. 37.

V. 23. ordained them elders] χειροτονησαντες: This word signifieth making of such a choice, as was made or confirmed by lifting up of hands, to signifie Suffragies, or consents: it is also used to appoint or ordain in general, as c. 10. 41, the Syriac readeth; and they appointed unto them Elders in every congregation. It seemeth that Paul and Barnabas did not all alone in ordinations and Church government; other Christians shewed their consents, or approbation of the persons who were ordained elders, by lifting up their hands; as very well knowing of what behaviour they had been among them: so χειροτονια signifieth, to disallow of some act, election, or decree: Suidas interpreteth the word χειροτονια by ἐκλογη; his interpreter giveth it, electio, delectus — per suffragia confirmatio, populi totius consensus, an election, choosing — by voices, a confirmation or consent of all the people. CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. Certain men that came down] Epiphanius hæref. 28. 2. faith, Cerinthus and others: this policy of Satan whereby he assailed the Church by civil dissention, was concerning the office of Christ, whether we are justified onely by faith in Christs righteousnesse, or must therewith joyn the works of the Law.

except ye be circumcised] Gal. 5. 2. Luke briefely stateth this troublesome question: these Impostors would have laid a necessity of keeping the whole Law, on mens consciences; for every man that is circumcised, is a debter to do the whole law, and so Christ is become of no effect unto him, Gal. 5. 3, 4. but he is still under the curse of the Law: these adversaries acknowledged Christ to be the true Messias, and had given their names to him, onely they would with faith in Christ, joyn a necessity of observing the Law for salvation; which possibly seemed an excusable errour to some: But Paul, who for small external matters would not have contention to the violation of peace (Rom. 14. 1.) would not in this cause be silent. First because a necessity of observing the whole Law being granted, mans salvation, which onely can be in the free grace and and mercy of God in Christ should be grounded on the Law; and so it would follow, that Christ died without cause or in vain, Gal. 2. 21. Secondly, by such a concession, Christian liberty must be taken away. See Gal. 4. 1. &c. Thirdly, by this means Satan would easily have obscured the honour of Christ, and light of the Gospel, if he could have carried on this stratagem: Paul therefore here standeth up for defence of Gods free mercy in our salvation, for discharge of our consciences from the curse and heavy burden of the Law; and that the glory of God, his grace and mercy, saving us, might like a clear light from Heaven, shine to all the World.

V. 2. no small dissention] στασεως, for ἀντιστασεως: the Syriac giveth it commotion: it was an eager contention, Satan (as his manner is) stirring up factious men, to trouble the peace of the Church, and to corrupt the doctrine thereof, Paul and Barnabas like constant champions of Christ defending the truth.

they determined to send] To wit, the brethren of Antioch (for a remedy against this emergent mischief) determined to send Paul and Barnabas with some others, to the Apostles and Elders then being at Jerusalem, to desire them to decide this controversie; to this Paul willingly subscribed, though he were nothing inferiour to the very chief Apostles, 2 Cor. 11. 5. 12. 11. (for as Cyprian de simpl. prælat. saith well, Hoc erant utique & cæteri Apostoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari consortio præditi & honoris & potestatis, the rest of the Apostles were as Peter, endued with equal partnership of honour and authority) that he might thereby satisfie the believers concerning those false Apostles, who pretended the authority of the Church at Jerusalem for the maintenance of their Heresie: he knew his doctrine was of God, and not to be subjected to the judgement of men: yet for the satisfaction and confirmation of the weak, he willingly submitted to their judgement who were at Jerusalem.

V. 3. brought on their way by the Church] That is, by the believers. Some of them being appointed to accompany Paul and Barnabas on their way, lest they should seem to have gone of their own accord, or to have dissented from the Church of Antioch.

Phenice] Chap. 11. 19.

declaring the conversion] To all the Churches as they passed along they shewed the brethren for their comfort and confirmation, what God had done in the conversion of the Gentiles to the faith of Christ: it is a joy of heart to all good men to hear the Gospels flourishing.

V. 4. they were received of the Church] Of all the Church they were acknowledged for singular instruments of Gods glory, and mens salvation, by the propagation of the Gospel.

they declared all things] That they might understand by the successe of their Ministery, that the calling of the Gentiles (which the adversaries laboured by their false doctrines, and mixture of antiquated ceremonies to annul and overthrow pleased God.

V. 5. but there arose] Some understand this, as if these (according with the seducers who came to Antioch,) rose up to trouble them at Jerusalem also: but others more probably refer these words to the relation which Paul and Barnabas made to the brethren at Jerusalem, concerning those things which were agitated at Antioch; for the decision whereof they were come up to advise with them at Jerusalem.

sect of Pharisees] See on Luke 14. 1. ἀπὸ τῆς αἱρέσεως. of the heresie of the Pharisees: these had given their names to Christ, but yet retained some reliques of the antiquated ceremonies; cerinthus and Ebion were condemned for the same, that they endeavoured to mingle the ceremonies of the Law, with the Gospel of Christ: so while they would be Jewes and Christians, they became neither: these being hypocrites, and therefore too intent to external rites, whereby they might appear more conspicuous to men, would pervert the truth of Christ, for their own vain-glory's sake.

V. 6. Apostles and Elders came together] To these appertained the decision of all controversies of faith: these being enformed of the present businesse, came together to consider what course to take therein; they being by the influence of the holy Ghost, both qualified and authorized to be the most competent judges in such cases: possibly they discussed this question, the Laity being present (as verse 12. 22.) but lest any should dream that the vulgar were admitted to judge of this controversie, the Apostles and Elders which were Ministers are here named.

of this matter] περὶ τοῦ λόγου τούτου of this word: it is a common Hebraisme ; word put for the businesse spoken of.

V. 7. much disputation] συζητησεως, here used, signifieth, among other things, a conferring of reasons, pro and con: for the finding out a truth, by stating the question and allegation of arguments thereto serving. See chap 9. 29. and Mark 1. 27.

men and brethren] Chap. 10. 20. and 11. 13.

a good while ago] At our beginning to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles. Peter in this great dispute it seemeth had hitherto held his peace, possibly lest he might seem to preferibe his fellow Apostles; but now he opportunely taketh occasion to declare his judgement in this matter, for the defence of the cause of Paul and Barnabas, teaching that justification, and salvation, are by faith in Christ, without the deeds of the Law (Rom 3. 28.) Now this ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων, jampridem, jam inde ab initio, or as some translate, ab antiquis diebus; from the dayes of old, or a good while ago, relateth to the calling of Cornelius and his friends, chap. 10. and the controversie following the same, chap. 11. 2, 3. &c.

should hear the word of the Gospel] His purpose is here to shew that Christ is sufficient to the believing Gentiles: and that there needed no legal ceremonies to perfect them: this God revealed to him, that they should receive the Gospel and believe to salvation, not that they should be circumcised or charged with any legal ceremonies.

V. 8. giving them the holy Ghost] As if he said, when I had accordingly preached the Gospel to them, presently God gave them the Holy Ghost, as he had done to us; when they were not circumcised, neither observed the ceremonial Law. Seeing then God looketh principally on the purity of the heart, and hath sufficiently testified his reception of the Gentiles, by equalling the uncircumcision with us of the circumcision, in the same gifts and graces of the holy Ghost, why should we force upon them who are begun in the Spirit, to be perfected in the flesh? See Gal. 3. 3.

V. 9. put no difference] Touching adoption and eternal life: though heretofore he distinguished between Jews and Gentiles, by circumcision and other legal rites; yet now in Christ both are made one, the middle wall of partition between us being broken down, Ephes. 2. 14. See Mat. 27. 51.

purifying their hearts by faith] Chap. 10. 43. 1 Cor. 1. 2. He opposeth to legal purifications, the substace thereby figured, purification of the heart, and whole man, by the blood of Christ, and the spirit of regeneration, Heb. 9. 14.

V. 10. why tempt ye God] He calleth it a tempting of God to lay more upon mens consciences, than either God hath laid on them, or they are able to perform: as here by imposing circumcision; they would bind them to that which God commanded not the Gentiles, and lay a necessity of their keeping the whole Law upon them, which none can do. Therefore to wave the means of salvation by the free grace of God in Christ, and to put salvation in terms so impossible, as is our perfect obedience to the whole Law, is to tempt God.

to put a yoke upon the neck] Mat. 23. 4. Gal. 5 1 were able to bear] For every one that is circumcised, is bound to keep the whole Law, Gal. 5. 3. under a severe curse, Gal 3. 10. If he fail in any thing, he is guilty of the breach of all, James 2. 10. this none of the Fathers could bear; it were meere tempting of God to profess it, seeing Christ bare it for us, 1 Pet. 2. 24.

V. 11. we believe that through the grace, &c.] The elect Jews were not saved by their works of the Law (Gal. 3 11. Rom. 3. 20.) but by grace in Christ; therefore he equalleth them herein with the Gentiles, and professeth his hope of salvation, by no other mean: Seeing then we cannot obtain salvation by grace, except the yoke and curse of the Law be taken off; neither can salvation be by the works of the Law. And lastly, because they cannot be subject to the curse of the Law who believe in Christ, therefore it is vain to go back from the fountain of salvation, unto those beggerly rudiments, which were but a School-master to bring us to Christ, Gal. 3. 24.

V. 12. all the multitude kept silence] As entertaining his discourse with a reverend silence: this sheweth the part which the people have to act in counsels concerning controversies in religion, which is a modest silence, that they may hear and learn of those whom God hath assigned to the ministery of his Word.

and gave audience to Paul, &c.] They relating what signes and wonders God had done by them among the Gentiles, confirm the sentence of Peter: for those their works concluded, that God was pleased with their ministration to the Gentiles.

V. 13. after that they held their peace] James would not interrupt the discourse of Paul and barnabas, but when they had spoken, then he also spake: 'Tis a Babel and confusion of tongues where many speaking at once, none are distinctly heard.

James] Son of Alpheus. See on chap 12. 17.

V. 14. Simeon] That is, Peter, 2 Pet. 1. 1. It seemeth the Gr. faid Συμεων, as reading שמעון instead of שמעון because they could not pronounce the letter ע) for so he is commonly named Simon, not Simeon. So Irenæus, l. 3. c. 12.

for his name] To bear his Name, to acknowledge and worship him for their onely God. Gre. ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ. That is, as the Syriac giveth it, לשמה to his Name; which might be named his people. See v. 17 and Rom. 9. 25, 26.

V. 15. to this agree the words of the Prophets] Concerning the calling calling of the Gentiles the Prophets in many places spake, though here he but one cited v. 16 Note here the rule by which the Apostles themselves proceeded, the written Word of God; they equal not any humane traditions with it, they take not on them to judge the Scriptures, much lesse to determine any thing against them: for there is but one truth, and one Spirit of God speaking both in the Prophets and Apostles.

V. 16. after this will I return] Amos 9. 11. Gre. ἀναστρέψω, which word hath divers significations; among which, sometimes it importeth actively to return; So it may relate to God returning to thew mercy to his people, who in his justice lest them to themselves; as Rom. 1. 24. See Acts 17. 30. sometimes passively, or neutrally, reversum fuero ego, So if it relate to the people converting, the sense may be; that God would cause them to return from their sins, and calamities, of which the Prophet there spake, that they might under the Messias, be restored to their former glory and happinesse: according to which Suidas saith ἀναστροφὴ is called the very restoring, or returning into ones former place whence he was driven; alicujus in pristinum statum restitutio, saith Æmilius Portus; a restoring one to his ancient state, which was bestowed on Israel in Christ. Luke citeth not the words of the Prophet, but so varieth them as to the same sense more clearly interpreted concerning the repair of Israel by Christ.

tabernacle of David] Meaning the Church of God to be repaired, and restored by the Messias. Some (saith Oecumenius) understand it concerning the resurrection of Christ, whom God the Father raised, and us in him: for no other wise could our nature be repaired and raised up, except by his hand who first made us ---

V. 17. that the residue of men might seek after the Lord] Respecting the general sentence of the Prophets concerning the calling of the Gentiles, he speaketh the same sense with the Prophet Amos 9 12. in words somewhat varying, instancing first in the residue of Edom: but Iames here more generally, in the residue of men; that is, as he expresseth, all the Gentiles, as the Prophet also saith כל־הגוים col haggoim, all the nations upon whom my Name is called.

who doth all these things] Do not think much that God calleth the Gentiles, whom ye count unclean, God hath done it, who doth all things well. See Psal. 118. 23. Mat. 21. 42.

V. 18. known unto God are all his works] Thus he strengtheneth weak minds against suspition of novelty: indeed this calling of the Gentiles is sudden to men; but God knew this from the beginning, determining in eternity whatsoever he would bring to passe in time: he it is, who both revealed these things to the Prophets, and fulfilled the same in the appointed time.

V. 19 my sentence is, that we trouble not them] Out of Scripture he concludeth with Peter, that the yoke of the Law was not to be put upon the Gentiles; it had been a wretched perplexity to their consciences to put them vainly to seek any other means of justification, than faith in Christ.

V. 20. pollutions] 1 Cor. 8. 1. &c Pollutions of Idols, are things polluted by Idols to whom they were offered.

of idols] Because some thought it no offence to be present at the Idols temples, and there to feast with Idolaters, which the Apostle saith, is to drink the cup of the Devils, 1 Cor. 10. 21. The Syriac giveth it, from the pollution of things offered, & vanitatibus idolorum, the interpreter of Irenæus, l. 3. c. 12. See on chap. 14. 15.

and from blood] He knoweth that these ceremonies to which they were accustomed many years, could not without great distraction be suddenly abolished, until they could better learn their liberty in Christ. Therefore though they were dead in Christ passion, no more to be revived (as Gal. 5.) yet they did not presently drag them out of doors, but gave them time, as it were, for a decent burial of them.

V. 21. for Moses of old time] He signifieth hereby that the Jews could not so suddenly bear the abolition of the legal ceremonies, to which they had been long accustomed by the continual hearing of the Law read in every Synagogue; and that therefore they ought to purchase unity with a charitable compliance, until they could be more fully enformed concerning Christian liberty.

V. 22. then pleased it the Apostles, &c.] Here was a holy, and no lesse happy unity: here neither John, Andrew, or any of the Apostles, contradicted; but, as the matter was referred, and judged, so all rested satisfied, and the people modestly consented. So Clement Romanus (who lived in this time, Phil. 4. 3.) speaking of Ordinations by the Apostles, and their successours, intimateth that it was done σὺνευδοκησάσης τῆς ἐκκλησίας πάσης the whole Church thereto willingly consenting.

to send chosen men] That the adversaries at Antioch might not calumniate Paul and Barnabas, as dissenters from the rest of the Apostles, they send with them Barsabas and Silas, chief among the brethren at Jerusalem, to testifie that they were of the same judgement with Paul and Barnabas

V. 23. and wrote letters, &c.] This they did, that by the testimony of the commissioners, and the letters of the counsil the false Apostles might be silenced, and the believers confirmed in the truth and unity of their profession.

V. 24. which went from us] They went out from us, they were not of us: see 1 John 2. 19. It is a mischievous artifice of Satan, to divide Christians: he knows where there is hatred, there God is and therefore he can never prevail: therefore he laboureth to have a party in us, against us: he can never be dangerously wound Religion, as by the seeming religious, therefore raiseth he up men among our selves to speak perverse things. See chap. 20. 30.

subverting your souls] ἀνασκευάζοντες, It cometh from the word among other things signifying to demolish and cast down: fitly, here used, seeing that the false Apostles by their superstitions, or laying other foundations for salvation, besides the free mercy of God in Christ, destroyed souls: he builds to ruine, who builds his salvation on any meanes, but the sole merits of Christ; other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus. See 1 Cor. 3. 11, 12. Ephes. 2. 20. Gal. 1. 8. he subverteth and casteth down, who buildeth not on Christ alone.

to whom we gave no such command] Thus pull they off the vizards of those pretenders to the authority of the Apostles, and possibly commition from them so to teach; whereas indeed they taught that which raised the foundation of the truth of the Gospel: for the righteousnesse of Christ, and the righteousnesse of the law, grace, and merit, legal ceremonies intimating an expectation of Christ to come, and Christ in liberty, declaring and professing a discharge from the duties of the ceremonial law, and the curse of the moral, by Christ already come are utterly incompatible, See Rom. 9. 30, 31. Rom. 10. 3 --- 5. 6. Rom. 4. 4. 5. Gal. 2. 2. & 5. 2. 3. therefore the Apostles in this full council, thus seriously disavow that doctrine which teacheth to mingle the legal ceremonies, and the observation thereof with the gospel.

V. 25. it seemed good unto us, &c.] All the true members of Christ agree in the fundamentals of Religion (though there sometimes fall out varieties of judgements and differences in things subordinate) because the Spirit of God is ever with them, uniting them, if not with infallibility, as here, yet with a sufficient measure of grace: compare verse 28, 39. and see Mat. 28. 20.

to send chosen men] Such as are fit to interpose, and be employed in this so weighty a businesse.

with our beloved Barnabas and Paul] This they oppose to the calumnies of those false Apostles whereby they vilified Paul and Barnabas: and for their confirmation who were stumbled thereat; hereby they declare their consent with Paul and Barnabas, commending them for their singular zeal in that they had ventured their lives for the truth and testimony of the Lord Jesus; daring and suffering for the name of Christ is commendable. See 1 Pet. 4. 14. 16. it is the cause, not the punishment which makes the Martyr.

V. 27. We have therefore sent Judas and Silas] They expresse their names, to acquaint the Church of Antioch with them. See on verse 22. this Silas proved an excellent assistant to Paul in preaching the Gospel, and perfecutions for the same endured, verse 40.

V. 28. It seemed good to the holy Ghost, &c.] Herein they render a reason of their decree concerning the causes of justification; because so it pleased the holy Ghost, whose truth and guidance they followed. This they say, lest the Antichians should think this decree humane, they cited their authority, as if they had said, we have determined as we were guided by the Spirit of God: in that they say (and to us) appeareth the authority of the faithful Ministers in controversies of faith. Rom. 1. 5. Mal. 2. 7.

necessary things] Necessary is not here to be referred to the ceremonies themselves here mentioned; but to the present occasion and persons, whose unity and salvation was necessarily to be advanced by all means: it was therefore an accidental and temporary necessity: laws concerning things simply necessary, ought to be perpetual; so was not this: for when this tumultuous dissention was over, and the brethren better enformed, Paul sheweth that nothing is unclean, which God hath made for mans use. See 1 Cor. 8. 8. & 10. 19 1 Tim 4. 4. Tit 1. 15.

V. 29. that they abstain from meats, &c.] This did they, that they might hold the unity in the faith of Christ, between the believing Jews and new converted Gentiles: in things of their own nature indifferent (such as were the three first things here prohibited for the time) we ought to hold charity, and by no means to break the sacred band of unity, in things which God neither commandeth nor forbiddeth, we ought to have a tender care, first of the Churches unity, and next of their consciences, who are infirm brethren. See Col. 3. 14. 1 Tim. 1. 5. Rom. 15. 2. Rom. 14. 1. &c.

and from fornication] This part of the moral Law (which is indispensable, and continually, and universally binding) is here inserted for the Gentiles sake, who before their conversion were were shamelesly given to fornication, and all uncleannesse of life.

V. 30. when they were dismissed] From the councill at Jerusalem, gathered the multitude] Though the determination in controversies of faith, be properly in men of learning and integrity of life, yet all having equal interest in the common salvation, there was good reason why the whole multitude of believers should be acquainted with (and their consent had to) all the proceedings and the issue thereof.

V. 31. they rejoyced, &c.] As the truly religious cannot chuse but be grieved at the divisions of that body, whereof they are members; so must it be great joy to see all sweetly composed to Gods honour: nor could there be any more comfortable news, than their assurance by the testimony of the holy Ghost, and the Apostles of Christ, that they are freely justified by faith in him, without the works of the law; for therein men have peace with God. See Rom. 5. 1.

consolation] Or exhortation.

V. 32. being Prophets also] See 1 Cor. 14. 29, 32. & 12. 28. Eph. 4. 11. that is, men of singular gifts in teaching, and interpreting Scriptures. See 1 Cor. 14. 3.

V. 33. let go in peace] With good love and blessing of the brethren.

V. 34. it pleased Silas to abide] They were dismissed by the Church at Antioch, at their pleasure to depart, and return to the Apostles at Jerusalem, but Silas to do that Church more service, abode there a longer time.

V. 35. with many others also] Without emulation they united in the work of Christ, as they who truly zealed Gods honour, nor their own, this sheweth their happy consent in preaching the Gospel, and that in the absence of teachers, the Church was supplied with other, so that Paul and Barnabas resolving to visit other places, left not that destitute.

V. 36. let us go again and visit, &c.] Here was Pauls diligence, not onely to plant, but also to water: it was not enough once to preach the gospel to them, but in regard of mens frailties, it ought to be cherished and fomented with new exhortations and consolations: the rather, because Satan (the envious man) is ever ready to cast in his tares, wherefore ever the servants of God have sowed the good wheat. See Mat. 13.

V. 37. to take with them John] Whose sirname was Mark, chap. 12. 25. See chap. 13. 13.

V. 38. and went not with them to the work] That is, to that ministration affigned them, chap. 13. 2. it seemeth that it was no small scandal that he deferred them at Pamphilia, that Paul so strictly stood upon it, that he would not have him admitted into the society of this present visitation of the Churches: so dangerous a thing it is for him to look back, that hath once put his hand to the plow. See Luke 9. 62.

V. 39. the contention was so sharp] Such as prevailed to embittering their mindes, so that Barnabas went away with John to his own country Cyprus, Chapter 4, So mischievously vigilant is atan to take all occasions of dividing good men: he is contented and well pleased with the confederacies and combinations of the wicked, for that is the strength of his kingdom; he envieth only the unity of the religious: the more cautious ought good men to be, lest they be embarked in contentions.

V. 40. Paul chose Silas] Though they differed about John, v. 38 39. yet neither forsook his office and ministery: this storm divided them in their persons, not in their faith: and by the providence of God to the Churches good, for their confirmation and further edification in the faith of Christ.

V. 41. confirming the churches] Bringing to their mindes that which they had formerly taught, and further instructing them, as need required. Thus the invincible goodnesse of God bringeth good out of evill: (their division was evil, but the edifying of the Churches) good.

and a colonie] A Roman colonie: whose inhabitants came from Rome to dwel there.

V. 13. prayer was wont to be made] It appeareth not who they were, who here prayed; but is it probable, that the Jews and Proselytes there prayed for fear of the infidels, not daring so to do elsewhere; and here it seemeth was a private Oratory or Chappel: for so the word προσευχὴ here used, doth also here signify, as well as the action of prayer there performed: and so the Syriac expresseth it, we went out of the city by the river side, because there was to be seen, בית צלותא an house of prayer.

V. 14. of the city of Thyatira] Mentioned also, Plin. lib. 5. cap. 30. a city of Asia, Ierom de loc. Heb. Alt. here dwelt Lydia, that devout servant of God, of this city, See Revel. 1. 11. & 2. 18. 24.

whose heart the Lord] God who elected her to salvation, made the means thereto effectual, by preparing her heart and affections to receive the gospel: where God, who hath the key of David opens not, there the gospel, (though never so powerfully preached) is hid, and nothing affecteth the stupid drowzy hearer: see 2 Cor. 4. 4. see here chap. 13. 48.

V. 15. and her houshold] Gods covenant is with us and our children, Gen. 17. 9 10. and therefore the first thereof ought so to be: whole families were baptized, wherein if children were commonly a part: if any say there were no children in Lydias, and the Goalers houshold, or other like families, we require their proof: if any desire our proof (that children ought to be baptized, who are born of believing parents) by some expresse place of Scripture; we that are in 1600 years possession and prescription, more reasonably, require them to prove by any expresse place of Scripture that children were not baptized by the Apostles (when they baptized housholds, and nations, as they were commanded, Mat. 28. 19.) or ought not to be, by us.

V. 16. a spirit] This was the Spirit of Satan, who would testifie the truth, that he might discredit the truth of the Gospel, and bring it into some suspect. See Mark 1. 25. 34.

of divination] Πύθωνα ἔχουσαν: this is an epithete of Apollo, who was wont to give answers to them that enquired. He was named Pythius, which Deut. 11. 18. is called אוב Ob; so 1 Sam. 28. 7. See Hen. Ainsworth on Deut. 18. 11.

V. 17. these are the servants of the most High] When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own; here he spake truth, that he might make the hearers jealous of the truth of that which so impure a spirit professed: some do good in shew, that they may thereby be enabled to do reall mischief. See Phil. 1. 18. the more cautelous must we be, lest we be seduced under shews of truth and sanctity: Satan can transform his ministers into angels of light. 2 Cor. 11.

V. 18 I command thee in the name, &c.] This spake he by the motion of the holy Ghost informing him both of the dangerous effects of Satans encreasing rage, and also of the power he would give him to cast out Satan, See Mark 1. 34. Luke 4. 41. Mark 16. 17.

V. 19. hope

V. 19. hope of their gain was gone] It seemeth the used to receive a price of her divination and telling things to come.

market-place] Or Court.

V. 20. to the magistrates] Or principle governours of the Roman Colonie.

being Jews do exceedingly trouble] The truth of the Gospel ever seemeth troublesome to the wicked in whom Satan reigneth, because it overthroweth him and his kingdom: they mentioned here it being Jews, because their name was now odious to the Romans.

V. 21. customes which are not lawful] ἔθη, rites or manners: in this they discover, that whereas any errour, or impious practise in their superstitions, and abominations was tolerated, if not favoured among them, only truth and sanctity were despicable: they were Romans, see verse 12.

V. 22. the multitude rose up together] Any pretence enrageth the vulgar against the truth of Christ. See Revel. 12. 15.

rent of their cloathes] That is, rent Pauls and Silas cloathes.

commanded to beat them] As malefactors: this was Satans fury against the ministers of Christ. See Revel. 2. 10. 2 Cor. 11. 25. 1 Thes. 2. 2.

V. 23. when they had laid many stripes upon them] See 2 Cor. 11. 24.

V. 24. made their feet fast in the stocks] ἀσφαλίσασθαι, properly signifieth to confirm or strengthen. Budæus giveth it munio: protego, &c. and idoneis sponsoribus cavere: which we say, to take good security; and so ἀσφάλεια, is security, they put them here εἰς τὸ ξύλον, into the wood: Latine numella: machina lignea, in qua caput & collum emittebantur, Shindler. Pentec. in חֹסֶר stocks or pillary, into which prisoners feet or heads were put, (to secure their keepers) that they should not make any escape: such hath been the worlds entertainment of the saints. See Gen. 39. 20. Psalm 105. 18. Mark 6. 17. 1 Kings 22. 27. Jerem. 20. 2.

V. 25. prayed and sang prayses unto God] Satans purpose was to make them blaspheme; or to desert or suspect their cause and calling into Macedon as inausipicious: but the more they are afflicted the more they rejoyce and praise the Lord. See chap. 5. 41. Rom. 5. 3. Colos. 1. 11. 1 Pet. 4. 13. why do the heathens rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? Psal. 2. 1. &c. there is nothing more vain than violence, or counsel against the truth of Christ: the more you labour to suppresse it, the more it shineth, floresces vulnere, it flourisheth in its wound.

and the prisoners heard them] They did not pray as the Phaisees, ambitious of the praises of men, but to testifie the confidence they had in a good cause, and in a good conscience.

V. 26. suddenly there was a great earth-quake, &c.] Thus God assured them that their prayers were heard. See Chap. 4. 31. he could without an earthquake have delivered them, as Chap. 12. 10. but thus the Lord of the creatures would manifest his power and presence, lest any should think that they had by some endeavours attempted to break prison, or that it had been onely some fortuitous escape: and thus he would be manifest to posterities, that the sighing of his prisoners cometh before him who can at his pleasure deliver those who are appointed to die. See Psalm 34. 16. 19. Psalm 145. 18.

V. 27. would have killed himself] Fearing that he must needs suffer for the escape of his prisoners; for (had he been enformed of all that now happened) to a man unacquainted with the power and providence of God, it might seem a ridiculous plea, to say, that the prison doors opened themselves, and that all his prisoners bands fell off: here we may see the miserable resolutions and comforts of the unregenerate in afflictions.

V. 28. Do thy self no harm, &c.] Hereby it may appear that these servants of God were not so solicitous for their own lives and liberties, as for the propagation of the gospel, and mens salvation: otherwise being loose, and the doors all open, they could have been silent; and they might easily have escaped: but they being enformed by the spirit that God therefore awaked the keeper, that he might be converted and saved; Paul and Silas start not, neither tempted they God, or lost the use of the miracle by their stay; it being the main end of all this; that God might appear on the part of that religion, which the world then so much condemned, and that this keeper and his family might be saved.

V. 29. called for a light] Possibly to be brought into the place where the prisoners were; for prisons usually have light burning in some of their watches all night; and thereby he might see, or finde that the prison doors were open, verse 27.

he sprang in] εἰσεπήδησε, he leaped in (or came speedily in among them, as one that leaped) to see if the prisoners were all there. So εἰσπηδᾶν is interpreted, saltu irruo, &c. εἰσπεπήδηκε εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν, Demost. he leaped or rushed into the house.

came trembling and fell down, &c.] He that a little before confidently put their feet into the stocks, now cometh trembling to their feet: mark how behooffull it is for some men to be humbled with fear and affliction: how securely before this hour would he have despised all that ever Paul and Silas could have said to him? this short fear hath made him docible: you may perceive the reason why God so often exerciseth his dear children with fears: but why (may some say) did not Paul and Sylas reprove him, and take him up from their feer, as Peter did Cornelius, chap. 10. 26. because they knew this man did it not to adore them, but for prefent fear of Gods judgements to humble himfelf: And indeed it was a Roman fashion of begging pardon to fall at his feet of whom they entreated it: had here been any thing prejudicall to Gods honour, Paul would not have forgotten his former zeal among the Lystrians, chapter 14. 14. &c.

V. 30. and brought them out] Out of the inner prison, verse 24. into some more convenient room; possibly into his own lodgings, as is after expressed, verse 34.

What must I do to be saved?] Some being startled with fear and sense of afflictions return to their former purposes more obstinately. See Exod. 7. 3. Mat. 28. 5, 11, 15. but he so profited by his fear, that he desired to be enformed, what he must do to be saved, as Chapter 2. 37. this was Gods free mercy, (Rom. 9. 15.) for Paul had not yet preached Christ unto him since his imprisonment.

V. 31. believe in the Lord Jesus Christ] This brief answer containeth the sum of the Gospel offering us salvation, and all bleffedneſſe in Christ apprehended by faith.

V. 32. and they speak unto him the word of God, &c.] More largly expounding that which they proposed in brief.

to all that were in the house] So, proved it an happy affliction to those prisoners also, who by this means came to faith and salvation.

V. 33. took them in the same hour of the night] See what admirable changes God can suddenly work; but now this keeper would have destroyed himself; presently he humbly beggeth information how he might be saved; which having received; he delayeth not to shew his thankfulneſſe. See also Gen. 40. 23. and 41. 9. &c. Esther 6. 1, 2, 3. faith cannot be unfruitfull of good works.

was baptized, he and all his] See on verse 15. this care of his family is exemplary. See Chap. 10. 7, 24. 48. See on verse 15.

V. 34. he had brought them into his house] Into his own lodgings, where his self and family kept: see the admirable change of him and his in one night, now he observeth not the governours charge concerning the close and safe imprisonment of Paul and Silas, but useth them with all humanity: now he washeth their stripes, or wounds received by those stripes. They that have true stripes, or wounds received by those stripes. They that have true faith, and assurance in their intereſt in Christ, will obey God in being charitable, rather than men who commend them to be cruel.

he set meat before them] παρέθηκε, a table: πράπεζα is here put to signify a table furnished with meat (as among many Greek authors) the 70. use it. Dan. 1. 13, 15. τῶν ἐσθιόντων τράπεζαν —that eat the portion of the kings meat, Psalm 78. 20. can he give bread also, can he provide τράπεζαν τῷ λαῷ αὐτοῦ, a table for his people, Hebrew שֻׁלְחָן flesh for his people. So Psalm 23. 5. Psalm 69. 22.

Paul and Silas were fasting, and not a little tyred with watching, stripes, and injurious usages; therefore, though about midnight, the converted keeper set before them such food as he had ready in his house, to refresh them: no bour is unseasonable to feed the hungry or to do works of charity, thus faith worketh by love and charity. See Gal. 5. 6.

and rejoyced believing, &c.] They rejoyced in the faith of God, the Syriac hath it: it is true which Ambrose saith, l. 5. ep. 18. nullus major dolor quam si qui peccati mucrone vulnerat conscientiam, there is no greater sorrow, than that which with the sword of sinne woundeth the conscience; therefore the sinner feeling a sweet calm within him, in peace of conscience by his justification by faith, (Rom. 5. 1.) must needs rejoyce in spirit: here was now no exaction of fees, imperious and cruell usage of the prisoners, after the keeper once believed in Christ, but the true fruits of charity, and so true joy to him and his whole family what joy or peace of conscience others are like to have at last, may not obscurely be gathered from Christs words, Matthew 25. 43, 45. who speaking of the form of judgement to come, among other arguments of condemnation receiteth this, I was sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not; in as much as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me: where note, First that Christ taketh some things on his own account, as done to his own person, which are done to his elect. Secondly, that if neglecting to visit, relieve, and comfort the imprisoned, be a just just cause of damnation; then most sad and fearful must be the condition of those keepers, who as much as they could, have taken away the relief and comfort of their prisoners, by unreasonable exactions, and hard usage of them. But they have warrant and custom for that they do: that indeed might possibly secure them from men here, but who can give them indemnity from the sentence of Christ already foretold them? Doth any of them so much love his own soul, as to cry with this happy convert, verse 30. what must I do to be saved? you see what followeth, verse 31. but left thy fruitleſs faith should at laſt fail thee, go learn of Zache, Luke 19. 8. to restore the damage, that Jesus may say to thy conscience, This day is salvation come to this house.

V. 35. and when it was day] Remembring, and possibly being terrified with the earth-quake.

sent the Sergeants] Syr. duces gestantes virgas, according to the Greek, ῥαβδοῦχοι: so called of the staves or rods which they carried. Some say that these were messengers, known by their staff of office which they were to carry, as apparitors to cite, and bear out procesſe of judges and magistrates: and that the Lictores were distinguished from these, by the axes and rods which they carried.

V. 36. Keeper of the prison told this saying] Being glad for their enlargement, he cheerfully brought them news of this new clemency.

V. 37. but Paul said unto them] That is, unto the Sergeants.

uncondemned] ἀκατακρίτους. as they say, indicta causâ, without cause pleadged; without any legal tryal, or hearing of us: Syr. insontes: guiltleſſe men.

being Romans] Not because he was born at Rome, or of Roman parents (he was an Hebrew, born at Tarsus) but because the citizens thereof were by their priviledge free men of Rome; and so by their Valerian Law might not be bound, and by their Sempronian Law, they might not be beaten or executed without the Romans consent: thus Paul pleaded his priviledge for the defence of the gospel, leſt the word of God should be despised with their persons.

V. 28. they feared when] Because the punishment was great for any man that injured a citizen or free man of Rome.

V. 39. and they came and besought them] This can God do for all his servants, who have been disgracefully and despitefully used: in this entreating and leading them out of prison, they sufficiently confeſſe their precipitate fury in abusing them who were innocent: this was for fear of the Romans, leſt they should punish their city, or them for violating their priviledges; therefore they desire them to depart from them.

V. 40. and entred into the house of Lydia] Verse 14. doubtleſſe to confirm them in the faith which they had preached to them, and probably they would have stayed longer, but that the imperious and armed entreaty of the wicked Magistrates awed them: Lydia and hers hearing of their marvellous deliverance, could not but be comforted, and confirmed in the truth: and though Paul now left them, yet he after visiteth the Philippians with an Epiſtle to contain and confirm them in the faith.

CHAP. XVII.

Verse 1. Mphipolis] A city of Macedonia, now called Chrysopolis: there was another of the same name in Syria, saith Jerom de loc. Hebr. Atl.

Apollonia] Another city in Macedonia: there is also another of the same name in Africa, which was called Pentapolis. Jerom q. supr.

Thessalonica] A chief city of Macedonia: so called of Philips victory over the Theſſalonians: to the Church hereof the Apoſtle wrote two Epiſtles.

V. 2. as his manner was] He was constant in preaching the truth of Christ, and the adversaries were constant in oppoſing it: by that which men uſe to do, you may know to which party they belong.

went in unto them] Into their synagogue: he was none of them who crept into houſes, to lead captive silly women, 2 Tim. 3. 2. &c. truth seeks no corners, the good seed is sowed in the day time, but the tars while men slept, Mat. 10. 25. truth knoweth it self a stranger on earth; and that it eaſily finds enemies; the kinred, seat, hope, favour and dignity thereof are in heaven: onely it rejoyceth in this one thing; as Tertullian Apol. cap. 1. faith, negata damnetur, leſt it be condemned unknown: therefore edito gaudet & aperto, it joyeth to be publickely seen: dum conventicula sibi diversa constituunt, veritatis caput, atque originem reliquerunt, Cyprian. de simpl. prælat. while men appoint them divers conventicles, they leſt the author and fountain of truth.

out of the Scriptures] This sheweth whence all found knowledge of God and religion muſt be drived: in things humane, human reaſons have places; but in matters of religion, onely the word of God (without traditions of men) muſt determine ſo as that in that we muſt reſt. Faith can be grounded on nothing but infallible truth; and that can be found onely in the word of God, in which there can be no falſhood, because God, the author thereof, 2 Tim. 3. 16. cannot lie, 1 Tit. 1. 1. Well said Ambroſe in his answer to Valentinian the Emperour, lib. 5. ep. 33. Colli mysterium docuit me Deus ipſe qui condidit, non homo qui ipſpsum ignoravit: Cui magis de Deo, quam Deo credam? let God his self teach me the mystery of heaven, who made heaven, not man who knoweth not himself; concerning God, whom ſhall I rather believe than God himſelf?

V. 3. opening and alledging] That is, as the Syriac hath it, expounding and ſhewing: indeed διανοίγων, imports a making things as manifeſt, as that which is set before our eyes. The ſum of his sermon was, that Christ for our redemtion ought ſo to die, and riſe again (Rom. 4. 25.) and that this Jesus (whom Paul preached) is indeed the Christ and long expected Meſſias.

V. 4. conforted with Paul] συνεπλήσθησαν, as it were choſen by lot, they joyned: it imporreth a near and firme conjunction, the Syriac interpreteth it, they adheared to Paul and Silas: ſo that hence it appeareth that their reaſoning in the Jews Synagogue was not without good effect: some of the Jews believed, and many of the Grecians, this word imporreth not a cold aſſent to the truth which they heard, but alſo a ſerious affection to the ſame, and the Chriſtian party that they might be further enformed and confirmed a wavering ſuſpence, and lukewarme newtrality of profeſſours, much diſadvantageth the cauſe of religion.

devout Greeks] Chap. 11. 20.

V. 5. which believed not] See Chap. 14. 2. because they believed not the gospel, they envied the proſperity and propagation thereof; and were moved with zeal to defend the ceremonial rights, in which they had been brought up: the word ζηλόω here uſed, ſignifieth ſometimes zeal to good, ſometimes to evil, as here; ſo Acts 7. 9. that is, envy.

certain lewd fellowes] τῶν ἀγοραίων τινάς, &c. idle fellows, who having no employment at home, uſe to walk laxily up and down markets and publick places; the dregges of cities, mercenary, worthleſſe burdens of the earth; commonly watching opportunities of moving ſedition, in hope of finding ſome advantages in change.

the house of Jason] Who was Paul and Silas hoſt, whom Paul mentioneth, Rom. 16. 21.

sought to bring them out] To bring out Paul and Silas, that they might ſtone them.

V. 6. they drew Jason] In an illegal and tumultuous way violently pulled him out of his houſe, as a delinquent; as if hoſpitality, and harbouring the ſervants of Christ had been a ſinne.

and certain brethren] Some other believers. See verse 4. who it ſeemed had but newly embraced the Gospell among them.

these have turned the world upside down] Or, who have ſtirred up the world to inſurrection and ſedition: a grievous crime of Chriſtians, had it been true; but being falſe, the greater was the accuſers ſinne who charged them with ſuch untruth: ſo odious is ſinne, that the very wicked are aſhamed of it, which is the reaſon why they commonly call others by names proper to themſelves, that they may tranſmit unto, or charge their ſins upon others. (See chap. 24. 5. Genel. 3. 12, 13. 1 Sam. 15. 15. 21. 1 Kings 18. 17.) they would, the guilt alſo, if they could; ſo in the Primitive Church, what ever calamity came upon the people, or common weal, it was preſently imputed to the Chriſtians.

are come hither also] Meaning, they are ill-affected to the ſtate, and trouble this city as they have done others.

V. 7. whom Jason hath received] He hath harboured them: ſee on verſe 6.

contrary to the decrees of Cæsar] An odious crime, but impudedently caſt on Chriſtians: Paul and Silas endeavoured to advance the ſpiritual kingdom of Christ, without any injury to the Roman Empire; which the Jews well knew, but caſt this aſperſion upon them, onely to render them odious to the people: therefore they pretended Cæsars right, that they might abuſe the decrees of Cæsar, to the deſtruction of Gods ſervants: the ancient Chriſtians were no diſturbers of States: rogamus Auguſte. non pugnamus, ſaid Ambroſe lib. 5. epeſt. 33. ad Marcellin. we entreat, O Cæſar, we fight not; therefore Theodoſius had rather to binde men to him, religione quam timore, with religion rather than fear, Ambroſ. de exit. Theodoſ. orat. the Chriſtian (ſaid Tertullian. ad ſcap. cap. 2.) is no mans enemy, much leſſe the Emperours, whom knowing to be appointted of God, he muſt needs, love, reverence, honour and wiſh ſafe—therefore ſaith the ſame, we honour the Emperour ſo far as it is lawful for us, and expedient for him, ut hominem à Deo ſecundum—& ſub Deo minorem as a man next unto God: and leſſe than God only, they they prayed for the Emperours---long life, prosperous reign, valiant arms, faithful Senate, & counsel, good people, and a quiet world: ib. Apol. cap. 30. yet these men could never be seeme from calumny, as if they had been enemies to peace.

V. 8. They troubled the people, &c.] This people not knowing the businesse, and hearing something pretended against the Roman state (having so lately smarted under their power) were troubled, & for fear they might again deal fiercely with them as disturbers of peace, and probably the Roman commanders there being, might also be troubled at the appearance, or fear of some insurrection.

V. 9. When they had taken security of Jason] λαβόντες τὸ ἱκανὸν, Syr. and had taken sureties: that is, bail, for their appearance. So Budæus interpreth it, cum satis accepissent, ab Jasone, & ab aliis judicio sistendi sponsionis, &c. here they being partly satisfied with their answer (as is most probable) and a legal security taken, they appease the people.

V. 10. Berea] Another City of Macedonia: hither they sent Paul and Silas, that they might keep them from the rage of the Jews, and reserve them to the greater good of the Church.

went into the synagogue] Here was his invincible love toward's the Jews: after so many violent outrages of theirs against his life, he ceaseth not to venture again for their salvation. See Rom. 9. 2, 3.

V. 11. These were more noble] That is, than the Thessalonian Jews, for this ᾧ ὁ Θεσσαλονικεῖς, is elliptical: than these (Jews) in Thessalonica: which their dayly searching of the Scriptures confirmes, the Jews had the writings of the Prophets, but rarely the Gentiles before their conversion: see verse 13.

they received the word] That is, the Gospel of Christ preached unto them, which they of Thessalonica rejected and persecuted, but these cheerfully and readily embraced: herein they were more excellent than others. See 1 Thess. 2. 13.

searched the scriptures dayly, &c.] For they testifie of Christ, John 5. 39 that Christ is learned; there shineth an heavenly light, which like that Eastern star. (Mat. 2. 2. &c.) leads the wise men to Christ: these Bereans diligence, is exemplary to us.

V. 12. Therefore many of them believed] By the testimony of Scriptures, and example of other believers, the Spirit of God working thereon.

V. 13 When the Jews of Thessalonica, &c.] These unbelievers being of restlesse and implacable malice, envied those who believed, therefore came they over to Berea; to hinder the preaching of the Gospel there, by stirring up new troubles. See 2 Thes. 1. 5. &c.

V. 14. to go as it were to sea] To take shipping as if he meant to go quite away out of those parts; which they did, that the Jews might give over their pursuit.

but Silas and Timothous abode, &c.] They being not so much known nor maliced as Paul, stayed a little while, further to edifie the believers there.

V. 15. to Athens] A City and famous University of Greece to did the providence of God bring to passe, that Satans malitious endeavours to suppresse the Gospel, caused it more to spread abroad; as here it did, at Athens, the Greece of Greece. See Atlas. min G. Mercat. in Athen.

V. 16. His spirit was stirred in him] παρωξύνετο---was embittered in him. So chap. 15. 39. ἐγένετο δὲ παροξυσμὸς --- Dissensio incitabatur, Oecumen. in loc.---was stirred up. So bitternesse of Spirit moved him, that he could not bear it, but brake out into reproof.

V. 17. with the devout persons] With the Proselytes. Syr. with them that feared God. See chap. 13. 43.

V. 18. Epicureans] A sect of Philosophers, as also were the Stoicks, of the errours of the Epicureans. See Epiphan. hæref. 6. Gent. hæref. ord. 8. of the Stoicks; see Epiphan. hæref. 5. D. Laert. lib. 10. ib. lib. 7. zenon,

V. 19. Areopagus] Or Mars-hill, it was the highest court in Athens, a court where the Judges called Areopagites, sate concerning the highest titles and causes, specially religion: hither they brought Paul as a violater of their religion, to be judged, as Socrates was, for that he denyed their Idols to be gods, and because he would, as they said, bring in ξένα δαιμόνια, other new gods. D. Laert. l. 2. Socrat.

what this new doctrine, &c.] Thus godlesse men think of truth: whereas truth is more ancient than any errour: the gospel was in the old testament, as the wheat in the blade, in time, and by degrees ripening, and shewing it self. Heathenish superstitions are but imitations of Gods truth and holy worship, inventions of Satan to beguile ignorant soules with shewes of truth.

V. 20. You bringest certain strange things, &c.] It is strange to them who were aliens from the covenant of God: this they would know, to satisfie their own curiosity.

V. 21 either to tell or hear] This is the fruit of idlenesse, and levity of unsgoverned minds. See 1 Tim. 5. 13. these two things go together: inquisitivenelle, and talkativenelle: the Grecian Historias shew the disposition of this people: the meanest mechanick among them, would be medling and discoursing of Statematters; insomuch as in that dangerous liberty of tongues, that republique (though the Misteris of knowledge to all Greece) could never be well or long setled, nor free from tumults, and dangerous concussions of state, so discomposing and disjointing the members thereof, that they were long before they could grow together again, recover their ancient strength, or be free from some mischievous gangrens, untill they lost themselves and all Greece with them: such popular liberty, being a dangerous symptom, of a distasted Common-wealth, it were to be wished, that those, who sit at the helm, would seriously, and timely consider how this disease hath crept upon us, now some years together, lest once ---flourishing England come to the like misery.

V. 22. Mars-hill] See verse 19.

and said, ye men of Athens] So was he ready to give account of the hope which was in him. See 1 Pet. 3. 15.

too superstitious] δεισιδαιμονεστέρους: the word is used sometimes in the good part; but here, as commonly, in the evil: so Clem Alexandr. adm. ad Gent. &c. δεισιδαίμων, is meticens numen, or a superstitious man: one who by fear, is driven to believe a deity, or worshippeth for fear, as the superstitious usually do. Lactantius describeth such to be, qui superstitem memoriam defunctorum colunt, &c. who worship the images of their Ancestors, as their penates, and houshold gods: they who devised to themselves new rites of adoring the dead (in stead of God) whom they imagined to be received into heaven and Deified, lib. 4. cap. 28. and also they who worshipped many, or any false God, he had excellently well said before. l. 2. c. 18. that such had not the reason of men left in them; and that there is no doubt, but that Religio nulla est, ubiunque simulachrum est, there is no religion, where there is an image.

V. 23. your devotions] σεβάσματα; your adorations (of σέβεσθαι, to adore with religious worship. Budæus) or the gods which ye worship: the Syriac give it בֵּית דַּחֲלְתִּיכוֹן beth dachalothoon: the house of your religions; your idol temple.

TO THE UNKNOWN GOD] Syriac לֵאלָהָא דְּלָא יְדִיעְנָא dalobo genkzo; of or to the hidden God: he dwelleth in the thick darknesse, 1 Kings 8. 12. Hebrew עָנָן ganaz, is texit, velavit, &c. the same which ἀπορρήτῳ with the Greeks: God is indeed, as Lactantius saith, lib. 1. cap. 8. inextigibilis, ineffabilis, & nulli alio satis notus quam sibi; incomprehensible, ineffable, not very much known to any but himself: Some heathen authours mention this altar, as Pausanius Attic. Laert. in Epimenid, Lucian. Philopatride: but something differing, in their relation of the inscription, and occasion of the same: Oecumenius saith, that the whole inscription was, Θεοῖς Ἀσίας, καὶ Εὐρώπης, καὶ Λιβύης, Θεῷ ἀγνώστῳ καὶ ξένῳ, to the gods of Asia, Europe and Lybia, to the unknown and strange God: hereby Paul taketh occasion to bring them to the true God, whom yet they knew not.

V. 24. God that made the world] Chap. 7. 48. The Apostle here teacheth them, who that God was, whom they worshipped under the notion of ΑΓΝΩΣΤΟΥ, whom he describes by his effects, and works of creation, and preservation of the world, concerning the incomprehensible essence of God, though before an auditory of Philosophers, he said nothing, only by his work of creation and providence, he sheweth which is indeed the true and onely God: in these words he refuteth the foolish tenet of Epicures affirming the world to be eternal. See in verse 26.

V. 25. with mens hands] His worship consisteth not in things external, humane traditions, or the works of mens hands, idols, images, &c. but in spirit and truth (See John 4. 24.) according to the holy prescript of his own word: he is independently and self-blessed, wanting nothing of ours (Psalm 50. 8.) he gives all creatures what they have and are: when he blesseth us with ability to give (which is acceptable service to him. Phil. 4. 18. Hebr. 13. 16.) and rewardeth that which we do herein, in faith and obedience to him, he onely crowneth his own graces in us: but here he intendeth not these things, but external ceremonies &c.

V. 26. hath made of one blood] Of one Adam: herein he admonisheth the Athenians to consider the end for which God gave them life and being: it is a brutish stupor, not to minde why God made us reasonable creatures.

determined the time before] Job 7. 1. & 14. 5, 6. For the birth and life of every man, as also the places of their habitations: this he saith to confute the Epicures, who denyed Gods providence, dreaming that all things were made by a fortuitous concourse of their imaginary Atomi: (Clem. Alexandrinus strom. lib. 1. Greg. Nazianzen orat. 33. fine. Epiphanius hæref. 6. Athanas. de incarn. verb. Augustin de C. D. lib. 6. cap. 5. &c.) God in his eternal counsel ordained all these things, and changes which we see in their appointed times: he divideth the earth to the sons of men, and his providence governeth all things, which his wisdom not onely foresaw, but disposed of. See Psal. 115 3.

V. 27. that they should seek the Lord] It is not as Anaxagoras said, man was born to see the sun and the heavens (Lactant. l. 3. c. 9.) but to seek, know, and serve the Lord their Maker: he not onely onely gave us life, but also means by which we may come to know him, in the great volume of nature, and the book of grace, the holy Scripture.

if happily they might feel after him] ψηλαφήσειαν αὐτὸν might feel and finde, he intimates that God, though he be incorporeal, yet in his works which are corporeal and obvious to sense, so compliteth with their infirmity, as that he seemeth himself before them (as Oecumenius saith) ὥσπερ ἀνθ' ὧν εἰσὶν αἰσθητὰ τὰ ψηλαφώμενον) as it were something palpable: the Syriack hath it, that they might finde him by his creatures: in them indeed, that which may be known of him, as his wisdome, power, and goodnesse, may and do evidently appear. Romans 1: 20.

not farre from every one of us] We are not to seek the knowledge of God in things farre remote from us; we need not go out of our selves to finde him; he filleth all things. Jer. 23. 24. indeed the carnal eye cannot see him, nor the ear heare him: lo he goeth by me, and I see him not. Job 9. 11. yet the effects of his present goodnesse, are obvious to every sense. See Augustin. Paulina. ep. 112. cap. 11.

V. 28. in him we live, &c.] That is, by his power, by which he continually preserveth the creature in his being. Col 1. 17. Hebr. 1. 3.

your own Poets have said] As Aratus a Greek; this he citeth, not to derive any proof from his authority, who was an heathen, and alien, but to shame the Athenians, with whom he had now to do. See also 1 Cor. 15. 33. Tit. 1. 12.

V. 29. we ought not to think] Esa. 40. 18. from Aratus testimony he inferreth, that the worship of Idols is impious vanity; how foolish and irrational is it for man, the image of God, to adore the image and work of man? and what madnesse is it for a man to think that any can make the image of an infinite, incomprehensible God, when he well knows that the most curious artificer can neither draw the picture of a soule, nor carve it's image.

V. 30. times of this ignorance] Chap. 14. 16.

God winked at] ὑπεριδὼν ὁ Θεὸς, may here signifie the same which ἀνεκτὸν Hebr. 8. 9. not to regard, or to contemn, contray to ἀνεξάκτως. Luke 1. 48. God did not manifest himself unto them, as unto the Jewes. Psal. 147. 19, 20. and this sheweth Gods patience, in that he did not presently destroy them, not their impunity for the life to come: herein he prepossesseth an objection vvhich they might possibly have made: if the religion which we profelle, be false and erroneous; why did God suffer the world so long to erre: he saith God bare with that in his long-suffering; but now he requireth you to repent: be not you so curious to examine what became of others before you, as careful for your own salvation; the onely means whereto, is now presented you: that was a severe judgement, when God gave you up to your own lusts; and blindnesse of mind (as Rom. 1. 24. Heb. 8. 9.) this is a gracious mercy which he offereth to you in the Gospel and covenant of grace.

but now he commandeth all men] Now he causeth the Gospel to be preached to all nations, to draw them from their horrible finstand now if they refuse to do the known will of their Master, they must expect more severe judgements.

V. 31. righteousnesse] ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ in justice and equity: as 2 Cor. 5. 10. he mentioneth the judgement to come, to terrifie the Epicures, that they might no longer beguile their own souls, in hope of future impunity. See Psal. 96. 13. & 9. 8, 9 by that man whom he hath ordained] Rom. 2. 16. Christ Jesus: possibly Paul nameth his humanity, in respect of the Gentiles ignorance of the mystery of the blessed Trinity, and Christs incarnation: and lest they should so mistake that sacred mystery, as thereby to confirme their opinion concerning plurality of gods.

given assurance] Or offered faith; the meaning is, that God confirmed and declared, as it were by a most evident testimony, that Christ should judge the world, in raising him from the dead; wherein he was with power, declared to be the Son of God. Rom. 1. 4.

V. 32. Some mocked] Some were like stony ground, some like thorny, and some like the good. Matth. 13. they who tasted the truth and mercy of God therein, desired to hear more. See Chap. 13. 42.

V. 33. So Paul departed] He dismissed his auditors, having performed his part in sowing the seed of the Gospel among them.

V. 34. certain men clave unto him] To wit, those whose hearts God had opened, so that the word might be a savour of life unto them.

Dionysius the Areopagite] A Senatour or Judge in that coure of Mars-hill in Athens, whom Luke names, because he was no vulgar auditor, but an eminent man, and of great authority with the Athenians.

Damaris] It seemeth that she was some honourable woman. See verse 11.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. Corinth] A chief city of Achaia, situate between the Egean and Ionian seas.

V. 2. Aquila] A Jew converted to the faith of Christ. See Rom. 16. 3.

Pontus] A Province in Asia.

Claudius] The Emperour of Rome.

V. 3. and wrought] This he did in respect of the present necessity, that he might not disadvantage the Gospel by being burdensome to any. Chap. 20. 34. 2 Thes. 3. 8.

tent-makers] Their trade was to make tents of skins, then much in use in those hot countries

V. 4 a Greek] See chap. 11. 20.

V. 6. when Silas and Timothous were come] See chap. 16. 1. &c. and 17. 15. we here read the proceeding of Paul in preaching the Gospel at Corinth, accommodating his doctrine to their capacity, of which he seemeth to speak, 1 Cor. 3. 1, 2. but after the coming of Silas and Timotheus from Macedon unto him, as he had ordered, chap. 17. 15. he began to be fervent in the cause of Christ, declaring him to be τὸν Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν, that Christ Jesus, promised by the Prophets, was prefsed in spirit] He had an extraordinary and vehement motion of the spirit, by a divine inspiration, to testifie to the Jewes, that Jesus was that Christ, the Messias, whom they so long expected, your blood be upon your own heads] This is an Hebrew manner of speaking. So Josh. 2. 19. דָּמוֹ בְרֹאשׁוֹ damo beroßo Gre. וְאָנֹכִי אֶהְיֶה נָקִי ve anochi ehye; he shall be guilty to himself: that is, of his own destruction. So 2 Sam. 1. 16. thy blood shall be upon thine own head. So the Jemes cried, Mat. 27. 25. his blood be upon our heads, &c. that is, the guilt and punishment thereof; this phrase seemeth taken from the Jewes custome of laying their hands on the head of the guilty persons by which they intimated, that the witnesses laid that crime, concerning vvhich they testified, on the head, or to the charge of the person accused, and so devoted him to punishment; as their sacrifices vvere destinated to death, by the laying the sacrificers hand on the head of the beast to be offered: See Levit. 1. 4. & 3. 2. Exod. 29. 10. So that blood is said to be laid on the head, vvhen one is guilty of the sin vvhich deserveth death: the sense of Pauls speech is, be you, or you are guilty of your ovvn destructions.

V. 6. he shook his raiment] Mat. 10. 14. and chap. 13. 51.

I am clean, &c. καθαρὸς ἐγὼ that is, ἀθῷος, innocent guiltlesse; or ἀνεύθυνος, unblameable, not in the fault: ἐκ τοιούτου τὰ καινὰ: I have no share in this evill: it is none of my fault, if ye perish.

henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles] This he said, that emulation of the Gentiles might incite them to believe: but their obstinacy made an evill use of every thing, and so rendred them incurable. chap. 13. 46,

V. 7. named Justus] This vvas a Proselyte: the Syryack calleth him טִיטוֹס Titus; vvhether Justus vvere here a surname; as, chap. 1. 23. and Col. 4. 11. it is uncertain, the vulgar readeth Titi Justi.

one that feared God] So chap. 10. 2. Cornelius was said to be a devout man, and one that feared God: a religious and good man.

V. 8. and Crispus a chief ruler] See 1 Cor. 1. 14. ἀρχισυνάγωγος a chief, or one of the chief rulers of the synagogue, for verse 17. Sosthenes is mentioned (as his colleague, or one in the same office) a chief ruler of the synagogue. See on Mark 5. 22. Mat 9. 18. and on Luke 13. 14.

V. 9. be not afraid, but speak, &c.] Be not afraid to speak boldly: because the ingratitude and perverseneste of hearers, often discouragech Ministers, thus God animateth them to their duty. See Isai. 58. 1. Jer. 1. 17, 18, 19. Ezek 3. 4, 5, 8, 9, 11. we may not, for fear of the invincible malice of some, neglect the salvation of others. See chap. 20. 27.

V. 10. for I am with thee] I will take thy part and assist thee. See Mat. 28. Rom. 8, 31. however God often permitteth his Ministers to the violence of enemies, yet he is with them in life and death; yea, then most, when they are most destitute of mans assistance. See 2 Tim. 4. 16, 17, 18. but here God promised a more evident and peculiar protection to Paul, by making void all the mischievous endeavours of the adversaries.

I have much people in this city] This is a second argument, whereby he encourageth Paul to speak confidently: there were many in Corinth whom God had ordained to salvation, so that his labour should be blessed with happy successe: here is an argument of industry and patience to Ministers: God hath his Elect, whom in his appointed time he will effectually call to Christ by the word preached, though he suffer them for a season to lie like the pure wheat among the perishing chaffe.

V. 11. continued there] ἐκάθισεν he sate there, that is, at Corinth. So the Syriack giveth it by יָתַב which signifieth, he sate, remained, or dwelt of the Hebrew יָשַׁב often used to the same purpose.

a year and six monthes] So full of labour and difficulty was the planting of Church.s, that Paul, so extraordinarily gifted, was so long in this one, yet had he assistants. See 1 Cor. 2, 3. 1 Cor. 3. 10.

V. 12. Gallio was Deputy] Affliction commonly followeth preaching of the Gospel: malice is restlelle as the devil, whose influence it is: the Iewes, as it seems by the change of their Deputy, were animated to attempt against Paul; hoping that a new Iudge would favour them against the Christians.

of Achaia] Gallio is called proconsul, or Deputy Consul of Achaia, that is of all Greece, of which Achaia was but a part: So Suidas interpreteth Ἀχαΐα, ἡ ἑλλὰς: Achaia, that is Greece: So the Romans (faith he) seem to call Achaia, Greece; transferring the name of the then chief and ruling part thereof, to the whole conquered nation: so say it was because they subdued the rest of the Grecians through the ayd of the Achaians Pausanias; &c. Sure it is that Greece was made a Consularis Province: some write that Gallio obtained this Deputyship of Claudius the Roman Emperour, by the favour of Nero, Claudius adopted son.

with one accord] So unanimous, and industrious are the wicked to do mischief: it is a wretched shame for Christians to divide, when Satans kingdome can be of one consent.

V. 13. contrary to the law] They mean the law of Moses; according to which the Romans had permitted them to live: this they said, not being able to look to the end of the Law Christ Jesus. 2 Cor. 3. 13. Now however the Romans favoured neither the religion of Iewes nor Christians, yet for as much as innovations in religion, are often the causes of dangerous confusions of States, all such changes were suspected, and odious to the Romans, so that they made severe decrees against the authours thereof.

V. 14. if it were a matter of wrong] Between party and party: it is as if he said; I will meddle onely with civill government, and not with your religion.

V. 15. and names] The profane man thought the Jews worshipped one name, and the Christians another, as the hathens, who upon the matter, adored bare names, and fancies of men.

V. 16. drave them from the Judgement seat] He superseded the cause, and therefore would not have them stay there longer to trouble the court, with controversies (as he thought) unnecessary.

V. 17. the Greeks] The Grecians which were not converted: the Syriack readeth it, the profane.

none of those things] Neither for that which concerned religion, to defend Gods servants: nor for the States interest, to maintain peace, and defend the oppressed.

V. 18. having shorn] As Nazarites did at the end of their vow, Numb. 6. 18. the meaning is, that Paul shore his head. (See chap. 21. 24) not as some others think, that this is to be understood of Aquila and Priscila.

in Cenchrea] A port of the Corinthians.

V. 19. came to Ephesus] A city of Ionia, and Metropolis or chief city of Asia the lesse.

reasoned with the Jewes] So zealous was he still for their salvation, so often did he expose his life for them.

V. 20. he consented not] Not that he was not willing to spend his time, and do his uttermost endeavour for their salvation who were willing to hear; for he ventured often to preach to the obstinate, and he promised to come again unto them; but it seemeth some secret instinct of Gods spirit now led him to Jerusalem.

V. 21. keep this feast] Not that he now observed dayes, or the antiquated ceremonies of the law (See Gal. 4. 10.) but because he might in that solemnity, and concourse of people, more advance the Gospel.

if God will] 1 Cor. 4. 19. Jam. 4. 15.

V. 22. Cesarea] Called Cesarea Stratonis a port by which they went to Jerusalem; some say built by Herod.

V. 23. Galatia, and Phrygia] Chap. 16. 6. Galatia, or Gallo-graecia; so named of the Galli, qui Graeis, mixti, vlim loca ea coluere. Atlas min. Amster. 1634. pag 600. cap. 20.) The Gaules and French, who mixed with Grecians anciently inhabited those places.

V. 24. a certain Jew] 1 Cor. 1. 12.

named Apollos] See 1 Cor. 3. 6. and 1 Cor. 4 6. he was born at Alexandria, a city in Egypt.

an eloquent man] Though the Kingdom of God be not in word, but in power. 1 Cor 4. 20. nor eloquence of speech, or the ensicing words of mans wisdom, but in the evidence of the spirit. 1 Cor. 2. 1. 4. yet is eloquence used, to the setting forth of the truth of God, and edification of his Church, as an Egyptian jewel to adorne the tabernacle, and here commended in Apollos, by the holy Ghost, whose gift it is; Lavinius noted well that the Phylosophers, Oratours, and Poets, were therefore very pernicious, in that they easily ensnared incautious minds: suavitate sermonis, with sweetnesse of speech; therefore his advice is, even in delivering the truth of Christ, to sweeten the speech for the winning of them to Christ, who will neither hear nor read any thing, nisi expolitum, ac disertum, except it be polished, and eloquent; and where nemo rem veritate ponderat, sed ornatu, lib. 5. cap. 1. no man valueth the matter by the truth, but politure and trimme thereof.

mighty in the Scriptures,] Much versed and learned in them, which enabled him to convince the adversaries. Titus 1. 9. Syriack, arguens erat in Scripturis: this is added that none might think it to be the vain and frothy eloquence of profane men: it was a divine and powerfull eloquence.

V. 25. instructed in the way of the Lord] κατηχημένος, instructed viva voce, The Syriack hath it, he was taught. Some interpret, he was initiated, &c. See Luke 1. 4. the word signifieth one that is entred into religion, or catechized, as those who were taught the rudiments and principles thereof.

fervent in spirit] Zealous to teach and to winne men to Christ: See Rom. 12. 11. 1 Kings 19. 14. Zeale is the life of religion, without which it is inactive (See Rev. 3. 15, 16.) but it must be zeale with the true knowledge of God. See Rom. 10. 2. 2. Acts 21, 20. and 22. 3. Tit. 2. 14. Rev. 3. 19.

taught diligently] His zeale and diligence is here commendable, though he had not yet much knowledge of the doctrine of the Gospel, as appeareth by the next clause: however, he well used his talent, being faithful in a little.

the baptisme of John] That is the doctrine of John, which we may not understand as if John were the authour thereof, or as it were different from the doctrine of Christ and his Apostles (for he preached repentance, and faith in Christ for remission of sinnes, and salvation, which they also preached) but because John was between the Prophets and Christ, whose way he was to prepare; the mysteries of salvation were not so clearly manifested; as afterward by Christ himself and his Apostles: John taught the rudiments, as his hearers were capable, but the Apostles themselves could not understand some things often taught by Christ, untill they received, the holy Ghost, to lead them into all truth: therefore though Apollos were instructed in the way of the Lord, having learned that Christ was the only redeemer of man, yet he was yet ignorant of many things appertaining to the manner of our redemption, and the kingdom of Christ, which he afterward more fully learned and happily taught.

V. 26. they took him unto them and expounded] If Priscilla, the woman here mentioned, contributed ought to this work, it was where her husband, Apollos, and her selfe were private: such instruction Paul commendeth in Timothies grandmother Loi, and his mother Eunice, of whom (most likely) he had learned the holy Scriptures. (See 2 Tim. 1. 5. and 3. 15.) though otherwise in the Church, (or other place made publick by the company) he suffered not a woman to teach, but to be in silence. See 1 Tim. 2. 11, 12. possibly the man and wife hearing Apollos, both joyned in the invitation of him unto them, but that Aquila performed the part of interpretation, and instruction in the way of God, though it be attributed to both, because both equally affected it; there is no patronage here for that late revived practice of the old exploded hereste of the Pepulians, or Quintilians, who as Augustine Tom. 6. de hæref. saith mulieres sacerdotio honorant, they honour women with Priest-hood. We may more safely say that the most excellent of meer men know not all; and that those who are inferiour in gifts may adde something to them.

the way of God] The doctrine of the Gospel.

V. 27. to passe to Achaia] See verse 12. why he would go thither is not here expressed, but cerrainly it was to advance the Gospel there.

the brethren wrote] Letters of recommendation for him who was not much know to the Churches.

re helped them much] Confirming them who believed, and refuting the adversaries through the grace of God thereto enabling him.

V. 28. That Jesus was Christ] The Jews had no controversie with Christians concerning a Christ to come; the whole dispute was, whether Jesus the Sonne of Mary were he; this now Apollos proved by Scriptures accommodated to him: and thus Apollos watered, 2 Cor. 3. 6. herein the Scripture is sufficient to accomplish and make the man of God absolute, 2 Tim. 3. 16. we cannot learne Christ in any humane traditions, or inventions of men: the sun can be discerned by no light but his own, because that excells all other worldly lights: neither can Christ the sun of righteousnesse be known by any, but his own light, which shineth in the Scriptures: these restisie of him, and discover him unto us. Iohn 5. 39.

CHAP. XIX.

Verse 1. Through the upper coasts] In the upper parts of Asia, are Phrygia, Galatia, Lydia, Livonia, Ionia, in which was Ephesus.

V. 2. have ye received, &c.] They are demanded concerning the visible gifts of the Holy Ghost, as speaking tongues, healing, &c. Which then flourished in the Church, though they were not then common to all that believed, and were baptized, as in this their answer may appear.

whether there be any Holy Ghost] Or whether the Holy Ghost be (as John 7. 39.) they meant whether there be any such gifts of the holy Ghost, given to any: they answered according to Pauls question; which being concerning the gifts and graces (not the infinite and eternal essence of the deity) they reply according to the same. (See chap. 8. 16.) for it were very absurd to say that they had not heard of the holy Ghost being baptized of Johns Disciples, John seeing him descending on Christ in his Baptisme, in a visible form. Mat. 3. John 1. concerning this, neither did the Apostle ask, nor they answer, but concerning those gifts which then flourished in the Church, of which they said, they had not heard.

V. 3. unto what then were ye baptized?] That is, what religion, what doctrine professed you, in your baptisme? or the question was not here, of baptizing, but de primordiis concerning their beginning, and constitution of the Church of Ephesus, where appeared not yet any publick form of a Church in discipline and other Ecclesiastical rites, and conventions: so that he enquireth, how they were grounded, whether by imposition of hands, or the gifts of the holy Ghost, whereby it might appear, that they were divinely called, as the gifts of prophecies, prophesie; &c.

unto Johns Baptisme] That is, we professed the same doctrine, which John Baptist taught: and we received baptisme, as a seal of our professing the same, and of our dedication unto Christ.

V. 4. John verily baptized] Mat 3. 11. as if he said, the ministery of John was not to gather disciples to himselfe, but that he might prepare and remit them to Christ, that they might in him only, expect and obtain remission of sins and salvation.

that is, on Christ Jesus] Theophylatt on Luke 24. expresseth that well as not excluding the other persons of the holy Trinity, but in contradistinction to the Jewish baptizings or washings; that was faith he πρόσκαιρον τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις, spiritual, not Judaicall. See on chap. 2. 38. and on 18. 28.

V. 5. When they heard this] That is, when they heard the doctrine of John, they were baptized by some of Johns disciples who had so preached unto them the doctrine of repentance, and salvation by Christ: not that Paul did rebaptize them: for otherwise it would follow, that Christ whom John baptized, and we, are not baptized with the same Baptisme: whereas he bare the same circumcision with the Jewes, and the same baptisme with us Gentiles. that he might declare himselfe the Saviour of both. So that these words (when they heard this) relate not unto the words of Paul, but unto their hearing of Johns doctrine: and therefore Paul is not faid to have baptized them, but to have laid his hands on them: that is a posture and action of confirmation, not initiation, and baptizing, verse 6. against rebaptizing them who were baptized by hereticks (except of those who raised the foundation of faith, and used not the Catholick form of baptisme) See the Councel of Carthage, 1 Anno 258. and the other Councells concerning the same. Severin. (si sit ejus liber) ibid. de verb. Domini in Matth. serm. 11. Epiphan. expos. fidei. Cathol. 13. Justin. Martyr. Quæst. & resp. ad Orthod. quæst. 14. Chrysostome words on Hebr. 6 6. are remarkable: when he had said τὸ ἐκκλησιαστικὸν σχῆμα τοῦτο ἐστι, &c. Baptisme is the crosse, in which our old man is Crucified with Christ; being made conformable to his death, &c. ὁ γὰρ ἀναγεννώμενος δεύτερον σταυροῦται Χριστῷ σὺν αὐτῷ· therefore hee that rebaptizeth himself, crucifieth him (the Lord of life) again. Auxentius the hæretick rebaptized. Ambrose said, he (therein) defspised the Counsell of God. epist. 32. fin. Baptisme is a new birth of the whole man: as we can be born but once in the flesh, so can we be born but once in the Spirit: therefore as there was but one circumcision (which signified the same) so ought there to be but one baptisme.

V. 6. Layd his hands upon them] Chap. 6. 6. & 8. 17. he layd his hands upon them for confirmation, we read not that he rebaptized them.

they spake with tongues] Chap. 2. 4. & 10. 46. That, is, they spake divers languages, which before they knew not.

and prophesied) By a divine and evident inspiration, they preached and expounded the word of God as able Ministers of Christ. See 1 Cor. 11. 4. & 14. 1.

V. 8. the kingdom of God] See on chap. 1. 3. and on 20. 25. that is, concerning the mysteries of salvation comprehended in the Gospel; the Jews dreamed of a political kingdom of the Messias, which they supposed should be in ceremoniall rites, but Paul declared that it should be a spiritual kingdom; as Rom. 14. 17.

V. 9. and spake evill of that way] As chap. 18. 26. of that doctrine of the Gospel.

and separated the Disciples] This warranteth not separation from a true Church, or for any defects therein lesse than fundamentall: it is true that when the nations are drunken with the cups of Babylonish fornication, then the Lord calleth from heaven, come out of her my people, &c. (Revel. 17. 2. and 18. 4. See Ephes. 5. 7, 11, 2 Thes 3. 14. 2 Cor. 6. 14, 15. Tit. 3. 10.) and that in case of scandal, we must not company with the incorrigible wicked: but here we see, though Paul withdrew the weak Disciples from the blasphemers of Christianity and the Gospel, yet he made no schismes nor yet deserted the cause, for which he daily disputed with the adversaries.

one Tyrannus] This seemeth to have been some Phylosopher, or publick professour of Rhetorick, converted by Paul: Syr. in the schoole of a certain man whose name was Tyrannus.

V. 10. by the space of two yeares] This commendeth Pauls great diligence for the planting of the Gospel.

so that all they which dwelt in Asia, &c.] This was that admirable door, which Paul said was opened unto him, 1 Cor. 16. 9, not that all the people, but that all the Christians of Asia heard him, the sweet savour and report of the Gospel spreading it self abroad (like that odour of the precious oyntment, which filled the house. John 12. 3.) into all parts round about.

V. 11. speciall miracles] Great miracles, whereby he confirmed the authority of Pauls Apostleship, and ministery.

V. 12. handkerchiefs] This maketh nothing for the superstitious use of reliques: Gods providence did this that by such cures, he might prepare the absent, and those who had never seen the face of Paul, to a reverend esteem, and opinion of the Gospel and truth of Christ, in whose name they were so cured, and also, that in these meanes, so slender and improbable of themselves, the power of Jesus healing them might the more clearly appear.

and the diseases departed from them] As Mat. 8. 15. Luke 4. 39. John 4 52. the diseases left them, that is, they were freed from their diseases, and the unclean Spirits departed from them, being forced to do by the power of Christ.

V. 13. Exorcists] Syr. Jewes who mandred about, and adjured devils or conjured devils: these possibly, out of a foolish and impious emulation of the Apostles casting out devils, practiced such things, intending if they could have effected anything herein, to have made men believe, that the like miracles done by the Apostles, were but magical exorcismes, concerning exorcists, and exorcismes, yet in use in the Church of Rome, see Durand. rational. To 1. lib. 2. cap. 6. lib. lib. 6. c. 63. n. 8. and the Ritual Roman Paul 5. jussu edit. de sacr. bapt. where they use these words, exorcizo te immunde Spiritus, in nomine Patris +, & Filii +, & Spiritus Sancti + ut excas & recedas ab hoc famulo Dei, &c. So ibid, de benedictionibus ------ exorcizo te creatura salis per Deum + vivum, &c. exorcizo te creatura aquæ, &c. And Benedictionalis. exorcizo te creatura olei, &c. See ib. de exorcizand. obses. à dem. Concerning the Jewish Exorcists, Josephus writeth some fabulous things, Antiq. lib. 8. cap. 2. The gift of casting out devils continued long in the primitive Church. Justin. Martyr. dial. cum Try. Iud.

V. 14. Seven Sons of one Sheva] He mentioneth these for the greater evidence of the history, these were eminent persons (sons of one of the chief Priests) who with false miracles, and abuse of the sacred name of Christ to their own secular gaines, endeavoured to confirm their impious superstitions, and to render the doctrine of the Gospel suspected.

V. 15. But who are ye?] What have you that I should obey you? God commanded me, Jesus (whom Paul preacheth) commandeth me; but do not I know that you have no such commission? no power to cast me out?

V. 16. leapt on them] The possessed man fell violently upon them, and by the force of the evill spirit in him, mastered them, tearing their cloaths, and wounding them: sometimes the devill willingly co-operateth with the conjurers, and witches, suffering himself to be commanded, and possibly, driven out also (probably the Hebrews might consider this in their calling a witch, the mistris of a devill. So 1 Sam. 28. 7. they call the witch of Endor בעלת־אוב behalath ob, dominam Pythonis, a Pythonisse, one having a familiar spirit. Chalde, one who can draw out a devill; this he doth where he can entice men or women to confederate with him for mischief, and hold them, and others by them, in superstition: but here he had some other end, and

God would thus defeat their mischievous practises: making all serve to the further advancement of the Gospel which Paul preached.

V. 17 fear fell on them all] Herein appeareth the fruit of this divine revenge on them who impiously prophaned the holy name of Jesus: first that by their example, others feared to contemn that doctrine, the patronage whereof God so severely undertook: secondly in that all turned to the magnifying the sacred name of Jesus, the rumour of this accident making all afraid, not onely to blaspheme it as some of the Jewes did, but even to take it in their prophane mouthes, to abuse, as these Sonnes of Sceva did.

V. 18. and confessed] Terrified with this judgement on others, the remorse of their own consciences, and desiring some remedy, and comfort, they publickly confessed their errours, and detested those their sins. See Mat. 3. 6.

V. 19. Curious arts] That is Magick, as the Syriack expressed it divinations by judicial astrology, &c.

fifty thousand pieces of silver] Or, fifty thousand pence, which the word also sign fieth: what this cometh to of our Sterling money is not agreed on by the writers, but the least estimate, bringeth it about eight hundred pounds.

V. 20. So mightily grew, &c.] See chap. 12. 24. κατὰ κράτος, vehemently with great power, as the Syriack hath it, intimating a powerful course of the word, casting down the kingdom of sin and Satan: so doth κράτος signifie victory also: the summe is, that these superstitious and impious things being taken away, the word of God so much prevailed in the affections and lives of men to faith and obedience, that many were daily added to the Church of Christ.

V. 21. purposed in the Spirit] That is, by the motion of the Holy Ghost: therefore he yeilded not to his friends importunity, chap. 20. 22. 23.

Macedonia] chap. 16. 9.

Achaia] Chap. 18. 12. Here it is taken for that territory of Greece, which have that name, and not as, chap. 18. 12. for all Greece.

V. 22. Timotheus and Erastus] See Rom 16. 23. 2 Tim. 4. 20. to prepare and expedite those things which concerned the confirmation of those Churches, so that he might in his passage make the more haste to Jerusalem.

in Asia for a season] That is, in Ephesus, which is in Asia.

V. 23. the same time] When Paul was preparing to go from Ephesus, and thought all things well composed, upon a sodain Satan raised an unexpected storm.

about that way] About the way of God. Syr. That is, concerning the Gospel, and truth of God which Paul preached.

V. 24. Silver shrines] ναοὺς ἀργυροῦς. Silver temples, as the Syriack interpreteth, which were made in some such like form.

Concerning the destruction of that same magnificent Idoll Temple of Diana at Ephesus, you may read in the story of Erostratus. Plin. lib. 36. cap. 14. The silver shrins, or medals of silver with the form of their Idol Diana's Temple, imprinted or wrought thereon, Demetrius sold to them who came to Ephesus either of superstition to worship, or curiosity to see the magnificent structure of that temple.

V. 25. Whom he called together] When he saw the esteem of this temple lessen by the light of the Gospel, and so his trade growing dead, he called together all the artificers, whose living depended on that superstition, and made a seditious speech to them.

by this craft we have our wealth] This is all our trade: a dangerous argument to carnal men, whose wealth is the God they adore: such men will easily be perswaded for their private ends, to trouble the peace of a Church or State, and to defend their gains though never so impious with tumult and blood.

V. 26. this Paul hath perswaded, &c.] He truly confesseth the state of the cause: Paul had shewed them that they were no Gods which are made with hands; yet Demetrius wickedly endeavoureth to suppresse that truth: this blindnesse putteth him and his fellows precipitately on to violent tumults.

V. 27. not onely our craft] This our manufacture our making medals, is in danger to be reproved as impious and unprofitable.

Lut also the temple] It is a rare impiety of the vulgar which borroweth no pretence from religion to countenance it self withall: and medling with Religion without some private interests, is as rare in carnal men, if Pauls preaching had nothing hindered Demetrius and his fellows profits, he would hardly have stirred out of doores about it.

whom all Asia and the world worshippeth] To the argument of profit, and pretended Religion, he added another reason, from the magnificence of the Temple, and greatnesse of their Idol Diana; now he inforces another leading motive, from universality, and consent of worshippers.

V. 28. They were full of wrath] This argument of profit, worketh strongly on worldly mens affections: therefore now guided by passion and hearing the cause of the impaire and decay of their trade; they never examine the truth and effects of the Gospel, but put it to popularity, and tumultuous out-cries.

great is Diana of the Ephesians] They feigned Diana to be Jupiters daughter, and their tutelary goddesse, in this fantastick opinion, they cry up her imaginary greatnesse, and their supposed interest, and thereby unanimously and publickly profess themselves defenders of that their superstition, with their uttermost power.

V. 29. the whole city was filled] Such unconsiderable sparks fomented by the breath of an inconstant vulgar oft-times break out into outragious flames; when yet the cause of the impious tumult, is rumour of people ignorant of what they do, and desire of confusion: see Numb. 26. 1. 2 Sam. 15. 6. 11. 13.

Gaius and Aristarchus] See on Rom. 16. 23. Colos. 4. 10. herein they bewray their diffidence as to the truth and justice of their cause, who durst not put it to the test of any principles of truth or good reason, but used violence, and injurious treating of the servants of Christ, dragging them into the theatre; without any legal examination of the cause.

the theatre] A publick place, to which the custom was to resort in any trouble, or businesse about the common-wealth.

V. 30. suffered him not] This was their care of his safety, who better knew the disposition of that people, it is an example to hearers, to love and preserve their Ministers. See chap. 17. 10.

V. 31. Chief of Asia] Ασιαρχῶν. Syr. primores Asiæ: this was Gods providence over Paul, to stirre up some chief men in this so great a danger to countenance and favour him, these send to him to desire him, not to venture himself to an enraged multitude.

V. 32. the assembly was confused] This company is here called ἐκκλησία: the Syr. giveth it well, turba quærent in theatro; the multitude of the Ephesians now assembled in the theatre: this convention was very confused, some crying one thing, and some another.

the more part knew not wherefore] The people like great waters are easily enraged, but seldome well enformed, why: false rumours fill their ears, and ungoverned passion their hearts with sodain and vehement desire of some new unconsidered undertakings; the end whereof they neither prudently foresee, nor cautiously examine.

V. 33. the Jewes putting him forward] It seemeth that the heathens of Ephesus were equally enraged against the Jewes and Christians; and that the Jewes put him on, to justifie their nation and religion, that they might cast all the occasion of this discontent and tumult, on the Christians.

beckened with, &c.] See on chap. 12. 17. Gre. κατασείσας τῇ χειρὶ, shaking his hand, by which they that spake in publick seemed to desire silence, that they might be heard; according to which the vulgar, Vatablus, &c. give it, manu silentio postulato, having required silence by his hand.

V. 34. That he was a Jew] They knew that the Jewes worshipped not their Idol, therefore would not hear him.

all with one voyce] So many wicked men can Satan unite in mischief: consent and unanimity of multitudes is no universal and certain mark of truth.

Cryed out] The word here used is of Κράζω, to yaull, or cry out, κράζειν or κεκράγειν, is spoken of Crowes who in great flocks cry altogether, hence is this expression accommodated to the disturbed multitude.

V. 35. what man is there that knoweth not] To appease this tumult, he taketh it for granted, that their religion was so publickly known to the world, that there need no tumult or out-cries to profesſe the same: probably he understood Demetrius malice, and hypocrisie, in that under pretence of zeale to their religion, he had abused the whole city, by his stirring up this tumult, all being but to maintain the gain of his self and fellow artificers: this fore, which most of the people knew not, he in his way prudently dissembled, magnifying with them the feigned god which they worshipped, that he might thereby attain his purpose, which was to appease the present tumult. This speech of the Town-Clerk favoureth only of carnal wisdom, wherever was pretended here contributeth no patronage to true religion.

a worshipper of, &c.] νεωκόρος, is that which the Latines called adituus, the Temple keeper. He that hath charge of the Church. It is interpreted by Suidas, ὁ τὸν ναὸν κοσμῶν καὶ ὑφαίνων, one that adorneth and prepareth the Temple. His meaning is, that Ephesus was to estabilished in their Religion and worship of Diana their supposed tutelary goddesse, that there was no such cause of fear as Demetrius suggested, that they should be perswaded to forsake their religion for any other.

which fell down from Jupiter] Which defended from Heaven, the Syriac hath it. Concerning Canetias the maker of this Idol, see Plin. l. 16. c. 40. But their covetous Priests perswaded them, that it came down, or was sent down from Heaven; the like fictions had other Heathens concerning the Palladium of Troy, and the Ancile of Rome, concerning this Ephesian Idol you may see more, said Διονύσιος.

V. 36. these things cannot be spoken against] Suidas saith, ἀντιρρήτων (the word here used) is ἀπόλογον μὴ ἔχειν, that which admitteth no contradiction; a certain and doubtless thing So pronounceth he concerning their vain superstition, grounded on lying Fables, impious prescription, and rash consent of multitudes; whereas it is neither in time, multitude, or power of Men, to make falsehood truth.

ye ought to be quiet] Or appeased.

V. 37. are neither robbers of Churches, &c.] That said he truely (would we could say as much of our Impropriators) but though he thus said to appease the tumult, yet the Doctrine which Paul preached, is unconsistent with Idols.

V. 38. the Law is open] Or the Court-dayes are kept. The Law is the best appeaser of tumults; and Justice the securest Bond of Peace, the Nerves and Sinewes of all Commonwealths, without which the people must needs perish, if by no other means in self-destruction: it is that fame, fallendo combinans, without which, all bodies compounded, end in present dissolution.

deputies] That is, Judges appointed to determine personall controversies.

V. 39. in a lawfull assembly] Or ordinary Courts, or course of Justice (the sacred Patron of right and propriety) not in unlawfull tumults.

V. 40. in danger to be called in question for, &c.] Being under the Roman state, the City was in danger to be fined or otherwayes punished, for that causeleſes uproar, the Romane Law was, that all factious and seditious persons under their government should lose their liberties, and Roman freedoms, so that this sober man blamed Demetrius and his fellows for troubling the people.

V. 41. he dismissed the Assembly] Perswading them every man peaceably to repair home to his own house. So God used the carnal wisedome and eloquence of this Heathen to the preservation of his servants. This example is not unworthy of prudent Christians in authority: to estabiish Law, and Justice (without which no society of man can flourish, or indeed subsist) to preserve publick Peace, and to appease all popular and unlawfull out-rages.

CHAP. XX.

Verse 1. And embraced them] The Greeke word signifieth also to salute, (1 Cor. 16. 19, &c.) with wishes of Happinesse, So Suidas saith, ἀσπαμοὶ, ἢ εὐχὴ, &c. it is most likely that thus they tooke leave, praying for each others prosperity.

dayes of unleavened bread] That is (seven dayes of) the Passover, wherein no leaven might be eaten, or found in their houses, Exodus 12. 19. In these dayes, He would not set forth to travel, probably that he might not give offence to the weak Jews: not that he might observe the now-antiquated Ceremony of this Feast, but that he might herein meet with occasion of propagating the Gospel, by instructing them concerning the fulfilling and abrogation of the Law by Christ, which they did not yet sufficiently understand.

V. 7. first day of the weeke] That is, the Lords Day, 1 Corinthians. 16. 2 Revelations 1. 10. vulgarly called Sunday: on this day Christians used to have their solemne Assemblies, for publicke Prayer, Preaching, and Administration of the Lords Supper.

V. 11. untill break of day] This was upon an extraordinary occasion, he being straitned in time upon his departure thence, and zealous of their Edification and Confirmation in the Faith: A singular example of Paul his unwearied diligence, and his Auditories vigilancy, patience and willingnesse to heare the Word: It will once rise in judgement to condemne negligent speakers, and drouzy, secure, and impatient hearers of these times, who might deservedly heare, that which Christ once said to his infirme Disciples, Matthew, 26.

40. What could you not watch with me one houre?

V. 12. were not a little comforted] As it much afflicted them, that the preaching, which brought life and salvation to all believers, should be an occasion of death to the young man; so were they exceeding glad of his recovery, as for the young mans sake, so specially, for their owne confirmation by this miracle.

V. 35. it is more bleſſed to give] It is likely this was ſpoken by Christ, and it may alſo be gathered out of the Scriptures, though it be not expreſly written.

V. 36. he kneeled down] Though the heart and inward affection in Prayer, be the chief thing which God looketh on, yet is be the God of the Body which he redeemed, as well as the Soul, (1 Corinthians 6. 20.) therefore ſuch reverend geſture, as kneeling, liſting up the hands, &c. have theſe excellent uſes. Firſt hereby we exerciſe Body and Soul in Gods ſervice. Secondly, They ſtir up our own devotion and others, where they are preſent. Thirdly, thus we teſtifie the performance of our duty to God before men : as liſting up the hands is a ſigne of confidence to be heard, ſo is the bending of our knees of humility,which two are the wings of faithful Prayer. See Epheſ. 3.4. Acts 21. 5.

V. 37. all wept ſore] as thoſe who dearly love, uſe to doe at parting.

V. 38. ſorrowing moſt of all, &c.] In conſideration of the loſſe, which their ſelves, and all Aſia ſhould have of him.

they accompanied him unto the ſhip] As long as they could they would enjoy him ; and as far as they could looke after him. Thus are we pulled one from another here : we part weeping, but ſhall at laſt come together again with joy, never more to part.

CHAP. XXI.

Verſe 1. After we were gotten from them] ἀποσπασθέντας ἀπ' αὐτῶν, pulled from them, as they who part unwillingly, or are drawn away by force or neceſſity : ſo the Greek word ἀποσπάω, abſtrabo, ſo σπάω, trabo ſignifieth. See Luke 22. 41. ἀποσπάσθη ἀπ' αὐτῶν——— avulſus fuit abiit , he was drawn, or pulled from them.

and had launched] Or put from the ſhore.

Chos] Or Cea, and Iſland in the Ægean ſea, one of the Cyclades mentioned, Plin. l.6.c.34.

Rhodes] Another Iſland in the Lycian ſea, near the Continent of Aſia ; the moſt noble of all the Cyclades, ſaith Jerome de loc. Hebr. Alſ. See Atlas min. Gerard. Mercator. Amſterodam. 1634 pag.605

Patara] A City of Lycia, a Province in Aſia Jerome,ibid.

V. 2. Phenicia] Chapter 11, 19. See Plin. lib. 36.cap. 26. init.

V. 3. at Tyre] Which was the Metropolis of Phenicia.

V. 4. that he ſhould not goe up] That is, they propheſied of his danger, if he went up ; that they did by the Spirit of Propheſie ; but through humane affection they diſſwaded him from going, ſo this croſſeth not that which is ſaid, Chapter, 20.22.

V. 5. they all brought us on our way] This was their love to him that taught them, and a good Teſtimony of their ſincerity, who thus honoured him whom the World generally contemned and perſecuted. See Galathians, 4. 14, 2 Timothy, 1.15.

we kneeled down on the ſhore] See c.20.36. c. 7. 60. Probably, they prayed, as for the happy ſucceſs of the Goſpel to Gods glory, the encreaſe of the Church, and the Kingdome of Christ, and thoſe things which concerned their bodies and ſouls in generall; ſo for Paul and thoſe with him,and their good voyage in particular.

V. 6. they returned home again] Every one to his own affairs and calling.

V. 7. Ptolomais] A Sea-town of Phenicia. See Plin.lib. 5. cap. 5. & lib.36. cap. 26. init. The Syriac calleth it עכו (ſee not.Tremel.) So Judges 1.31. עכו Ptolomais. Plin.lib. 5. cap. 19. ſaith it was in time paſt called Acc. Here the Greeke uſeth the latter name, and the Syriac retaineth the more ancient.

V. 8. we that were of Pauls company] See Capter, 13.13. Cæſarea] Chap.18. 22.

of Philip. the Evangeliſt] or who preached the Goſpel. This office ſeemeth to have been between an Apoſtle and a Paſtor, Epheſ.4.11.c.8.12.

which was one of the ſeven] c. 6. 5.

V. 9. which did Propheſie] That is, by the inſtinct of Spirit , tell things to come, not ſpeake in the Church, as Teachers, that is prohibited, 1 Corinthians, 14. 34. 1 Timothy, 2. 12.

V. 10. named Agabus] See c. 11. 28.

V. 11. binde the man that weeth thie girdle] The effect ſee verſe 33. This ſaid he, not ſo much for Pauls ſake,as for others. Paul was not ignorant that bonds and afflictions abode him, c. 20. 23. but hereby his conſtancy to teſtifie the truth of Christ appeared , to the great confirmation of the believers. In taking Pauls girdle he imitated the Prophets, who uſed to repreſent that which they foretold , by certain ſignes. See Iſaia, 20. 2. Jer.27.2.Ezekiel 12.3. Jeremia.32.28.which manner the falſe Prophets alſo took up. 1 Kings 22. 11. Jer.28. 10, 11. In that he alledgeth the dictate of Gods Spirit, it ſheweth that the ſufferings of Gods children, are neither fortuitous, nor in the power of perſecutors , but in Gods providence. See John 19. 11.

V. 12. beſought him not to goe]Out of their affection to him, and grief to loſe ſo excellent a light, they importune him with teares,to forbear going to Jeruſalem,

V. 13. to

V. 13. to break mine heart] Meaning that it was bitterneſs of heart to him, to ſee them afflicted with grief for him , who was reſolved , come life , come death, to be obedient to the guidance of Gods holy ſpirit.

v.14. we ceaſed, ſaying, the will of the Lord,&c.] When they ſaw he would not be perſwaded , they committed him to God who was able to preſerve him : this reſolution is the onely means to bridle extravagant affections , when we can patiently ſubmit our ſelves, our deſires, and counſels to the will of God, in aſſurance of his mercy, who is able to make all things work together for good, to them that love him, Rom. 8. See Matt.26.39.42.

V. 15. took up our carriages, and went, &c.] ἀποσκευασάμενοι, putting up our carriages and neceſſaries. That which the Latines gave by convaſa, or colligo neceſſaria ad iter, the Greeks expreſſed by σκευάζομαι, in the active ſignification ; and ἀποσκευάζω ——— vaſa aufero. Suidas interpreteth ἀποσκευή ——— ἢ τῶν ὁπωσδήποτε χρειῶν ——— carriage of neceſſaries for a voyage. So the Syriac here giveth it prepared our ſelves, putting all neceſſaries to carry with them. It ſheweth Pauls admirable conſtancy, thus meeting with his foreſeen afflictions, for the reſtimony of the Goſpel ; and that they who had diſſwaded him from going up, did not therein ſo much regard their own intereſt as the Churches loſſe ; for they would alſo ſhare with him, ſeeing he would needs goe. True Faith is not daunted by the Croſſe , but reſolutely followes Gods calling.

V. 16. with whom we ſhould lodge] Meaning at Jeruſalem, where now at the great ſolemnity of the feaſt of Pentecoſt lodgings uſed to be very ſcarce.

V. 17. received us gladly] Chearfully and lovingly entertained us ; for albeit they had heard many reports concerning him,which the enemies had in jurioufly caſt forth to cauſe the brethren to ſuſpect and avoid him,yet would they not for ſuch rumours conmdemne him, or exclude him from their ſocietie.

V. 18. with us unto James] Chapter, 15. 13. It ſeemeth he was affigned to ſtay at Jeruſalem , whereunto many Believers reſorting , it was neceſſary, that one of the Apoſtles ſhould reſide there, to adviſe thoſe Chriſtians , who upon any emergent Controverſies , ſhould repaire thither ; in which Caſe, it ſeemeth the Elders were called together.

V. 19. what things God had wrought] Which he did not in oſtentation of his own excellency, who elſewhere ſaith he was the leaſt of the Apoſtles, 1 Cor. 15. 9. but to ſet out the goodneſſe of God in his reception of the Gentiles,and mercy ſhewed divers wayes to them.

V. 20. Thouſands] μυριάδες, myriades, or ten thouſands, He meaneth a great number, He deſineth it not.

all zealous of the Law] He meaneth the major part of them were zealous (though without knowledge Romans, 10. 2. Gal.1.14) they were tenacious of legal Ceremonies, in which they had been bred.

V. 21. to forſake Moſes] which was an odious and falſe aſperſion : for the Doctrine of the Goſpel which Paul preached, was according to Moſes teſtimony of Chriſt : onely he taught, how we muſt paſs from ſhadowes and repreſentations to the ſubſtance which was in Chriſt. the end of the Law, (ſee Gal. 5.1.) and how they muſt uſe all thoſe things indifferently in wiſedome and charity, as knowing our freedome in Chriſt. See Chapter,16.; and 18.18.,Gal.2. 3. Romans 14. 13.15.19.21. 1 Cor.8.13.

V. 22. the multitude muſt needs come together] That is, it will be known that thou art here, and the unbelievers will perſecute thee, as an enemy to their Law.

V. 23. we have foure men] Faithfull brethren, who had a Vow, as Chapter, 18.18. Thus would they make preſent uſe of theſe mens legall Obligations, in the knowledge of Chriſtian liberty, for the advancement of the Goſpel ; and indeed, the end of this Ceremony was thankſgiving, which is nothing contrary to Chriſtian Religion, but well agreeing with it.

V. 24. them take] The meaning is, for as much as thou diſt ſhear thy head at Cenchrea, Chap. 18. 18. according to thy vow of a Nazarite, ſhew (now thou are at Jeruſalem) the accompliſhment thereof, by joyning in the charge with theſe four men, offering according to the Law on thar behalfe, by which it may appear that thou art not a deſpiſer of the Law of Moſes.

ſhave their heads] Numb. 6.18, Chap. 18. 18. which (ſaith a learned Authour) the Hebrewes call, the ſhaving of purity , (or for cleanneſſe) ——— this ſhaving was in thankfulneſſe, to ſignifie that he had the perfection of his Nazaritheſhip from God;and therefore burned his hair under his ſacrifice——to ſignifie the end of his vow performed acceptable to God in Chriſt, and preſented unto him by the Spirit, which is like unto fire, Matt. 3. 11.

V. 25. we have written] Chapter, 15. 20. as if they had ſaid, as concerning the Gentiles, they are to obſerve onely the morall Law, not the Ceremonial, concerning the Jewes, we are ſo farre indulgent, as we may by any means bring them to Chriſt, in whom they ſhall better underſtand their liberty, and learn to leave off theſe beggarly and antiquated rudiments.

V. 26. then Paul tooke the men] Obtemperating to the advice of James, and the reſt of the brethren, and to ſhew publickly that he was no enemy of the Law.

to ſignifie the accompliſhment] The day on which the vow of a Nazarite did end, he was by the Law to offer certain ſacrifices, Numb. 6.13,and therefore it was neceſſary to acquaint the Prieſt herewith.

V. 27. ſeven dayes were ended] That is, a week after that Paul had performed this Ceremony : or the laſt of the ſeven weeks.

the Jewes which were of Aſia] Who dwelling in Aſia, had former conteſts with him there : theſe blood-hounds never give over their chaſe, ſo long as they could purſue him.

V. 28. againſt the People and the Law] Thus falſly do they calumniate him, who indeed taught them the true end and uſe of the Law.

Greeks alſo into the Temple] Meaning, that he had brought the uncircumciſed beyond the court of the Gentiles, which was death to do.

V. 29. Trophimus an Epheſian] See Chap. 20 4.

and they ſuppoſed] The wicked are full of jealouſie, and therefore conclude , that muſt bee ſo, which they once dream of.

V. 30. the City was moved] So eaſily are multitudes engaged in facted quarrels.

V. 31. chief Captain] See on John 18. 12. The Romane Tribune, who was in the nature of a Colonel, and had Centurions, or Captains of hundreds in his regiment, he had the command of the ſouldiers, and therefore the addreſſe was made to him in this tumult:they purpoſed to kill Paul ; and draging him out of the Temple,forthwith the doors were ſhut, leſt they ſhould defile the Temple with blood ; they thought it great impietie to ſtain the pavements of the Temple, but none to defile their ſouls with the guilt of blood:but God provided a timely reſcue.

V. 32. leſt beating of Paul] For feare of the Roman power which came to keep peace: for the Iewes had not power of life and death permitted them by the Romans: the feare of men awed theſe perſecutors, whom neither feare of God, reſpect of religion, reverence of the Temple, nor regard of man could reſtrain ; which ſufficiently demonſtrateth that malice, not zeal ſet them on to theſe outrages.

V. 33. to be bound with two chains]Poſſibly he took him for the Author of this tumult. See Chap. 23. 27. here appeareth Gods providence reſcuing Paul by his hands who had no ſuch intention.

and what he had done] However he bound him, yet had he ſo much juſtice, as not to condemn him unheard:poſſibly, he neither being acquainted with Paul, nor the cauſe of the tumult ; and ſeeing the people ſo generally violent againſt him, might ſuſpect him to be ſome great maleſactor or dangerous perſon ; therefore he commanded him to be bound, that he might appeaſe the preſent rage of the multitude, who ſeeing him ſo bound, might ſuppoſe that he was referved to ſome capitall puniſhment.

V. 34. could not know the certainty] In ſeditious tumults nothing is certainly underſtood,where all is acted by affection, not by reaſon;violence, not equity.

into the Caſtle] Which joyned to the Temple, that he might ſhut out the multitude,and underſtand the truth of the matter.

V. 35. he was born of the ſouldiers] Whether by the throng,the people preſſing on, or taken up by the ſouldiers, to ſecure him from their fury, is not expreſſed ; the Syriac ſeemeth to underſtand this latter : there was little favour intended him by them,who reſerved him (as probably they conceived) to puniſhment.

V. 36. away with him] See Luke 23. 18. John 19. 15. ἆρον αὐτόν, that is, kill him : ſo Budæus among other ſignifications interpreteth ἆρω, de medio tollo. So they cried againſt Chriſt.

V. 37. may I ſpeake, &c.] εἰ ἔξεστί μοι, if it be lawfull; It is a Greek manner of ſpeaking, to crave leave to ſpeak, or act : he deſireth liberty to anſwer for himſelf, that being cleared, he might ſuffer no ſcandall to reſt upon Gods Word and Truth, which he preached ; and alſo to ſhew his invincible zea for the ſalvation of his kinſ-men according to the fleſh : amidſt theſe hideous ſtorms, their raging malice againſt his life ; in chains, clamours and votes preſently to murder him among armed troops apprehending him, he taketh care for their edification and ſalvation, being deſirous to ſpeak that he might clear his innocency,and ſatisfie them.

V. 38.

V. 38. art not thou that Egyptian Specified, chap. 5. 36. of whom Josephus antiq. lib. 20. cap. 11. & de bel. Iud. lib. 2. cap. 13. he enquireth of an Egyptian who in Tiberius Cæsars reign, made an insurrection, and after many of his followers were slain, escaped away.

that were murderers] σικαρίων, this was a word borrowed from the Latines, signifying men ready to murder; it seems they were so named of a short weapon which they did wear, called sica, a puniard, skein, pocket dagger, or stellato, of the Chaldee word סכין Jachin, a knife, or the Hebr. שכן sachan, Prov. 23. 2. Gr. μαχαιρα, thy knife; Gen. 22. 10. Abraham took τὴν μάχαιραν, Chald. סכינא his knife. See of these Joseph. Ant. Iud. lib. 20.

V. 39. of Tarsus] Chap. 9. 32. See Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 11. it was the Metropolis of Cilicia: it is now called Hama, G. Mercat. Atl. min. Asia min.

V. 40. beckned with the hand] See Chap. 12. 17. and 13. 16. and 19. 33.

in the Hebrew tongue] Whether in the pure Hebrew tongue (in use before their captivity, but in and before Christs time becoming a dead tongue) or in the Syriack, it is not certain: for that was called the Hebrew, both in respect of the derivation thereof from the Hebrew, and for as much as it was then the mother tongue of them who were Hebrews.

CHAP. XXII.

Verse 1. BRethren and Fathers] Thus he insinuateth to gain attention, wherein he respecteth the Honour which God had given them, not what they now deserved.

V. in the Hebrew &c.] Chap. 21. 40.

they kept the more silence] Our mother Tongue most affecteth us; therefore, he that could speake all Tongues, used his own.

V. 3. at the feet of Gamaliel] Meaning that he was a continual and diligent hearer of that grave Doctor of the Law, Gamaliel, he alludeth to the posture of teachers standing in high places, and auditors sitting below them. See Deut. 33. 3. Luke 10. 39.

according to the perfect manner] Syr. perfectly taught in the Law of the fathers: which relateth not to the Ceremonial law, as if he had attributed perfection to that which made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did. See Heb. 7. 11. 19. it relateth to Pauls instruction, as if he had said, I was perfectly taught.

zealous towards God] I did as seriously and heartily endeavour to serve God, as any of you now do in that way. Se Philip. 3. 6.

V. 4. I persecuted] See chap. 9. 1. &c. 1 Tim. 1. 13. &c. I was as violent against all Christians, as you now are.

V. 5. as also the high priest, &c.] The things which I speak are well known to the high priest himself, and all the chief of the Sanhedrim.

unto the brethren] Of the Synagogue of the Jewes at Damascus.

to be punished] To be beaten or imprisoned. See on chapter 9. 2.

V. 6. come nigh unto Damascus] See this whole passage, chap. 6, 1, 2, &c.

V. 9. they heard not the voyce] Chap. 9. 7. it is said they heard, ἤκουσαν, a voyce: that is the voyce of Saul speaking to one whom they saw not; they heard not the voyce of Christ: some think they heard onely a confused sound (that they might perceive it was from heaven) as the people did, John 12. 29. when some said it thundred, some said an Angel spake, but understood not what was said.

V. 10. what shall I do] Chap. 9. 6.

V. 11. for the glory of that light] Which strook him blinde for a time. He that had brought servants and others to assist him in carrying away the servants of Christ from Damascus bound to Jerusalem, is fain to use their help in leading him blinde into Damascus: thus God made him an example both of his justice, punishing him, and of his mercy, converting him.

V. 12. a devout man &c.] εὐσεβὴς, a pious or just man according to the Law: as all the Jews which knew him could testifie.

according to the Law] Which he inferreth to shew them that the gospiel was not contrary to, nor destructive of the law, but only the accomplishment thereof: for, a man zealous of, and learned in the law, by Gods appointment, perswaded him to embrace the gospel. Thus he speaketh of Ananias, to distinguish him who was a believing Jew, from a profelyte or pious Gentile.

V. 13. came unto me] See Chap. 9. 17.

V. 14. the God of our fathers, &c.] No words sounded so well in the eares of a Jew, as these of which that nation often boasted. See John 8. 41. but hereby Paul proveth his purpose; that he was no Apostate from the God of Abraham, or his holy worship; but he still adored, and served the same God, as he had learned in the Law, under whose shadowes was veiled all that which more clearly shined in the Gospel.

hath chosen thee] προεχειρίσατο σε, hath designed or appointed thee, as chap. 26. 16. אקיימך Syr. akimach, constituite, ordained and made thee ready to his hand; προέχεσθαι, that is saith Suidas, ὁ ἕτοιμος, one fitted, furnished, and prepared to some action.

and see that just one] That is Christ, whom all the Patriarcks, Prophets, and believers, before his coming desired to see: Mat. 13. 17. Luke 2. 29. See 1 Cor. 9. 1. and 15. 8. he saw Christ, either in some supernatural gifts, a rapt into heaven, or some apprehensible representation, as chap. 7. 55.

V. 15. thou shalt be a witnesse] God doth not fit men with extraordinary knowledge for their own sakes onely, but as finally to his own glory, so in that which is subordinate thereto, for others good: as trees bear not fruit for themselves, fountains run not for themselves, the sun shineth not for himself, but for others good: that good is best which is most communicable. You who have attained this honour of Christs disciples (Luke 24. 48. Acts 1. 8. John 1. 7.) live not to your selves, but to the testimony of Gods truth, and others good, by communicating to them that which you have heard and seen of Christ.

what thou hast seen] That is, not only this precedent apparition, but principally in that vision described, 2 Cor. 12. 2. These things he specifieth, not that his commission should be, onely to preach thus much and no more than now he heard and saw, but because he might hereby gain belief to those things which should be revealed to him, and which he should preach concerning the mysteries of salvation by Christ. in that he might truly avow his calling to that change by Christ, and that he was an ear-witnesse and an eye-witnesse, of these things: therefore not only now, but also again before King Agrippa, chap. 26. 12. &c. and so in his Epistle, 1 Cor. 9. 1. 1 Cor. 15. 8. he mentioneth the same,

V. 16. why tarryest thou?] These were Ananias words to Saul, exhorting him to be baptized: we may suppose that he did further instruct him in the doctrine of the Gospel, by larger discourses, which Luke for brevity sake here omitteth.

wash away thy sinnes] Chap. 2. 38. by the Spirit of God giving the inward effect of baptisme by the application of the blood and merits of Christ, by purifying of thy soul by faith, regeneration, and newnesse of life. This sheweth the effect of baptisme; not that the water hath this power, but the blood of Christ thereby represented, 1 John 1. 7. yet we must know, that God proposeth not bare and fallacious signes in the Sacraments, but accompanieth his ordinance with the power of the holy Ghost, making them effectuall for that which he promiseth and proposeth therein, which is remission of sins.

V. 17. I was in a trance] The circumstances of the time, place, and extasie, shew that God appeared to him, and assigned him to his office: whether this was that rapt, 2 Cor. 12. 4. it is uncertain.

V. 18. and saw him] Saw him in that trance, verse 17. the appearance of the Lord so speaking to me.

V. 19. Lord they know that I am imprisoned] This intimateth Pauls unwillingnesse to have preached to the Gentiles, and the condition of carnall reason, ever opposing the motions of Gods Spirit, by objecting vain excuses against his commands. See Exod. 3. 11. and 4. 10. Acts 10. 14. Jonah 4. 2 Some interpret this, (they know) as relating to the Jewes; and that Paul here intimated his hope rather of doing good at Jerusalem, where they knew how zealous he had been of the law, than of going to the Gentiles: which being admitted there appeareth no reason, but that we may say, that others out of Jerusalem, yea and the Gentiles also might heare these things of him; and that Paul respected that which God had before said to Ananias concerning him, chap. 9. 15. he is a chosen vessell unto me, to beare my name before the Gentiles, &c. which doubtlesse Ananias would not conceale from him: so that he may here intimate an improbability of his reception among the Gentiles, who would also be afraid of him, as he was chap. 9. 13. all concludeth his declining his mission to the Gentiles, and Gods expresse command for the same.

V. 20. and when the blood of thy Martyr Stephen] Martyr is a Greek word signifying a witnesse: and is in a peculiar manner used to import him, who in his constant profession, in grievous punishment, or violent death, giveth testimony to the truth of the Gospel.

V. 21. depart

V. 21. depart, for I will send thee hence, &c.] God presid with own command, which, against all vain pretences of man to the contrary, must be obeyed: He doth not here promise successe among the Gentiles, but expressly sendeth him to them; because he will have us learn to lay by all our owne counsels, and simply and readily obey him in his commands.

V. 22. and then lift up their voyces, &c.] They could not endure to hear of his going to the Gentiles, therefore here they interrupt him with tumultuous clamours: so proud a confidence had they of themselves, as that they were impatient that God should bestow his own favours upon any but themselves, and yet themselves refused them: we shall not be grieved to have sinners partners with us in repentance; and mercy, if we belong to Christ, who for the redemption of his, refused not to be crucified between theeves and malefactors.

V. 23. cast off their clothes] To prepare themselves to doe violence.

threw dust in the air] This is a description of a seditious, and enraged multitude.

V. 24. by scourging] To compell him to confesse something

V. 25. A Roman] That is, which is a free man of Rome; not there borne, but by priviledge of that City where he was borne, that is, Tarsus (Chapter 16. 37.) where was a Roman colony.

V. 26. When the Centurion heard it] He being doubtfull what to doe herein, acquainteth his Colonel: that he might receive further order from him. (See on John 18. 12.) the reason why they would either so soon believe Paul, or did so much startle at the naming of the Roman priviledge, was because it was death for any man to plead it falsely, and very criminal for any in publick authority to violate it.

V. 27. Art thou a Roman?] S. Luke setteth down but the abridgement of the things: so that it is likely that Paul made it sufficiently appear to him, that he was thus priviledged, before he loosed him.

V. 28 I was free-born] The Colonel saith, he purchased πολλοῦ κεφαλαίου, it is an Hebraisme: they put ראש rosh, an head, instead of summe, as Exodus 30. 12. Numb. 4. 2. take ראש to. to. κεφάλαιον, the summe: So Sudeus theweth that among other things, κεφάλαιον signifieth a summe of money: the Syriack בכסף סגי bechesfo saggio. with much silver, much money; he saith, he bought τὴν πολιτείαν, that is, jus civitatis, the freedom of the City (of Rome) which Paul had freely. bein a native of Tarsus; for it was the Roman custome to priviledge some Cities who had well deserved of them in the wars or other weighty affairs assisting them.

V. 29. examined him] Or tortured him; they who were appointed to examine him by tormenting him to make him confesse something against himself.

chief captain also was afraid] In respect of the severe punishments appointed to any that did abuse a free-man of Rome, he feared being called in question for this businesse.

V. 30. would have known the certainty] Being ignorant of the Jewish Religion, he referreth him to their council, but probably he would gladly have found some fault in Paul worthy of bonds, that he might have excused his own fault in binding and scourging him.

brought Paul down] From the Castle, verse 24.

CHAP. XXIII.

Verse 1. IN all good conscience] 2 Tim. 1. 3 this said he to meet with their calumnies who accused him of profanation: not that he was free from all sin, (See Rom 7. 23.) but to shew that they injuriously accused him of contempt of Gods Law, or profanation of the Temple.

V. 2. the high Priest] So the Surrogates were also called. See on Luke 3. 2. and possibly this was no more: He commanded him to be smitten, because he conceived that Pauls profession of good conscience obliquely taxed his judges, and accusers as if they had evil consciences, in as much as they persecuted him.

V. 3. thou whited wall] False Hypocrite. See Ezek. 13. 10. Matt. 23. 27.

contrary to the Law] Levit. 19. 35. Deut. 25. 1, 2. beareth thou the person of a Judge pretending to do justice, and openly transgressest the Law, by injuring the innocent, and uncondemned? God will once revenge this.

V. 4 Revilest thou Gods High Priest] These Parasites, to ingratiate with Ananias, seem zealous of his Honour, taxing Pauls just reproof, he cannot or will not understand the High Priests injustice and Hypocrisie; this they dissemble, and censure Pauls just liberty of speaking, as he was more than a private man, but see not the unjust liberty which the Priest took to injure the Apostle.

V. 5. I wist not brethren] I knew him not to be a lawfull High Priest, who thus violateth the Law; and indeed he was but an usurper. See Josephus antiq. l. 20. cap. 3 5. Chr. Heinr. Theat. Hist. Anno Christi 46. some think that Paul having now of long time been a stranger at Jerusalem, did not know the High priest or Surrogate to be such; others thinke he spake ironically; as if he had said, I could not perceive by this deportment that he was an High-Priest: sure it is that he did but justly reprove the tyranny of an unjust Judge.

thou shalt not speak evil] Exod. 22. 28.

V. 6. I am a Pharisee] Phil. 3. 5. Which he spake not to get favour of the Pharisees, or to approve all their traditions, but out of a prudent policy to set division among them, for his better escape.

of the hope, &c.] Chap. 24. 21. Not but that there were more points in question, but because for this chiefly the Sadduces hated and persecuted him.

V. 7. there arose a dissention, &c.] God by dividing these enemies, provided for Pauls safety: they differing in their tenets, would not agree to condemn him, as otherwise they intended; the unity and conspiracy of the wicked, cannot be lasting: for God infatuateth their counsels: and divideth them, that they may not be so mischievous as thy desire, and otherwise would be.

V. 8. for the Sadduces] Matt. 22. 23. Mark 12. 18 Seeing the writings of Moses which they received, so expressly speak of Angels it is probable that they did not absolutely deny them, but possibly might think them to be but a transitory apparition, created of God, onely to signifie his pleasure to men; or to execute some commands, and so to dissolve and cease again: whereas the Pharisees acknowledge both, that is, the resurrection from the dead, and the real subsistence of Angels and Spirits, in the state of separation.

V. 9. but if a Spirit, or, &c.] If he have had any divine or extraordinary revelation.

V. 10. when there arose great dissention] When they grew hot in their conteft, and possibly were falling from words to blows; then the Captain rescued Paul, to prevent violence and more tumult.

V. 11. the Lord stood by him] In a vision to comfort and encourage him.

V. 12. banded togeither] ποιησάντες συσσυρμὸν making a combination. So Chapter 19. 40. who whereby we may give account τῆς συσσυρμοῦ ταύτης of this concourse, Hujus conspirationis coitionis, Budæus. He sheweth that it cometh from the word which signifieth, agmen cogere, & factionem ciere, to gather a company together, and stir up a faction against some others. So Suidas interpreteth συσσυρμὸν, ἡ ὁμόνοια, καὶ ἡ ἐπὶ κακῷ συμφωνία, a consent and agreement, to doe some mischiefe.

under a curse] With an Oath of execration; as withing, that such or such a plague or mischief might befall them. if they did not that which they had combined in, ἀνεθεμάτισαν ἑαυτοὺς devoverunt se divis & exsecrationibus devoverunt. So Eudocia saith, the Apostle calleth ἀνάθεμα, Quasi quorum caput devotum infernis est. See Matthew 26. 74. Romanes 9. 3.

V. 13. more than fourty] This sheweth how great a party Satan hath ever ready to oppose the Gospel, and how prone men are to combine for any mischief.

V. 14. to the chief Priests] Being confident of their assistance, otherwise they might have expected sharp reproof, and discovery of their intended murder, had their Priests been any better than impious murderers their selves: for such are they, who having power, hinder not murder what they can.

we have bound our selves under a great curse] ἀναθέματι ἀνεθεματίσαμεν ——— it is an usuall Hebraism ——— with a curse we have cursed. that is, grievously cursed, or bound our selves with direfull curses; that they would eat nothing until they had killed Paul, was their agreement and condition; the curse was the bond, whereby they obliged themselves: this sheweth their rage and bloody minds, more solicitous for others destruction, than their own safety: had they well considered, they might easily have known that many accidents, which they could not foresee, might hinder their endeavour and frustrate their design.

V. 15. ye with the council] That is, with the consent, or in the name of the Council, whose minds it seems they knew were bent to joyn with them to destroy Paul: the most pernicious impiety loveth the vail of publique authority; and Satan never did more mischief than by gaining Councils to his party.

signifie to the chief captain. that he bring down. &c.] Signifie the cause or end of your requeft, (for they had no power to command the Captain) that ye would enquire something more perfectly, &c. thus they would carry on their design, under pretence of Justice and Religion.

are all ready to kill him] Here appeareth unto how desperate a condition Religion was now come among them, when bloody conspirators durst come to the chief Priests, not onely to acquaint them with a design so mischievous, but also to implore their assistance, therein.

V. 16. when Pauls sisters son heard, &c.] God suffereth the wicked to plot, and to be near the execution, and then defeateth their counsels. There is no wisedeme against God. See Prov. 21.30. Isa.8.10. and 33.9. 10,11. Esther 9.1, &c. Acts 12.6. 1 Sam. 20. 35.

V. 17. called one of the Centurians] That is, as the Syriack interpreteth שרי shaddar, sending he called; he sent to intreat that he might speake with him; and that he would do so much as bring the young man to Lysias, their chiefe Commander. So Verse 18. and prayed me to bring, &c.

V. 18. Paul the prisoner] ὁ δεσμιος, &c. Paul who is bound, for they used to put bonds on prisoners.

V. 19. went with him aside] Supposing he had some secret to impart unto him, as indeed he had; in both these Commanders we have an example of courtesie: in the one readily bringing the young man to be heard; in the other, as readily giving him audience and dispatch: in both of Gods good providence enclining their hearts to the preservation of the Apostle.

V. 20. the Jewes have agreed] That is, some of them, or the chief of them, have conspired; Syriacke, have consulted.

V. 21. but do not thou yield unto them] I beseech thee let them not by any pretences, or perswasions prevail with thee; μὴ πεισθῆις, be not thou perswaded by them: so the word is used, c. 21. 14.

for there lye in wait] Herein he sheweth the conspiracy of the Jews, the ground and cause of his request.

now are they ready. looking for a promise from thee] Expecting what answer thou wilt make them.

V. 22. see thou tell no man] Which charge he might give in respect of his own purpose, lest the matter being revealed the enraged Jewes should attempt some other mischief: or in respect of the safety of the young man, upon whom probably they would turn their malice, because he detected their plot on Paul.

V. 23. called unto him] Knowing the malice of that Nation, and their implacable fury shewed in former actions, he easily believed the young mans relation, and provided accordingly.

and spear-men two hundred] δεξιολαβους such as held and carried javelins or darts in their right hands, and were of lifeguards to Princes or Commanders; δεξιολαβος is stipator, qui alicui latus munit, Jo. Drus. Suidas interpreteth it by παραβολαριος, a keeper or garder of a side. The Syriack here Praphrafeth, qui mittentes jaculantur dextra, or speculatores à dextra, as reading δεξιοβολους, dartmen.

V. 24. and bring him safe to Felix] Lest the Jewes should way-lay and murder him: thus God accomplisheth his Will in the preservation of his servants; many times by their hands, who intend onely their own ends.

V. 25. a letter after this manner] Either in this form, or the Contents thereof were as followeth.

V. 26. sendeth greeting] Wisheth much health and happinesse; or as the Syriac, Peace, So the Greeks used χαιρειν, to greet or salute, as Suidas noteth in the beginning of their Epistles. Some wrote ϑεω προσευχομαι, or ϑεω διδοντι to the same purpose, well to doe, or well to live. This worldly-wise man, adoring the rising Sun, giveth this unworthy Felix, the title of Most excellent Governour; whereas he was indeed, but an obscure fellow thus advanced (by the abused favour of Claudius Cæsar) to great wealth and honour. Paul giveth the same to Festus, c. 26. 25. in order to Gods command for honouring superiours, Prov. 24.21.

V. 27. this man was taken of the Jewes] This he writeth in favour of Paul, who being by priviledge a Romane, was illegally and evilly intreated of the Jewes: God guideth the tongues and pens of unbelievers to the advantage of his.

with an army] That is, a party, or some companies of souldiers, c. 21. 32.

V. 28. and when I would have known the cause] He concealeth what he first did to Paul, and possibly touched in conscience, laboured to make him amends, or at least to free himself from blame and danger, for so using an uncondemned Roman See c. 22. 29.

I brought him forth into their council] Who were to judge concerning matters of Religion, See c. 22.30.

V. 29. to be accused of questions of their Law] Matters concerning the Jewish Religion.

worthy of death or bonds] Nothing but that which was worthy of favour; but he writeth according to the sense of the Romans; as if he had said, nothing by our Laws and imperial constitutions criminal.

V. 30. that the Jewes laid wait, &c.] This probably he writeth as to condemne the Jews tumultuous practises, illegal and mischievous conventions against Pauls life, and the Empires peace; so also to give account of his intention in sending him with such a guard to Felix.

V. 31. brought him by night] To avoid all further insurrections, and attempts, which the Jews would probably have made in Jerusalem.

to Antipatris] A City in the tribe of Manasseh, between Jerusalem and Cesarea, formerly called Capharsarama, or Capharsalama (Adricom. ter. sanct. Manas. 8.) Herod building or repairing it, called it by his father Antipaters name, Jerome de loc. Hebr. Act. See 1 Mac. 7.

V. 32. they left the horsemen to go with him] Probably they were so commanded to do by their Colonel Lysias. And Paul was at that distance from Jerusalem, secure from the present pursuit of his enemies.

V. 33. to Cesarea] See on Matt. 16. 13. and Jer. de loc. heb ad.

V. 34. of what Province he was] By this name, the Romans called some countries by them subdued, and this was a common custome of examination of strangers, to ask, what country-men, or whence they were. See 2 Sam 1. 13. John 19 9. Probably Felix did it, that he might be satisfied whether Paul belonged to his jurisdiction.

Of Cilicia] chap. 6 9

V. 35. when thy Accusers are also come] Lest the Jewes should complain of an undue course of Justice, that they had not audience: These very Heathens knew it was not just to judge, before both parties Complainant and Defendant were lawfully heard: if it be enough to accuse, who shall be innocent? and if it be enough to deny, who would be guilty?

in Herods judgement-hall] Or, Herods Palace, Pretory, or place which he built, or appointed to keep Courts, and hear causes in: a fair prison, if any could be so.

CHAP. XXIV.

Verse 1. Ananias the high Priest] Chapter 23. 2.

descended] From Jerusalem to Cesarea: Mark how industrious and unwearied mischief is; the High-Priest and Elders with Tertullus in pursuance of their malicious designe: from Jerusalem to Cesarea, and thus speedily travel they would spare no pains, nor loose any time: it were happy if men would be thus minded for good.

with the elders] These came to countenance the Jews cause against Paul with shew of great reverence, but indeed; as Ambrose said to Valentinian the Emperour ep. 5. 31. non annorum canicies est laudenda sed morum, it is probable that all these came downe, as to accuse Paul, so principally to prevent their own danger: for understanding that Lysias had sent away Paul, and written Letters concerning the businesse, they might well fear some informations against themselves who had been so tumultuous.

a certain orator] An Advocate, or Lawyer.

V. 2. by thee we enjoy] To gain favour against Paul this flatterer thus begins with applauding Felix, whereas Histories shew, how cruelly and impiously he behaved himself against their Nation.

V. 3. most noble Felix] Felix was of obscure parentage, but Claudius Cæsar promoted him to honours; he had by his diligence suppressed the sedition under Eleazarus: otherwise, he was covetous and a cruell man. See Josephus Ant. Jud. l. 20. c. 11. & de bel. Jud. l. 2. c. 12. See also on Chapter 23.26.

V. 4. that I be not further tedious] He intimateth that he would not long detain him from other his weighty affairs; Greek ἐκκοπτω, which among other things, signifieth to hinder ones course or affairs, (1 Thessalonians 2. 18. Galatians 5. 7. Romans 5. 22.) as here it might have been by a tedious discourse. Syr. ne autem faxigemus te multis: but lest we should weary thee with many words.

V. 5. a pestilent fellow] λοιμὸν, a plague. As the Latines put scelus in the abstract, pro scelerate, wickednesse for a wicked fellow.

sect of the Nazarens] αἱρεσεως, of the heresie: this name they gave the Christians in those dayes, from Jesus of Nazareth, according to which they called him in contempt Jesus of Nazareth, from the City where he was brought up; afterward it was peculiarly attributed to the sect of Herecickes, of which Epiph. her. 29. See on c. 26. 5. See on verse 14. of this Chapter.

a mover of sedition] This aspersion he cast on Paul, probably because he knew how odious sedition was to the Romans, who being conquerors of Judæa, and many other Nations, were very solicitous to hold that which they had gotten with much charge, hazard, and effusion of blood.

V. 6. profane the temple] c. 21.28.

according to our Law] That is, to examine the quality of the offence, which the Romans permitted them to do; but not to execute sentence of death.

V. 7. chief captain Lysias] The Colonel Lysias. This they object as a secret accusation of Lysias, in hope to ballance his information hereby, intimating that he restrained them of that liberty contrary to the Roman grant.

V. 8. accuse him] That is, Paul.

V. 9. saying, that these things were so] These false witnesses were ready to avow and confirm Tertullus lie.

V. 10. a judge] A Governour. Therefore thou art experienced in their customes, and canst more equally and readily judge.

V. 11. yet but twelve] Meaning, he wanted not time, had he been so minded to stir up sedition: seven dayes were spent in the performance of that Ceremony, which he undertooke, that he might gain the weaker Jews to Christ, and five were spent since.

V. 12. disputing with any man] Though he might lawfully have spoken in the temple, as being an Apostle of Christ the Lord of the temple; yet he denieth that he then and there used any such liberty.

V. 13. neither can they prove the things] being false calumnies: Greek, ὧν νυνὶ κατηγοροῦσιν κατ' ἐμοῦ —— neither can they see before you, as a thing evident, or to be confirmed by any certain arguments, as Act. 13. Syr. neither have they ability ut probent coram te, to prove or make appeare to, or before thee, &c.

V. 14. which they call heresie] Or a sect, as verse 5. the Scribes and Pharisees called the Doctrine of Christ so in the worst acceptation, as the enemies thereof still doe; this word, αἱρεσις was some times taken in the good part, as Chapter 26.5. Some mens misunderstanding prejudiceth not truth.

believing all things which are written in the law, &c.] herein he sheweth his consent with the Church of God: and that christians have the same faith which the Patriarchs and Prophets had. See 1 Cor. 10. 1, 2, &c.

V. 15. which they themselves also allow] That is, the more prudent party, the Pharisees: the Sadducees denyed it.

just and unjust] Dan. 12. 2. John 5. 28, 29. for we must all appear before the judgement seat of Christ, &c. 2 Cor. 5. 10. this one Article of his faith he mentioneth as the principal ground of faith and obedience, which he elsewhere more largely expresseth, 1 Cor. 15, 13, &c.

V. 16. a conscience void of offence] Because I know I must stand before Gods Tribunal, I always endeavour to keep a good conscience, without which no man truely believeth, 1 Tim. 1. 19.

V. 17. after many years] It was a long time since he had been at Jerusalem: he came but seldome to Jerusalem, which will appear, if we consider that which his self writeth. Gal. 2. 1. and therewith, this sacred History; wherein we read of Pauls ascending to Jerusalem, onely foure times: First, Acts 9. 26, &c. Gal. 1. 18. Secondly, when he brought relief to the brethren, Acts 11. 30. and 12. 25. between these his comings they reckon eleaven years: Thirdly, Acts 15. 4, &c. the fourth going up, we reade of Acts 21. 17. now the fourteen yeares mentioned Gal. 2. 1. must be reckoned from his conversion to the second going up to Jerusalem.

V. 18. whereupon] Upon bringing the bringing up of relief from Antioch the brethren which dwelt in Judæa, c. 11, 29. 30. certain Jews] c. 21. 27.

V. 19. who ought to have, &c.] For his present accusers spake but by here-say, or that which themselves invented to hurt and disadvantage him: as if he had said; if there had been any such thing whereof they accuse me; or if any man could affirm such things against me; why are they not here present? why appeare they not against me.

V. 20. while I stood before the council] That is, at Jerusalem. let them say, if any can, what evil they found in me then, cap. 23. 9.

V. 21. touching the resurrection] c. 23. 6. I then said in my defence, of the hope and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question; whereupon arose contention between the Sadducees, and Pharisees, that was their fault not mine.

V. 22. having more perfect knowledge of that way] Syr. because he plainly knew that way: because he perceived that the Jewes had of malice accused him: well knowing their qualities, and how falsely and frivolously they had calumuiated him, loading him with foul words, not matters.

V. 23. let him have liberty] Let him not be kept close prisoner, but under a Keeper with some chain on him. See c. 28. 29. and 28.20. though he acquitted him from all crimes, yet he detaineth him to gratifie the Jews, or expecting a bribe, Chrys.

V. 24. Drusilla] This was Agrippa's sister, a vitious woman, See Joseph. Ant. Jud. l. 20. c. 5.

V. 25. Felix trembled] Out of horrour of conscience, being a wicked man.

V. 26. that money should have been given him] Either he supposed Paul to be no vulgar man whom the Jews so violently prosecuted, but of some great concealed state, (knowing that these storms of envy rarely trouble the low shrubs) or that his friends and Disciples would have redeemed him with some considerable bribe. Here is an example of a marcenary and corrupt Judge who will be hired to do Justice.

V. 27. to shew the Jews a pleasure] To do the Jews some pleasure, and after the many injuries he had done them, to pacifie them, that they might not follow him with complaints. He was careful to please the Jewes, though with displeasing God, because he loved himself, not God, nor good men.

CHAP. XXV.

Verse 1. When Festus was come into the Province] After Felix was removed from that government, and Portius Festus made President of Judæa, reduced into the form of a Province by the Romans.

V. 2. informed him against Paul] Being thus precipitated by the spirit of Satan to persecute the Gospel, they could not rest, and the leading actors were they who should have protected and taught the truth: so dangerous is the corruption of those who are in authority.

V. 3. and desired favour against him] To wit, against Paul; that he would send for him to Jerusalem, that they might kill him by the way.

V. 4. that Paul should be kept] Probably, Felix had informed him of the Jews malice and design against Paul; certainly, this was Gods providence so to preserve him.

V. 5. are able] That can conveniently come.

if there be any wickednesse in him] ἀτοπον here (as Luke 23. 41.) importeth not some foolish or absurd thing, but something wickedly done. So 2 Thess. 3. 2. So the Syriac expresseth it by עולא sachlu, sin, wickednesse, Matt. 18. 35. Indeed all vvickednesse is folly: the Hebrevvs vvell expressed it, as Josh. 7. 15. because he hath wrought נבלה nebalah, folly (that is, wickednesse) in Israel. 70. ἀνομιαν ἐν Ἰσραὴλ. See Judges 20. 10. 2 Sam. 13. 12. Job 42. 8.

V. 6. more than ten dayes] Syr. eight or ten dayes. Some Greek copies have ὁ πλειος ἢ ἡμερας not more than ten, &c.

V. 7. many and grievous complaints, &c. αἰτιωματα, crimination, or enditements: this is the condition of Gods servants, to be loaded vvith calumnies and flanders. See 2 Cor. 6. 4, 8. yet happy are they in their innocency, vvhile their enemies make themselves so much the more unhappy, by hovv much more they belie them, and are injurious to them: See Matchevv, 5. 11, 12.

V. 8. neither against the Law of the Jews] Neither against the Lavv of God professed by the Jevvs, nor against the Temple (though they charged him vvith the profanation thereof;) neither against Cæsar, had he practised any thing.

V. 9. to do the Jews a pleasure] To gain the peoples good word, and opinion of him.

V. 10. where I ought to be judged] Doubting the sincerity of the Judge, whose warping towards popularity he possibly perceived, and also the wait-laying of the Jews.

V. 11. I refuse not to die] As if he had said, I beg no favour, no man may deliver me] No man justly can.

I appeal unto Cæsar] Syr. protestli-nes Cæsaris appello, I appeal to Cæsars procedions. I require to be judged by Cæsar himself. Thus claimeth he his Roman priviledge.

V. 12. with the council] Without whose consent he could do nothing.

V. 13. king Agrippa, Son of Herod Agrippa, whose death is mentioned, Chapter 12. See Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. 11. & lib. 19, Chapter 5.

and Bernice] Sister to the same Agrippa; with whom he lived in publicke infamy, and vehement suspition of incest.

V. 14. Festus declared Pauls cause] Possibly, discoursing of many things, at last he fell on Pauls businesse: how ever, Gods providence so disposed it for Pauls deliverance from the Jewes: he will never be wanting to his; where it shall make for his honour and their good, he will raise up some Festus to declare the oppressed mans cause. See Genesis 41. 9, &c. 1 Sam. 18. 3. &c. 2 Sam. 19. 2, &c.

V. 15. to have judgement against him] δίκην. Syr. that I would judge him. The word signifieth, an action entred, or to be entred into a Court of Justice: so they said, δίκην ἐπέγραψε Budæus. Which the Latins expressed by, dicam impingere, scribere, or diem dicere, that is, deferre, criminis postulare, to implead or to indite one of some crime; or to enter an action against one, that they may have judgement against the impleaded. Sometimes it signified the penalty or punishment, the proceed and result of the judgement. Likely enough, here they desired to have him condemned, indictâ causâ, without hearing the cause, as they had done against Christ, and that might be the cause of Festus's reply, verse 16. concerning the Romane custome.

V. 16. To deliver any man to die] χαρίζεσθαι signifieth to give freely, without cause or meritthe means for any mans pleasure, or favor to execute men without lawful hearing of both parties, he is an unjust Judge, who giveth (though the most just) sentence, before a legall hearing; the Heathens gave leave even to the sacrilegious, traiterous, witches, or any malefactors to defend themselves in judgement, nec prædamnari quemquam ingenitâ causâ licet. Cyc. Laffant. l. 5. c. 1. neither may any man be condemned before his cause is known: See Deut. 13, 14, 15. and 17. 4. Deuteronomy, 19. 18. yet such hath ever been the Devils malice against the servants of Christ, to thrust on impious Judges to condemn them without hearing them; because he knows the power of truth; if that come to be scanned, his kingdom falleth: see John 7. 51.

V. 17. without any delay] He commendeth his own justice herein: long-delayed justice often proveth more heavy, than speedy injustice.

on the judgement-seat] Where they used to hear the weighty matters.

V. 18. no accusation of such things] They accused him of sedition, but he took it for a meer calumny; because they alleaged, but convinced not: objected much, but proved nothing.

V. 19. of their own superstition] See on Capter 17. 22. Syr. concerning their religion; so prophanely did Heathens think and speak of true Religion.

of one Jesus] By this it appeareth how little Pauls preaching had wrought upon Festus; and that many things were controverted between Paul and the Jews, which Luke, for brevity-sake omitted. See 1 Cor. 1. 23.

V. 20. Because I doubted, &c.] Or, I was doubtful to enquire hereof: this was his pretence; but the truth was, he would fain get favour with the Jewes, verse 9. here he bewrayeth his own injustice: for why did not he acquit him, against whom nothing was proved?

V. 21. to the hearing of Augustus] Or, to the judgement.

Augustus] Nero was at that time Emperor of Rome, but for the Honour of their former Emperour Augustus, they stiled his successours after his name.

V. 22. I would also hear the man,] So Herod desired to see Christ, Luke 23. 8. (and to heare John Baptist, Mark 6. 20.) not to be converted, but to satisfie his owne curiosity: Agrippa being born and bred among the Jews, had, doubtless heard of Christian Religion, and perhaps of Paul also: therefore he might happily desire to see and hear him. See here the providence of God: by all these injuries, accusations, layings of wait, as chrysostome noteth, Paul becometh λαμπρότερος, more eminent: but for such his sufferings, none of these Princes would have vouchsafed him audience with so much silence and patience.

V. 23. into the place of hearing] εἰς τὸ ἀκροατήριον, into the place of audience, or hearing causes, Syriak, into the house of Judgement; this being publicke, hither came Agrippa, and Bernice with great pomp, that is, in a Princely manner, and great state.

V. 24. See this man] Thus God pleaseth to suffer his dear children to be made a spectacle unto the world, to men and Angels, See 1 Cor. 4. 9.

V. 25. That he had committed nothing] Thus the more malitious the Jews were in accusing Paul, the more (by Gods providence) was he justified by his Judges. See Chapter. 23. 29. and 24. 24. Truth and innocency shine more clearly by their opposition.

V. 26. unto my Lord] Unto Cæsar, whose Deputy I am in this place: this high Title, Agustus, Tiberius, and some others, would not have given unto themselves or any man; it being, what they thought too great, and something newer than the Roman Empire: but, as אדני adoni, was a civil Title among the Hebrews, Gen. 32. 18, &c. and κύριος among the Greeks, so became Dominus to be among the Latines.

V. 27. It seemeth to me unreasonable, &c.] All this made for Pauls justification, and the Jews just blame, that the Judge openly professed, that (notwithstanding their turbulent clamours, and frequent calumnies there appeared no crime of Pauls whereof the Deputy could enform Cæsar, he thought it unreasonable to send any prisoner under the general notion of a Delinquent, vvhereas, no particular thereof could be proved against him.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verse 1. P*Aul stretcheth forth the hand*] This vvas vvith them an usual gesture of those vvho began to speak in publike. See Prov. 1. 24. Isa. 65. 2.

V. 2. I think, my self happy] I take it for my advantage, that I may now speak before thee, who knowest the Law and the Scriptures; and art therefore a more competent Judge, than he that is a stranger to all.

V. 3. I beseech thee to hear me patiently] As he commended his knowledge; so he entreateth his patience; they that know most, ought to be most attentive, where matters of Religion are controverted, impatience in hearing matters of so high concernment, concludeth ignorance, or impiety.

V. 4. my manner of life] Because the calumnies cast on him by the Jewes, might otherwise have prejudiced the cause of Christ, he first washeth them off, by appealing to his accusers own consciences; who knew his conversation from his youth up.

V. 5. Seil] Here ἀκριβεστάτης is taken in good part, or at least according to the vulgar opinion, and supposition of his adversaries, as it The had said, he Jewes their selves account the sect of Phariseesto be the most holy and religious; and they well know that I was trained up in the same, and zealously professed the same; therefore ought they not to reprove my former course of life; if they will be constant to their principles: he calleth it αἵρεσιν κρυφίαν, ἄθεσιν the straitest: or most exquisite or exact sect: there were then three sects among the Jews. Pharisees, Sadducees and Essenes: See Ios. Antiq. l. 18. c. 2. Epipha adverf. hæref. l. 1. hær. 16. 1. 2. ib. hær. 14. ib. hær. 10. D. Godwin. Moses & Aaron. l. 1. c. 10. 1; 12 these were the principall, and among them the sect of Phariseesvvas the most strict. The Syr. here interpreteth alpurin, the principal Doctrine of the Pharisees.

V. 6. of the promise] Concernning the Messias, and his kingdom, and life eternal by him, in whom all the true worshippers of God among the Jews believed and reposed all their confidence: hereby he obliquely taxeth the vain and prepostorous perswasion of the Jewes pretending to the covenant of God with them and their fathers, and the promises, and yet obstinately rejecting Christ whom God promised to send them, and in whom alone all the promises of God for their eternal happinesse were grounded and ratified to all true believers.

V. 7. twelve tribes] Meaning the remnant of the twelve Tribes, as they returned from the Captivity, 2 King. 17. 6.

serving God] According to the Discipline of the Law.

V. 8. Why should it be thought incredible] He that gave life and being, to that which before, was not, cannot he restore life to the dead? idoneus est reficere, qui fecit; Tertul. He is best able to repair us who made us, and indeed we may behold a continual resurrection (Clem. Roman. ad Cor. ep. 1.) In the feveral creatures; from the death —— like winters unto the life of spring, the several seeds buried under the winter clods, arise up in their severall kindes much more glorious, See 1 Cronicles, 15. 37, 38.

V. 9. verily I thought with my self] He prepossesseth an objection: some might say, were you brought up a Pharisee? you never learned of them to believe, that Jesus was the Messias: true indeed (saith he) I was an adversary to Christians, as much as any of them; and thought my self bound in conscience to endeavour their suppression; neither did any man perswade me to the contrary, but God revealed to me from Heaven, the truth of Christ, and diverted my course: therefore here he inserteth the History of his admirable conversion.

V. 10. which thing, &c.] Chap. 8. 3.

V. 11. Compelled them] Either he effected this by the cruelty he used, or gave them occasion so to doe by his own example, 1 Tim. 1. 13.

V. 12. as I went to Damascus] Chap. 9. 1.

V. 13. at midday] This he saith to declare, that it was no dream, fantasie, or vision of the night; but the certain knowledge, of waking and attentive minds.

V. 14. I heard a voyce] Chap. 9. 4.

V. 15. who art thou Lord?] chap. 9. 5.

V. 16. but rise, &c.] chap. 9. 6.

V. 17. from the people] Of the Jewes, they shall ingratefully handle thee (as mad-men use their Physitians) but I will deliver thee.

V. 18. to open their eyes] This is attributed unto Ministers, as instruments and ordinary means, the effect vvhereof is onely in the Spirit of God, vvorking thereon. See 1, Cor. 3. 5. 6.

V. 19. The heavenly vision] Gal. 1. 16. 17.

V. 20. unto them of Damascus] Chap. 9. 20.

V. 21. about to kill me] Chap. 21. 27, 28, &c.

V. 22. ob-

V. 22. obtained help of God] God assisting me, it were high ingratitude not to do this work cheerfully, and to live to him, by whom I live and am preserved.

witnessing both to small and great] To all sorts of hearers, noble and obscure, without exception of persons. So Rev. 13. 16. Revel. 19. 18. So the Hebrewes used to speak, as we read. 1 Sam. 30. 19. מִן־הַקָּטֹן וְעַד־הַגָּדוֹל min hakkaton vehad haggadol, from the little one, and unto the great one, by which Paul intimateth here to Agrippa, that the things which he spake as much concerned the King in his own person, as the poorest hearer: the Gospel is a general doctrine, which Christ would have communicated to all sorts of people. See Psal. 49. 1, 2. Mat. 28. 19 Mark 16. 15. See Rom. 1. 14. for all are one in Christ. See 1 Cor. 12. 13. Gal. 3. 28. Col. 3. 11.

the Prophets and Moses] Whose general authority the Jewes durst not deny. And this he constantly affirmeth, that all might understand that he taught no other doctrine than that which Moses and the Prophets taught from the beginning; so far was he from innovation.

V. 23. Christ should suffer] That Christ should not be a temporal king, as the Jewes dreamed, but a spiritual and eternal; redeeming and saving us, by suffering that which was due to us.

the first] As head of his Church, to give them a spiritual life. 1 Cor. 15. 20. Col. 1. 18. Rev. 1. 5. First as the authour of life, not the first in time; for some were raised from the dead before he died.

shew light] The knowledge of the Gospel. Luke 2. 32. Matthew 4. 16.

unto the people] meaning the Jewes.

V. 24. with a loud voyce] Chrysostome understandeth this as an effect of Festus's anger.

Paul thou art beside thy selfe] μαίνῃ, Thou art distracted, or mad. Here note the prophane censure of carnal men, concerning the mysteries of eternal life and salvation by Christ. See 2 Kings 9. 11. see on Mark 3. 21.

much learning doth make thee mad] Thou over-studiest thy self; or medlest with matters too deep for thy apprehension, such estimates do the ignorant set on knowledge: so do they blasphemously conceive the Gospel to be the foolishnesse of preaching. 1 Cor. 1. 18. It seemeth so to them that perish: to them that shall be saved, it is the power and wisdom of God, See Rom. 1. 16. 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4. it is a dangerous symptom to distast the Gospel of Christ.

V. 25. I am not mad, most noble Festus] Paul is not transported with anger for Festus censure of him; but being more solicitous to free them, by whom he was bound, from the bonds of sin and Satan, than himself from their chains, he replyeth meekly, and as it became him to speak to a Governour: though Festus were unworthy, yet for Gods ordinance sake, and lest the cause of religion might otherwise have suffered, he regardeth him: neither was Paul so much careful for the defence of his own reputation (See 1 Cor. 4. 3. 2 Cor. 5. 13.) as for the truth of God, which indeed is of the highest and most serious concernment: it is truly the greatest madnesse of the world, wittingly and willingly to neglect that, in which is our eternal weal or woe: a soft answer turneth away wrath, Prov. 15. 1. meeknesse and patience of teachers much advanceth the truth of Christ. See 2 Tim 2. 24, 25, 26. so it is in any weighty undertaking, to be master of ones self, subject onely to right reason, not to disturbed affections.

V. 26. For the King knoweth] Being a Jew, and alwayes conversant in Judea, he might know the prophesies, and those things which were there done and suffered by Christ in his life, death, and resurrection.

V. 27. that thou believest] Meaning, that the King was perswaded of the the truth of those things which were written by the Prophets.

V. 28. almost] ἐν ὀλίγῳ in a little, or within a little: this he speaketh being forced to acknowledge the power of the Gospel, which secular respects would not suffer to be fruitfull in him.

V. 29. both almost] As verse 28.

altogether] ἐν πολλῷ, in much, in every thing which concerneth the accomplishment of a true Christian. Almost perswaded to be a Christian; is no better than to be a luke-warme Laodicean, Rev. 3. 16, or an Israelite halting between God and Baal, 1 Kings 18. 21. God will admit no partners in his service: either thou must be entirely and altogether his, or thou art not his at all.

except these bonds] He attempereateth his speech to them, who yet knew not that bonds, and suffering for the truth of Christ, was an high honour, whereof elsewhere he glorieth and rejoyceth, Ephes. 6. 20. 2 Tim 2. 9. See also chap. 5. 41. The Romans used thus to produce their prisoners with a souldier guardian, and some chain on the prisoner, chap. 28. 20. 2 Tim. 1. 16.

V. 30, the King rose up] Having dismissed the company who attended or came to hear; the King, President, and Bernice, with many others, depart nothing better than they came hither. So goeth the black-Moor into the Bath, coming out from washing, of the same complexion: they whose hearts are filled with love of the world, and secular businesses, impatiently hear the Gospel; it is presently tedious to them:

V. 31. nothing worthy of death] Thus the very heathen Judges still acquitted him in their opinions, to the condemnation of the malicious Jewes. As also of themselves, who finding in all their examinations that he was innocent; yet to please impious men, would not acquit and deliver him. Judges ought to take heed what they do, for they judge not for man, but for the Lord. —— 2 Chron. 19. 6.

V. 32. then Agrippa said] Agrippa (of their governours most versed in these things) also justifies Paul: what got the Jewes by their travel and importunity, but their own just condemnation, in the manifestation of Pauls innocency? the enemies of the gospel and of the Ministers thereof, do but justifie, and (to the servants of Christ undoubted advantage) honour them the more.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verse 1. P*Aul and certain other prisoners*) Thus do the saints share with the wicked in things seculer and external. God the righteous judge will at last set them in conditions very different, Mat. 25. 34, 41, 46. Luke 16. 25.

a centurion] A Captain of an hundred foot-men.

Augustus band] The band or cohort was the tenth part of a Roman legion: and these bands or cohorts were of severall numbers, names, and uses: the first, wherein the standard was, consisted of 1105 foormen, and 132. horsemen, &c. they used to have a Prætorian band, or cohort, to guard the Magistrate or Governour in his Province; this here mentioned, seems to be such as Augustus appointed to some the like offices. See Vegetius de re militar. lib. 2. cap. 7.

V. 2. Adramyttium] A famous city and port of Mysia, Plin. lib. 5. cap. 30. it was formerly called Pedasus. Mysia was by the Hellespont near Troas, Ger. Mercat. Atl. Asia min.

Aristarchus] It seemeth he onely and Luke accompanied Paul in this journey, of all his disciples.

V. 3. at Sidon] A city of Phœnicia: in times past it was a frontier town of the Canaanites to the North-ward, near the mount Libanus, Jerome de locis Heb. Atl.

courteously entreated Paul] χρησάμενος, the word now used, is a particip. aor. 1. med. of χράω, commodo, commodato, do to lend, as Luke 11. 5. to accommodate or to profit, to do good or pleasure to; Syr. usus est Centurio benevolentia erga Paul. am: upon the matter the same, which he courteously entreated Paul. Thus God raised up friends to the afflicted, for he is with them according to his promise, See chap. 7. 9, 10. Hebr. 13. 5, 6. Josh. 1. 5.

V. 4. under Cyprus] See chap. 11. 19. a great Island in the mediterran sea. See G. Mercat. Atl. Plin. l. 5. c. 31.

V. 5. Cilicia] See on chap 6. 9. and Plin. l. 5. c. 27.

Pamphylia] Chap. 13. 13. Plin. l. 5. c. 27.

Myra a city] A chief city of Lycia, as Strabo reckoneth it. See Plin. lib 5. cap. 27.

of Lycia] A province of Asia. Jerome. de loc. Hebr. Atl. Pliny saith it had once sixty towns, lib. 5. cap. 27.

V. 6, of Alexandria] A city of Egypt, which was anciently called No, Jer 46. 25. &c. between Egypt and Africa, where the Evangelist Mark was buried. Jerom. de loc. Hebr. Atl. and de scriptor. eccl G. Mercator. Atl. saith, it was in times past a noble and beautiful city, built by Alexander the great, in the bottome of the straights, or end of the Mediterrane sea. The Turks now call it Scanderia

V. 7. slowly many dayes] The winde being against them, as verse 4. or very bare.

Gnidus] A little Island over against Caria,

Crete] Since named Candie: it is a Grecian Island, once abounding in wealth, and glorious for the number of an hundred towns. Jerom. de loc. Hebr. Atl. See G. Mercat. Atl. Creta, & Plin. lib. 4. cap. 12.

Salmone] This was an eastern promontory, or high cliffe of Crete. See Strab. l. 2.

V. 8. the fair havens] It seemeth so called of the safety and commodiousnesse of the haven, or road; as we call a road of ours, the Downs.

Lasea] A sea-town and city of Crete, Jerom. de loc. Hebr. Atl.

V. 9. the fast was] He reckoneth the time of the year, after the custome of the Jewes, which the Syriack expresseth, the fast which the Jewes were wont to observe: hereof see Levit. 16. 29. and 23. 27. Numb. 29. 7. this was about October: so that Paul advised them to winter there, rather than to put to sea in the deep of winter, then at hand; wherein (as Vegetius noteth de re militar, l. 4. c. 39.) there is little light, and tedious nights, nights, thick clouds, dark weather, rages of winde, and storms, hindring travel by sea and land: the heathen said well, καιρὸς ἦν καὶ πόνου ἄνευσις. Hesiod. op. & di. opportunity is best in all things.

V. 10. hurt and &c.] μετ' ὕβρεως, with injury: the interpreter of the Syriack giveth it, with trouble.

but also of our lives] With much danger of our lives: it had been with losse of their lives, had not God (as Oecumenius saith) for Pauls sake preserved all the rest. Ἀπὸ ψυχῶν ἡμᾶς, of our soules, that is, a Metonomie of the efficient for the effect, usuall among the Hebrewes.

V. 11. the centurion believed the master] Not knowing Paul to be inspired by the holy Ghost, but conceiving him to be no sea-man, he believed the master of the ship in his own faculty; also the haven was not commodious: this man had at least some appearance of reason for this his beliefe; what reason have they, who in danger of their souls shipwrack, will most believe them who have least skill and experience in preach.ng the word for saving of souls?

V. 12. Phenice] A port in Crete, not Phenicea a region in Syria.

V. 13. loosing thence] Weighing anchor, and seeing sail thence, ἀραντες, ἆσσον παρελεγοντο, the word ἆσσον is not here a name of a place; but is put for ἐγγὺς or πλησίον, near, or nearer: as if he said close aboard the shore of Crete, or Candie. See chap. 20. 13, 14.

they sayled] παρελεγοντο, which the Latines give, legebant, or praeterlegebant, Virg. Aëni. 3. Littoraque Epiri legimus, it hath many significations, as Lyranus noteth in this Distich.

Fur aurum, virgo flores, mare navita, libros Clericus; aquivocè singula quisque legit. In the Dialect of English marriners, they went close aboard the shore.

V. 14. there arose] Or beat.

against it] Against Crete. for that it carried them off to sea from Crete (which was now a wind-ward shore) to Melita, which is between Africa and Sicilie.

Euroclydon] A North-east winde, furious and stormy, usual about those places, in the beginning of winter: some call it, the Sea-mans plague.

V. 15. when the ship was caught] With this sudden storme, so they (not having time to take in their sails) were in danger of over setting, could not bear up into the wind] A ship is said ἀνατρέφειν τὸ πρῶρα. to wrestle with the winde (say the interpreters) which must needs be when she hath the winde against her, so that her prow must encounter with adverse billowes, and head-seas, or meet the sea right a head; some think the original of the phrase was from that part of the prow which was called ὀφθαλμός, an eye: we have in use with us, to make up into the eye of the winde, (which here is ἀντοφθαλμεῖν) by divers tacks, and making sundry boards, to turn to the winde-ward: that is, by standing sometimes one way, and sometimes another, for the gaining a place to winde-ward; which here this ship could not do the violence of the storm and great head-seas driving them still to the lee-ward, and hindring the way.

we let her drive] A ship is said to drive, when the anchor cannot hold her, but that she falleth away with the winde or tyde. So also when a ship is at hull, or a trie, that is, hath taken in all her sails, and tyed down the helm to the lee-side of the ship, going as winde and tide carry her: we say she drives, &c. or is a drift to lee-ward.

V. 16. Clauda] A little Island. Plinie lib. 4. cap. 12. calleth it Gaudos: Ptolome and others Claudos.

to come by the boat] To recover, take up, or save the boat.

V. 17. under-girding the ship] This under-girding is by trusses, which are ropes made fast to the yards; used either to binde fast the yard to the mast, when the ship rowles a hull, or at an anchor, or to hale down the yards in a gust or storm.

into the quick-sands] Certain vast banks or mountains of sands in the sea, which swallow up ships that stick fast and sit upon them a little time; and so will the Goodwin sands, &c.

V. 18. they lightened the ship] By casting the goods overboard.

V. 19. the tackling of the ship] The Greek word σκευὴ, signifieth store, munition and necessary furniture; and provision for ships. So Jon. 1. 5. they cast over-board כְּלֵי הַתֹּרֶן אֶת eth hathalim: their instruments or furniture, 70. ἐκβολὴν ἐποιοῦντο τῶν σκευῶν: the very word here used: So Syr. interpret. vasa jussus navis, &c. See 2 Kings 11, 8, 11.

V. 20. all hope that we should be saved] Meaning in respect of second causes, and mans reason; κατὰ τὴν φύσιν, as Oecumenius speaks, it must have been so in the course of nature, that they had perished.

V. 21. have gained this harm] That is, prevented it; as the Syr. interpreteth it, avoyded it; in the conclusion, it will ever appear a Gain to hearken to Christs Ministers.

V. 22. of any mans life] Ψυχῆς: soul, for life, as verse 10. with such admirable confidence in the truth of God, who had revealed this unto him, verse 24. he comforteth them, left in despair of life they should neglect the means of their preservation.

but of the ship] This he declareth to them, that when they saw all this truly come to passe, they might have the more reverend esteem of the gospel which he preached, and for which he now suffered.

V. 23. the Angel of God] Whom he sent to comfort and assure me; lest they should think he vainly promised them security, he confirmeth that which he said by alleadging a divine authority.

whom I serve] He professeth to profane men, that he served God, who who was able to deliver and would deliver him and them: they knew that he was now in bonds for his religions sake: now hearing that God had a care of him, sent his Angel to him, and after seeing that he and themselves were according to his word delivered from the (otherwise inevitable) danger, they might easily gather, that God justified his religion, and that Paul served the true God.

V. 24 God hath given thee all them that sail with thee] Or given thee as a favour. So the Greek κεχάρισταί σοι signifieth, freely to give, as Rom. 8. 32. Gal. 3. 18. Phil. 1. 29 Acts 3. 14. 1 Cor. 2. 12. Thou hast prayed for them, I have heard thee, and will for thy sake, save their lives. So God heard Lot for Zoar. Gen. 19. 19, &c. God preserveth the wicked from temporal destruction, for the righteous sake, who are among them, and intercede for them.

V. 25. for I believed God] I am confident out of good experience, that God will certainly perform his promise.

V. 26. we must be cast] That they might not doubt of the truth of Gods promise, he foretelleth them, the manner and means by which they shall be preserved: thus it will fall out that we shall be cast upon an Island: this he telleth them that they might ascribe their delivery to God, not chance; so the ancient Prophets were wont to foretell certain signes of things by them spoken, which should come to passe, that they whom it concerned might know that God had spoken by them, and would certainly bring it to passe. See 1 Sam. 10. 2, &c.

V. 27. in the Adria, &c.] In the Adriatick sea which divideth Italy from Dalmatia, and reacheth up to Venice.

V. 28. and founded] To finde the depth of the waters by casting out a plumet of lead fastened to a line many fathoms long

V. 29. out of the sterne] Or hinder part of the ship, to stay the course or way of the ship, lest falling upon some coast in the dark, in thei. ship-wrack they should all have been cast away.

V. 30. out of the fore-ship] The prow, or foremost part of the ship.

V. 31. except these abide in the ship] Now because the will of God, or his power to save, or the effect of his promise depended on second causes; but because he that had ordained the end, ordained the means also; and that he would not have them tempt God, by dividing that which he had united.

V. 32. Cut off the ropes] The Centurion and souldiers followving Pauls counsell, cut off all hope of the sea-mens going away from the ship, and deserting them; they cut the boat-rope, and let her drive away.

V. 33. continued fasting] He meaneth, they eat no set meals; or so little in their perpetual danger and fear of being cast away, that it was in a manner, a fasting.

V. 34. hair fall from the head] By this Hebrew phrase is meant, that they should all come safe and sound ashore (See 1 Sam. 14. 45. 1 King 1. 52. Mat. 10. 30.) without the losse of a man.

V. 35. he took bread and gave thanks] Not only praying God to give a blessing, and to sanctifie those creatures to their nourishment; to presunt their thanks to him for the same, and to acknowledge his good providence in bestowing them upon them; but also for their preservation from the great danger which they had run: and exhorting them to refresh themselves, in confidence of Gods future providence according to his word, he sheweth them his own example; we must not in dangers and afflictions, measure our condition by present sense, but consider Gods power, and promises to deliver us; it is an happy teaching, where Ministers own actions, exemplifie their doctrine.

V. 36. all of good cheer, &c.] So great a comfort and blessing is one, or a few good men in a company: while they were all safe, and out of fear, Paul lay a board like a poor despised prisoner, but now in the danger God maketh him the onely counseller, and comforter of all the company; common dangers, and afflictions, make the Saints more evidently shine.

V. 37. two hundred threescore and sixteen, &c.] This feereth off the good providence of God, that of so many men, none perished in their tumultuous swimming ashore: it must teach men in midst of dangers to cast themselves upon the providence of God.

V. 38. they lightened the ship] By casting her lading overboard board: they resolved with the Physiologher in the like case, better those perish for us, than with us

V. 39. they knew not the land] They could keep no good reckoning, by reason of the violent storm, dark weather, variable sets of tydes, and possibly many shifts of windes: so discovering the land, knew not where they were.

to thrust in the ship] They would there run her ashore, that they might save their lives, by getting ashore upon some plancks or broken pieces of timber, or otherwise.

V. 40. taken up the anchors] Or cut the cables, (to which the anchors were fastened) in the hawse: for in a storm, and such wrought seas, they could not weigh anchor: Syr. ומפקו upesaqu, and they cut off the anchors; the same word is preserved verse 20. all hope that we should be saved אתפסק eitpeseck, was cut off; Greek περιῃροῦντο, was taken away.

loosed the rudder-bands] The rudder, is that piece of timber, which hanging at the stern-post of the ship, is as a bridle to direct the course; this they had bound when they would drive (verse 15.) or let the ship go whither winde and tyde would carry her; but now, because they would have it to direct the ship, that they might with the best advantage for their lives, run her ashore, they loose it again.

and hoised up the main sail] Which before they had strucken, by reason of the violence of the storm; now they hoise it, that the ship might feele the winde, and work for their running ashore.

V. 41. broken with the violence, &c.] So that nothing now remained, but that every one should shift for his life, and swimme ashore: thus God shewed his delivering power in extream hazards.

V. 42. the souldiers counsel was to kill, &c.] They shew their cruell ingratitud. to Paul, who had comforted them, and for whose sake their lives were saved: this hath been the common lot of the Prophets, Apostles, Ministers, and generally the saints of God: for it is trouble no good man to receive evill for the good he hath done, it is a vulgar disease; let them know that when men requite evill for good, that yet their labour is with the Lord. See Luke 14. 13, 14.

V. 43. but the Centurion willing to save Paul] God put into his heart, to defeat this more than barbarous counsel of souldiers: thus God saveth Paul by the Centurion, who was preserved for Pauls sake: piety never dyeth unrewarded: it is an happy thing to do all the good we can; here again mark the present benefit which the other prisoners had for Pauls sake: it is a sufficient motive to make men ambitious of the acquaintance and society of Gods children.

call themselves first into the sea] That they might be the more helpful to get the rest ashore; also to avoyd the danger of one drowning another, if the multitude should all have leaped over-board together.

V. 44. some on boards, &c.] Who could not swimme vvithout.

they escaped all safe] Thus God ever fulfilleth his promises: thus his goodnesse overcometh mans malice and impious counsels; referving the vvicked to other times, vvhose unbeleefe and ingratefull cruelty, willing to shed blond deserved that they should never have come to shore again: The long-sufferand goodnesse of God should lead men to repentance, and teach them Davids use of Gods favours. Psal. 107. 15. Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodnesse, &c.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Verse 1. CAlled Melita] Now called Malta; an Island betvven Africa and Sicilie; there is another of the same name in the Adriatick bay, between Italy and Epidaurus. See D. Heylin Μεσόγειος: mediterran. isles. 448. &c. & Plin. l. 3. c. 9. & 4. 26.

V. 2. barbarous people] They were so called who spake neither Greek nor Latine and were more rudely bred, or of fierce and evill manners, uncivill, ungodly, immane and cruel. Cic. ad Q. fr. l. 1. quod si te fors Afris, aut Hispanis, aut Gallis praefecisset, immanibus ac barbaris nationibus: so Virg. barbarus has segetes? See 1 Cor. 14. 11.

shewed us no little kindnesse] φιλανθρωπίαν humanity: So Sudas interpreter giveth φιλανθρωπεῖς humaniter exceptus: and Budaus φιλανθρωπούμενος, in comitatem benignitatemque receptus: Some despise the needy and calamitous, adding affliction to affliction, but these men (esteemed barbarous) were more humane to those who had lost ship and goods in the sea: Christians should not be ashamed to imitate their mercy, but to come short of it. See Heb. 13 3. it is no more honour to those who are barbarous to be called humane, than dishonour to the humane to be called barbarous: it is lesse evill to be stiled evill, than to be so: be better than thy name, shew thy self good indeed, and thou mayest securely despise fame. See James 2. 16.

V. 3. a viper out of the heat] Thus God pleased by a new miracle to confirm Pauls authority, thereby to prepare the barbarous to receive the Gospel.

V. 4. a murderer] his was rash judgement; according to the common custom of the world; who usually account the afflicted vvicked; this principle sticketh fast in the consciences of the most barbarous, that there is a divine providence vvhich justly punisheth the vvicked and injurious, because therefore murder is a chief crime, they conclude that he vvas a murderer, vvhom so eminent a revenge followed.

yet vengeance suffereth not to live] Vengeance they took to be a goddesse, named Δίκη; the same vvith Nemesis, vvhich they called Θεὰ ἀλαστόρων τιμωρὸς, the revenger of the proud Suid. Νέμεσις.

V. 5. shook off the beast, &c.] That is the viper; vvhich hung on his hand: the Physitians called all such creatures vvhich leave their venome in a vvound vvhich they bite or sting ἔνεκα, specially the viper.

felt no harm) The povver of God, the Lord of nature and all creatures, restraining the venome; so that it could not hurt Pauls here Christs promise to believers in the Primitive Church, Mark 16. 18. vvas fulfilled in Paul.

V. 6. swollen and fallen down dead] So deadly is their poyson, specially in those hot countreys, that it presently invades the heart and vital parts, and those that are bitten presently die: the more evident was the miracle in Pauls preservation.

V. 7, Publius] By this name he seemed to be a Roman, and that he entertaining the Centurion, Paul and his company were invited with him: thus God hath every where a care of his.

V. 8. prayed and layed his hands on him) Praying, he shewed that not his power, but Gods, restored this man: laying on his hands was a form of blessing, hospitality is commended by many examples. Gen. 8. 2. Gen. 19. 1. 1 Kings 17. 9. 2 Kings 4. 8. Exod. 2. 20. Luke 10. 38. and here by a special reward thereof.

V. 9. others also came and were healed] For very probably the fame hereof quickly spread about the Iland. But why did not he who shook off the viper, and cured diseases, shake off his own bonds? we must know that Paul was not the author, but minister in the miracle; acting onely where, when, how, and on whom the Spirit of God would: and miracles were not wrought for the ease of their persons, who did them, so much as for the confirmation of their ministery; for which God sometimes miraculously delivered them. chap. 5. 19 chap. 12. 7. sometimes he left them in bonds, where those bonds might advance the Gospel Phil. 1. 12.

V. 10. loaded us with such things, &c.] Furnished them with victuals, and other necessaries; this was their gratitude toward Paul, for the great benefits which they had received by his curing their sick: they much honoured him, and accommodated him and those that were with him, with necessaries for their voyage: and this was a fruit of their faith.

V. 11. whose signe was] Such as ships usually have whereby they may be the better known, and according to which sometimes they are named, and their bills of lading, or other commissions to them appertaining are formed.

Castor and pollux] The Painims feigned these to be gods of the sea.

V. 12. at Syracuse] A famous city of Sicilia.

V. 13. to Rhegium] Acity in Italy over against Messana of Sicilia.

to Puteoli] A sea-town in the kingdom of Naples.

V. 14. we found brethren] Whether these brethren were Christians before Paul came to them or not, seemeth not manifest, for the Jewes though not yet converted, are elsewhere stiled brethren, that is, kinsmen according to the flesh: Israelites, Rom. 9. 3, 4. (see also Acts 7. 1. & 22. 1. & 23. 1 &c.) so here v. 17. Paul calleth them brethren, who yet v. 22 naming Christianity a Sect, every where spoken against, seem, not to have yet been acquainted with the most wholesom and comfortable mysteries thereof, concerning which they desired to be enformed by Paul; neither seemeth it probable that the faith (if it had been received in Italy, so near Rome as was Puteoli) should not by some means have been propigated to the Jewes at Rome.

V. 15 Appii forum] A market town upon a long high-way, to the sea-ward, which Appius caused his souldiers to make good; by the which there stood three taverns, about a dayes journey from Rome.

V. 16. the Centurion] Or governour of the pretory or Judgement-hall.

suffered to dwell] Paul was not put into the common prison; which favour God gave him for his comfort, and the advancement of the Gospel.

V. 17. Paul called the chief of the Jewes] Who dwelt then at Rome; here again appeared the constant love of Paul to Israel; who, notwithstanding their many grievous injuries done him, would yet again adventure to preach Christ unto them, that they might be saved.

V. 18. when

V. 18. when they had examined, &c.] That is, when the Roman Deputies and Governours of Judea had examined Paul: thus he endeavoureth to prevent the truth unto them, and for their better reception of himself, and it, to prevent the prejudicate opinion concerning his own person, lest that should disadvantage the Gospel.

V. 19. not that I had ought to accuse him, &c.] That is, I appealed to Cæsar onely to defend my innocency: nor purpose I to make any use of this accusation, to exasperate Cæsars former evill opinion of the Jews.

V. 20. for the hope] That is, for Jesus Christ his cause, whom they had long looked for, and who had now shewed himself their Redeemer, in whom only the Israel of God, that is, all true believers (Rom. 2. 29. Gal. 3. 7. 9.) repose all their hope and confidence of salvation. See chap. 4. 12.

V. 21. we neither received letters, &c.] The high priests had little hope that they could reach him there at Rome, therefore probably they were silent.

V. 22. concerning this sect] See on chap. 26. 5. meaning, this profession of Christianity.

every where it is spoken against] By the governours and people, Jewes and Gentiles: here appeareth the truth and power of God, in the propagation of that Gospel, which had the multitude, power, authority and wisdom; yea, and the seeming sanctity of the world, every where against it: what natural man would not at least have suspected that which all condemned? that must therefore be the truth of God, which so much, so universally, so constantly flourisheth in spite of men.

V. 23. kingdom of God] That the kingdom spoken of by the Prophets, now was offered unto them by Christ. Which Paul, by competent and sufficient arguments cited out of Moses and the Prophets, declared and proved unto them:

V. 24. some believed] The Gospel, like the seed; Mat. 13. findeth divers soiles, and bringeth forth according to the receiver; the same sun hardeneth the clay, and softeneth the wax. See 2 Thes. 3. 2. Heb 4. 2.

V. 25. when they agreed not, &c.] Here is the fruit of dissention, but accidental to the Gospel, which causeth not, but sheweth the secret wickednesse of mens hearts, as the sun, sheweth, but causeth not the diversities of colours which lyconcealed and undistinct in the dark. See Luke 2. 34. Mat. 10. 34. John 10 19.

well spake the holy Ghost] When he could by no fair means win them, he denounceth the judgment which God had threatned them. Isaiah 6. 9. which the authority of the holy Ghost declared to be most certain, 2 Pet. 1. 21.

V. 26. go unto this people] Isaiah 6. 9. Mat. 13. 14. Mark 4. 12. Luke 8. 10. John 12. 14. Rom. 11. 8.

V. 27. they have closed] They are in wilful ignorance, and willingly know not; as, 2 Pet. 3. 5. therefore God giveth them over to strong delusions, to believe lies, to their own destruction. 2 Thes. 2. 11, 12.

V. 28. the salvation of God] Τὸ σωτήριον τοῦ θεοῦ. So Luke 2. 30. which is revealed in the Gospel by God, shewing his counsel therein, and the powerful effect thereof by his holy spirit, to every believer.

V. 29. the Jewes departed] So hypocrites and self-flatterers beguile their own souls, being impatient of all wholesome reproof, and offended at the truth. Gal. 4. 16.

had great reasonings] This sheweth that some believed, in that they gainsayed the unbelievers

V. 30. received all, &c.] He was not ignorant, how much silence would have secured him from the malice of the Jewes; but he valued not his life; so that he might finish his charge which was committed to him. See chap. 21. 13. 1 Cor. 9. 16.

V. 31. preaching the kingdom of God] That is, as the Syr. hath it, concerning the kingdom of God: and how we are interessed therein by the free grace and mercy of God in Christ Jesus; in whom we receive remission of sins, regeneration, reconciliation, adoption of sons, fairh, sanctification, patience, perseverance, obsignation and sealing up to redemption; and shall have the end of our hopes, the salvation of our bodies and souls in his kingdom of glory.

with all confidence, no man forbidding him] Not because the Jewes had lost their malice, but because God who shut the greedy lyons mouthes: Dan. 6. had now shut theirs: and he who brought out Israel from the incensed Egypt, in such a calm, that not a dog moved his tongue against them, now at present gave Paul freedome from the strife of tongues: well might he say, the word of God is not bound. 2 Tim. 2. 9. if thou shouldest endeavour to binde up the sun-beames, or silence the whispering winds, thou couldest not prevaile; nor can any creature, against that spirit of God which breaths when, and where it list. John 3. 8.

Now unto the King Eternall, Immortall, Invisible, the onely wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever; to his Church peace, truth, and salvation, to all Eternity, through Jesus Christ our Lord and onely Saviour. AMEN.

The ARGUMENT and ANALYSIS of the Epistle to the ROMANES.

THE main scope and end of the Apostle, in this Epistle to the Romanes, is, to convince both Jew and Gentile of their corrupt and deplorate estate by Nature, and how impossible it is to obtain Righteousnesse and Salvation by the works of the Law; and consequently to draw all men to embrace the doctrine of the Gospel; wherein Grace and Mercy, in the Remission of sins, peace of Conscience, and Joy in the holy Ghost, comfort in Affliction, and conquest in all Temptations, together with the adoption of Sons, and eternall life are offered to all Beleevers:

It conteineth in it,

  - 2 Concerning Sanctification, which he proveth to be imperfect, yet true and sincere, from the sixth Chapter to the ninth.
  - 3 Concerning Predestination, which he proveth to be of the meere love of God, and not upon any merit in us, Chapter 9, 10, 11.

CHAP. I.

Vers. 1. PAul,] Paul the holy Apostle, who wrote this Epistle and the rest, either had two names given him formerly, (at his circumcision) Saul and Paul, as the first Evangelist in order, had two names, Matthew and Levi, which the words of Saint Luke (Act. 13. 9.) seem to import; (Saul which also is called Paul) or, after his separation to the work of the ministery, and his converting Paul the proconsul, his former name Saul was changed into Paul, either by the proconsul Sergius Paulus, who graced him with the name of his illustrious Family among the Romanes, as Titus did Josephus the Jew with the name of Flavius; or by himself in memory of that great work God wrought by him, as well in the conversion of the proconsul, as the confusion of Elymas the Sorcerer: so Saint Augustine and St. Jerome, Victoriæ erexit vexillum ut Paulus diceretur à Saulo.

Servant] The word is not here taken as opposed to a free man, but signifieth a minister, or a man wholly addicted to Christs service, whose service is perfect freedome: in which sense Moses (Deut. 34. 5.) and Joshua (Chap. 24. 29.) and David (Psal. 18. 1.) and other holy men are called the servants of the Lord.

called] He expresseth here his calling, partly because it was extraordinary; not of man, nor by man, but immediately by Jesus Christ (Gal. 1. 1.) partly to shew the Romanes presently in the beginning that what he wrote to them in this Epistle was done according to the duty of his calling, and that he had good warrant and commission for it.

Apostle] The word Apostle is derived from ἀποστέλλω, and signifieth a Legat or Ambassadour of Christ sent to declare the Gospel to all nations, and such an one was Saint Paul, who had a generall Commission to preach both to Jew and Gentile, though specially by the appointment of God with the consent of both parties the Gospel of the uncircumcision was committed to Paul, as the Gospel of circumcision to Peter, Gal. 2. 7.

separated] See Acts 13. 2. Or, set apart for. From his mothers wombe in Gods appointment (Gal. 1. 15.); but actually set apart by the command of the holy Ghost to preach the Gospel among the Gentiles (Act. 13. 2.) In the word separate he seemeth to allude to the name of Pharisee, which signifieth a man separate; of which Sect he was before his conversion: and hereby he implyeth that he is still a separated man, but to a better purpose, namely to the preaching of the Gospel of Christ.

V. 2. promised] Or, foreshewed. Shewed before in the types of the Law, and promised before in the words of the Prophets which were since the world began.

V. 3. made] See Gal. 4. 4. In regard of his humane nature, which is a true creature assumed by the Sonne of God in the unity of his person. He useth the word made here and Gal. 4. 4. rather than born, to intimate his miraculous incarnation whereby he took flesh of a pure virgin.

seed] That is, of the substance of the Virgin Mary, who was of Davids posteritie.

flesh] That is, his humane nature (Joh. 1. 14. 1 Tim. 3. 16.) flesh being a part, is by a Synecdoche taken for the whole man.

V. 4. declared] Gr. determined. Not made the Son of God as he was truly made the son of man; but declared to be the Son of God. The word in the originall signifieth more than a bare declaration, namely, a declaration by a solemn sentence, or definitive judgement, Psal. 2. 7. I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son.

with power] Gr. in power.

Spirit] That is, according to his Divine nature called Spirit. 1 Tim. 1. 16. Heb. 9. 14.

holinesse] Or sanctification; that is, holy in himself, and maketh us holy by his merit and virtue. Heb. 2. 11.

resurrection from the dead] Gr. resurrection of the dead. The Godhead was formerly veiled under the infirmity of the flesh, but in the resurrection, and after, it was manifested in Christ in the glory of divine power, and by effects most admirable. 2 Cor. 13. 4.

V. 5. grace and apostleship] Either he useth here a figure, ἓν διὰ δυοῖν, and meaneth the grace and eminent gift of being an Apostle: or by grace he meaneth the favour of God, and pardon for his former offence in perfecuting the Church, or supernaturall gifts to qualifie him for an Apostle, or grace for his own conversion and Apostleship for the conversion of others.

for obedience to the faith] Or, to the obedience of faith. To bring the Gentiles to the obedience of Christ and faith, Act. 26. 18. or to make the Gentiles to submit by faith to receive the Gospel, whereby Christ raigneth over men. Act. 6. 7.

name] That his name might be known and glorified by them; or for him in his name, by his authoritie and commission.

V. 6. called] Outwardly by the Word, and inwardly by the Spirit: for in the next verse he calleth them the beloved of God; and afterwards Saints.

V. 7. Grace to you, and peace] Either by Grace he understands all spirituall and supernaturall; and by Peace, all temporall blessings, agreable to the signification of the Hebrew Shalom; which implies happinesse, or prosperous success in all things: or by Grace, Gods free-will and favour; and by Peace, the fruit and enjoying of the same; which brings peace of conscience, termed Christs peace, Joh. 16. 33. and peace with God, Rom. 5. 1.

V. 8. for you all] Gr. Tec. Or, concerning you all.

whole world] That is, spread and made known to the Churches of the world: A figurative expression, yet thus farre it hath ground in the letter; that there was a resort to Rome from all parts of the world, and every one might relate of it in his own country.

V. 9. with my spirit] Or, in my spirit. That is, from my heart and inward affection; or in my spirit, that is, in my soul, which is as the spirituall temple, wherein God is worshiped, and served by the faithfull.

that] Or, how.

V. 10. will of God] This he addeth, for that in the publishing of the Gospel, he still followed the order which God prescribed him by his Spirit.

V. 12. comforted] Or, admonished. as Heb. 12. 5. For the Greek beareth both alike; and though Paul were never so excellent, yet he might be instructed, or at least admonished by the Church: for the Angels themselves received more particular knowledge by the Church of the manifold wisdome of God; Ephes.3.10. 1 Pet.1.12.

with you] Or, in you.

V. 13. but was] Or, and was.

let hitherto] Sometimes by accidentall difficulties, sometimes by the expresse commandement of God, Act.16.7.

fruit among you] Or, in you. Of my ministery and calling to be an Apostle of Christ among the Gentiles to convert them unto him; or at least to confirme them more and more in their faith; or that I might make my ministery to fructifie among you Romanes to the advancement of the glory of Christ, and salvation of his Church.

among] Or, in.

V. 14. I am debter] That is, obliged by my Apostolicall charge to seek the salvation of All, and to communicate the talent unto them, which I received from God to that purpose, to the utmost of my power, without distinction of either nation, or condition of men, 1 Cor. 9.16,17.

V. 16. I[s]hamed] I am not fainthearted; I do not seek to withdraw my selfe or shrink back from the publishing of the Gospel, as men are wont to do in things whereof they are ashamed.

power of God] That is, the only and most effectual means to save men by faith in Christ set forth in the same; whereas man of his own nature was voyd of strength thereunto, Rom.5.6. and the law was weak through the flesh, Rom.8.3. 1 Cor.1.14,24.

Jew first] As unto that nation to which it was requisite the Gospel should be first preached, Act.13.46.

to the Greek] This word Greek is sometimes set in Saint Paul against the word Jew, so it signifies the Gentiles in generall, the greater part whereof and the neereft and beft known to the Jews were in thofe dayes Grecians both by nation and language: fometimes as it is fet againft the word Barbarian, Coloff.3.11. and fo it fignifieth the civiller and learneder fort of Greeks; and in this fenfe Athens was termed Ἑλλὰς Ἑλλήνων, that is, the Greece of Greece.

V. 17. righteoufneſs of God] Of Chriſt given to us by God, and received by faith; or it is called the righteouſneſs of God, becauſe God ordained his Sonne true God, to ſulfill and procure the ſame, imparting it of meer grace to his elect; and receiving it for their abſolution: for this is that everlaſting righteouſneſs which is able to ſubſiſt before Gods judgement, Dan. 9. 24. Or laſtly, becauſe it is the accompliſhment of all his promiſes; for ſo is the righteouſneſs of God ſometimes taken for his faithfulneſs and mercy, Rom.3.26.

from faith to faith] Or, out of faith to faith.

faith to faith] That is, from one degree to another, ſo that according as faith doth more and more encreaſe and get ſtrength, the more likewiſe it is aſſured of that righteouſneſs: or the revelation of the righteouſneſs is received by a continual act of faith which muſt never ceaſe till it arrive to its accompliſhment, to wit, in the life eternall, Pſal.84.7.

The juſt ſhall live by faith] Or, the juſt by faith ſhall live. See Hab. 2. 4. Gal.3.11. Heb. 10.38. Either the juſt ſhall live by his faith; or he that is juſt by faith ſhall live; which well agrees with the Hebrew, Hab.2.4. and likewiſe with the principall drift of the Apoſtle. Here he proveth that man obtaineth life and ſalvation by the Goſpel; forasmuch as the Goſpel offereth unto us the onely cauſe of life; namely the true righteouſneſs, which is that of Chriſt imputed to man by grace, and embraced of him by a lively faith, whereunto the allegation out of Habakuk is pertinent: for the Prophet attributing unto faith the obtaining and poſſeſſing ſpirituall life, doth conſequently attribute unto the ſame the meanes of getting that righteouſneſs which is the onely cauſe of life, Galat. 3.26.

V. 18. ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs] Under ungodlineſs are comprehended all ſinnes repugnant to the firſt Table; under unrighteouſneſs all ſinnes againſt the ſecond Table.

who hold] The Greek word ſignifieth a forcible holding; and we may render it an enſlaving the truth by their perverſeneſs and malice; whereby ſhe is ſo let and hindered that ſhe cannot exerciſe her command over their actions.

the truth] By truth, he meaneth all the light which is left in man ſince the fall; eſpecially thoſe common notions of God, his nature, power and will, imprinted in man by nature; as alſo the knowledge of morall good and evill.

in unrighteouſneſs] That is, unjuſtly ſmothering the truth; or that do contrary to all juſtice and equitie, which requireth that we give unto God that belongeth unto him. And they may be ſaid truely to withhold the truth in unrighteouſneſs, who ſuppreſs it, forcing their own minds as knowing better than they do, like Medea in the Poet, Video meliora proboque, Deteriora ſequor.

V. 19. manifeſt in them] Or, to them. That is, in the inwards of their mind or conſcience; or elſe in them, that is, among them; namely, their wiſe and learned ones, who did leave a number of clear and judicious Eſſayes and Sentences hereof in their writings, although they did contrary to the ſame.

hath ſhewed] Partly by the light of nature in their conſciences, partly by the conſideration of the creature of God, whereby his attributes are evidently notified, and after a ſort taſted and felt, Pſal. 34.8. Pſal.19.2. Pſal.148.4,5,6. Act.14.17. Act.17.27.

V. 20. ſo that they are] Or, that they may be.

without excuſe] The Apoſtles meaning is not, that God gave them that knowledge to that end and purpoſe to make them unexcuſable: for they might catch even at that for an excuſe: neither doth he intimate that they being led by that divine light of nature might thereby come into favour with God, but that their own reaſon did condemn them of wickedneſs both againſt God and men: Or, he ſo farre revealed the truth unto them that they cannot be excuſed, viz. before the righteous judgement of God, as if they had not known that which either they did, or might have known.

V. 21. as God] As it belonged to the divine Majeſtie, according to that very knowledge they had of him.

vain] By the curioſitie of their conceits, being fallen off to vaine apprehenſions of God, and of his worſhip, which they framed not according to the knowledge they had of God; but ſuitable to the diſpoſitions of their perverted minds, in deviſing ſo many ſtrange and different worſhips; and in ſetting up ſo many fabulous and idle deities, whereby the knowledge of God became ſtill more and more obſcured.

imaginations] Or, diſputes, or reaſonings.

darkened] Ephes. 4.18.

V. 22. Profeſſing] He ſpeaketh of the Philoſophers and Wiſards among the heathen, who carried a ſemblance of wiſdome in their diſcourſes, and ſeemed to be much better minded than others; but yet did ſtill follow the perverſeneſs and vanitie of others.

V. 23. And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God, &c. Pſal.106. 20. Ezek.8.10.

V. 24. wherefore] The contempt of Religion is the fountain of all miſchief.

God] For their ſuperſtitions, and the diſhonour they offered to him, he abandoned them, and did not bridle their ſwarving deſires; but let them have their full ſwinge: and moreover by his juſt judgement more and more deprived them of thoſe gifts of nature which they abuſed and ſlighted.

gave them up] As a juſt Judge, leaving them over to Satan who tempted and led them to all iniquitie: as they diſhonoured God by their Idolatrie, ſo God made them ignominious; delivering them up to the unclean ſpirit and their own naturall corruption.

uncleanneſs] Idolatrie being ſpirituall uncleanneſs, is commonly followed with corporall; as you ſhall ſee theſe two ſinnes joyned together, Numb. 25. 1,2. Revel. 17. 1,2,10. As on the contrary, religious Kings, as namely Aſa, reformed both theſe abominations together, 1 Kings 15. taking away both the Idols, and male ſtews.

through the luſts] Or, in the luſts.

between themſelves] Or, in themſelves.

V. 25. more than the Creator] Or, beſides. For though they ſometimes worſhipped the true Creator, yet their idolatrous worſhip of the creature farre exceeded it. Or, more than, in this place is not taken comparatively, but excluſively; as when Chriſt ſaith in the parable, The publican went home rather juſtified, than the phariſee: the meaning is, he went home juſtified, and not the other: ſo the Apoſtles meaning in this place ſeemes to be, They worſhipped the creature, and not the Creator: at the leaſt the major part did ſo, if not all.

V. 26. vile affections] That is, diſhonourable: for as we are exhorted, 1 Theſſ.4.4,5 to poſſeſſe our veſſels in honour; that is, to keep our bodies from all uncleanneſs: ſo on the contrary, thoſe that give themſelves unto uncleanneſs, diſhonour both themſelves and their bodies; eſpecially thoſe who are active and paſſive in ſuch filthineſs as the Apoſtle afterwards inſtanceth in.

againſt] Or, beſide.

V. 27. And likewiſe alſo the men, &c.] Gen.19.5. Lev.18.22.

V. 28. to retain] Or, to acknowledge.

a reprobate minde] Or, a minde void of judgement. Into a perverſe and froward minde, whereby it cometh to paſſe that the light of conſcience being once put out, and having almoſt no more remorſe of ſinne, men runne headlong into all kinde of miſchief. The word in the Originall ἀδόκιμος, may be taken either actively or paſſively; actively, for a mind which diſapproveth all good courſes, or doth not prove or try good or bad; nor put difference between that which is vile, and that which is honourable; or paſſively, for a minde diſallowed of God: and ſo in this ſenſe it is a metaphor taken from Goldſmiths trying metals, and making choice of that which is good and precious, and rejecting and reprobating that which is vile.

V. 29. unrighteouſneſs, &c.] The Apoſtle here reckoneth divers kinds of vices; not that every man is ſubject to all theſe, but ſome men to all of them, and all to ſome of them: and therefore that none may ſtand upon his innocencie before God, but that all need, and muſt flie to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt.

envie, murder] In the Originall there is an elegant Paronomaſia, as in the verſ. following; which as it ſheweth the lawfull uſe of rhetoricall figures in Sermons & holy diſcourſes; ſo the very affinitie of the of the words may give us occaſion to conſider how eaſie it is to fall from one of theſe vices to the other; for he that is ἀσύνθετος, that is, underſtandeth not the nature and conditions of covenants, will ſoon be ἀσυνθέτος, that is, a covenant-beaker: and he that is tranſported with envie, hath for the moſt part his feet ſwift to ſhed blood: as Cain firſt was guiltie of φθόνος, that is, envie, and after of φόνος, murder: firſt he envied his brother Abel, and after ſlew him, Gal.5.21.

malignitie] Or, ill conditions. That is, an evill diſpoſition; ſuch a perverſitie of minde and nature as is apt to conſtrue all things to the worſt.

V. 30. haters of God] Or, hated of God. The word in the Original, θεοστυγεῖς, may indifferently be rendred haters of God, or hateſull to God, and hated of him; yet ſeeing the Apoſtle here rehearſeth the moſt hainous and raigning ſinnes among the Gentiles, the former ſignification ſeemeth beſt to fit the text. Pſal.81.15.

deſpightfull] Gr. injurious.

V. 31. without naturall affection] Or, unſociable. The Greek word implyeth properly the affection and love which is between parents and children; and the ſinne here taxed by the Apoſtle, did likewiſe reign among the Gentiles, who ſacrificed in ſome places their aged parents, and ſometimes their children unto their Idols; expoſed them to ruine, and deſtroyed them, though not guiltie of any capitall crime. 2 Tim.3.3.

implacable] Or, truce-breakers.

V. 32. have pleaſure in them] Or, conſent with them. Approve and commend them, Pſal.10.3. Pſal.49.18. This is even the higheſt pitch of wickedneſs, not only to do evill, but alſo to take delight in ſeeing it committed by others: ſuch come neare the malignitie of the devil, who takes pleaſure in evill, becauſe evill, and inſtigateth others to the like without any bait of a falſe ſeeming good, or ſenſual pleaſure, which in other ſinnes blindeth men, and allureth them to the commiſſion thereof.

CHAP. II.

Verſ. 1. Therefore thou] Or, wherefore thou. He convinceth them which would ſeeme to be exempt out of the number of other mens faults, and faith, that they are leaſt of all to be excuſed; for if they were well and narrowly ſearched, as God ſurely will ſearch them, they themſelves will be found guilty in thoſe things which they reprehend and puniſh in others: ſo that in condemning others, they pronounce ſentence againſt themſelves.

that judgeſt] That doſt check, correct and puniſh others. Here the Apoſtle taxeth ſuch among the Gentiles, as either were lawgivers and Judges among them; or led a more ſtrict and auſtere life than the reſt, as ſome of the Philoſophers did; whereby they ſeemed to judge and condemn the practice of others, when as yet they were inwardly full of hatred, envie, arrogancy, &c. and committed the ſame ſinnes in ſecret, when they thought they could hide them from the eye of man: all theſe mens ſeeming wiſdome and juſtice ſerves but to condemne them; and therefore though they thought themſelves exempted from the ordinary ſort of men, yet they are in the ſame, or a worſe condition, with them: and if they will be ſaved, muſt have recourſe to the only righteouſneſs of the Goſpel, ſeeing that their own is nothing but a vizard or falſe ſhew.

for wherein thou judgeeſt another, &c.] Matth.7.2.

V. 2. we are ſure] Gr. we know.

truth] That is, uprightly and juſtly; not according to the outward appearance, but as things are indeed. God regardeth not the outward ſhew and profeſſion of leading a virtuous and commendable life, but ſtrictly examineth the heart and the thoughts, words and works, proceeding from thence. Joh.7.24. Luk.16.15.

V. 4. deſpiſeſt thou] Haſt no care at all to employ the ſame to the right and proper uſe, which is to give thee ſpace of repentance, and afford thee many inducements thereunto; but contrarily thou doſt profane them, and draweſt occaſions from them to ſtrengthen thy ſelf in evil, as if thou ſhouldeſt never be puniſhed, becauſe God hath ſo long tolerated thee.

riches] That is, the multiplicity and variety of Gods outward bleſſings. A phraſe uſed by the heathen alſo, as we may ſee in Simplicius his Diſputation de bono & malo. ὁ σπάτος τῆς τῶ σοφίαν θησαυρὸς ἐκπαλλόμενος. Here the Apoſtle eſpecially argueth againſt thoſe who were of opinion, that their caſe ſtood not ill with God, forasmuch as God bleſſed them many wayes in this world, and gave them abundance of wealth and honour, as he did to the Romanes above other people, who had the command over all nations.

repentance] Sith the Apoſtle ſpeaketh as yet of men under the law of nature, without the light of the word of God, and the efficacy of the ſpirit of regeneration, amongſt whom there could be no true or ſaving converſion unto God: it ſeemeth that repentance here ſignifieth only an outward forbearing of groſſer ſinnes, and changing their vicious courſes into ſuch as were morally honeſt and commendable. Or it may be meant alſo of true repentance: For the favours of God allure men to their dutie to God; Hoſ.11.4.

V. 5. treaſureſt up] See Jam.5.3. Heapeſt up Gods judgements upon thee in manner of a treaſure, which increaſeth ſtill by daily addition.

Wrath] That is, puniſhment, which ſhall be at the laſt day inflicted to the full.

day] and the day of. The laſt day, when God ſhall reveale and judge the ſinnes of all men, even thoſe which are moſt ſecret, 1 Theſſ.1.7,8. Rev.20.12,13.

revelation] Gr. Tec. the retribution.

V. 6. Who will render, &c.] Pſal.62.12. Matth.16.27. Revel. 22.12.

V. 7. by patient continuance] Gr. according to patient continuance. That is, perſeverance with an equall and conſtant tenour of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe according to the commandment, Deut. 27.26.

glory] Which followeth good works: which he layeth not out before us, as though there were any that could attain to ſalvation by his own ſtrength; but by laying this condition of ſalvation before us, which no man can performe, to bring men to Chriſt, who alone juſtifieth beleevers, as he himſelfe concludeth, Chap.2.21, 22. following.

V. 8. contentious] Gr. them of contentiouſneſs. Kicking and ſtriving againſt the righteouſneſs of God, Hoſ.4.4. chiefly by alledging and objecting their own righteouſneſs, and outward obſerving of diſcipline, which is uſuall with hypocrites.

truth] The light and knowledge of morall good imprinted in their ſoules by nature, Rom.1.18,19.

indignation, and wrath] Gr. Tec. wrath and indignation.

V. 9. Tribulation] Or, affliction.

doth evil] Gr. worketh out evil.

Jew firſt] Though God inflicteth puniſhment indifferently upon all tranſgreſſors, without diſtinction either of nation or perſon: yet for all that the judgement of God begins at his own houſe; and thoſe that have had more knowledge and do not accordingly, ſhall receive the heavier puniſhment: Amos 3.2. Luk.12.47. Matth.11.22. 1 Pet.4.17.

Gentile] Or, Greek.

V. 10. peace] By peace he meaneth according to the Hebrew ſignification of the word, happineſs, health, and ſalvation, worketh good] Or, doth good.

Gentile] Gr. Greek.

V. 11. there is no reſpect, &c.] Deut. 10. 17. 2 Chron.19.7. Job 34.19. Act.10.34. Gal.2.6. Epheſ.6.9. Coloſſ.3.25. 1 Pet.1.17.

reſpect of perſons] That is, he regardeth not the qualitie or outward condition; he meaſureth not men by their countrey, nation, power, riches, or honour; either to receive them, or to caſt them away. The Greek word ſignifieth as well countenance, as perſon, and the ſenſe comes all to one; for by countenance we are to underſtand the outward appearance of men in the world, or thoſe things by which men are outwardly valued and eſteemed: Acts 10.34. 1 Sam.16.7.

V. 12. periſh without law] Be judged and condemned by the teſtimony of their own conſcience.

V. 13. not the hearers, &c.] Matth.7.21. Jam.1.22.

hearers] Not thoſe who only know the law, and boaſt of it, and fulfill it not. For as much then as the law cannot bring ſalvation to man by the knowledge and profeſſion of it, as the Jews do beleeve; and none among them can be found who liveth anſwerable to his knowledge: it followeth that the Jews are comprehended in the ſame malediction with the Gentiles, and have as much need to ſeek to Chriſt for righteouſneſs as they.

juſtified] Shall be pronounced juſt before Gods judgement ſeat, which is true indeed if any ſuch could be found that had fulfilled the law; but ſeeing Abraham himſelf was not juſtified by the law, but by faith; it followeth that no man can be juſtified by works.

V. 14. not the law] That is, the written law; for they have the law of nature imprinted in their ſouls.

things contained in the law] Gr. the things of the law. To wit, to reſtrain the outward man, and ſtirre up in him a deſire of virtue and morall honeſty, and preſcribe and follow ſome things which God commands in his law.

law unto themſelves] In commanding or forbidding that which the law of God commands and forbids.

V. 15. their conſcience alſo bearing witneſſe] Or, the conſcience witneſſing with them. Becauſe the conſcience is nothing elſe but the correſpondencie of the ſpirit of man unto the law, to bind or looſe him; to accuſe or excuſe him; to condemne or abſolve him; therefore ſince the Gentiles have a conſcience, they muſt have a law alſo.

their thoughts] Or, their reaſonings. Chap.1.21.

the mean while, &c.] Or, between themſelves.

excuſing one another] Gr. defending.

V. 16. when God] Gr. Tec. in which God.

my goſpell] As my doctrine witneſſeth, which I am appointed to preach. From this text of Saint Paul it ſeemed that the ancients tearmed the writings of Saint Paul by the name of his Goſpel: as namely, Clemens in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians: Take bleſſed Pauls Epiſtle into your hands; mark what he writeth in the beginning of his Goſpel: τί πρῶτον ὑμῖν ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἐγραψεν.

V. 17. Behold, thou] Gr. Tec. But if thou. From hence forward ward the Apostle deales especially against the Jews that boasted still of their off spring, their knowledge of the law of God, their circumcision, and other outward advantages whereon they relyed; and proveth that they are no more to be justified by these before God, then the Gentiles are by the law of nature.

makest thy boast of God] Or, glorieſt in God.

V. 18. approvest the things that are more excellent] Or, trieſt the things that differ. Or indifferent: that is, thou art able to judge what things are commanded, what things are forbidden, or what is truly good, which thou art to follow, in stead of that falſe good which carnall reaſon or ſenſe doth preſent unto thee, Phil. 1. 10.

inſtructed out of the law] Gr. catechiſed out of. Luk 1. 4. Gal. 6. 6. Word for word according to the Gree, catechiſed from a child; carefully taught and tutored.

V. 19. guide of the blinde] Wiſe men onely in Scripture are termed Seers, הָרֹאֶה (Exod. 23. 8. The gift blindeth the wiſe, (Hebrew) the Seers) all fooles are blinde.

V. 20. babes] Thoſe that have little or no knowledge, like children, Matth. 11. 25. 1 Cor. 13. 11. In this ſenſe the word is alſo taken by the heathen, as in that proverbiall ſpeech delivered by Heſiod. πολὺ δ' ἐν νηπίοις ἄμεινον.

forme of knowledge] The way to teach and informe others in the knowledge of the truth; for the word in the originall is not μορφὴ but μόρφωσις, which ſignifieth a pattern to work by; or a perfect frame; not onely of what belongeth unto the true ſervice of God in it ſelf, but likewiſe of all that which we comprehend and judge of it in our ſelves; it may be rendered a fet manner or modell of knowledge.

V. 21. doſt thou ſteal] That is, by ſubtile and ſiniſter wayes and practiſes draw the goods of others unto thy ſelf; which the Jews were ever much taxed withall, and ſtill are at this day.

V. 22. commit ſacrilege] Some here make a queſtion, why the Apoſtle changeth the word, and ſaith not as before; Thou which ſaiſt a man ſhall not ſteal, doſt thou ſteal? Thou which ſaiſt a man ſhall not commit adultery, doſt thou commit adultery? So here, thou which abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit idolatry? he ſaith not ſo, but, Doſt thou commit ſacrilege? varying the crime: Hereunto a double anſwer may be given; firſt, that the Apoſtle uſeth an aggravation, as if he ſhould ſay, Thou which abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit a worſe ſin, to wit, ſacrilege? Secondly, it may be anſwered, That idolatry is ſpirituall ſacrilege, becauſe it robbeth God of his honour; for if by the imperiall law in the Code, titulo de crimine ſacrilegii, it is defined ſacrilege, Imperatori eripere quod ejus eſt, to take away from the Emperour any thing that is his; it ought to be much more accounted ſacrilege to take away from God that which is his.

V. 23. breaking] Gr. tranſgreſſing.

among the Gentiles] Or, in the Gentiles.

through you] For you ſake, by your ſins and the ſins of your forefathers.

as it is written] Iſa. 52. 5. Ezek. 36. 20, 23.

V. 25. keep the law] Gr. do the law.

breaker] Gr. tranſgreſſer.

V. 26. righteouſneſſe of the law] Gr. righteous ordinances of the law.

counted for circumciſion] Shal not the uncircumciſed be in as good ſtate as if he were circumciſed? Not that the Apoſtle doth abſolutely reject circumciſion before it was abroliſhed, but he here dealeth with the Jews that followed the doctrine of the Phariſees, and placed their righteouſneſſe in keeping the outward and ceremonial worſhip of God; otherwiſe circumciſion was a ſigne and ſeal of the juſtification by faith, Rom. 4. 11. and was fulfilled, and conſequently abolished by Chriſt, together with other ceremonies and ſhadows.

V. 27. fulfill the law] He ſpeaketh not as if there were any that had fulfilled in all reſpects, for that is expreſſely denyed, Rom. 3. 9. but this he ſaith to convince the Jews, that they muſt as well as the Gentiles ſeeke for righteouſneſſe out of themſelves, in Chriſt, who alone hath fulfilled the law.

V. 28. outwardly] Gr. openly.

outward in the fleſh] Gr. openly in the fleſh.

V. 29. inwardly] Gr. in ſecret.

not the letter] In any outward ſigne or ceremony, which are like unto ſome writing or picture, without any power, life, or motion, Rom. 7. 6. 2 Cor. 3. 6, 7.

not of men, but of God] That is, hath not its originall from the abilities or works of men, but from God, who wrought the ſame in them by his Spirit, Rom. 9. 16. 1 Cor. 3. 7. 2 Cor. 4. 6. or which hath the approbation, not of man, but of God, 2 Cor. 10. 18.

CHAP. III.

Verſ. 1. Advantage] Since both Jew and Gentile lie both under the ſame malediction, and the Jew in regard of his greater knowledge and outward profeſſion of obſerving the law, if he fail in the practiſe thereof, (as he proved in the former Chapter, the beſt of them do) is like to receive more and ſmarter ſtripes, what benefit or preferment hath the Jew above the Gentile?

profit] If ſo be that there is no vertue in it, for want of the perfect obſervation of the law, wherein Circumciſion was but a holy ſigne.

V. 2. chiefly] Or, firſt.

chiefly] Foraſmuch as the Jews have received of old the promiſes of God in Chriſt, whereof the Circumciſion was a Seal, according to the true order of God, Rom. 1. 11. They had the firſt offer: and this is the chiefeſt and foundation of all other advantages, which the Apoſtle doth ſet forth more at large, Chap. 9. 4. Epheſ. 1. 11, 12.

Oracles of God] The inſtruments, deeds, and evidences of the covenant, contained in the writings of Moſes and the Prophets, Pſal. 147. 19, 20. Acts 7. 38. The oracles of God were committed to the Jews, that is, intruſted as a pawn or precious pledge, which they have kept and preſerved for the whole Church; and in this regard St. Auguſtine and others of the Fathers terme the Jews Scrinarios Chriſtianorum, the Regiſters or Record-keepers of the Chriſtians; for they, diſperſed among all nations, bear as it were before them the Scriptures, thoſe glaſſes whereby we Chriſtians clearly ſee the right way to heaven, and their manifold errours and wanderings.

V. 3. faith of God, &c.] That is, if any do ſay that this advantage was loſt by the unbelief of a great part of the people; the anſwer is, That the faithfulneſſe of God and his promiſes and covenants were ſtill verified and performed in his elect, in whoſe behalf they were made, notwithſtanding their manifold deſects, which God always ſupplyeth by his grace and mercy, and thereby his glory was the more illuſtrated.

V. 4. God forbid] Gr. be it not, or, farre be it from us ſo to think or ſay.

yea, let] Or, but let.

let God be true] That is, be confeſſed and acknowledged true in maintaining of his covenant, and fulfilling his promiſe, notwithſtanding the unbelief of ſome, and the unworthineſſe of all.

every man a liar] Pſal. 116. 11.

That thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings] Pſal. 51. 4.

juſtified] Acknowledged to be righteous and faithfull.

overcome] That is, found ſo clear, and without blemiſh in thy dealings, that all mouthes ſhall be ſtopped, Pſal. 107. 42. David judgements, that all mouthes ſhall be ſtopped, Pſal. 107. 42. David breakes out into this confeſſion upon the conſideration of his ſinne againſt God, and the promiſe of forgiveneſſe which Nathan had declared unto him.

judged] Or, judgeſt. The Greek bears it either way, but the Hebrew Text requires the active rather, which alſo doth better agree with the ſcope of Paul; which is to ſhew, that God remaineth pure and righteous ſtill in judging, that is, in puniſhing the ſinnes of men in the children of diſobedience, according to their deſerts, as alſo in pardoning according to his promiſe; which is likewiſe an act of Gods juſtice, though it be done in mercy, Matth. 12. 20. and the truth of God in keeping his promiſes, is alſo expreſly called juſtice and righteouſneſſe, in Scriptures. Pſal. 143. 10. 1 Joh. 1. 9.

V. 5. taketh vengeance] Gr. who inferreth or inflicteth anger.

Speak as a man] I ſpeak not theſe words in mine own perſon, as though I thought ſo; but this is the talk of mans wiſdom, which is not ſubject to the will of God.

V. 6. God forbid] See Verſ. 4.

How ſhall God] How is it poſſible that there ſhould be iniquity in God, the Soveraign Judge of all the world; whoſe will is the abſolute rule of juſtice?

V. 7. through my lye] Or, in my lye.

V. 8. not rather] The Apoſtle anſwereth to the former objection by way of diſdain: as if he ſhould ſay, Why, if this objection were of any force, might not as well the proſane wretch break out into this extremity of impudence, why then let him lay up as much matter of glory as may be by the boundleſſe multitude of all manner of wickedneſſe? But there is not that deſperate ſoul in the world that dares go thus farre; for the conſcience of the moſt wicked, diſtreſſeth unto them, that they ſhall be judged according to the manifeſt and publique law of God, as the rule and ſquare of all their actions, and not according to his ſecret providence, which ordaineth the permiſſion of ſin it ſelf for certain ends, but much different from thoſe of men.

damnation is juſt] By theſe words the Apoſtle ſheweth, that he is ſo farre from approving of ſuch conſequences as were made by profane ſlanderers of the truth of God, mentioned verſ. 7, 8. that he threateneth them with the judgement of God, that make them.

V. 9. No in no wiſe] Gr. not altogether.

proved] Gr. charged.

under ſinne] Guiltie of ſinne, under the power and penalty of ſinne.

V. 10. written] By all theſe places the Apoſtle proveth, that not onely the Gentiles, but the Jews alſo are unrighteous in themſelves before God; moſt of them ſpeak of the unregenerate among the people of the Jews, among whom there was always a very great number; and therefore theſe reproofs of the prophets were ſtill in force, and the Apoſtle makes uſe of them; to ſhew, that without the grace of God, and the ſpeciall working of the Spirit, all are lyable to them.

There is none righteous, no not one] Pſal. 14. 1, 2, 3.

V. 11. there is none that ſeeketh after God] Pſal. 53. 2.

ſeeketh after God] Or, ſeeketh out God.

V. 12.

Chap. iij. Annotations on the Epistle of Paul to the Romanes. Chap. iij.

V. 12. become unprofitable] Unfit to do any good, like rotten and unſavory things that are caſt out of doores. The Prophet takes his ſimilitude from corrupted wines, or meats putrified and unſavory, good for nothing.

V. 13. Their throat is an open ſepulchre, &c.] Pſal. 5. 9.

the poiſon of aſps is under their lips] Pſal. 140. 3.

V. 14. whoſe mouth is full of curſing and bitternesſe] Pſal. 10. 7.

V. 15. Their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood] Prov. 1. 16. Iſa. 59. 7, 8.

V. 16. Deſtruction] Or, conſtrition, according to the Greek; that is, breaking all to pieces; the word deſtruction is not here taken paſſively, but actively, for that deſtruction they bring upon others.

V. 17. way of peace] To live quietly themſelves, and to let others live quietly by them; they know not how to lead an innocent and peaceable life.

V. 18. There is no fear of God before their eyes] Pſal. 36. 1.

fear of God] The fear of God is the ground and fountain of all other vertues, with the want whereof the Apoſtle concludeth, not as if the vices above mentioned did always break out with like force in all naturall men, but becauſe the corrupt fountain of all theſe is within them, and that ſome of them are ever ro be diſcerned in their life and converſation. See Gen. 20. 11. Mal. 3. 5.

V. 19. under the law] Under the ſpeciall juriſdiction of it, or under that outward covenant, whereof the law was as it were the contract or condition to be performed on their parts. Theſe words are uſed by the Apoſtle, to ſhew, that he chargeth theſe points home upon the Jews; and them eſpecially, becauſe God ſpeaketh to them directly and immediately in his word by the prophets.

mouth may be ſtopped] That is, ſilenced. Theſe things I propound after this manner, that not only the Gentiles, but the Jews alſo, a nation ſo much priviledged by God above others, might humble themſelves in the confeſſion of their ſinnes, and in the acknowledgement, that all the good that is in them dependeth on the ſole mercy of God.

guilty before God] Or, ſubject to the judgement of God.

V. 20. Therefore by the deeds] Becauſe man is utterly diſabled by ſinne to fulfill the law, either naturall or written, it can neither be a ground of hope, nor argument unto him, either of righteouſneſſe or of life: all the efficacie which it hath, is to diſcover unto him his iniquity, and without Gods mercy in Chriſt, to ſeal up his condemnation, Gal. 2. 16.

no fleſh] Fleſh is here taken for man, as in many other places; and ſurthermore hath her greater emphaſis; for it is, put to ſhew the contrariety betwixt God and man; as if you would ſay, Man who is nothing but a piece of fleſh, deſiled with ſin, and God who is a pure Spirit, and moſt perfect in himſelf.

juſtified] That is, abſolved before the judgement ſeat of God, and acquitted from ſinne and damnation, and ſo to be accounted righteous; ſo the word is taken, Job. 9. 20. Rom. 8. 33, 34. Gal. 2. 16, 17. It cannot be here taken for making juſt, by infuſing righteouſneſſe or holineſſe; for there would be then no ſenſe nor truth in the words, if we thus interpret them, no fleſh can have righteouſneſſe infuſed into it before God.

in his ſight] Here is a ſecret ſetting of the righteouſneſs which is before men, be they never ſo juſt, againſt the righteouſneſs which can ſtand before God: now there is no righteouſneſs can ſtand before God, but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt onely.

V. 21. But now] After the coming of Chriſt, God hath clearly revealed the true righteouſneſs, which he hath appointed and given unto man for his juſtification, according to the doctrine of all the prophets, viz. that of Chriſt, imputed to all that receive it by a lively faith, without any conſideration of the works of the law (in the point of juſtification) either naturall or written, and without any difference of nations, be they Jews or Gentiles.

V. 22. faith of Jeſus chriſt] Gr. Tec. in Jeſus chriſt. Which we yeeld to Jeſus Chriſt, or which faith reſteth upon him.

difference] Gr. diſtinction.

V. 23. all have ſinned] The remedy is common to all indifferently, becauſe on the other ſide the malady of ſinne is common unto all.

come ſhort] The Greek word ſignifieth properly to remain behind, or to come too ſhort of getting ſomething, as the prize in running of races; ſo likewiſe do all men come ſhort, that ſeek to obtain everlaſting life by their works.

glory of God] By the glory of God is meant that mark which we all thoot at, that is, everlaſting life; which ſtandeth in this, that we are made partakers of the glory of God. Or, by the glory of God, is meant his image after which we were created, for ſo the word glory ſeemeth to be taken, 1 Cor. 11. 7.

V. 24. juſtified] From thenceforward the Apoſtle deſcribeth all the cauſes, and the proprieties of juſtification revealed unto us in the Goſpel; the firſt and ſupreme cauſe is the undeſerved grace and favour of God; the moving and meritorious cauſe is redemption and reconciliation purchaſed by Chriſt; the inſtrumentall cauſe whereby the ſame is imputed, is faith in the blood of Chriſt; the finall is the glory of God in the declaration of his righteouſneſs and faithfulneſs; the property is, that all humane boaſting is excluded by it.

freely] Of his free gift and meer liberality.

through] Or, by.

redemption] The word is ſometime taken in a larger ſenſe for all manner of deliverance, but here it doth properly imply ſuch a deliverance as is brought to paſſe by purchaſing or paying of a ranſome, according as Chriſt himſelf ſpeaketh, Matth. 20. 28. 1 Cor. 7. 23. 1 Pet. 1. 18.

V. 25. ſet forth] Or, fore-ordained. Firſt, in the eternall counſell, and after in the execution of the ſame in the fulneſs of time; and laſtly, by preaching of the goſpel, 2 Tim. 1. 9, 10, 11. 1 Pet. 1. 20, 21, 22.

propitiation] Or, propitiatory, oblatory or mercy ſeat: for the Apoſtle ſeemeth to allude to the mercy-ſeat or propitiatory made of pure gold, which covered the ark of the covenant, in which the tables of the law lay; which is called כַּפֹּרֶת, (the word here uſed) Heb. 9. 5. and it was a type of Chriſt, who by his puriſie and obedience covereth our tranſgreſſions of the law, from the ſight of God, and reconcileth us to him.

in his blood] The name of blood calleth us back to the figure of the old ſacrifices, the truth and ſubſtance whereof is in Chriſt.

for] Or, by.

remiſſion] Or, paſſing over.

that are paſt] Of thoſe ſinnes that were committed when we were his enemies.

through the forbearance] Gr. in the forbearance. Through his patient & ſuffering nature; or, word for word according to the Greek, in the forbearance or the time of his patience; that is, when God did ſhew forth his goodneſs in ſuſpending his judgements upon the world, not ſuffering them to periſh for their ſinnes, although he had not as yet fully opened the treaſure of his grace for an abſolute pardon, the clear manifeſtation whereof he reſerved for the time of the Goſpel, Rom. 16. 24, 26.

V. 26. at this time] Or, in this preſent ſeaſon.

that he might be juſt] That all might learn to acknowledge and approve this new way of proceeding of the juſtice of God in juſtifying him that is a ſinner in himſelf, by faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt. Or, the word juſt is here taken for true and faithfull, or, him who obſerveth ſtrict juſtice, who would not juſtifie man by any means, but by full payment and ſatisfaction.

which believeth in Jeſus] Gr. which is of the faith of Jeſus. In the Greek, word for word, juſtifying him who is of the faith of Jeſus; that is, who is of that number who renounce all confidence in their own works, and ſeek life and ſalvation by faith in Jeſus.

V. 27. boaſting] Who is he that can or dare boaſt of juſtification before God by his own righteouſneſs? 1 Cor. 1. 31. Eph. 2. 9.

law of faith] That is, the precept or doctrine of faith, which, according to the Hebrew manner of ſpeaking, is called a law, Iſa. 2. 3. Or by that new order or covenant of God which doth ſtrip man of all worth and righteouſneſs of his own, and cloath him by grace with that of Chriſt.

V. 28. conclude] Gr. collect; or, gather by argument.

deeds of the law] Or, works of the law. Not onely ſuch as were done before his converſion, but after the ſame alſo, as is proved by the Apoſtle in the next Chapter, by the example of Abraham and David.

V. 29. God of the Jews onely] God is ſaid to be their God in the Scripture phraſe, who are in covenant with him; whom he dearly loveth and tenderech.

V. 30. which] Or, who.

circumciſion] That is the circumciſed Jews: as likewiſe by uncircumciſion he meaneth the uncircumciſed Gentiles.

by faith] Or, of faith.

by faith] According to the originall. Of faith, or, out of faith. The Apoſtle ſeems to diſtinguiſh of theſe two kindes of expreſſions, Of faith, and, Through faith; attributing the former to the Jews, the latter to the Gentiles; the former to the Jews, in whom, though they were adorned with many good qualities and graces above the Gentiles, yet God had onely regard to their faith, and out of that conſideration received them to mercy; the latter, to the Gentiles, who through faith paſſed as it were into a new ſpirituall eſtate.

V. 31. void] Do we utterly caſſate the law, and make it of no force or validity?

we ſtabliſh the law] Gr. Tec. we make it valid and ſufficient. In the edition of Tecla it is inanis, that is, we make the law ſufficient and effectuall to that end for which it was given: but if we read ſolidus, that is, we confirme and eſtabliſh the law; then the meaning is, we demonſtrate by the goſpel how firme and irrevocable it is, ſeeing God made Chriſt under the law, to make ſatisfaction to the law to redeem man; & by his fulfilling the law, to purchaſe to him a right to the life it promiſeth; Matth. 5. 17, 18. Gal. 4. 4. Moreover, God doth ſo renew thoſe that are juſtified by him, through the Spirit, that they endeavour to regulate their life according to all Gods commandments, Rom. 8. 1, 2, 3. Not that thereby they may be juſtified before God, but partly to performe their duty, and to teſtifie their thankfulneſs unto him for this his inеſtimable benefit, and partly to be themſelves more and more aſſured of their juſtification in ſuch ſort as the Apoſtle after declareth, Chap. 6, 7, 8.

CHAP.

CHAP. IIII.

Vers.1. What shall we say then] That is, Seeing then that al men are under condemnation and cannot be justified, but by faith without works, Rom.3.28. it followeth that Abraham himself, the father and chief of all those that enter into the covenant of grace, was not justified in any other manner. For although he did so much excell his progenie, yet he did not obtain life and glory by his own works, and that therefore his children cannot claime more advantage than he.

as pertaining to the flesh] These words may be either referred to the father of us Jews according to the flesh finde ? if they be referred to the later word, found, the meaning is, what found he according to the flesh, that is, according to his works that are seen outwardly, as the verse following doth declare, and the word flesh is also so taken, Phil.3.4.

found] Got, or obtained, as the word is taken, Hosea 12.8. and Matth. 11.29.

V. 2. if Abraham] The reason stands thus, if Abrabam had obtained any thing by way of justification by his own works, he should have had somewhat whereof to glory before God: but he hath nothing, for the justification by faith which he obtained, vers.7. doth strip men of all self-glory, Rom.3.27.

V. 3. Abraham believed God] See Gen.15.6. Gal.3.6. Jam.2.23. that is, the promise of God to be his shield, and great reward, and to give him an heir of his own body, Gen.15.4,5. and to multiplie his seed, whereby not onely his numerous posteritie is to be understood according to the flesh, but chiefly Christ his Sonne, in whom all generations of the earth were to be blessed: see hereafter, Vers.11,12, 13. Gal.3.16.

V. 4. Now] Or, but.

to him that worketh] In opinion or hope to obtain or merit justification by his work: or to him that worketh, that is, goeth about this way of works, and grounds himself thereon, and expects thereby the reward of life promised in the Law.

not reckoned of grace] Or,according to favour.In case he should have fulfilled the condition propounded of perfect obedience.

but of debt] Not indeed of an absolute merit, & as a naturall equivalence, which can never be between God and man, nor betwixt the work and the reward: because there is no proportion at all,neither in the persons, nor in the actions: but onely by virtue of that voluntary covenant of God, Do this and thou shalt live.

V. 5. worketh not] That is, who not able to fulfill the condition of works, nor grounding himself thereon, taketh the other way to be saved, viz. that of faith in the mercy of God towards sinners, whereby righteousnesis is bestowed upon him, and he clothed therewith,and by virtue of the same absolved from sinne and condemnation.

justifieth the ungodly] That maketh him who is wicked in himself, just in Christ.

his faith] Not considered in it self as a work, but in its relation to Christ, and as an act of receiving him, and lively applying him to himself, according as eating nourisheth, thacts, the meat eaten, Esa. 55.1. Rom.5.18,19. 1 Cor.1.3.

for] Or, to.

V. 7. Saying, Blessed] See Psal.32.1. In the beginning of the 32. Psalm: the argument which the Apostle draws from thence is undeniable. For, he that is justified by his works, the same hath no need at all of any pardon of sinne to make him thereby blessed ; and he who prayeth that God would not impute his sinne unto him,the same prayeth withall,that God would impute unto him the righteousnesis of Christ, in regard thefe two cannot be separated in the judgement of God. See Rom.3.24. and 5.19. Eph.1.7.

V. 9. Cometh this blessedness] This pronouncing or making blessed. Whereby it appears that the word, to pronounce blessed, and to make blessed, is taken by David for one and the same thing, and the reason is, that the ground and foundation of our blessednesis lyeth in the forgiveneis of our sinnes, and the imputation of Christs righteousnesis.

sign of circumcision] Gr.Tec. he received circumcision, the seale.That is, circumcision which is a sign,as we say,the Sacrament of Baptisme, for, Baptisme which is a Sacrament.

a seal] Circumcisionwas called before a sign in respect of the outward ceremony, now S. Paul theweth the force and substance of that sign, that is, to what end it is used ; that is, not onely to signifie, but also to seal the righteousnesis of faith : whereby we come to possess Christ himself: for the holy Ghost worketh that inwardly and indeed, which the Sacrament, being joyned with the word, doth outwardly represent.

might be the father] God was pleased so to disposse both of the sign and the time with Abraham, to shew that the Gentiles as well as the Jews are to be reputed true children of Abraham, and compriſed in the covenant made with him and his posterity, so they followed his faith ; whether they were circumcised, as during the time of the ceremonial law they were to be according to Gods order , or not circumcised , to wit, after that God in stead of that had institituted another Sacrament, to wit, Baptisme.

V. 13. heire of the world] That all the nations of the world should be his children. Or, by the world, may be understood , the land of Canaan; a most renowned and fruitfull part of the world. Or, the words may carry this fense, that he should be restored as a son of God into the same condition and degree which Adam had before his fall, to be Lord over all the creatures, which was figured out to Abraham by the possession of the land of Canaan, promised to him and his posterity, and is performed in part by the just and comfortable enjoying of the creature, which God doth give unto his children as members of Christ , but it shall be perfectly accomplished in the kingdome of heaven. See the 1 Cor.3.22,23. 1 Tim.4.3. Heb.1.2.

through the law] For works that he had done. Or, upon the condition that he should fulfill the law.

V. 14. of the law] If they be heirs, which fulfill the law.

V. 15. Because the law] It is cleare that these two means of getting righteousnesis cannot consist together; the law being altogether rigorous and requiring perfect obedience, or denouncing death and damnation to the transgressours: the promise on the other side is of grace and reconciliation, and acceptation of the will for the deed.

worketh wrath] Or , worketh out. That is, manifesteth the wrath of God against the transgression thereof, and bindeth over the sinner thereunto , and aggravateth sinnes through the perversenesis of mans nature, Rom.7.8.

for where no law is, there is no transgression] Gr. Tec. but if there be no law. as Chap.5.13. 1 Joh.3.4.

V. 16. Therefore it is of faith] Since the first way of obtaining life by the law which God hath proposed unto man, was by sinne not onely made unprofitable, but hurtfull and pernicious, there must of necessity recourse be had unto the other,which is by faith ; faith being the only virtue that can in this case stand with the free grace of God, in as much as faith doth not work by procuring and meriting, but meerely by receiving what is given and bestowed upon, Joh.1.12.

be sure] Or, firme. That is, grounded upon God and his immutable good pleasure, and on the perfect and everlasting righteousnesis of Christ , and not upon the variable and inconstant obedience of man, Ezek.16.61. Rom.9.11. and 11.19.

all the seed] Or, the whole seed.

V. 17. I have made thee a father] See Gen.17.6. Not of those only that should isiue from him according to the flesh, but also of those among all nations that by faith should be adopted and received into his spiritual family.

before him] Or , like unto him. That is, God, that is, by a spiritual kindred, which hath place before God, and maketh us acceptable to him, or according to a spiritual and divine fatherhood gained by faith , according to which God is able to make a child of Abraham when he pleaseth, Matth.3.9. even as of nothing he hath created all things and raiseth the dead : and after this fatherhood , he judgeth which are the true children of Abraham, that he approveth , whereas according to mans judgement none but the Jews could be counted such. If we read like unto him , then the meaning may be this, that as God is a Father, not only in regard of those which are already, but even of all such whom he shall create anew by his omnipotent word; so Abraham in some conformity thereunto hath heen the adopting father of the Gentiles, though as yet destitute of all spirituall life and faculties, requisite for the being of such his children , Ephes. 2.12. Lastly, if we reade the words (with some) before that he believed, which the Greeke will hardly brooke , then the meaning is , before the time that he believed , God made him, that is, designed him to be the father of many nations: and this the Apostle addeth ,that Gods promise dependeth not upon Abrahams belief ; as likewise, Rom.9. he proveth that the election of God depended not upon foreseen works, because before the children were born or had done good or evil, it was said, The elder shall serve the younger.

calleth those things] Maketh them to be by his word, and as it were calleth them to come forth and appear for that end to which he hath ordained them , as he did in the creation of all things , saying, Let there be light, &c. and in the miraculous raising from the dead; Damsell I say unto thee, arise; and, Lazarus come forth, &c.

V. 18. against hope] Or, besides. Besides or above all causes, arguments and appearances of naturall hope , such as carnall reason and understanding could afford.

in hope] Grounded upon the truth and power of God.

So shall thy seed be] See Gen.15.5.

V. 19. he considered not] Not as thereby to be weakened in his confidence , for otherwayes he had indeed objected his and Sarahs age. Gen.17.17. but howsoever he rested not upon the order of nature, according to which all hope of issue was taken from him; for true faith doth overcome all apprehensions of mans own disabilitie, by a lively perswasion of the truth of Gods promises.

now dead] Voyd of strength and unmeet to get children ; howsoever God afterward renewed strength and vigour in that kinde, Psal.103.5. See Gen.25.2,3.

V.20. staggered not] Or, doubted not of.

giving glory] Acknowledged and praised God as most gracious and true, and of infinite power to overcome all naturall difficulties, and to performe what he had promised , though never so contrary to the course of nature.

V. 21.

V. 21. what he had promised] Or, what was promised.

V. 22. for] Or, to.

V. 24. if we believe] Or, believing.

V. 25. our offences] Gr. fallings , or faults. To pay the ransome for our sinne.

our justification] God having declared by raising him from the dead, that he hath accepted of the death of his Son, as of a sufficient ransome for our sinnes : for if Christ had remained still under the power of death, his satisfaction could not have been perfect, neither could he have applyed the virtue thereof to us.We may also conceive Christs resurrection to be our justification after this manner. Christ was our true pledge , he therefore after he had satisfied for us by his death, returning unto life,gives us a cleare evidence, and affords us a sure argument that God was fully reconciled and life purchased for us. Which assurance we could not have had , if Christ our pledge had still remained under the power of death, forasmuch as his continuance in his payment would ever have argued the imperfection of it. See 1 Cor.15.17.

CHAP. V.

Vers.1. Therefore being] Another argument taken from the effect. We are justified by that which truly appeaseth our conscience before God, but faith in Christ doth appease our conscience and not the Law, as was before proved, therefore by faith we are justified and not by the Law.

peace with God] That is, reconciliation to him, whereby our consciences are quieted, out of a true sense & apprehension of his favour.

V. 2. By whom also we have access] See Ephes.2.18.

by faith] Gr. Tec. in faith. Whereas quietnes of conscience is attributed to faith , it is to be referred to Christ originally, who is the giver of faith it self, and in whom faith it self is effectuall, grounding it self upon him.

grace] Gr. Tec. this joy.

wherein we stand] By which grace, that is, by which gracious love and good will : or that state whereunto we are graciously taken.

rejoyce] Gr. glory.

hope of the glory] Here he preventeth an objection which might be made against him , by those who beholding the daily miseries and calamities of the Church , might thinke that the Christians dreame when they glory of their felicitie : to whom the Apostle answereth, that their felicitie is laid up under hope in another place,which hope is so certaine and sure , that they do no lesse rejoyce for that happinesis, than if they did presently enjoy it.

V. 3. tribulations] Or, afflictions.

knowing] See Jam.1.3.

tribulation] Or, affliction.

worketh patience] Gr, worketh out. Tribulation accustometh us to patience , and patience assureth us by experience of the goodnes of God , and this experience confirmeth and fastneth our hope which never deceiveth us. When the Apostle saith, tribulation worketh patience, we are not so to understand him , that of it self and its own nature it doth so, for it produceth a contrary effect in the wicked,but it doth so as it is sanctified to us by the Spirit, out of the consideration of Gods will, and our conformitie thereby to Christ. Rom.8.29.

V. 4. experience] Gr. proof or triall. In Greek δοκιμὴ, proof or triall, either of Gods favour to us, and the comforts of his spirit,or of our faith, which being much more precious than gold that is tried by the fire, is thereby found unto praise and honour, 1 Petr.1.7.

experience] Gr.proofe or tryall.

V. 5. The love of God] Not whereby we love him, but wherewith he loveth us. And this affords great comforts in adversitie, that our peace and quietnesis of conscience be not troubled; for he that so loveth them that were of no worth , and while they were yet in their sinnes, that he died for them , how can he neglect them being now sanctified and living in him ?

shed abroad] Or, hath been shed. The sense and feeling thereof is shed abroad in our hearts, for we have a sensible feeling that we are beloved of God,and we taste and see how good and gracious the Lord is, Psal.34.8.

V. 6. in due time] Or, according to the time, or season.To wit,when the fulnesis of time came , Gal. 4. 4. which was the fittest and most convenient time , and therefore is termed here καιρὸς , and 2 Cor. 6.2. the accepted time.

V. 7. yet peradventure for a good man] Some will have these words to be read with an interrogative point, and render them thus; scarce will one die for a righteous man , for even for a good man will any man easily undertake to die ? but if the words be to be read without an interrogative point , then the Apostles meaning is , that though it may be some may be found so couragious and kind as to undertake such a taske, as to die for another, be he never so good a man, yet it is a thing very rare, and that seldome happeneth.

V. 8. yet sinners] In the state of sinne, or, while sinne reigned in us, and we were wholly under the power of sinne. For otherwayes we are still sinners. For if we say, that we have no sinne, we deceive our selves, and there is no truth in us, 1 Joh.1.8. Yet we are not in the Apostles sense in this place sinners, or so reputed, because our sinnes are forgiven us,and sinne hath not now dominion over us ; because we are not under the law, but under grace, Rom.6.14. 1 Joh.3.8,9.

V. 9. from wrath through him] Some translate the words, from that wrath; and the originall will beare it, for it is ἀπὸ τῆς ὀργῆς , If we like of that translation, the meaning is , à futura ira , from wrath to come, Matth.3.7. But if there be not an emphasis in the article τῆς, then wrath is to be taken more generally;for the punishments of sinne as well in this life , as in the life to come ; which are the effects of Gods wrath.

V. 11. joy in God] Gr. glorying in God.

through] Or, by.

atonement] Or, reconciliation.

V. 12. Wherefore as] Here is the generall conclusion of the precedent discourse, concerning justification by faith;wherein the Apostle, briefly resuming what he had said, doth withall lay down the ground of it; which is, that God of his good pleasure hath appointed Christ to be the head of grace , and the fountain of justice and life to all his elect; by the imputation of whose righteousnesis they are restored to the favour of God, and consequently sanctified and glorified ; in like manner as Adam was made the head and root by nature of all mankinde ; whence by his sinne imputed to all his posterity, they became all under the curse of God; were deprived of originall righteousnesis, corrupted through their whole nature, and subject to death eternall.

by one man] Viz. Adam and Eve comprehended together in one; as they two were one flesh , and the common stock of all mankinde, Ephes.5.31. 1 Tim.2.14.

sinne] By sinne,is meant that disease which is ours by inheritance, and men commonly call originall sinne , for so he useth to call that sinne in the singular number; whereas when he speaketh of the fruits thereof, he useth the plurall number, calling them sinnes.

passed upon all men] Or, passed over to all.

for that] Or, in whom.

for that all have sinned] Gr. had sinned. Or, in whom, for the præposition ἐν is taken for in,in divers other places,as Mark 2.4. Joh.9.17, &c. And so the word in is used also by Saint Paul,treating of the same matter, 1 Cor.15.22. as in Adam all die; or elſe the words are to be transtated, forasmuch, or for that, all have sinned; and all comes to the same sense: for all that die, have not committed actuall sinnes in themselves; as it is plain in sone infants,that die before they come to the use of reason , and therefore can be said no otherwayes to have sinned, than in this one man in whose loynes they were , as Levi is faid to have paid tithes, being in the loynes of Abraham, Heb.7.9.

is not imputed] Gr. Tec. was not counted. Where there is no law made, no man is punished , as faulty and guilty. It we admit of the translation according to Tecl. edition, sinne was not imputed, till the law was given, then the Apostles meaning according to the interpretation of the Greek fathers, is, ἐκ ἔμελεν ἀνομίαν, that is, was not imputed in such sort; because there was no punishment set upon particular sinnes ; neither could the number and heinousnesis of sinnes be so exactly known.

there is no law] Gr. there being no law.

V. 14. Nevertheless] Gr. but.

is the figure] The first Adam, answereth the latter, who is Christ, as it is afterwards declared , Adam and Christ were like two roots or stocks, the one whereof, to wit,Adam, conveyed to his branches,sinne and death; but Christ, to all that are engrafted in him,righteousnesis and life.

V. 15. But not as the offence] Adam and Christ are compared together, in this respect, that both of them do give and yeeld to theirs, that which is their own : but herein they differ ; that Adam by nature , hath spread his fault to the destruction of many, but Christs obedience hath by grace overflowed to many.

many be dead] The word many is oftentimes in Scripture taken for all; as Dan.12.2. Many that sleep in the dust shall awake , that is, all; and Rom.8.29. First begotten among many brethren; and here vers.16. Of many offences to justification: for Christs bloud cleanseth us from all our sinnes, 1 Joh.1.9.and vers.19. By one mans disobedience many were made sinners , that is, all : so in this verse, through the offence of one man, many be dead,all are become liable unto death.

much more] Gr. Tec. much more therefore.

V. 16. And not as it was by one] Here the Apostle sets down a second difference between Adam and Christ , that by Adams one offence , men were made guilty ; but the righteousnesis of Christ imputed unto us freely, doth not only absolve us from that one fault, but from all other.

by one] Or, of one.

V. 17. if by one mans offence] Or, by one offence. The third difference is , that the righteousnesis of Christ being imputed to us by grace, is of greater power to bring life, and that a glorious and eternall life, wherein we shall reign with Christ; than the offence of Adam was to make his posterity liable unto death.

V. 18. by the offence of one] Or, by one offence.

judgement] that is, guilt.

by the righteousnesis of one] Or, by one righteousnesis. Gr. δικαίωμα. So Saint Paul styleth the obedience of Christ, as having virtue in it to justifie

to justifie others also, as the Greek word doth imply, and here it is set in opposition to the transgression of Adam, where in likewise there was a power to involve others, and make them culpable and liable to condemnation.

upon all men] Either all sorts of men indifferently, though not all universally; or to all that appertain to Christ and are engrafted unto him by faith.

justification of life] Not only, because our sinnes are forgiven us, but also, because the righteousnes of Christ is imputed to us.

V. 19. by the obedience of one] The Apostle leaves out the word man in this member, either for brevities sake; or, because Christ was not a meer man, as Adam was, but Θεάνθρωπος God and man in one person.

V. 20. Moreover] Or, but.

that the offence might abound] Chrysostome and Oecumenius, and the Greek Fathers generally observe, that the conjunction ἵνα, ut, is not taken, ἀποβατικῶς, causally, nor doth any way imply, that God gave his law to this end (See Rom. 1. 20.) that sinne might abound, but rather to diminish it, and keep men from it; they therefore thus paraphrase the words; By the coming in of the law, so it fell out, that sinne abounded through the corruption of mans nature, and per accidens not according to Gods intention. Others who take the conjunction causally make this sense: that the law came in through Gods appointment to improve the benefit of Christ, and make it much more glorious by the manifestation and declaration, how farre sinne had abounded, that is, the law entred, that the offence might appear much more to abound, for the greater illustration of Christs glory in taking it away.

grace did much more abound] Grace was powred so plentifully from heaven, that it did not only countervail sinne, but above measure passed it.

V. 21, reigned] See on Chap. 6. 21.

CHAP. VI.

Vers. 1. WHat shall we say then] Here the Apostle passeth from justification to sanctification, making his way by solving an objection framed after this manner, because where sinne abounded there grace more abounded, shall we from thence lewdly conclude, that we ought therefore still to abide in the state of sin and corruption, and let the reines loose to all manner of wickednes, that grace may still more and more abound? shall we like the Spider, suck poison from the sweetest flower of paradise, the doctrine of free justification? God forbid.

Shall we continue] Gr. Τες. Let us continue.

in sinne] That is, in that corruption, for though the guiltines of sinne be not imputed unto us, yet the corruption remaineth still in us, the which sanctification, that follows justification, killeth by little and little.

V. 2. God forbid] Gr. Be it not, or, by no meanes. See Chap. 3. 4.

How shall we] The benefits of justification and sanctification are alwayes joyned together inseparably, and both of them proceed from Christ by the grace of God: Now sanctification is the abolishing of sinne, that is, of our naturall corruption, into whose place succeedeth the clearnesse and puirenesse of nature reformed.

that are dead] They are said by Paul to be dead to sinne, which are in such sort made partakers of the virtue of Christ, that naturall corruption is dead in them; that is, the force of it is taken away so, that it bringeth not forth its bitter fruits: and on the other side, they are said to live to sinne, which are in the flesh; that is, whom the Spirit of God hath not delivered from the slavery of this corruption of nature.

V. 3. Know ye not] There are three parts of sanctification; to wit, the death of the old man, or sinne, his buriall, and the resurrection of the new man; derived from the virtue of the death, buriall & resurrection of Christ; of which benefits our baptisme is a Signe & Pledge.

that so many of us, &c.] Gal. 3. 27.

into Jesus christ] That is, by Baptisme are ingraffed into him, that growing up in one with him, we should receive his ſtrength to conquer the power of sin in us.

baptized into his death] That is, that we should be partakers not only of the merit of his death in our justification, but also of the efficacie of his death, in the mortifying our fleshly members.

V. 4. are] Gr. were.

buried with him by baptisme] See Colosſ. 2. 12. In this phrase the Apostle seemeth to allude to the ancient manner of Baptisme, which was to dip the parties baptized, and as it were to bury them under the water for a while, and then to draw them out of it, and lift them up, to represent the burial of our old man, and our resurrection to newnesse of life.

by the glory of the father] That is, by the glorious power of the father, as Lazarus was raised, Joh. 11. 40. Or else the preposition διὰ, is put for ἐκ; as likewise 2 Pet. 1. 3. he that called us διὰ, by glory, that is, ἐκ, to glory and virtue; and so some translate it here, raised From the dead to the glory of the father; that Christ himself being discharged of his infirmitie and weakneſs might live in glory with God for ever.

V. 5. planted together] By this elegant similitude the Apostle representeth unto us, That as Plants engraffed, receive moisture, and juyce from the Stock, whereby they sprout out and bear fruit; so we receive vigour from Christ, whereby we live spiritually, and bear the fruit of good works: and as a Plant that is set in the earth lyeth as dead and unmoveable for a time, but after springs up and flourisheth; so Christs body lay dead for a while in the grave, but sprung up and reflourished in his resurrection: and we also when we are baptized, are buried as it were in the water for a time, but after are raised up to newnesse of life.

likeness of his death] In so much as by the meanes of the strength which cometh from him to us, we so die to sinne as he is dead.

likeness of his resurrection] That is, as he arose from the dead to a new and heavenly life, so we rise from dead works to walke in newnes of life.

V. 6. old man] All our whole nature, as we are conceived and born into this world with sinne, which is called old, partly by comparing that old Adam with Christ, and partly in respect of the deformitie of our corrupt nature, and the disability to do any good. It is called our old man, because it sets on work all the faculties of our minde, and members of our body, as if it were our very selves, and because as the Greek fathers note, ὡς ἴδιοις αὐτοῦ ἢ μᾶλλον συμφυῶς καὶ ἀναγκαίως, because we make much of it, and love it as our selves, or more than our selves.

crucified with him] Our corrupt nature is attributed to Christ, not in deed, but by imputation. The Apostle saith, our old man is crucified, because through the merits of Christ crucified, we obtain the holy Spirit, which crucifieth our old man; for Christ by his death hath merited to us, and for us, not only remission of sinnes, but also the spirit of regeneration, whereby our corrupt affections are mortified, and we renewed in the spirit of our mindes.

body of sinne] That naughtinesse which sticketh fast to us, and is as neer unto us as our flesh; or he termeth it the body of sinne, because it hath a reall subsistence in us of it self, as if it were a body; or thirdly, because this corruption is not in one part or member, but diffused through the whole; neither is it seen and descryed in the breach of one commandement, but of all, making a kinde of body of wickednes consisting of many parts.

might be destroyed] Gr. Τες. should be destroyed.

not serve sinne] That is, the end of our sanctification, which we shoot at, and shall as length come unto, when God shall be all in all.

V. 7. freed] Gr. justified.

V. 8. now if] Or, but if.

V. 9. dieth no more] For he therefore died, that he might destroy death, both in himself and in his members.

V. 10. he died unto sinne] He died unto sinne, not in regard of himself, for he knew no sinne, but as charged with the sinnes of the elect, and in the name of his Church, that he might expiate and take away the sinnes of all that beleeve in him.

liveth unto God] That is, with God, or, To the glory of God, or in the sense our Saviour saith, Luk. 20. 38. that Abraham, & Isaac, & all the faithfull live To God; that is, though they appear not to live to men, yet they live to God; that is, in his account, and before him.

V. 11. reckon] Or, account.

V. 12. Let not sinne] He taketh sinne, either indefinitely for any sinne, or for sinne which is the genus to originall and actuall; or he taketh it, according to S. Austines interpretation, lib. de nup. & concupisc. for concupiscence or the originall corruption that is in us, which (saith he) is called sinne, quia à peccato facta est, sicut vocatur lingua (saith he) quia facit lingua, manus vocatur scriptura quam facit manus; locutio quam facit lingua, as our speech is called our tongue, because the tongue uttereth it; and as our writing is called our hand, because our hand maketh or draweth it. Howbeit we must not so understand S. Austins words, as if it were only in that respect called sinne; for it is all three, both the ſrughter of sinne, and mother of sinne, & sinne it self; the daughter or effect of Adams sinne in us, the mother of all actuall sinnes, and formally sinne it self, because repugnant to the law, which saith, Thou shalt not lust.

reigne] By reigning S. Paul meaneth that sovereaigne or highest rule which no man ſtriveth against, or if any do, it is in vain: or, Let not sinne reign, that is, not have the upper hand of the motions of Gods Spirit within you, Rom. 8. 13, 14. Galat. 5. 16, 17, 18.

in your mortall body] This is not said, as if evill lusts were in the body alone, or as if they had the originall only from it, and not from the soul; for Christ reacheth the contrary, Matth. 15. 19, 20. but he cause these evill lusts do most of all shew and manifeſt themselves in and through the body, Gal. 5. 19. Or, the words may bear this interpretation, Let not sinne reign in your mortall body, that is, while you live this bodily life here, which being subject unto death, it appeareth thereby, that there are some remnants of sinne yet behind to be ſtriven against, that we may mortifie and destroy them more and more.

yield] Gr. offer up.

V. 13. instruments] Gr. as arms, or weapons. He ſtily compareth our members, that is, parts of our body, and faculties of our minde, either to such tools as artificers work withal, or weapons wherewith soldiers fights; for as those, so these may be used well or ill. For example, with the same hand one man giveth an alms, and another ſtealeth; with the same tongue one blesseth, and another curseth.

yield]

yield] Or, offer up.

instruments] Gr. arms, or weapons.

V. 14. For sin ſhall not have dominion, &c.] He granteth that sin is not yet so dead in us, that it is utterly extinct, but he promiseth victory unto them that contend manfully against it, because we have grace given us, which worketh in us so effectually, that the law is not now to us the power and instrument of sin, but the rule of righteousnes.

V. 15. under the Law] To be under the law and under sin, signifieth all one in respect of them which are not sanctified; as on the contrary, to be under grace and righteousnes, agreeth to them that are regenerate. Now these are contrary, so that one cannot agree with the other, therefore let righteousnes expel sin.

V. 16. to whom you yeeld your selves, &c.] See John 8. 34. 2 Pet. 2. 19.

V. 17. form of doctrine] Gr. mould. The word in the Original signifieth most properly a pattern or mould, and the Apostle would have us thereby to understand that the doctrine of the Gospel is such a pattern or mould which we are cast into, that we may be formed and fashioned like unto it.

which was delivered you] Gr. whereto ye were delivered.

V. 18. of righteousnes] Gr. to righteousnes.

V. 20. from righteousnes] Gr. to righteousnes.

V. 21. What fruit had ye then] The Apostle in this verse deterreth from sin by a threefold argument, drawn from the three parts of time, past, present, and to come. Sin for the time past hath proved unfruitful; (what fruit had ye then;) for the time present shameful; (whereof ye are now ashamed;) for the time to come pernicious and deadly, (for the end of these things is death.)

end] Or, reward.

V. 22. unto holinesse] Or, unto sanctification.

end] Or, reward.

V. 23. For the wages of sin is death] That is, the reward due unto sin. The comparison is taken from Souldiers in war, who at the end of their service, receive their pay or stipend. By death we are to understand, not onely temporal, but eternal, death; as appeareth by the opposition that it hath here to eternal life.

but the gift of God] Or, free gift. By the gift here many understand the gift of sanctification or righteousnes, which is set against sin in the other member, and they say, the Apostle affirmeth this gift to be eternal life, because it bringeth or hath for its end eternal life: but it may be referred to eternal life it self, which is here termed, not the wages of righteousnes, but the free gift of grace; as St. Augustine acutely obſerveth, lib. de grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 9. The Apostle, saith he, might have said, The wages of righteousnes is eternal life: but he altered the phrase of set purpose, and chose rather to say, The gift of God is eternal life; ut hinc intelligeremus non pro meritis nostris Deum nos, sed pro sua misericordia vocave: unde dicitur in Psalmo, Coronat te in miserationo: that we might from this change of the phrase learn that God calleth us not to eternal life for our merits, but for his mercies sake; whence it is said in the Psalms, He crowneth thee in mercy and compassion.

CHAP. VII.

Vers. 1. KNow ye not] By propounding the similitude of marriage, he compareth the state of man both in sin and after regeneration together: the law of matrimony, saith he, is this, that so long as the husband liveth, the marriage abideth in force; but if he be dead, the woman may marry again.

over a man] He saith not over the husband, or over the wife, but ἐπὶ ἀνθρώπου, hominis, a word which signifieth either sex, and may be applied to either; to teach us that both are subject to the law of wedlock while they live.

V. 2. the woman, &c.] 1 Cor. 7. 39.

V. 3. she ſhall be] Gr. Τες. the wife or woman.

V. 4. Wherefore my brethren] Here he applieth the former similitude; as it fareth with the wife whose husband is dead, and the free to marry again, so it is with us; for now we are joyned to the Spirit, as it were to the second husband, by whom we must bring forth new motions: we are dead in respect of the first husband; but in respect of the latter, we are as it were raised from the dead.

dead to the law] We are not onely dead to the law, but the law also is dead unto us, because it cannot thrust out its sting at us, either to curse us, or to provoke us unto sin; the law hath no more power over us than dead men in either of these respects.

body of Christ] In as much as his body was mortified and crucified for us; by which his mortification, he obtained to us remiſſion of sins, and the holy Spirit; whereby our flesh, or rather sin dwelling in our flesh is mortified in us.

forth fruit] He calleth the children which the wife beareth to her husband, fruit, Psal. 127. 3. As in the salutation of the Angel, Christ is called the fruit of the Virgins womb: Blessed art thou, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb.

unto God] Which are acceptable unto God: or if by fruit he understandeth not children, as before, but good works; then to God is here understood, to the glory of God; as Matth. 5. 16. Let your light so ſhine before men that they may see your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in heaven. See Phil. 1. 11.

V. 5. were in the flesh] When we were in the state of the first marriage; which in the next verse he calleth, The oldnes of the letter; or by flesh he meaneth the carnal observations of the law, concerning meats and drinks, and leproſie, and the like: or when we were in the flesh, that is, when the flesh was not mortified in us by the Spirit, but was yet lively and strong in us, Chap. 8. 8.

motions] Gr. passions.

by the law] He saith not, of the law, but by the law; because the spring of sin which dwelleth within us, takes occasion to work thus in us by reason of the reſtraint that the law maketh: not that the fault is in the law, but in our selves.

V. 6. delivered] Or, ſhifted.

that being dead wherein we were held] Or, he being dead in whom we were held. The Greek Scholast readeth ἀποθανόντος, he being dead to that which held us, to wit, the law, or sin; from which we were freed by Christ. Others read ἀποθανόντες, he being dead; that is, the reigning power of the law and of sin being abolished in us; by the death and spirit of Christ, the reign of sin being destroyed in true beleevers, there ceaseth withal that accidental effect of the law, which is to provoke and stir up the malignitie of sin in us. Or he being dead, that is, the old man, of whom he speaketh in the former Chapter, verſ. 6. Our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin: and this sense is very agreeable to the main scope of the Apostle.

in newnesse of Spirit] As becometh them which after the death of their old husband are joyned to the Spirit, as whom the Spirit hath made new men; Or in newnesse of the spirit, that is, in true holinesse, whereunto we were renewed in the spirit of our minds by the preaching of the Gospel, which is called the ministration of righteousnes, and of the spirit, 2 Cor. 3. 3, 9. Ephes. 4. 23. Whereas the law wrought nothing else but that it shewed man his duty, as a writing or picture, without imparting unto him any lively or efficacious abilitie to perform: wherefore also that old means of attaining righteousnes and holinesse is now abolished, as of it self unprofitable and impotent.

oldnesse of the letter] Either by the letter he meaneth the law in respect of that old condition. For before that our will be framed by the holy Ghost, the law speaketh unto us but as to deaf men, and therefore it is dumb and dead to us as touching the fulfilling thereof. And in the word oldnes he insinuateth also the abolishing thereof in regard of the unsufficiency thereof, Heb. 8. 13. Or by the oldnes of the letter he understandeth the old corruption, which by the outward letter of the law is more and more stirred and provoked in us, in as much as the law thought it condemned the sinner, yet it affordeth no power at all to abolish or destroy sin; in which regard it is called a killing letter, and the administration of death, 2 Cor. 3. 7.

V. 7. Is the law sin] Because he had said before, verſ. 5. that the motions of sin which were by the law had force in our members; lest any should mistake his meaning and from thence infer that he condemned the law, as being a kind of factour for sin; he opportunely here moveth a doubt after this manner; What then, is the law the cause of sin? or are the law and sin all one? or do they agree together? No, saith he, sin is reproved and condemned by the law, but because sin cannot abide to be reproved, and was not in a manner felt until it was provoked, and ſtirred by the law, it taketh occasion thereby to be more outragious, yet by no fault of the law.

not known lust] Or, concupiscence. Bylust, in this place he meaneth not evil lusts in particular, which flow from concupiscence; but rather the corrupt fountain from which they spring: for the very heathen Philosophers themselves condemned wicked lusts and unclean desires; but as for the fountain of them, they could not so much as suspect it, and yet it is the very seat of that naturall and uncleane spot and filth.

Thou ſhalt not covet] Exod. 20. 17. Deut. 5. 21.

V. 8. Sin wrought in me concupiscence] These words seem to be contrary to the words of St. James; (Jam. 1. 15.) for Saint James saith, Lust bringeth forth sin, but Saint Paul here, that sin brought forth, or wrought in him concupiscence. But they may be easily reconciled: for they take not the words in the same sense. For Saint Paul by sin, as before hath been shewed, understandeth the corruption of our nature and proneneſs to sin, which produceth in us actual lusts, called by him all kind of concupiscence: but Saint James by lust understandeth the pravity of our appetite, and by sin outward actual sins; in which sense if we construe their words, the Apostles are so far from contradicting one the other, that they both affirm the self same thing though diverſly expreſſed.

concupiscence] Or, lust.

was dead] Though sin be in us, yet it is not known for sin, neither doth it so terrifie the conſcience, nor ſtir up our natural concupiscence, nor rage after such sort in our members, as after the law is known, and in these regards it is said to be dead.

V. 9. For] Gr. But.

alive without the law] When I knew not the law, then methought I lived indeed; for my conscience never troubled me, because it knew not my malady: or while the law stood aloof off (as it is often so taken) and was not brought home to my conscience, I thought my self in a good condition.

I died] That is, I felt my conscience deadly wounded, whereas before I was secure and thought my self in a safe way, though I pursued my former lusts.

V. 12. holy, just, and good] Holy because it teacheth holiness, and forbiddeth all wickednes and uncleanness: just, because it punisheth all sinful lusts: good, because it was given to direct us into the paths of life. Or the Epithit holy, may have a reference to the ceremonial law; just, to the judicial; and good, to the moral.

made death to me] That is, the cause of death, to this the Apostle answereth, That the law is not the cause of death, but our corrupt nature being therewith not onely discovered, but also stirred up, and taking occasion thereby to rebel. For the more things are forbidden our corrupt nature, the more it desireth them; Nitimur in vetitum: and from hence cometh guiltiness and occasion of death, Prov. 9. 17.

God forbid] So Chap. 3. verf. 4.

might become exceeding sinful] That sin might shew it self to be sin, and spit forth, as it were, all its venome; ἵνα φανῇ ἁμαρτία ἁμαρτία διὰ τῆς ἐντολῆς κατ' ὑπερβολὴν ἁμαρτωλός.

V. 14. For we know] Hitherto the Apostle spake of the power of the law & sin in corrupt & unregenerate man, as he also himself found it by his own experience in his former state, verf. 9. But now he proceedeth and speaketh of himself as he was sin ce his conversion, and declareth what power the remainder of sin had over him still after that now he was delivered from the dominion thereof.

the law is Spiritual] Given by the Spirit, and requiring a Spiritual and heavenly life and disposition; but men such as they be born, are bondslaves of corruption.

But I am carnal] In part, in regard of the remainders of the flesh that are in me: for that the regenerate also in respect of some weakness that is yet remaining in them may be called carnal, is evident, 1 Cor. 3. 4.

sold under sin] Not as a willing slave to obey and follow the desire of sin in all things, as it is said of Ahab, 1 Kin. 21. 20. but as a Captive yet detained, though his ransom be paid; as one that against his will and purpose is yet subject to the assaults and lusts of sin, not being able wholly and entirely to rid himself of them, although he do vehemently resist them, and often subdue them by the Spirit of God that is within him, Gal. 5. 17, 18.

V. 15. I allow not] Gr. know not. My actions answer not every way, nay, they are contrary to my will, therefore by the consent of my will to the law and repugnancy of my actions thereunto it appeareth evidently, that the law and a right ruled will do perswade one thing, but corruption, which hath her seat also in the regenerate, another thing.

What I would] It is to be noted that the self same man is said to will and not to will in divers respects; to wit, he is said to will in that, that he is regenerated by grace, and not to will, so far as he is not regenerated; but such as he was born of his parents: howbeit, because the part which is regenerated at length becometh conqueror, therefore St. Paul sustaining the part of the regenerated, speaketh in such sort, as if the corruption which sinneth willingly were something without a man, although afterwards he granteth that this evil is in his flesh, or in his members. See 1 John 3. 6, 9.

V. 17. no more I, but sin] That natural corruption which cleaveth fast even to them that are regenerated, and is not quite conquered. He speaketh this for the comfort of himself and others who groan under the servitude of their natural corruption, and that he would infer is this, that he standeth not in fear to be rejected of God for these remains of sin in him; because God judgeth of his children that are thus divided between flesh and spirit, according to the better and founder part, which is that of the spirit as most prevailing within them, and unto which they do most heartily and willingly adhere, which hath likewise a subsistence and root of permanent life; and not according to the flesh, which they renounce and resist, and which by little and little decaies in them, and in the end is reduced to nothing.

that dwelleth in me] That is, as yet remaineth in me, but disarmed of that mortal sting of condemnation, by Christ: as also of its power and dominion, by his spirit; being now no more but a trouble to the faithful, Heb. 12. 1. Therefore these three things ought to be well distinguished, the dominion of sin, the habitation, and the combat: the first is abolished in true beleevers, the other two remain yet for their exercise and humiliation.

V. 18. dwelleth no good thing] He denieth good to dwell in us, but affirmeth sin to dwell in our flesh, because we sin continually, and thereby contract an habit which hath a permanent abode in the soul.

V. 20. do it] Or, perform it.

V. 21. I find then a law] Here followeth the conclusion of the Apostles discourse, which is this; that as the law of God exhorteth to goodness, so doth the law of sin; that is, the corruption whereby we were born, forcibly inclines us to wickednes: but the Spirit, that is, our mind, in that, that it is regenerate, consenteth to the law of God; but the flesh, that is, the whole natural man, is a bondslave to the law of sin; therefore wickednes and death are not of the law, but of that corruption which so reigneth in them which are not so regenerated, that they neither will nor do good, but will and do evil continually; but in the regenerate though it reigneth not, yet it abideth and striveth against the spirit or law of the mind, so that they can neither do so well as they would, nor be so void of sin as they desire, Gal. 5. 17.

V. 22. I delight in] Gr. I am delighted with.

after the inward man] The inward man and the new man are all one, and are answerable and set up contrary to the old man; neither doth this inward man signifie mans mind and reason, and the old man the powers that are under them; but by the inward man is meant whatsoever is either without or within man, from top to toe, so long as that man is not born anew by the grace of God.

V. 23. the law of my mind] Mind is not here taken for the understanding part of the soul, as it is naturally in us from our birth: but for the whole soul of man, as it is renewed by the Spirit of God. Ratio recta est ratio lumine Spiritûs sancti directa.

V. 24. O wretched man] It is a miserable thing to be yet in part subject to sin, and to be wearied with continual conflicts; but we must cry to the Lord, who will by death it self at length make us absolute conquerours, as we are already conquerours in Christ, Rom. 8. 37.

Who shall deliver me] That is, O that I were out of this animale and earthly life; wherein I must suffer sin yet to remain with me, by which I am subject still to the necessity of death! O that I were translated to come! Rom. 8. 21. Phil. 1. 23.

from the body of this death] Or, from this body of death. That is, from these carnal lusts which are a death unto me, or threaten my spiritual life, and which are called the body of death, as Rom. 6. 6. the body of the old man, which are here called the body of death, as Rom. 6. 6. the body of sin (see there the note.) Or else by the body of death is here meant our mortal body subject to death by reason of sin, Rom. 8. 10. because our mortal body shall never be perfectly delivered from these remainders of sin, and our captivity under it, till we shall have laid down this mortal body of ours.

V. 25. I thank God] That he hath delivered me from the curse of the law, and the dominion of sin; and hath promised also perfectly to free me from all the power of sin by translating me into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

I my self] The Apostle rankeith himself among them that groan under the yoke of sinful corruption: for as Saint Jerome, and Saint Augustine doth testifie against the Pelagian Hereticks; this is the true perfection of them that are born anew, that they are sensible of their infirmities and corruptions, and confess as well in truth as humility that they are imperfect.

serve the law of God; but with the flesh, the law of sin] How may this be that the Apostle should serve the law of God and the law of sin; seth no man can serve two contrary masters? I answer, that we must distinguish either of faculties, so far forth as renewed, or not; or of times. The Apostle doth not say that in the same part, or with the same faculty as renewed, he serveth the law of God, and the law of sin; as namely, that in or with the mind as renewed, he serveth the law of God and sin; but that in or with the one as renewed, he serveth the law of God, but in or with the other as not renewed the law of sin. Neither doth he say that at the same time he serveth both the law of God and the Law of sin: but that though ordinarily, and for the most part he serveth the law of God; yet that sometimes through the strength of corruption he is as it were enforced against his will, to serve the law of sin.

CHAP. VIII.

Verf. 1. THere is therefore] A conclusion of all the former disputation from verf. 16. Chap. 1. to this place; seeing that we being justified by faith in Christ, do obtain remission of sins, and imputation of right cousnes, and are also sanctified by the Spirit: it followeth from hence that they that are engrafted into Christ by faith are out of all danger of condemnation.

who walk not] The fruits of the Spirit, or effects of sanctification, which is begun in us, do not engraffe us into Christ, but declare that we are engrafted into him.

after the flesh] By the flesh he understandeth the carnal state of sin and corruption, in which all men are born, and naturally follow before they are regenerated by grace; and those are said here not to walk after the flesh who follow not the flesh for their guide: for he is not said to live after the flesh that hath the holy Ghost for his guide, though sometimes he step awry.

V. 2. For the law] That is, the power and authority of the Spirit which is set in opposition to the tyranny of sin. Here the Apostle preventeth an objection, seeing that the virtue of the Spirit, that is in us, is so weake; how may we gather thereby that there is no condemnation to them who have received that virtue? because, saith he, that virtue of the quickning spirit which is so weak in us, is most perfect and mighty in Christ, and being imputed to us which believe, causeth us to be accounted of as though there were no reliques of corruption and death in us.

Spirit of life] That is, the Spirit which mortifieth the old man, and quickeneth the new man, whereby those who are regenerated lead a new and spirituall life.

in Christ Jesus] That is, which is perfectly and absolute in Christ, and resides in him as the head, and from him hath influx to all the members. This spirit is as a law commanding us, and appointing what we ought to do, and how to carry our selves thorough our whole life.

From the law of sinne and death] There is in the words a figure like that, pateris libavit & auro, id est, pateris aureis: so here, the law of sinne and death, that is, a sinne bringing death and killing the soul: and as before he termed the power of the spirit the law of the spirit; so here he calleth the power of sinne the law of sinne; because like a law it commands evill actions, and ruleth in the children of disobedience.

V. 3 For what the law could doe] He useth no argument here but expoundeth the mystery of sanctification, which is wrought in us: for because, saith he, that the virtue of the law was not such by reason of the corruption of our nature, that it could make man pure, perfect, and free; and for that it rather kindled the fiery malady of sinne, than put it out, and extinguished it: therefore God clothed his Son with flesh like to our sinfull flesh, wherein he utterly abolished our corruption, that being accounted thoroughly pure and without fault in him, apprehended and laid hold on by faith, we might be found to have fully that singular perfection, which the law requireth; and therefore that there might be no condemnation in or to us.

in that it was weak] Not of it self, but through our fault.

through the flesh] Or, by. In men not born anew by the Spirit, whose disease the law augmented it; but neither did, nor could heal.

in the likenes of sinnefull flesh] Gr. flesh of sinne. Christ tooke our nature upon him with all our naturall affections; yet without sinne: and therefore the Apostle here saith, God sent his Son in the likeness of sinfull flesh, not in the likeness of flesh, as if he had not taken true flesh upon him, but in the similitude of sinfull flesh: thus acutely Saint Augustine also distinguisheth: Non in similitudine carnis, quasi caro non esset caro, sed in similitudine carnis peccatisquæ caro erat, sed peccati caro non erat.

for sinne] Or, by a sacrifice for sinne. Either there is an Ellipsis, and the word θυσία is to be understood, as it is in the Translation of the Seventy, Luk. 4. 5. and also in Saint Paul, Heb. 10. 6. ᾧ οὐκ εὐδόκησας θυσίᾳ καὶ ὁλοκαυτώματα, for in sin thou hadst no pleasure; that is, in sacrifices for sinne thou hadst no pleasure: and then the meaning is evidently this; God abolished, and utterly destroyed sinne in the flesh by the expiatory sacrifice for sinne, which Christ offered upon the Crosse. Or we are thus to render the words, for sinne, he condemned sinne in the flesh; that is, he condemned our sinne in the flesh of his Son: of sin; viz. of that capitall crime: that it was the meritorious cause of the death of Christ who was most innocent. Or because it had wrought death in man by that which was good, and by occasion of the law became above measure sinnefull, Rom. 7. 13.

in the flesh] Or, of sin.

V. 4. righteousnes of the law] The very substance of the law of God might be fulfilled, or that same righteousnes which the law requireth, that we may be found just before God. For if with our justification from sin there be joyned that active obedience of Christ which is imputed to us, we are just before God according to that perfect form which the law requireth.

V. 5. they that are after the flesh] They that are in their carnall state of sin and corruption, which we drew from the loines of our first parents: or they that are led by the flesh, and follow it in the lusts thereof.

V. 6. to be carnally minded is death] Gr. the minding of the flesh, or the wisedome of the flesh. The word in the originall is, φρόνημα which sometimes is rendred the desire, or affection; sometimes mind or meaning; sometimes wisedome: and in all these senses that which the Apostle here calleth φρόνημα σαρκὸς, is death; that is, tendeth to death, or bringeth death: as on the contrary, the desire, affections, and wisedome of the spirit are life, and peace; that is, tend to life, and procure our peace.

to be spiritually minded] Gr. the minding of the spirit, or, wisedome of the spirit.

V. 7. the carnall mind is enmitie against God] Gr. the minding of the flesh, or, wisedome of the flesh.

V. 8. they that are in the flesh] The Apostle here by this phrase meaneth not those that are married, as Siricius the Pope absurdly interpreted this Scripture, and wrested it to the disparagement of holy wedlock in the Clergie: nor doth hee thereby understand all that are clothed with flesh: for then no men upon earth should please God; but to be in the flesh, and to be after the flesh, and to may, and walke after the flesh, signifie one and the same thing; to remain still in our carnall estate, and to be led by the motions and lusts of the flesh. Those that are so led, till God give them a better guide, and deliver them out of their corrupt estate by nature, cannot please God.

Now if] Gr. But if.

V. 10. if Christ be in you] He confirmeth the faithfull against the reliques of flesh and sinne, granting that they are yet (as appeareth by the corruption which is in them) touching one of their parts which he calleth the body, an impure lump, which is not yet purged from earthly filthines and death: but therewithall willing them to doubt nothing of the happy success of this combate, because that even this little sparke of the Spirit, that is, of the grace of regeneration, which appeareth to be in them by the fruits of righteousnes, is the seed of life, 1 Joh. 3. 9.

because of sinne] Gr. for sinne.

because of righteousnes] Gr. for righteousnes.

V. 11. shall quicken your mortall bodies] He speaketh either of the resurrection from death, or regeneration. For although the work of the Spirit quickening us be principally wrought and felt in our soul, yet the virtue of it is derived also into our body, as the instrument of our soul. Therefore the Apostle exhorteth, Chap. 12. verf. 1. That we give up our bodies as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God. Chap. 6. verf. 12.

by his Spirit] Or, because of his Spirit.

V. 12. we are debtors] Here followeth an exhortation to subdue the flesh daily more and more, by the virtue of the Spirit of regeneration; because, saith he, you are debters unto God forsomuch as you have received so many benefits from him.

V. 15. ye have not received the spirit of bondage] He declareth and expoundeth by the way in these two verses; by what right this style to be called children of God, is given to beleevers: because, saith he, they have received the grace of the Gospel; wherein God sheweth himself not as before in publishing of the law terrible and fearfull, but a most benigne and loving Father in Christ: so that with great boldnes we call him Father, the holy Ghost sealing this adoption in our hearts by faith. By the spirit of bondage he meaneth the operation of the Spirit of God by the law, which doth cast down and affright the hearts of men by the dreadfull threatnings against transgressors; as we see in the Israelites when God did proclaime the Law of the Tenne Commandements in their hearing upon the Mount, Exod. 20. 19. which the Apostle hath an eye unto here, as likewise Heb. 12. 18, 19.

The spirit of adoption] Gal. 4. 6. By the spirit of adoption, he understandeth the gracious operation of the holy Ghost by the preaching of the Gospel, which quickens the hearts of true beleevers, and assureth them of their adoption.

whereby we cry] Gr. in whom, or, in that we cry. With an holy boldnes, sweetly and tenderly calling on our heavenly Father, and importuning him as his children.

Abba, Father] Abba signifieth Father in the Syriack tongue, and the Apostle kept it of purpose, it being a word implying much tenderness and affection; it being also used by children almost in all languages, when they begin to speak: and he joyneth here the word, mother, father, unto it, not onely to explain the former word, but also the better to express the eager and earnest and vehement desire and affection of the faithfull in their calling upon God, as Christ himself redoubled the word Father to the same purpose, Mark. 14. 36. he said Abba, Father, &c. and on the Crosse likewise, he doubled the words, My God, my God. The Syriack interpreter transfected Abba, our Father, and a learned interpreter truly noteth, that sometimes the Article ὁ which is here prefixed to Father, hath the power and signification of an affixe, and if it be so, then it should seeme the Apostle here alludeth to our compellation of God in the Lords Prayer, Our Father, &c.

V. 16. beareth witnesse with our spirit] The holy Ghost doth not onely stirre us up to call upon God as our Father, but doth also seal unto our hearts, that we are truly his children: thus the spirit testifieth to our spirit; (as some render the words) but if we translate them, beareth witnes with our spirit; the meaning is, that the Spirit witnesseth together with our own spirit, which doth likewise help to bear witnes by observing the proper marks of Gods adoption, which our spirit findeth in our selves by the Spirit of God. This witnes though it be not alwaies alike evident and powerfull in true beleevers, yet it doth oftentimes manifest it self, even when they are in their lowest estate and greatest extremity.

V. 17. then heires] Partakers of our fathers goods, and having a right to his kingdome, and that freely, because we are his children by adoption and grace.

if so be that we suffer with him] Now Saint Paul teacheth, by what way the sonnes of God come to that felicity, to wit, by the crosse, as Christ himself did, and therewithall openeth unto them three fountains of comfort: the first, that we have Christ a companion and fellow of our afflictions: the second, that we shall be his fellows also, and co-heirs with him in everlasting glory: the third, that this glory we look for, doth a thousand parts surmount the misery of our present affliction.

V. 18. For I reckon.] Gr. Tec. but I reckon or count.

that the sufferings of this present time] Word for word, according to the Greek, of this new season. Whereby the Apostle intimates two things: first, that our tribulations and afflictions last but for a time, that is, a moment in comparison: secondly, that now, that is, this present life is the proper season and opportune time, to lay out for a crown of celestiall glory.

are not worthy to be compared] Holdeth no proportion or correspondency with the reward, neither in respect of the dignity and worth, nor in respect of the time: and if the sufferings of Martyrs fall thus short, how much more the best actions of Saints?

with the glory] Gr. are not worthy to the glory.

[shall be revealed in us] It is now partly in us, but hid, and therefore he saith, shall be revealed. For now our life is hid with Christ in God, but when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory.

V. 19. Earnest expectation of the creature] Gr. the looking out, or, putting forth of the head. By the creature, he understandeth the world; and the singular number which he useth, implyeth the unitie thereof: and the doctrine which he delivereth from this verse to the 23. concerning the world is, that as the world was not at the beginning in that state which now it is, but by the sin of man came to be subject to a flitting and vanishing estate; so it shall at length be restored with the elect, to a more stable and glorious estate.

manifestation of the sonnes of God] The word manifestation is not here taken actively, but passively, that is, the creature waiteth for the time when the sons of God shall be manifested: and their glorious and happy estate, to which those words of Saint John have a reference, 1 Joh. 3. 2. Behold, now we are the sonnes of God, & it doth not yet appear, what we shall be, but we know when he shall appear we shall be like him.

V. 20. Not willingly, but by reason of him] Not by their naturall inclination, but in obedience to the Creators command, whom it pleased to shew by their fickle estate, how greatly he was displeased with man for his disobedience.

subjected the same in hope] Or, upon hope. That which before he called the expectation, he here termeth the hope, for hope is an earnest expectation of a thing, and it is so called in this place, for that God had promised an universall deliverance of the creature from the corruption and abuse of man, which the angels and blessed souls do long for, Revel. 6. 10. and the rest of the creatures seeme to have a naturall instinct or inclination thereunto, which in the next verse save one, is by a metaphor called a groaning, and travelling in pain. The ground of this hope or expectation of the creature is, that having by reason of the fall of man suffered for part of his malediction, when it shall come to passe at the last day, that man shall be compleatly restored to grace again, then all the steps and traces of that malediction shall be utterly rased out of the world, as is declared, Esa. 51. 16. & 65. 17. & 66. 22.

V. 21. delivered from the bondage of corruption] Shal be subject no more to any such alteration or corruption as now it is; much lesse to serve for the object and instrument of sinne: but according to every ones degree and nature, shall partake of the glorious estate of the children of God; and be fully delivered from all vanity and evils.

into the glorious liberty] Gr. into the liberty of the glory.

V. 22. For we know] Gr. Tec. but, or, now we know.

the whole creation] Or, every creature.

travelleth in pain] This elegant metaphor expresseth, not only the exceeding sorrow of the creature, but the fruit also that followeth after it. For albeit the world doth seem for the present to be even at after it. For albeit the world doth seem for the present to be even at the height of its splendor and beauty, yet there lies that evil upon it, which doth presse it down, and make it into perdition, and that is sin, whereof it doth strive and struggle to the utmost to ease and disburden it selfe, as it were, much like unto a woman in travell.

V. 23. And] Gr. but.

not only they, but our selves also] If the rest of the world looke for a restoring, and groan as it were for it, and that not in vain, let us not think much also to sigh and groane, but groane out of hope, because we are more certainly perswaded of redemption to come, for as much as we have the first fruits of the Spirit.

first fruits of the Spirit] That is, the first degree of regeneration and of the gifts of the Spirit, which is conferred upon us in this life, for a pledge of the whole crop as it were, which we shall receive in the life to come, 2 Cor. 1. 22. Ephes. 1. 14.

groan within our selves] Even from the bottome of our heart. That which the world doth by a secret instinct without sense and discourse; we the faithfull do by a certain knowledge, and well grounded judgment, sighing and groaning for anguish under the heavy burden of sinne that lies upon us, and for the vehement and ardent desire of our full and finall deliverance.

waiting for the adoption] That is, the full manifestation and effect of our adoption, the possession and fruition of the inheritance which is promised to us in our adoption.

redemption of our body] See Luk. 21. 28. That is, the freedome thereof, not only from the miseries which they are subject unto in this life, but also from the power of death and corruption: and in this sense our Saviour taketh the word redemption in those his gracious and comfortable speeches to the faithfull, when he treateth of the dissolution of the world. When these things come to passe, lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh; Luk. 24. 28.

V. 24. For we are saved by hope] Hope is necessarily joyned with faith. Seeing then that we beleeve those things which we are not yet in possession of, and hope expecteth not the thing that is present but future, we must therefore patiently wait for that which we beleeve shall come to passe.

But hope that is seene, is not hope] As the object of faith is often termed faith; so here by a metonymy, the object of hope is termed hope: hope, that is, the thing hoped for, the possession of our heavenly inheritance, Colos. 1. 5.

V. 26. Likewise the Spirit] There is no cause why we should faint under the burden of affliction, seeing that prayer ministreth unto us a present and most sure helpe which cannot be frustrate, seeing it proceeds from the Spirit of God which dwelleth in us.

helpeth] The Greek word, συναντιλαμβάνεται, doth properly imply such a help, as when another man of strength and abilitie steppeth in to sustain the burden that lyeth upon our shoulders, setting his shoulders under it, to lift up and bear part of it with us.

our infirmities] Gr. Tec. infirmitie. Which we are yet subject unto; especially under the crosse, and in afflictions, both in regard of our Spirit which is apt to murmure, as we see in Job and David, and of our flesh also which is most tender and fraile. If we reade according to Tec. edition, infirmitie in the singular number, then the meaning seemeth to be this, the Spirit helpeth our weaknesse and inability to pray as we ought, assisting us by his holy inspiration, both with powerfull and effectuall words, and sighes and groans also that cannot be expressed.

maketh intercession] Provoketh us to prayers, and telleth us as it were within, what we shall say, and how we shall groane. The Son doth properly make intercession for us, who is our Advocate with the Father, 1 Joh. 2. 1. yet by a figure, the holy Ghost is said to make intercession for us also; because he rowseth and stirreth us up to prayer, and prompteth, as it were, our lesson unto us, how we ought to pray in all our necessities, Joh. 16. 13. Gal. 4. 6.

with groanings which cannot be uttered] That is, whose fervencie, force and efficacie proceeding from the supernatural motion of the Spirit none is able to conceive or expresse. Others read [without speaking] that is, whose virtue and excellency doth not consist in the number and flourish of words, as the prayers of hypocrites, Matt. 6. 7. but in most lively feelings, pangs and prickings of the spirit.

V. 27. And he] Gr. But he.

minde of the Spirit] Or, meaning. That is, what sobs and sighes proceed from the instinct of the spirit, and what the spirit meaneth by those sighes and groanes.

because] Or, that.

for the saints] Though the remaines of sinne cleave so fast to the best of Gods children, that they cannot utterly shake them off; yet they are here termed Saints, partly in regard of their sincere and unfained desire of sanctity, and earnest striving for it; partly in regard of Gods gracious acceptance, who taketh the will for the deed, & out of his infinite mercy in Christ, accounteth them for Saints, by not imputing their sinnes unto them. Rev. 8. 3. Psal. 32. 1. See Rom. 1. 7.

according to the will of God] That is, praying for such things, and in such a manner as God requireth and alloweth. 1 Joh. 5. 14.

V. 28. And we] Gr. But we.

know] That we are not afflicted either by chance, or to our harm, but by Gods providence for our great profit, who as he chose us from the beginning, so that he predestinated us to be made like to the image of his Son, and therefore will bring us in his time, being called and justified, to glory by the crosse. Heb. 12. 10.

that all things work together for good] Gr. Tec. that God worketh, or maketh all things work together for good.

according to his purpose] Or, decree. He calleth that purpose which God hath appointed from everlasting with himself, according to his good will and pleasure. Matth. 11. 26. Ephes. 1. 11. 2 Tim. 1. 9.

V. 29. For whom] Here he proveth by a Sorites or golden chaine, the glorification of Gods children, no link whereof can be unlincked, because the lasting thereof is the work of Gods omnipotence.

he did foreknow] For his own, as the word is taken, Joh. 10. 14. 27. those whom he marked out as it were out of all other men in the world: and set his affection upon. Psal. 1. 6. Jer. 1. 5. Matth. 7. 23.

he also did predestinate] Ordained to conformitie, both in grace and glory, with his Son their head, not only in their sufferings, but also in their sanctification and glorification.

that he might be the first-born] Intending that his own Son should have many adopted brethren, of whom he might be the head, as the first-born was wont to be in all families. Colos. 1. 15. 18.

V. 30. Moreover] Gr. But, or, And.

them he also called] To the obedience of faith, by the outward preaching of the Word, and the inward and effectuall operation of the Spirit.

them he also glorified] That is, will certainly and infallibly glorifie them; the cause, ground, and pledge whereof is, the glorification of Christ our head already obtained.

V. 31. What shall we then say] We have no cause to fear that God will not give us whatsoever is profitable for us, seeing that he hath not spared his own Son to save us.

V. 33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge] A most comfortable conclu-conclusion of the whole second part of the Epistle, that is, of the Treatise of justification. There are no accusers that we have need to be afraid of before God, seeing that God himself absolveth us as just, and therefore much lesse need we fear damnation, seeing that we rest upon the death, and resurrection, and the Almighty power of Jesus Christ. Therefore what can there be of so great moment in this life, or of so great force and power, that might affright us, as though we might fall from the love of God wherewith he loveth us in Christ? Surely nothing, seeing that it is in it self most constant and sure, and also to us, being confirmed by stedfast faith.

V. 34. Christ that died] Gr. Tec. Christ Jesus that died.

V. 35. tribulation] Or, affliction.

V. 36. For thy sake, &c.] Psal. 44. 22.

for the slaughter] Gr. of the slaughter.

V. 37. Nay in all] Gr. But, or, Nevertheless in all.

V. 38. nor Angels, &c.] Under the name of Angels he also comprehendeth Archangels; and by principalities and powers, those that are in the highest places of authoritie, and have greatest power upon earth, as Kings in peace, and Commanders in war.

from the love of God] The words may bear either of these constructions; Nothing can separate us from the love which God beareth to us, or we bear to him in Christ Jesus: but this latter seemeth better to agree with the Antecedents, For thy sake are we killed, &c.

CHAP. IX.

Vers. 1. Say the truth] Because the Apostle purposeth to speak much of the casting off of the Jews, he useth an insinuation, declaring by a double, or rather triple oath, his great desire of their salvation, and his singular love towards them; and withall he freely granteth them all their true prerogatives.

in Christ, &c.] Entering into a profound discourse, hard to be believed by flesh and blood, that he might gain the more credit to the ensuing doctrine, and the protestation of his sincere affection to his country-men, he produceth three witnesses beyond exception, Christ, the holy Ghost, and his own Conscience.

V. 2. continuall sorrow in my heart] For the incredulity of the Jews his kinsmen, and their rejection.

V. 3. My self were accursed] Or, separated. These words admit of a double interpretation; either that such was his love to his brethren, that he desired, if it had been possible, and it might have stood with the good will of God, to have redeemed the casting away of the Israelites, with the losse of his own soul for ever. A desire utterly impossible indeed, and never to be accomplished and used by the Apostle; onely to witnes his excessive love towards his brethren, and most fervent zeal for the glory of God, which he supposed would have been farre more illustrated by the saving of a whole Nation, than of one man. Or that here, by ἀνάθεμα, he means only to be excommunicated, and held as accursed and execrable, and as such exterminated and deprived of all communion with the Church; not as if the Apostle did wish to be hardened in heart against Christ, and severed from his love, for that can never be wished by any pious man; but out of the overflowing of his love he wished, that he himself might bear the punishment which they might expect from the righteous judgement of God for their hardnes, so they might be freed from this hardnes and accursednes. The like we know Moses did in the behalf of the Israelites, Exod. 32. 32.

my kinsmen according to the flesh] Those of mine own country and nation: withall insinuating a double kindred, carnall and spirituall: by the carnall he was allyed only to the Jews, but by spirituall cognation, to all the houshold of faith, consisting as well of Gentiles, as Jews.

V. 4. whom pertaineth the adoption] Gr. whose are the adoption. For God preferred the Israelites before all nations of the earth, and accounted them his peculiar people, and named them not onely his Children, but his First-born, Exod. 4. 22. Israel is my son, my first-born, Jer. 31. 9.

and the glory] That is, the Ark of the Covenant, which was a visible token of Gods presence; so we read 1 Sam. 4. 21. The glory is departed from Israel, when the Ark was taken; and Psalm. 63. 3. To see thy glory, as I have seen thee in the sanctuary.

and the covenants] Or, testaments. The tables of the covenant. Ephes. 2. 12.

and the giving of the law] The judiciall and morall.

and the service of God] That is, the manner of his worship, prescribed by the ceremoniall law.

and the promises] Made to Abraham and his posteritie.

V. 5. God blessed for ever] A most evident testimony, and pregnant proof of Christs divinitie. Bluth for shame, saith Oecumenius, and be confounded, O thou wretched miscreant Arrius, when thou hearest Christ glorified by the Apostle with the title of God, in the singular number: with the article ὁ, the God, or, onely God, and God over all, and blessed for ever.

V. 6. Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect] Gr. But it cannot be that the word of God hath failed.

are not all Israel, which are of Israel] That is, all are not that people of God to whom the promises were made, who descend from the loines of Jacob; for there are three sorts of Israels: according to the flesh onely; such are the unbeleeving Jews: according to the spirit onely; such are the faithfull among the Gentiles: according to the flesh and spirit; such was Jacob himself, and his beleeving posterity.

V. 7. in Isaac shall thy seed be called] See Gen. 21. 12. Isaac shall be thy true and naturall son, and therefore heir of the blessing, although Ishmael was born also of Abraham, and circumcised before Isaac.

V. 8. the children of the flesh, &c.] Not all they who are carnally born of Abraham by the course of nature, are the children of God, to whom the promise of grace was made; but the children of promise, that is, those who were born by virtue of the promise, those who by Gods speciall grace were adopted (as Isaac by a speciall and singular promise was begot by Abraham) they onely are accounted for that seed mentioned in the covenant, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed.

the children of the promise] See Gal. 4. 28.

V. 9. At this time, &c.] Or, season. See Gen. 8. 10.

V. 11. For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evill] Namely, whereby they might be differenced one from the other; for otherwise they were already conceived in sin, and living in their mothers womb, when the sentence of God passed upon them; so that God had not regard unto faith in the one, or infidelity in the other, but that it was upon his own absolute pleasure, not upon any desire, that God preferred the younger before the elder.

any good] Gr. Tec. good, or, that good.

purpose of God according to election] Or, the purpose according to the election of God.

might stand] Gr. might remain.

not of works] That is, not at all by observing any condition depending upon the will of man, which would have made the decree wavering and uncertain, seeing that man is so variable in all that he doth, or undertaketh.

but of him that calleth] Out of undeserved grace and favour, and calleth not onely outwardly, but inwardly and effectually, to bring men to faith and goodnes. Rom. 8. 28, 30, 31. 2 Tim. 1. 9.

The elder shall serve the younger] See Gen. 25. 23. This prophecie is not to be understood of any outward service or dominion; for Esau did not serve Jacob after that manner, at least in his own person; but either it is to be understood of the posterity of Jacob and Esau, that the posterity of the elder should serve the posterity of the younger, as they did also for a time; and for this the words of the Lord by Moses, Gen. 25. 23. are expresse; Two nations are in thy womb, and two sorts of people shall be separated from thy bowels; and the one people shall be stronger than the other, and the elder shall serve the younger. Or else the prophecie is to be understood of the eternall and spirituall dominion which the children of God are to enjoy hereafter, whereof the inheritance and dominion in Canaan was a type, Hebr. 11. 15, 16. We may also thus expound the words. The elder shall serve the younger, that is, he shall be deprived of his birth-right, in token that from him and his posteritie should be taken away also the part and claim of the blessed seed; and that he should be no otherwise in the world, than as a servant in his fathers house, in comparison, namely, of Jacob, who shall be his heir.

elder] Or, greater.

younger] Or, lesser.

V. 13. As it is written] Forasmuch as the word serving seemeth not to be clear enough to expresse the election of Jacob and rejection of Esau in the purpose of God, the Apostle brings in this other passage out of Malachi 1. 2. for a declaration of the former; and proveth, that this same fervitude or subjection of Esau unto Jacob, was accompanied with Gods eternall and undeserved love of Jacob, and with his just and righteous hatred of Esau.

Jacob have I loved, &c.] Mal. 1. 2, 3.

V. 14. God forbid] See Chap. 3. 4.

V. 15. I will have mercy] See Exod. 33. 19. I will be favourable and gracious to whom I list to be favourable. God is most free, and cannot be taxed with injustice, though he cast brighter beams of his favour upon one than another; for although he chuse and predestinate to salvation them that are not yet born, without any respect of worthinesse; yet he bringeth not the chosen to their appointed end, but by the means of his mercy, which is a cause next under predestination: now mercy presupposeth misery, and misery, sinne, and a voluntary corruption of mankinde, and this corruption presupposeth a pure and perfect creation. Moreover mercy is shewed by degrees, to wit, by calling by faith to justification and sanctification, to that at the length wee come to glorification: Now all these things ordinarily following the purpose of God, do clearly prove that he can by no means seem unjust in loving and saving his.

I will have mercy] Or, I have mercy.

I will have compassion] Or, I have compassion.

V. 16. not of him that willeth] These words contain the conclusion of the Apostles answere, therefore God is not unjust in chusing and saving of his free goodnes such as it pleaseth him; as he also answered Moses when he prayed for all the people. By will, he meaneth here, the thoughts and desires of the heart; by running, our earnest ende-vours, and good works, and commendable course of life; to neither of which yet hee ascribeth the praise, but onely to the mercy of God. Upon this verse S. Austine acutely observes in his Enchyridion, against the Pelagians, that when the Apostle saith, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth; the meaning cannot be, that it is not wholly of him that willeth, or of him that runneth, but partly of him that willeth, and partly of him that runneth, and partly of God that hath mercy: for according to that exposition, the Apostle might have said, It is not of him that hath mercy, but of him that willeth or runneth; because, according to their Pelagian tenet, it is not only of God that hath mercy, but partly of him that willeth and of him that runneth. But if no man dare say that it is not of God that hath mercy, for that were in direct terms to contradict the Apostle; it remaineth therefore that this must be the sense, That it is not at all of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but wholly of God, who hath mercy, qui voluntatem preparat adjuvandam, & adjuvat preparatam.

V. 17. Even for this same purpose, &c.] See Exod. 9. 16.

have I raised thee up] Or, stirred, or, set thee up. The words may bear either of these interpretations; I have made thee to stand, that is, I have reserved thee, and not struck thee, or destroyed thee with the pestilence, as I did the rest of the people, Exod. 9. 15. Or, for this cause I have set thee upon the throne of Egypt, or have placed thee as it were in a high theater, to make thee an example to all that shall dare to set themselves against me, by the fearfull judgements that I shall inflict upon thee and thy people.

throughout all the earth] Gr. in all the earth.

V. 18. he hardeneth] By Gods with-holding his grace, and not mollifying their rebellious hearts it cometh to passe, that all the means which he employeth outwardly, though never so good and holy, are perverted by them, to the encrease of their hardness. Moreover, it is to be noted, that as the Text saith, that God hardned Pharaohs heart; so it is said, Exod. 8. 15, 32. that Pharaoh hardened his own heart, so that he could have none excuse; sith Gods induration was inflicted upon him most justly and deservedly for his wilfull opposing God, and maliciously rebelling against him.

V. 19. Why doth he yet finde fault] This is another objection, which may arise in mens mindes, either from carnall reason, or by the suggestion of the devil: If God doth appoint to everlasting destruction such as he listeth, and that cannot be hindred or withstood that he hath once decreed, how doth he justly condemn them which perish by his will?

V. 20. But O man, who art thou] Although the will of God is alwayes grounded upon good reason for whatsoever he doth; (for his will is the rule of righteousnes, and is never severed from his wisedome, howsoever the reason be not manifest unto us, or transcend our understanding, Rom. 11 33.) yet he is not to give an account to man or any other creature of his actions, and therefore the Apostle here stoppeth the mouth of all that dare to move such curious questions; why God disposeth thus or thus of men: God hath alwayes a reason of his will, but his will made known to us, ought to stand for an all-sufficient reason, and it as little becomes man who is dust and ashes to expostulate with God, as it doth the clay to expostulate with the Potter.

replieth against God] Or, answereth again, or, disputeth with God.

shall the thing formed say to him that formed it] Isa. 45. 9.

V. 21. Potter power over the clay, &c.] See Jer. 18. 6. Wisd. 15. 7.

of the same lump] By this metaphor is intimated the originall of all mankind out of one bloud, Act. 17. 26. out of this corrupt masse, it is in Gods power of his free will to appoint some to everlasting glory, and others to everlasting shame and ignominie: as it is in the Potters power at his pleasure, of the same stuffe to make up one vessell to serve for honourable uses, and occasions, as vessels for eating and drinking, and utensils for state and ornament, and another vessell for base and abject imployments.

one vessell unto honour, and another unto dishonour] Gr. this unto honour, and that unto dishonour.

V. 22. what if God, willing] Gr. but if. As if he should say, Hast thou any just cause to reply against God? seeing that in exercising that absolute freedome of his Soveraignitie to save one and punish others, he useth such long-suffering toward the wicked to allure and draw them to repentance, which yet notwithstanding, doth but harden them so much the more in their evil, Rom. 2. 4, 5. In this speech the Apostle seemeth to have a speciall eye on the Jews, towards whom God had used the utmost of long-suffering before he would altogether reject them.

vessels of wrath] That is, those men on whom he will exercise his severe judgement, being formerly compared unto vessels of dishonour, and after said to be fitted to destruction; that is, whose state and condition is so sinfull and corrupted, that neither being pardoned nor amended by the grace of God, it can serve for no other use, than to be a dreadfull example and subject of his just judgement.

a remnant shall be saved] Gr. Tec. a part taken out shall be saved.

V. 28. For he will finish the work] Or, the account. Some take this as a threatning against the wicked Jews, whom God should cut off and reject, & thereby bring that unkinde & unthankfull people to an extreme fewnes, always preserving such as are his among that nation. Others understand here the constancie of the decree of God in keeping and preserving his, notwithstanding the rebellion of the greater multitude of others, which agreeth well with the verse following.

work] Gr. reckoning, or, word.

V. 29. Except the Lord of Sabboth had left us a seed] Isa. 1. 9.

V. 30. which followed not after righteousnes] So then, the Gentiles had no works to move and procure Gods mercy before-hand, and in that the Gentiles attained to that which they sought not for, the mercy of God is to be thanked for it, and in that the Jews attained not to that which they sought after, they are to thank none for that but themselves, because they sought it not aright.

V. 31. which followed] Gr. following.

V. 32. not by faith] That is, because they sought not righteousnes in Christ in whom alone it is, and no otherwise to be obtained than by faith, and not by the merit of our own works.

stumbling-stone] By the stumbling-stone he meaneth Christ crucified, 1 Cor. 1. 23. and the same is implyed by Simeon, Luk. 2. 34. This childe is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, and for a signe which shall be spoken against.

CHAP. X.

Vers. 1. BRethren] The Apostle intending to set forth in the Jews, an example of marvellous obstinacie, beginneth with a sweet insinuation, as it were anointing the brim of the cup with honey, out of which they were to drink a bitter potion.

V. 3. For they being ignorant] The ignorance of the law which we ought to know, excuseth none before God; especially, it excuseth not them who are of his household.

of Gods righteousnes] That is, the righteousnes of Christ, both active and passive, imputed to every believer.

going about to establish their own righteousnes] Gr. Tec. being zealous to establish. The first entrance into our vocation to salvation, is to renounce our own righteousnes: the next to embrace the righteousnes by Christ which God freely offereth us in the Gospel.

V. 4. For Christ is the end of the law] Christ is laid to be the end of the law, partly because all the ceremonies of the law prefigured him, and had reference unto him, as their scope, end, and accomplishment: partly, because by the law ceremoniall, morall, and judiciall, the consciences of all that were under the law were convinced of sinnes, the expiation whereof could no where be found, but in the sacrifice of Christs death. Or Christ may be said to be the end of the law; because the end of the law is perfect righteousnes, that a man may be justified thereby, which end we cannot attain of our selves through the frailty of our flesh, but by Christ we attain it, who hath fulfilled the law for us.

for righteousness] Gr. to righteousness.

to every one] Not only to the Jews, but also to the Gentiles.

V. 5. That the man which doth those things] See Lev. 18. 5. Ezek. 20. 11.

shall live by them] Gr. in them. In the Greek it is in them, which is a kinde of Hebraisme, signifying by them, for such is the condition of the law, that doth the works of the law shall live; but cursed is he that confirmeth not all the words of the law to do them, Deut. 27. 26. To which our Saviours answer to the young man in the Gospel, who demanded of him what he should do to obtain eternall life, agreeth, saying, Keep the commandements: Doe this and thou shalt live.

V. 6. Say not in thine heart, who shall ascend into heaven] See Deut. 30. 12. That the law hath regard and tendeth to Christ, that is a manifest proof, for that it propoundeth such a condition as can be, and is fulfilled of none but Christ onely, which being imputed unto us by faith, our conscience is quieted, so that now no man can ask, Who can ascend up into heaven, or bring us from hell, seeing the Gospel teacheth that both of these are done by Christ, and that for their sakes who with true faith embrace him, who calleth them. Or, God hath so plainly and fully shewed the way of salvation, that we need not seek further for it, above or below.

V. 9. The word is nigh thee] Deut. 30. 14. By the word Moses understood the law which the Lord published with his own voice, and Paul applies it to the preaching of the Gospel, which was the perfection of the law.

the Lord Jesus] Gr. Tec. the Lord Jesus Christ.

V. 10. beleeveth unto righteousnes] Gr. beleef is to righteousnes. Faith is said to justifie; and furthermore seeing the confession of the mouth is an effect of faith, and it is the way to come to salvation, it followeth, that faith is also said to save.

V. 11. whosoever beleeveth on him] See Isa. 28. 16. To beleeve in God,

God, is to yeeld and consent to Gods promise of salvation by Christ, and that not only in general, but in particular, that the promises pertain to us, whereupon ariseth a sure trust.

V. 12. difference between, &c.] Gr. distinction of Jew and Greek.

V. 13. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord] See Joel 2. 32. Acts 2. 21. True calling upon the name of God, is the testimony of true Faith; and true Faith of a true Vocation, and a true and effectuall vocation or calling, of true Election. By calling on Gods name he understandeth the true worship of the true God.

V. 15. How beautifull are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace?] Gr. Tec. who bring glad tidings of good things. See Isa. 57. 2. Nahum 1. 15.

V. 16. Lord, who hath beleeved our report] See Isa. 53. 1. John 12. 38.

our] Gr. the hearing of us.

report] Or, preaching.

V. 18. But I say, have they not heard] As for the Jews which have not beleeved, what can be said thereof? Is it for that they have heard nothing of the Gospel? Surely, no; for the Gospel like unto the Sun, Psal. 19. 5. hath cast his Beams over the whole World: May we not therefore say, that the fault lyes in themselves, who rejected that light of saving knowledge, which the Gentiles have embraced? The Apostle answereth, verf. 19. that it is not to be gainsayed, seeing Moses had protested the very same of old.

their sound went] See Psal. 19. 4. This place is taken out of Psal. 19. 4. and is properly meant of that knowledge of God, which all men may have by contemplation of the Heavens, and the Creatures therein; yet it is by the Apostle very fitly applyed to the sound of the Word preached by the Apostles.

V. 19. Did not Israel know] Or, hath not Israel known.

I will not provoke you] See Deut. 32. 21.

them that are no people] He calleth the Heathen no people, because they are not said to live, but to die, who are appointed for everlasting condemnation: Or else we are to understand the Pronoun my, and the sense is this, I will provoke you to jealousie by a people, that is not my people, that is not comprised within my Covenant.

V. 20. I was found] Or, I have been found. See Isa. 65. 1.

I was made] Or, I have been made.

CHAP. XI.

Vers. 1. HAth God cast away his people] Gr. Tec. his people whom he foreknew. Now the Apostle sheweth how the Doctrine formerly delivered, is to be applyed to others; teaching us, that all the Jews in particular are not cast away: and therefore we ought not to pronounce rashly of private persons, whether they be of the number of the Elect, or not.

V. 2. which he foreknew] Which he loved and chose from everlasting, and decreed to save before the Foundations of the World were laid.

Wot ye not what the Scripture saith of Elias] Gr. in Elias. In the days of Elias when there appeared no face of the Church to the World, yet God knew his Elect, and of them a great store and number; whereupon this also is concluded, that we ought not rashly to pronounce of any man or people, that they are reprobate, seeing the Church is oft-times brought to that state, that even the most watchful and sharp-sighted Pastours may think it to be clean extinct and put out.

maketh intercession to God against] Or, communeth with God against.

digged down the Altars] The Prophet by these words doth not any way approve of those Altars which were erected in Israel, contrary to the Law which designed a certain place, namely, at Jerusalem, where they ought to have offered their sacrifice to God; but he taxeth the impiety and idolatry of that people, who erected Altars to Baal, and sacrificed upon them; but pulled down the Altars which were erected in honour of God, and would by no means sacrifice unto him, or serve him.

life] Gr. soul.

V. 4. answer of God] Gr. oracle of God.

I have reserved to my self] See 1 King. 19. 18. He speaketh of remnants, and the reserved people which were chosen from everlasting, and not of remnants which should be chosen afterwards; for they were not chosen, because they were not Idolaters, but rather, they were not therefore Idolaters, because they were chosen, and by Gods grace kept from that and other foul sinns.

seven thousand men] That is, a very great number, by a Synecdoche. So we reade Gen. 33. 3. that Jacob bowed himself to the ground before his brother seven times; and Psal. 12. 6. Silver is said to be tried in the furnace seven times, that is, very often; and Christ telleth Peter, that he is to forgive his brother not seven times, but seventy times seven times, that is, how often soever he offendeth him, if he be sorry for it, and seek to be reconciled unto him.

the knee to the image of Baal] The article In the Original, is feminine, τῇ βάαλ, not that the Heathen beleeved Baal to be a feminine Idol; for by Baal, as Sanchuniacho and others affirm, they meant Phebus or the Sun: But the article agrees with knee understood, that is, the image of Baal. The word Baal significh as much as Patron, or one in whose power another is, which name the Romish Idolaters, to this day, give to their Idols, naming them Patrons, or Patronesses, or Ladies Guardians.

V. 5. at this present] Gr. in this present.

there is a remnant] That is, God hath left some Jews yet to remain, which doe not reject the Gospel, but embrace the Gospel, and are effectually called also; though in comparison of the great multitude that rejected and continued in their unbeleef, they are but as a small remnant or parcel torn from the rest, Isa. 6, 13.

the election of grace] Not whereby men chuse grace, but whereby God chuseth us of his grace and goodnes.

V. 6. And if by grace] This seemes to be added against those amongst the Jews, that having received the profession of Christianity, yet still did put part of their righteousnes and confidence in the works of the Law; which the Apostle here proves to be a false and vain perswasion, for as much as those two sorts of righteousnes, and salvation, to wit, by the Covenant of Grace, and the Covenant of Works, were altogether incompatible. See Rom. 4. 3, 4. and Gal. 5. 2, 4.

no more of works] This saying beareth flat down to the ground the doctrine of merit, and of all kinde and manner of works, whereby our justifiers of themselves doe teach, That works are either wholly or partly the cause of our justification.

otherwise grace is no more grace] Whatsoever is given for the merit of our works, is not freely given, and consequently is not χάρις, or gratia; for, as St. Augustine speaketh elegantly against the Pelagians, Gratia non esti gratia ullo modo, nisi sit gratuita omni modo; Grace is not said to be grace any way, or in any sense, if it be not free every way.

otherwise work is no more work] That is, it loseth the nature of a work done to merit by; for if we are elected and chosen partly for our works sake, and partly by grace, then the merit of our works is no merit; for, as Bernard rightly concludeth, if merit enter first, it excludeth grace; and if grace enter first, it excludeth merit: Non bene convenient, nec in una sede morantur.

V. 7. Israel hath not obtained] That is, those among the Jews, who boasted that they were Israelites, and gloried in the flesh, and sought to establish their own righteousnes.

the election hath obtained] That is, the Elect (have obtained) by a metonymie, which the Apostle useth, more emphatically to expresse the cause of their adoption and salvation; to wit, Gods free Election.

blinded] Or, hardened.

V. 8. God hath given them the spirit of slumber] So the Hebrew signifieth, Isa. 29. 10. out of which the Apostle took these words; yet in citing them, he followeth the translation of the Seventy here, and elsewhere, that the Gentiles to whom he wrote, who understood that translation, and not the Hebrew, might not take any offence by reason of some seeming differences between it and the Original. The Greek word used by the Apostle, κατανύξεως cometh not from κατ' ἔξ; as if he should say, The spirit of men in a deep sleep in the night; but from νύσσω νύξω, to prick or bore through: κατανύσσω, saith Oecumenius, is ἐμ τοῦτο τὰ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμματα, to be fastened, and as it were nailed in evil, to be obstinately wicked; howbeit the Hebrew original, and the translation of the Septuagint, which the Apostle followeth, may be easily reconciled, if by the spirit of slumber we understand such a dead sleep, as may be observed in those that are prick'd or stung with venemous Serpents, out of which they hardly or never awake.

slumber] Or, remorse; or, pricking through.

eyes that they should not see, &c.] See Isa. 6. 9. That is, eyes unfit to see with, and ears unfit to hear with, or eyes and ears wherewith (as the case stood with them) they could neither see nor hear.

V. 9. Let their table be made a snare] See Psal. 69. 22. As unhappy birds are enticed to death by that which is their sustenance: so did that turn to the Jews destruction, of which they sought life; to wit, the Law of God, for the preposterous zeal whereof they refused the Gospel.

and bow down their back] Gr. bow together, or crook. If we follow this translation of the Septuagint according to the letter, then as the Greek Scholiast observeth, we have here a prediction of the Jewes captivity, and subjection to the Romanes, who enforced them to bow, with the heavy burdens they laid upon them. But if we follow the Hebrew Original, and render the words, Make their loines continually shake; then we may well understand the Prophecie of terrours of conscience, and the spirit of bondage, to which the unbeleeving Jews are subject even to this day.

V. 11. I say then, Have they stumbled] God appointed this casting off of the Jewes, that it might be an occasion to call the Gentiles, and again that this calling of the Gentiles might be an occasion to reforce the Jews, to wit, that they being enflamed and provoked by the emulation of the Gentiles, might themselves at length embrace the Gospel. And hereby we may learn that the severity of God serveth as well to the setting forth of his glory, as his mercy doth; and also that God prepareth himself a way to mercy by his severity: so that we ought not rashly to despair of any man, nor proudly to triumph over others; but rather provoke them to an holy emulation, that God may be glorified in them also.

to provoke them to jealousie] By this means, their fall, through Gods goodnes, conduceth to their rise: for through their fall salvation came to the Gentiles, and this salvation of the Gentiles bred emulation in the Jews, and this emulation was a meanes to bring them to believe the Gospel, whereby they might be raised from their fall.

V. 12. the riches of the world] By riches, he meaneth the knowledge of Christ, in whom all the treasures of riches and knowledge are hid; and by the world, all Nations dispersed throughout the whole world.

diminishing] Or, decay; or losse.

V. 13. I am the Apostle] Gr. Tec. I remain the Apostle.

V. 15. but life from the dead] The words may bear a double construction, either they may have reference to the Jews, that their assumption into the Church will prove no lesse than their raising from the death of sinne, to the life of grace: or that the coming in of the Jews will serve as a great means to bring in all the Gentiles, and by the Gospel make them partakers of eternal life. For it shall come to pass that when the Jews generally embrace the Gospel; the world shall as it were quicken again and rise up from death to life; when that nation shall be converted, there shall be such perfect and entire joy as in the end of the world at the resurrection of the dead, saith the Greek Scholiast.

V. 16. For if the first-fruit be holy] He alludeth to the first-fruits of those loaves, by the offering whereof all the whole crop of corn was sanctified, Ezek. 44. 30. so that the owners might use the rest the yeer following with a good conscience, Levit. 23. 14.

if the root be holy] The nation of the Jews being considered in their stock and root, that is, in Abraham, is holy, although that many of the branches be cut off. Therefore in judging our brethren we must not stick in their unworthiness, to think that they are all at once cast off: but we ought to consider the root of the covenant, and rather go back to their ancestours which were faithful, that we may know that the blessing of the covenant reacheth in some of their posterity; as we also find proof thereof in our selves, Esa. 65. 8.

V. 17. And if] Gr. But if.

amongst them] Or, for them.

V. 18. boast not against the branches] There is no cause why the Gentiles which have obtained mercy should triumph over the Jews, which now refuse the grace of God, seeing they are grafted into the stock of the Jews ancestors; but let them rather take heed that that be not found in them which is worthily condemned in the Jews: and hence we are further to learn that we ought to be studious of Gods glory, even in respect of our neighbours; so far ought we to be from bragging and glorying for that we are perferred before others by special grace.

V. 20. because of unbeleef] Gr. by unbeleef.

but fear] See thou stand in awe of God modestly and carefully. By fear, he meaneth not a fear of diffidence or distrust, but a fear of watchfulnes or circumspection.

V. 21. natural branches] He calleth them natural, not because they had any holinesse by nature, but because they were born of them whom the Lord set apart for himself from other nations by his league and covenant which he freely made with them.

take heed lest he also spare not thee] Gr. Tec. neither will he spare thee.

V. 22. and severity of God] In the Original ἀποτομίαν, which signifieth a resection or cutting off, and the metaphor seems to be taken from a Gardiner, who with a pruning knife cuts off dead boughs, or luxuriant stems; Or it may allude to the speeches of a man moved in choler, which are for the most part abrupt, and cut off as it were in the midst; and thereby is signified the rigor of judgement, or Gods severe justice.

on them which fell] That is, over the Jews that stumbled at the rock of offence through their unbeleef in Christ, and therefore were justly rejected of God. Which severity God used towards them, that we should take example and warning by them, to give good heed, least we fall into the same unbeleef with them, and be rejected alike as they were.

if thou continue in his goodnes] In the state of grace wherein thou art set, that is, if thou bear the fruits thereof, and render God thanks for the same.

otherwise thou shalt also be cut off] As an unfruitful branch, John 15. 2. But here it is to be noted that this passage ought to be understood of the outward incorporation into the Church by profession, whereof many hypocrites do partake, and not of the inward & efficacious ingrafting into the mystical body of Christ, by a lively faith and the communion of the Spirit according to the election of God, which is ever accompanyed with perseverance. See Matth. 15. 13. 2 Tim. 2, 19.

V. 23. shall be grafted in] Many are now for a season cut off, that is, without the root, who in their time shall be grafted in; and again there are a great sort, which according to the outward shew seem to be grafted in, who notwithstanding through their own fault afterwards are cut off and quite cast away; which thing is especially to be considered in nations and peoples, as the Jews and Gentiles.

V. 24. which is wild by nature] Understand nature not as it was first made, but as it was corrupted in Adam, and so derived from him to his posterity.

V. 25. of this mystery] That is, touching the last conversion of the Jews obscurely intimated by the Prophets, Esa. 11. 11. Zach. 12, 10, but clearly set forth in the Gospel, Matth. 23. 39. Luke 21. 24. 2 Cor. 3. 16.

out of Sion] Isaiah speaking of the first coming of Christ in the flesh, saith, He shall come into Sion; but the Apostle applying that passage to his second manifestation in grace toward the Jews, saith here, Out of Zion: that is, out of the midst of the Church, where he hath his dwelling and abode by his Spirit, will he call and recollect the Jews again.

V. 28. touching the election] In that God respecteth not what they deserve, but what he promised to Abraham.

V. 30. for as ye in times past] Although they which are hardned are worthily punished; yet hath not God suffered this stubbornes of the Jews so to come to pass properly for any hatred to that nation, but that an entry might be as it were opened to bring in the Gentiles; and that afterwards the Jews being enflamed with emulation of that mercy which is shewed to the Gentiles, might themselves also be partakers of the same benefit, and so it might appear that both Jews and Gentiles are saved onely by the free mercy and grace of God, which could not have been so manifest, if at the beginning God had brought all together into one Church: or if he had saved the nation of the Jews without this interruption.

V. 31. beleeved] Or, obeyed.

V. 32. concluded] Or, shut them all up together.

V. 33. O the depth of the riches] The Apostle cryeth out as astonished with this wonderful wisdom of God, which he teacheth us religiously to reverence, and not curiously and profanely to search beyond the compass of that, which God hath revealed unto us in his word.

CHAP. XII.

Vers. 1.] Beseech you] The fourth part of this Epistle, which after the finishing of the chief points of Christian doctrine, consisteth in the delivering precepts of Christianity: and first he layeth general grounds, whereof the chiefest is this, That every man consecrate himself wholly to the spiritual service of God, and do as it were sacrifice himself, trusting to the grace of God.

a living sacrifice] In times past dead sacrifices were offered, but now we must offer such as have the spirit of life in them; by life, he meaneth the new life in the regeneration of the Spirit, and this sacrifice is to be offered not as in the old Law, by presenting it alive before the Lord, and shedding the bloud upon the Altar, but by a spiritual slaying and mortifying our carnal lusts and affections, Rom. 6. 11. 2 Cor. 5. 15. Colos. 3. 9.

reasonable service] Or, worship; that is, a spiritual service, so called in opposition to the carnal rites of the ceremonial law; and he calleth it a reasonable service, because it consisteth not in the outward offering up of unreasonable beasts, as in the Old Testament: but in the offering up of our selves, who are men endued with reason. The like exhortation we have, Heb. 13. 15. 1 Pet. 2. 5. Or, agreeable to the rules of true reason.

V. 2. be not conformed to this world] That is, take not upon you the form and fashion of this world, which lyeth altogether in wickednesse, 1 Joh. 5. 19. apply your selves not to the customes, dispositions, and practices of worldly and corrupt men, described by the Apostle, Rom. 13. 13. Ephes. 4. 18, 19. 1 Pet. 4. 3. 1 Joh. 2. 16.

but be ye transformed] See Ephes. 4. 23. changed, or alterred in form and fashion, not according to the body, but according to the soul and the faculties thereof; that is, be ye regenerated and changed from your natural depravation in all parts of your soul, beginning from the very highest; namely, the Understanding and Reason, by which also the Spirit of God doth work upon all other inferiour faculties.

that ye may prove] See Ephes. 5. 17. Give proof by your godly life, that ye understand indeed what is the good will of God; or that by the gift of a spiritual judgment you may discern and approve that the law of God is altogether good, and perfectly compleat, Psal. 19. 8, 11. Rom. 7. 22. and to submit our selves unto the same; or that we may discern what according to the Law is good and acceptable unto God, and exactly correspondent to his will revealed in his Word, which is the perfect rule according to which we are to frame our lives.

but to think soberly] Gr. to sobriety. We shall be sober, if we take not that upon us which we have not, nor brag of that which we have. In the Greek there is a most elegant Paranomasie in three words of like sound, ὑπερφρονεῖν, φρονεῖν and σωφρονεῖν, which cannot be expressed in any other language; and the Greek Scholiast thereupon obserues, that the Apostle sometimes useth choice figures of Rhetorick to shew that he was not ignorant of that Art: and yet not over frequently, that he might retain the simplicity and majesty of his Apostolike style.

the measure of faith] By Faith he meaneth the knowledge of God in Christ, and the gifts which the holy Ghost poureth upon the faithfull.

V. 4. For as we have many members] See 1 Cor. 12. 12. There is a double reason of the precept going before; the one is because God hath not appointed every thing to be done by every man, but constituted divers vocations, the bounds whereof men ought not to passe: the other, for that the diversity and inequality of vocations and gifts redoundeth to our commodity, seeing the same is therefore instituted, that we should be bound one to another; whereupon it followeth, that no man ought to be grieved thereat, seeing that the use of every private gift is common.

Office] Gr. action, or, operation.

V. 6. Having then gifts] Or, but having gifts. See 1 Pet. 4. 10, 11.

whether prophecie] By prophecy he understandeth not the extraordinary gift of fore-telling things future, but the gift of expounding the holy Scriptures, as the Apostle himself declareth the meaning of the word, 1 Cor. 4. 3.

proportion of faith] Some by proportion of Faith understand an analogie to the Articles of the Creed, and from hence they collect this doctrine, that in all interpretations of holy Scripture, we have an eye to the Articles of the Christian Faith, and give Expositions conformable thereunto; and that rule is good: but yet it seemes that the Apostles words have another meaning here; that he that hath the gift of prophecie, ought to exercise it according to the proportion of Faith, that is, according to the measure of that knowledge of heavenly mysteries revealed in Scripture, and given unto him.

V. 7. he that teacheth] Gr. Tec. gift of teaching. Here he divideth (as some conceive) Prophets into Doctors and Pastours; the Doctours simply searched into the meaning of Scripture, but the Pastors besides the Exposition of the Text, or commenting upon it, applyed the sense of Scripture to the special use of their hearers. The former resemble our Readers in the Universitie; the latter our Preachers.

V. 8. giveth] Or, imparteth.

with simplicity] Or, liberally.

V. 9. Let love be without dissimulation] Now he cometh to the duties of the second Table, which he deriveth from charity, which is, as it were, the fountain of them all; and he describeth it by sincerity, hatred of evil, earnest & study of good things, and good affection to help our Neighbour. If it be demanded, why the Apostle addeth here the Epithete, sincere, or without dissimulation, to love rather, than to other vertues? the answer is twofold, either because they are all comprised in love, or because there is almost no man who maketh not some shew of love or friendship to his Neighbour, though he bear secret rancor and malice in his heart.

Abhorre] Gr. abhorring, or, hating.

V. 10. Be kindly affectionated] See Heb. 13. 1. φιλοστοργία signifieth natural affection, and φιλαδελφία love of the brethren. His meaning therefore is, that we should improve the natural affection we bear towards any to a higher pitch, even to Christian charity.

with brotherly love] Or, in the love of the brethren.

in honour preferring one another] Gr. going before one another. The meaning is, not that we should ambitiously strive to out-strip one another in getting places of honour or preferment one before another; but strive to prevent one another in offices of courtesie and humanity, and in giving honour one to the other, and yeelding the place and the hand. For Christian humility teacheth not onely not to prefer our selves above our equals; nor to equal our selves to our betters, but also in some cases to equal our selves to our inferiours, yea and to prefer them also above us. Primus gradus, &c. 1. Inferiorem se exhibere æquali. 2. Æqualem se exhibere inferiori. 3. Inferiorem se exhibere etiam inferiori. Bernardus.

V. 11. Not slothful in businesse] Or, remisse in industry. In the Original it is word for word, not remisse in your study or diligence, that namely which every one ought to employ about his calling, in a spiritual carefulnesse, to the glory and service of God, and to the good of the Church, and the salvation of the godly.

fervent in spirit] Zealous, not cold, not luke-warm, but earnest in a holy spiritual affection.

serving the Lord] In some Editions it is not κυρίῳ, but καιρῷ, that is, serving the time; which reading, if we should admit, we must not understand the Apostle as if he commanded us to be temporizers, or to apply our selves to the corrupt customes and manners of the times; but to keep time in all our actions, and doe them in the fittest season; and as the Apostle elsewhere exhorteth, to walk wisely towards them that are without, redeeming the time, Col. 4. 5. Eph. 5. 16. because the days are evil: But in the most ancient Copy of Tecla, and generally in the most correct Editions, the word is not καιρῷ, but κυρίῳ, not the time, but the Lord; and the meaning is, that we should have no other aime or scope in all our actions than his service, and whatsoever our employment be, to consider with all diligence as servants of the Lord, what his service and honour requireth, Psal. 2. 11. Ephes. 6. 7.

V. 12. tribulation] Or, affliction.

V. 13. Distributing] Gr. communicating.

V. 14. Bless them, &c.] See Mat. 5. 44.

V. 15. Rejoyce with them that doe rejoyce] In these words he condemneth Stoical stupidity or apathy, and commendeth Christian sympathy. Some conceive that he alludeth to the two gates in Solomon's Temple, at the one whereof they entred, who were to be married, who were joyful and merry; at the other those who were to doe penance, and for a time were excluded from the company of the faithful, and these were always sad and mournful. Drusius ex Rabbi Juda.

V. 16. Mind not] Gr. not minding.

condescend, &c.] Or, be contented with mean things, or, being carried with the low, or lowly.

Be not wise, &c.] See Prov. 3. 7. Isa. 5. 21.

V. 17. Recompence to, &c.] See Prov. 20. 22. 1 Thes. 5. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 9.

of all men] Gr. Tec. of God and all men.

V. 18. live peaceably with all men] See Heb. 12. 14.

V. 19. avenge not] Gr. not avenging.

give place unto wrath] The words may admit of a double construction; either give place to the wrath of thine enemy according to that precept, cuvrenti cede furori, be not as forward to provoke and wrong him, as he is to wrong thee: or else give place to the wrath of God, that is, his judgment, prevent or hinder it not by revenging thy self.

Vengeance is mine] Gr. belongs to me. See Deut. 32. 35. Heb. 10. 30.

V. 20. Therefore if, &c.] Gr. Tec. But if. See Prov. 25. 21.

in so doing] Gr. doing this.

Coales of fire on his head] Either the meaning seemeth to be, thou shalt heap Gods judgments like coales of fire upon him: or, as Saint Augustine, lib. 3. de doc. Christ. c. 16. Ardentes pœnitentiæ gemitus, quibus superbia fanatur ejus qui dolet se inimicum fuisse hominis, à quo ejus miseriæ subveniatur: by rendering good for evil, thou shalt bring heart-burning and sorrow to him; his own conscience checking him, for intending mischief to such an one, who hath deserved well of thee, and releeved thee in thy greatest danger and want. Yet whether he mean by Coales of fire, Gods Judgments, or his Enemies Conscience pricking and vexing him, we must not doe good unto him and releeve him in his necessity to this end, that God may take vengeance on him, or he on himself for his evil mind towards us, for that were to be overcome of evil; but we must doe it out of our pure love and Christian charity; for that is to overcome evil with good.

V. 21. Be not] Gr. Be not thou. overcome] Gr. overcome thou.

CHAP. XIII.

Vers. 1. Let every soul] That is, every man, though an Apostle, though an Evangelist, though a Prophet, saith Saint Chrysostome: therefore the tyranny of the Pope over all Kingdomes must down to the ground. And as this Text overthrows the Popes temporal Monarchy, so also the exemption of Monks and Ecclesiastical persons from the power of the civil Magistrate.
be subject] See Tit.3.1. 1 Pet.2.12. Not onely obeying them, but also dutifully acknowledging and honouring them.
unto the higher Powers] Not onely to the supream Magistrates, but also all those that are in authority under them, 1 Tim.2.2. 1 Pet.2.13,14.
there is no power, &c.] See Wisd.6.3. ordained of God] Or, ordered. That is, instituted of God among mankind to rule and govern men in order as in Gods stead. For God is the Author of this order in the world: and all those which attain unto this dignity or excellency, do attain unto it either by his manifest will and approbation when the meanes are just and lawful; or else by his secret providence, with permission and toleration, when the means are unlawful; and it is just and equal that man should approve and tolerate that which God himself approves and tolerates; and that he approves and tolerates, which we cannot by any lawfull means appointed by him decline or avoid. All therefore who resist authority, make war after a sort with God himself.
V. 2. to themselves damnation] Or, judgment. The word in the Original signifieth as well judgment as damnation, and thereby we are to understand punishment, which they shall receive aswell from God as the Magistrates, who resist the powers ordained of God, not onely by open rebellion, as Absalon, but also by not yeelding obedience to their commands in those things that are not against the Word of God.
V. 3. to good works] Gr. of good works.
to the evil] Gr. of the evil.
do that which is good] What the Apostle meaneth by doing that which is good here, is well expressed by the Emperour Justinian in the entrance to his laws: honestè vivere; alterum non lædere; suum cuique tribuere: to live honestly, to hurt no man by word or deed, and to give every man his due.
V. 4. for good] Gr. to good.
V. 5. but also for conscience sake] That is, out of the fear of God, that we may keep a good conscience before him, who hath set the Magistrate over us: but this our subjection out of conscience, must be restrained to such their commands as are agreeable to Gods Law: For if they command unlawful things, we must answer as Peter teacheth us, That it is better to obey God than man.
V. 6. pay you] Or, ye pay.
V. 7. Render therefore, &c.] See Mat.22.21.
V. 8. hath fulfilled the law] For the whole law commandeth nothing else but that we love God and our Neighbour: but seeing Paul speaketh here of the duty we owe one to another, we must restrain the word law to the second Table.
V. 9. Thou shalt not commit adultery] See Exod.20. Deut.5. comprehended in this saying] Gr. reduced to this head.
Thou shalt love thy Neighbour as thy self] See Lev.19.18. Mat.22.39. Gal.5.14. Jam.2.8.
V. 11. And that] An application taken from the circumstance of time, which also it self putteth us in mind of our duty, seeing the darknesse of ignorance, and wicked affections by the knowledge of Gods truth is driven out of us; we ought now to order our life according to that sure and certain rule of all righteousnesse and honesty, being fully grounded upon the efficacy of the Spirit of Christ.
knowing the time] To wit, of the light of the Gospel, which is like the dawning of that great eternal day, which groweth still more and more lightsome; and therefore it is now full high time to leave the sleep of sinne and ignorance, wherein we were drowned as it were formerly.
our salvation] That is, the accomplishment of it in the life to come, the end of our Faith, 1 Pet.1.9. The prize of our heavenly calling in Christ Jesus, 1 Cor.9.24,25. Phil.3.14.
nearer than when we beleeved] That is, than when we first beleeved, or began to beleeve. An Hebraisme like to that we often finde in the book of Kings, as Hosea reigned, Ahaz reigned, that is, he began his reign. In these words the Apostle taketh a metaphor from those who run in a Race, who the farther they have run from the Stand, the nearer they draw to the Mark. The beginning of our conversion, is like the entrance into that race; the continuation thereof, and our growth in grace, is like our progresse in that Race, and salvation is as the goale or prize. The meaning then is, we are now come nearer unto salvation by our Christian course, and even ready to lay hold on it, Phil.3.12. 1 Tim.6.12. and therefore we must not faint, but continue our speed to the end, 2 Tim.4.7. for it would be too great shame and damage also, being so near the mark, that by faintnesse, or turning out of the way, we should not obtain: for the nearer we come to the prize, the harder we ought to put forward to attain it.
V. 12. The night] Either the night of ignorance, 1 Thes.5.5. Act.19.31. Or the time of this present worlds abiding, which is but as an obscure night compared to the world to come, and the better part thereof is spent already, the eternal day drawing on amain, 1 Cor.7.29.
the day is at hand] We are arrived unto the saving knowledge of Christ, but not perfectly as yet, so long as we continue in this life: but we enjoy such a light here as there is, when the day begins to break.
cast off] As men when they see the glimmering of the day, cast off their night-clothes, so we seeing a glimmering of the Gospel, ought to cast off the works of darknesse like night attire, and have no more to do with them, Ephes.4.22.
the works of darknesse] That is, sinnes, which fly and shun the light: which may be termed works of darknesse in three regards, 1. Because, they proceed from darknesse, to wit, ignorance in the understanding. 2. Because, for the most part, such works are done in the dark, that the obscurity of the night may shadow them. 3. Because, they tend and bring men, if they cast them not off in time, to utter darknesse, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.
put on] As those that rise out of their sleep, put on their apparel to cover their nakednesse, and fit themselves for the businesse of the day: so now seeing the night of your ignorance is past, shake off your carnal security, and adorn your selves with divine virtues, which are both the habit and armour of a Christian.
the armour of light] Gr.Tec. the works of light. The word signifieth whatsoever the body is covered withall, against any hurts or wounds; and by it we are to understand all those graces of the Spirit, wherewith our soules are not onely adorned, but armed and fenced against the hurts and wounds of the world, and of the flesh, and the Devils temptations, 2 Cor.6.7. Eph.6.11.
of light] That is, bright and glissening armour in perpetual use, not rusty through disuse; or such armour as shines to the glory of God, and casts a lustre from the light of true knowledge, for such becomes those that are called to the light, and desire to walk honestly as in the light.
V. 13. Honestly] Or, decently.
not in rioting and drunkennesse, &c.] Luke 21.34.
V. 14. But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ] To put on Christ, is to be possessed and ruled by the spirit of Christ, to embrace his righteousnesse by faith, and follow all his virtues, adorning our soules with a true and lively resemblance of him, in heart and life.
make not provision for the flesh] See Gal.5.16. 1 Pet.2.11. The Apostle forbiddeth not to provide for the bodies decent raiment, meat, drink, physick, and the like necessaries for the sustenance of this present life. For that is commanded, Ephes.5.29. 1 Tim.5.8.23. But to satisfie mens boundlesse desires, or provide such things as tend to excesse and pride, gluttony, drunkennesse, and uncleannesse.
fulfill the lusts thereof] Gr.Tec. to concupiscence thereof.

CHAP. XIV.

Vers. 1. Him that is weak] Now the Apostle sheweth, how we ought to behave our selves towards our brethren in things indifferent, offending in the use of them, not of malice, but for lack of knowledge in the point of Christian liberty. In this case they are to be instructed gently and patiently, so that we apply our selves to their ignorance in such matters according to the rule of charity, bearing with them for a time, till they are more fully instructed.
in the faith] Either by weak in the Faith, he meaneth a new convert, as Alipius sometimes was, who by reading this very Text of Scripture, and St. Augustines Discourse thereupon, was throughly and fully resolved in the Christian profession, as St. Augustine was by reading the former verse: Or by Faith here the Apostle means not such an one, who doubteth of the fundamental points of Christian Faith, but is not sufficiently instructed concerning the use of things indifferent; such an one the Apostle will not have us shun, but receive him into our company, yet not at the first, to trouble his conscience with those scrupulous points, lest by our doubtful and uncertain disputations he go away in doubt more than he came, or start back with a wounded conscience.
not to doubtful disputations] Or, not to judge his doubtful thoughts. Or, the discernings of reasonings.
V. 2. may eat all things] He that is perfectly instructed in the doctrine of Christian liberty knoweth by Faith, that the difference of meates appointed by the Ceremoniall Law is now taken away, and that hee now may without scruple of Conscience, eat of any wholesome and savourly meates with giving GOD thanks.
eateth herbs] This he speaketh, saith Oecumenius, of some Jewes who embraced the Christian faith, yet out of tendernes of conscience, being not sufficiently instructed in the Doctrine of Christian liberty, abhorred

abhorred from Swines flesh, and other meats prohibited by the Law, and to the end they might give no offence, neither to the Jew zealous of the law of Moses in eating such meats, nor to the Christian by refusing them, and by their practice condemning them for eating such meats, they contented themselves with herbs.
V. 13. Let not him that eateth] In such matters, saith the Apostle, let neither they which know their liberty, proudly despise their weak brother, neither let the unlearned frowardly and perversly condemn that which he understandeth not.
despise] Gr.Tec. judge.
for God hath received him] Into his family, that is, the Church, seeing he that eateth, and he that eateth not, are notwithstanding the members of Christ; neither he that eateth not can justly be contemned, neither he that eateth be justly condemned.
V. 4. Who art thou that judgest another mans servant] See Jam.4.12. Because, saith the Apostle, he that is ignorant to day, may be endued to morrow with farther knowledge, that so he may also stand sure, therefore it belongeth to God, and not to man, to pronounce the sentence of condemnation.
Yea, he] Gr. But he.
holden up] Or, established.
V. 5. one day above another] He speaketh not of such, who after an Heathenish manner accounted some dayes good and fortunate, but others evil and unlucky. For such at all are not to be born withall among Christians. But of such converted Jews, who though they beleeved in Christ, yet thought such days as were appointed by the law for fasting, or feasting, to be more apt, and fit than others for the worship of God.
fully perswaded in his own mind] Or, fully assured. That he may say in his conscience, that he knoweth, and is perswaded by Jesus Christ, that no meat or day is unclean, or profane in it self, and this perswasion must be grounded upon Gods Word.
V. 6. that regardeth] Or, observeth.
regardeth it unto the Lord] Or, observeth. That is, he that keepeth the difference of dayes, he doth it in honour of God, who in his law appointed such difference of dayes, and this weak Christian knoweth not but that that law is yet in force.
regardeth] Or, observeth. to the Lord he doth not regard it] That is, he observeth not the difference of days in honour of the Lord Christ, who hath freed all true beleevers from all legal observations, which he being now perfectly instructed in the faith, knoweth to be but shadows, vanishing at the presence of the body, which is Christ. Now because he that observeth the day, observeth it to the Lord, as likewise he that observeth it not, observeth it not to the Lord, God shall judge whether these doe well or not; and therefore you should rather strive about this, how every one of you may be allowed of God; than think upon other mens doings, and rashly and uncharitably censure them.
eateth to the Lord] Giving God thanks: he that eateth indifferently of all meats, eateth in honour of God, giving him thanks both for the meat he hath given him, and for the liberty he hath granted him to eat of it. to the Lord he eateth not, &c.] He that tasteth not of any meat prohibited by the law of Moses, doth it in honour of God, who appointed such a difference to be observed, and he giveth him thanks both for the meat he affordeth him, and for the direction of his choice delivered in the law, which he knoweth not as yet to be abrogated.
V. 7. For none of us liveth to himself] We must not stick in the meat it self, but in the use of it, so that he may justly be reproved, who so liveth, that he casteth not his eye upon God. For both our life and death ought to be dedicated to him, and for this cause properly and principally Christ died, and not simply that we might eat this or that meat.
V. 8. For whether we live] Gr. If we live.
whether we die] Gr. If we die.
V. 9. died, and rose, &c.] Gr.Tec. died, and lived.
V. 10. But why dost thou judge thy brother] The conclusion is, we must leave to God his right, and therefore in matters which, according as the conscience is affected, may be either good or evil, the strong must not sleight, much lesse condemn the weak brethren.
we shall all stand before the judgment seat, &c.] See 2 Cor.5.10. of Christ] Gr.Tec. of God.
V. 11. As I live, saith the Lord] See Isa.45.23. Phil.2.10. This is the forme of an Oath proper to God onely: For He, and none but He, hath life and being of himself.
V. 13. that no man put a stumbling block] He rebuketh by the way, those malicious judgers of others, who occupy their heads about nothing so much, as to finde fault with their brothers actions; whereas they should rather bestow their wits upon this, that they doe not by their disdainfulnes, or rash censuring, either cast their brethren clean down, or give them any offence by the unseasonable use of their Christian liberty. Here the difference between scandalum datum, and scandalum acceptum, must be retained; a scandal taken, and not given is, when any taketh offence at us for discharging our duty, as the Pharisees took offence at Christs doctrine and miracles; a scandal given is, when by our undiscreet carriage, or unseasonable use of our Christian liberty, we minister a just occasion of offence to our brother.
occasion to fall in his brothers way] Gr. occasion of offence to his brother.
V. 14. unclean] Gr. common.
of it self] Or, by it self.
unclean] Gr. common.
V. 15. with thy meat] Gr. for, or, by occasion of thy meat.
now walkest thou not charitably] Gr. according to charity. Because thou bearest not with thy brothers infirmity; but being puft up with the knowledge of thy Christian liberty, takest no care how thou woundedst his weak conscience.
Destroy not him with thy meat] See 1 Cor.8.11. That is, give him not such offence by the use of thy Christian liberty, that thou alienate his mind from the Christian profession, and thereby become the ruine of him for whom Christ died, whose example we ought to follow, who was so far from destroying the weak with meat, that he gave his life for them.
V. 16. good be evil spoken of] By the abuse of Christian liberty, the Gospel cometh to be evil spoken of, as though it opened a way to attempt any thing whatsoever, and emboldened us to all things.
V. 17. Is not meat and drink] That is, dependeth not upon, or consisteth not in these outward things, but in the study of righteousnesse, and peace, and comfort of the Holy Ghost.
V. 18. in these things serveth] Gr.Tec. in this serveth.
V. 19. follow after the things which make for peace] Gr. things of peace. Here is a general conclusion; the use of our liberty, yea, and of our whole life, ought to be referred to the edifying of one another; insomuch, that we esteem that unlawful by reason of the offence of our brother, which is of it self pure and lawful.
V. 20. All things indeed are pure] See Tit.1.15.
V. 21. It is good neither to eat flesh, &c.] See 1 Cor.8.13.
V. 22. Hast thou faith] Here he giveth a double warning in these matters; one which pertaineth to the strong, that he which hath obtained a sure knowledge of this liberty, keep that treasure to himself, to the end that he may use it wisely and profitably: the other which respecteth the weak, that they doe nothing rashly by other mens example with wavering consciences; for that cannot be done without sinne, whereof we are not perswaded by the Word of God, that he liketh it and approveth it.
alloweth] Or, proveth.
V. 23. he that doubteth] Or, discerneth and putteth a difference between meats: He that is well assured of the Christian liberty, he may well abstain even from lawful things, to condescend to the weaknesse of his brethren: but he that is not so assured, neither may, nor ought thus to pleasure another against the dictate of his own conscience.
is damned] Or, condemned. He that is not fully assured as yet, that all kind of meat is clean and lawful, if he notwithstanding eat of meats forbidden by the law, he wounds his own conscience, and makes himself guilty of condemnation.
for whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne] Or, and whatsoever. Although S. Prosper, and other Divines both antient and later, alledge this Text, to prove that all the works of Infidels are sins, because they are done by men who have not faith; and by consequence this rule of the Apostle may some way serve to discover, and refute that errour of Papists and Pelagians, who deny all the works of Infidels to be sins: yet the proper and genuine meaning of this assertion of the Apostle, is not, whatsoever is done by an Infidel is sinne: but whatsoever is done even by a beleever with a wavering conscience, without assurance that the work he doth is pleasing unto God, and hath warrant from his Word, to him is sinne.

CHAP. XV.

Vers. 1. We then that] Gr. But we that.
V. 2. good to edification] In the Greek, there is an article set before the adjective good, which importeth the chief good, which tendeth to the eternal salvation, which is expressed in the next word edification, signifying their profit and encrease in godlinesse, which hath the promise of this life, and the life to come.
V. 3. The reproaches of them, &c.] See Psal.69.9.
V. 5. Now the God of patience and consolation] See 1 Cor.1.10.
grant you] Gr. give to you.
according to Christ Jesus] Or, after the example of.
V. 6. and one mouth] Gr. in one mouth.
V. 7. as Christ also received us] He did not disdain us, but received us of his own accord, to make us partakers of Gods glory.
V. 8. Now I say] Gr. Tec. For I say: He applyeth the example of Christ to the Jews, whom he vouchsafed this honour for the promises which were made unto their Fathers, although they were never so unworthy, that he executed the office of a Minister amongst them with marvellous patience; therefore much lesse ought the Gentiles despise them for certain faults, whom the Sonne of God so much esteemed.
Minister of the circumcision] Not because he administred the Sacrament of Circumcision to any; for contrarywise he instituted baptism in stead of circumcision: but by circumcision here the Jews are meant as Abraham, Rom. 4.12. is called the Father of circumcision, that is, of the circumcised Jews: Now though Christ preached to all, both Jews and Gentiles, the glad tidings of the Gospel; yet having taken upon him the forme of a servant, to purchase and work our salvation for his Church, he had still a special eye to them; amongst whom he did personally execute his Ministery.

for the truth of God] In the common reception both of the Jewes and Gentiles, there is this onely difference, that in that of the Jewes, God did in a singular manner manifest his truth, that is, his faithfulnesse in performing his promises made unto them: but in that of the Gentiles he did more especially shew forth the greatness of his mercy to his utter enemies, namely, to a people that stood in opposition against him; and therefore there is no reason, why the Jews being honoured by Christs own Ministery, and by the old promises and Covenant of God, should be despised and vilified by the Gentiles; nor on the other side, that the Gentiles to whom God had shewed mercy should be condemned by the Jews.

V. 9. For this cause, &c.] See Psal. 18.49.

V. 10. Rejoyce ye Gentiles with his people] See Deut. 32.43.

V. 11. Praise the Lord all ye Gentiles] See Psal. 117.1.

V. 12. There shall be a root of Jesse] See Isa. 11.10.

V. 13. Now the God of hope] That is, the God in whom we hope, or, the God who is the Author of hope, who by the graces of his Spirit, worketh in us both faith and hope. This very Title of God may serve as a soveraign Antidote against despair; for why should any despair of his mercy, who is the God of hope?

fill you] Gr. fill till you.

peace in believing] That is, peace of conscience, free, not onely from all terrours of wrath to come, but scrupulous doubting concerning things indifferent, of which he spake before.

through the power] Gr. in the power.

V. 14. filled with all knowledge] That is, knowledge of all things that appertain to the doctrine of salvation, or perfect knowledge, so far as it may be attained of us in this life, wherein the best and most learned know but in part, and see but as through a glass darkly, 1 Cor. 13.12.

admonish one another] Or, instruct one another.

V. 16. the Minister] Or, a Minister.

ministering the Gospel of God] Gr. ferving in the holy work of the Gospel.

Offering up of the Gentiles] Or, sacrificing. He speaketh not of any holy oblations of the Gentiles, or any thing they offer unto God; but of the Gentiles themselves, whom the Apostle offered to God a sacrifice, Rom. 12.1.

V. 17. I have therefore whereof I may glory] He extolleth Apostleship very highly by the marvellous effects thereof; but yet so, that he giveth all the glory to God, as the onely Author; and doth not properly respect himself, but this rather, that men might lesse doubt of the truth of the doctrine which he propoundeth to them.

glory through Jesus] Or, rejoyce in Jesus.

in those things] Or, concerning those things.

V. 18. which Christ hath not wrought by me] Christ was to with me in all things, and by all means, that if I would never so fain, yet I cannot say what he hath done by me to bring the Gentiles to obey the Gospel. Or, I will speak onely of things done by my Ministery.

To make the Gentiles obedient] Gr. to the obedience of the Gentiles.

V. 19. Through mighty signs] Gr. in the power of mighty signs.

through the power of the Spirit] Gr. Tec. by the power of the holy Spirit. The word Power in the former part of this verse signifieth the force and working of wonders; and in the latter it signifieth Gods mighty working, who is the worker of those wonders: so that in these words the Apostle implyeth a double action of God; outward, in working wonders by the hands of St. Paul to the conversion of the Gentiles; and inward, whereby by the grace of his Spirit, he wrought faith and repentance in them.

V. 20. another mans foundation] That is, preach the Gospel where the Church had been planted by another man: for that were as it were to graff on his stock, and build upon his foundation; that is, the foundation of Christian doctrine laid by him.

V. 21. To whom he was not spoken of] See Isa. 52.15.

V. 22. much] Or, many ways, or, oftentimes.

V. 24. will] Or, shall.

with your company] Gr. with you, verf. 32.

V. 25. to minister unto the Saints] Gr. ministring to the Saints. That is, to perform this office and service for the Saints, to carry them that money which was gathered for their use; for otherwise if the word Minister be taken for the exercising his Ministerial Function, St. Peter, to whom the Ministery of the Circumcision was specially commended, Gal. 2. 7. as the Apostleship of the uncircumcision to Paul, was properly the Minister of the Jewes, where God specially blest his labours; though, as S. Ambrose rightly observeth, S. Peters ministery was not so confined to the Jews, but that he might, and did sometimes preach to the Gentiles, as likewise did S. Paul to the Jews.

V. 27. if the Gentiles, &c.] See 1 Cor. 9.11.

V. 28. have sealed] I have really performed, and sealed as it were with my ring.

this fruit] By fruit he meaneth the money gathered for the use of the Poor, which he stily here, as also Phil. 4.17. calleth the fruit, not because (saith he) I desire a gift, but that I desire fruit that may abound to your account. Alms-deeds may be called a fruit, as well because every good tree, that is, every faithful man, beareth such fruit; as also because such good works are fruitful, that is, beneficiall and profitable, both to the Poor who receive, and the Rich that give.

V. 29. And I am sure that when I come] He promiseth them through the blessing of God, not to come empty unto them; and requiting of them the duty of prayers, he sheweth what thing we ought chiefly to rest upon in all difficulties and adversities.

blessing of the Gospel of Christ] Gr. Tec. benediction, or, blessing of Christ.

V. 30. for the love of the Spirit] For that mutuall conjunction wherewith the Holy Ghost hath tyed our hearts and minds together.

V. 31. do not believe] Or, are disbelieved.

V. 32. with joy] Gr. in joy.

CHAP. XVI.

Verf. 1. Commend unto you, &c.] Having made an end of the whole disputation, he cometh now to familiar commendations and salutations, and that to good purpose; to wit, that the Romans might know who were most to be honoured and made account of amongst them; and also whom they ought to set before them to follow, and therefore he attributeth to every one of them peculiar and singular testimonies.

V. 2. In the Lord] That is, for Christs sake, which is proper to the Christians; for the Heathen Philosophers have resemblance of the same vitues, namely, Humanity, and Hospitality; yet because what they doe in this kinde, is not done out of faith in Christ, nor to the glory of God, but for their own fame and honour; the works they most brag of, are no better than splining sins, or glittering abominations. Or, the meaning of the phrase may be, receive her in the Lord, that is, into the communion of the faithful, and esteem her as a member of the Lords mystical body.

succourer] Or, assister.

V. 3. Priscilla and Aquila] See Ac. 18.2,26.

helpers] Gr. fellow-labourers.

V. 5. the church] That is, the company of the faithful: For in so great a City as Rome was, there were divers Assemblies of believers set, the State then, and for some hundred years after, not permitting them any publike Temples or Auditories.

the first-fruits of Achaia] That is, the first of Achaia that believed in Christ, and consecrated himself and his family to God, and after him there followed a great crop of true beleevers there.

V. 6. bestowed much labour on us] Or, laboured in many things for us.

V. 7. among the Apostles] That is, are eminent Evangelists or Preachers of the Gospel; for the word Apostle is not ascribed alone to the twelve Apostles, but sometimes in a larger sense to other Doctors and Ministers of the Church; as, 2 Cor. 8.23. Phil. 2.25. Or known unto ἐν ἀποστόλοις, may signifie not that these men were Apostles, but men very well known to the Apostles, and highly esteemed of them.

were in Christ before me] In the Church by the profession of the faith of Christ, being converted before me, or engrafted by faith into Christ, who is the true Vine, Joh. 15.1.

V. 10. houshold] Or, friends.

V. 11. houshold] Or, friends.

V. 14. Hermes] Origen, a very learned and ancient Writer, conceiveth that this Hermas was the Author of the Book entituled Pastor, because the Angel therein is said to appear in the likeness of a shepherd, this book he conceiveth to be divinely conspired; but St. Jerome in his Prologus Galeatus reckoneth it among Apocryphall books: and Eusebius in his third book of Ecclesiastical Story, saith, That many in his time took exception against this Book, though by many it were ascribed to this Hermas, whom S. Paul saluteth.

V. 16. Salute one another with an holy kiss] See 1 Cor. 16.20. 2 Cor. 13.12. 1 Pet. 5.14. He calleth that a holy kiss, which proceedeth from an heart which is full of holy love, now this is to be referred to the manner used in those days.
